"She'll have to decide what's my highest and best use — including being around to buck her up every morning," he said.

While Hillary Clinton has begun her second campaign for president by casting herself as a champion for middle-class voters, she's long drawn criticism from Republicans about the wealth she and Bill Clinton have generated since he left the White House.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In May, Federal Election Commission filings showed that the couple earned more than $25 million for more than 100 paid speeches between January 2014 and May 2015 — an average fee of about $250,000 per speech.

Hillary Clinton and the New Politics of $15 // The Nation // John Nichols – June 10, 2015

Fast-food workers and their allies in the "Fight for 15" movement who were gathered Sunday in Detroit to plan strategy for action in the streets and at the ballot box got an unexpected call from the frontrunner for the Democratic presidential nomination and, perhaps, the presidency.

Declaring, "I want to be your champion," Hillary Clinton told the activists, "We need you out there fighting against those who would strip away Americans' right to organize, to collectively bargain, to fair play. No man or woman who works hard to feed American families should have to be on food stamps to feed their own family."

The Sunday morning phone call by the former secretary of state to the national gathering in Detroit was a breakthrough moment for the movement to raise pay for fast-food and retail workers, as it signaled that their issues are going to be a major part of the 2016 debate. It was also something of a breakthrough moment for Clinton, who has been seeking since announcing her candidacy to distinguish herself as a more progressive and populist contender.

But how much of a breakthrough remains to be seen. Clinton did not talk numbers in her call. Indeed, as CNN noted, " Just how high a wage hike Clinton supports, however, remains a mystery. The candidate has not provided a figure yet. Her campaign did not return a request for comment Sunday night."

Specifics are going to matter.

Facing a spirited economic-populist challenge from Vermont Senator Bernie Sanders, who has long championed wage hikes, and prodded by former Maryland governor Martin O'Malley, who has a track record of work on living-wage issues, Clinton could not avoid the debate about hiking wages; she had to offer the party's base voters some economic populism. A recent Politico headline sums the circumstance up. "Hillary Clinton Camp Fears Bernie Sanders," read one, while another declared, "Wall Street Fears Leftward Swerve By Clinton."

To Clinton's credit, her referencing of the Fight for 15 movement was not a mild reference. It was laudatory. "I hope that every one of you will continue to raise your voices until we get all working Americans a better deal," the candidate told the fast-food workers who had come to Detroit from across the country. "I want to be your champion. I want to fight with you every day. I'm well aware that the folks on top already have plenty of friends in Washington, but we together will change the direction of this great country."

Yet Clinton has not, as have Sanders and O'Malley, announced support for a $15-an-hour wage. And as with her relatively strong statements on trade policy—strong on principles, weak on precise stances—the specifics are what will matter.

Clinton is a savvy politician. She recognizes that the "Fight for 15" movement has traction—and that major labor unions and grassroots activists are starting to measure candidates according to their commitment to the fight. She has made a good statement, and gotten some good headlines. Now she must provide a sense of where exactly she stands on a federal $15-an-hour wage, on state and local fights, and on a host of other wage and work concerns. And, frankly, she needs to fill-in-the-blanks on related issues, such as the fight for a Retail Workers Bill of Rights and efforts to make it easily to organize and maintain unions.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton's formal launch of her candidacy this coming Saturday at the Franklin D. Roosevelt Four Freedoms Park in New York City will be a key test. Will she reference the Fight for 15 movement? Will she make this struggle a clear, and constant focus of her campaign?

The pressure will only increase for Clinton and the other 2016 candidates. Following the lead of Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, and other cities across the country have moved to implement $15 wage floors, and states such as New York are starting to explore the prospect.

New York Governor Andrew Cuomo, who announced last month that he will convene a special wage board to review and recommend higher wage rates for fast-food workers, explains why this is the case. "Nowhere is the income gap more extreme and obnoxious than in the fast-food industry," wrote Cuomo in a New York Times opinion piece. "Fast-food C.E.O.s are among the highest-paid corporate executives. The average fast-food C.E.O. made $23.8 million in 2013, more than quadruple the average from 2000 (adjusting for inflation). Meanwhile, entry-level food-service workers in New York State earn, on average, $16,920 per year, which at a 40-hour week amounts to $8.50 an hour. Nationally, wages for fast-food workers have increased 0.3 percent since 2000 (again, adjusting for inflation)."

As Service Employees International Union President Mary Kay Henry says, " Powerful people around the world are listening to this movement to change our world."

This is the context in which Clinton's statement comes. Fast-food workers are organizing, and they are winning. Retail workers are organizing, and they are winning. Home-care workers are organizing. A movement has taken shape. It is real. And it has specific "asks" of candidates.

"We've got unstoppable momentum," said LeTonya Wilson, 41, a Richmond, Virginia, McDonald's worker who is paid $8.25 an hour. "Fifteen dollars is sweeping the country and we're going to build off victories in places like Los Angeles, New York and St. Louis to win $15 in Richmond and all across the country. Everyone said we had no chance, but we've shown when we stick together and speak out, we get life-changing results."

Wage hikes are life-changing for workers who are struggling to get by.

And the movement for wage hikes is changing American politics.

Presidential candidates are taking notice.

Indeed, the front-runner in the race for the White House is saying to LeTonya Wilson and her fellow workers: "There's a lot we can do together and you're showing us what that route is. You're on the streets, your voices are being heard. We need you."

That's right. But that's not enough. Getting a presidential front-runner to "call in" is not an indication that a corner has been turned on the "Fight for $15." Rather, it is a signal that the 2016 contest could, with continued pressure on all the candidates—Democrats and Republicans and third-party contenders,; liberals and centrists and conservatives—be the moment when that turn is made.

Bill Clinton Says Hillary Win Could Change His Philanthropy Role // Bloomberg // Margaret Talev – June 10, 2015

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Former President Bill Clinton said if his wife is elected the next U.S. president, he will consider stepping aside from leading his global philanthropy, and that while he intends to keep delivering speeches on issues he cares about he will stop accepting money for them.

“I believe if you have been president, and the current president of either party asks you to do anything, if in good conscience you can do it, you should do it,” Clinton said in an interview Wednesday with Bloomberg’s Betty Liu, when asked about his role in a potential Hillary Clinton administration. He suggested he may step away from his role as head of the foundation he established after his presidency in favor of his daughter, Chelsea.

“That will be not an easy decision,” Clinton said in the most direct acknowledgement to date that he's considering stepping away from the foundation to avoid conflicts of interest. “If she wins, and I think it would be a very good thing for America if she did win," he said, referring to his wife, "we’ll have to talk about it. But I don’t know.”

“We’ll have to talk about it.”

In a wide-ranging interview on the final day of the Clinton Global Initiative America meeting in Denver, Clinton also defended donations to his tied to foreign governments and corporations, which have come under scrutiny by news organizations as Hillary Clinton’s campaign ramped up. He said his organization operated for years without the presumption his wife would run. In particular, he defended the decision to accept $500,000 from Algeria to pass on to international efforts in Haiti after the devastating 2010 earthquake.

"I’d take the money from Algeria again," Clinton said. "There are very few countries in the world I would not accept for help to Haiti." Clinton said there were a couple of donations the foundation did not accept because "we have a strict no-corruption policy." He also suggested the scrutiny of the foundation was driven by cynical political journalists for whom "it’s hard to imagine" that businesses and individual would give money for anything other than political purposes.

Clinton said if his wife is elected president "she will make good decisions" and "she’ll consult widely and be inclusive."

As for his own role, he said he would be interested in working to restore the middle class and a sense of "inclusion" in communities. But he suggested that what he does as a first spouse would be up to his wife.

"If there’s one thing she knows more about than anybody on earth, it’s on what subjects I should be listened to and what subjects I shouldn’t," Clinton said, prompting a guffaw from the audience.

Hillary Clinton Needs a Do-Over // RealClearPolitics // Jonah Goldberg – June 10, 2015

Almost exactly two months after Hillary Rodham Clinton’s official announcement that she’s running for president, she will give her first “official campaign announcement speech,” on June 13, according to her Twitter account.

In other words, the Clinton campaign wants a do-over. Her first rollout was the most disastrous nonfatal presidential campaign debut in modern memory, so she wants another.

Her initial announcement video in April — which most outlets accurately reported as her official announcement — was well done. After that, everything went downhill; a steady stream of news stories and damning allegations about her family foundation and tenure as secretary of state has dogged her almost daily.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Her best moment since announcing was when she was captured on grainy security video at an Ohio Chipotle franchise buying a burrito bowl. ABC News and MarketWatch dubbed it an “adventure.” Bloomberg’s Mark Halperin explained that Clinton’s excellent adventure was “fun” and “new.” “We’ve never seen her get a burrito before.”

Put “Burrito Day” in the win column.

In the loss column: plummeting poll numbers. In March she enjoyed a 15-percentage-point lead over Jeb Bush, according to a CNN poll. She had roughly similar double-digit leads over Marco Rubio, Rand Paul, and Scott Walker.

Those leads have nearly evaporated. Bush, whose rollout has also been less than stellar, now trails Clinton by eight percentage points, according to CNN (but only by three, according to an ABC News/Washington Post poll). Walker and Rubio are three percentage points behind her and Paul is one.

Worse, the public is souring on her, like a carton of milk left out in the sun. More Americans now view her unfavorably rather than favorably (50 percent to 46 percent), her worst polling performance in 14 years. Fifty-seven percent believe she is untrustworthy, and fewer than half (47 percent) said she cares about people like them. Remember back in 2008 when her image took a beating in her bruising primary fight with Barack Obama? Her image is worse today.

She reminds me of Fred Thompson in 2008 or Rick Perry in 2012. Her best day in the polls was the day before she announced.

But fear not, the Clinton campaign has conveniently found a strategy that says none of this matters very much.

Jonathan Martin and Maggie Haberman report in the New York Times that the Clinton team has turned its back on a “nationwide electoral strategy,” opting instead to reassemble the Obama coalition of 2008 and 2012. To do that, Clinton needs to run to the left and pick polarizing fights that galvanize low-information and hard-to-motivate voters.

The days of trying to win swing voters and independents are apparently over. Today it’s all about that base. “The highest-premium voter in ’92 was a voter who would vote for one party some and for another party some,” James Carville, a longtime adviser to the Clintons, told the New York Times. “Now the highest-premium voter is somebody with a high probability to vote for you and low probability to turn out. That’s the golden list. And that’s a humongous change in basic strategic doctrine.”

Carville’s right that it is a big change in doctrine, but it’s unclear whether the doctrine is right. So far the entire theory rests on the precedent of one candidate: Obama. “If she won,” Martin and Haberman write, “it would suggest that the so-called Obama coalition of young, nonwhite and female voters is transferable to another Democrat.”

As I’ve been writing for a while, I’m extremely dubious. Here are four reasons. First, Obama didn’t really run as a polarizing figure in 2008. He ran as a post-partisan reformer who would end gridlock and fix the failures of the two-term incumbent (as did George W. Bush and Bill Clinton before him).

Second, Obama was a very good politician without much baggage (that the media were willing to report on). Clinton is a mediocre politician with mountainous baggage. Third, Obama’s coalition has never been transferable to any other cause or politician, despite the president's best efforts. And last, Clinton is running to stay the course.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Obama veterans around Clinton boast of their willingness to break with the practices of the past. But it looks more like they can't break out of their own Obama bubble, running the same plays for a very different quarterback.

Check Out Hillary Clinton's First Instagram // TIMES // Olivia Waxman – June 10, 2015

Hillary Clinton, the Democratic frontrunner in the 2016 presidential election, launched an Instagram account Wednesday. Her first post is a photo of red, white and blue pantsuits with the caption "Hard Choices" — which is also the title of her memoir. The former Secretary of State modestly describes herself as a "Doting grandmother, among other things."

The account already racked up more than 32,000 followers at the time of publication — more than any of the other 2016 candidates with verified accounts on the social network, such as Senator Bernie Sanders (I-VT), Senator Rand Paul (R-KY),Senator Ted Cruz (R-TX), Senator Marco Rubio (R-FL), former Arkansas Governor Mike Huckabee (R), retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson (R).

Having a presence on Instagram is an opportunity to engage with college-aged and 20-something voters, as "53% of young adults ages 18-29 now use the service," according to Pew Research Center's Jan. 2015 report on the demographics of social networking platforms. The study also says "women are particularly likely to be on Instagram, along with Hispanics and African-Americans, and those who live in urban or suburban environments."

Hillary Clinton launches Instagram account // CBS News // Hannah Fraser-Chanpong – June 10, 2015

Hillary Clinton has joined Instagram.

Clinton posted her first photo to the social media site Wednesday. It does not show Clinton but, instead, red, white and blue outfits hung on a garment rack, highlighting a sartorial choice that the presidential candidate has become well known for: the pantsuit.

"Hard choices," the caption reads.

Many of the other presidential candidates, including Bernie Sanders, Jeb Bush (and his wife, Columba Bush), Rand Paul and Marco Rubio already have Instagram accounts. Clinton's account was private until Wednesday morning.

Since the launch of her bid, Clinton's campaign has relied mostly on Twitter and Facebook to share photos of Clinton on the campaign trail, share news and highlight organizing events, and she recently joined LinkedIn. Clinton chimes in herself on Twitter on occasion -- both on policy and nonpolitical events like the Women's World Cup -- and signs her tweets with the letter "h." Clinton campaign officials say that the Instagram account will more regularly show a more candid, personal side of their candidate and her supporters. The campaign also plans to use it as another way to engage with her fans.

Clinton, the former senator, first lady and secretary of state whose colorful Twitter bio includes both "hair icon" and "pantsuit aficionado," highlights only one of her titles on her Instagram page. "doting grandmother, among other things." It includes a link to Clinton's campaign website.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hillary Clinton joins Instagram with a photo of her red, white and blue pantsuits // Mashable // Bryian Ries – June 10, 2015

Hillary Clinton exploded onto the Instagram scene Wednesday morning with an unfiltered photo of the things she knows best: her red, white and blue pantsuits.

"Hard choices," wrote the self-described "doting grandmother, among other things" in the photo's caption, which appeared days ahead of the former first lady's official 2016 campaign launch. Clinton first announced her second bid for the presidency in April.

The account, @HillaryClinton, was confirmed as hers by an Instagram spokesperson. So far, the reception toward the account is warm; one user called it "iconic," while another gave her the Broad City-inspired rebel yell, "YAAS QUEEN." Thirty minutes after creating the account, Clinton already attracted more than 5,000 followers.

Clinton joins 300 million Instagrammers — including many fellow 2016 candidates — who share a reported 70 million photos and videos each day.

Parties set events; Democrats draw Clinton to dinner // North West Arkansas Gazette // Michael R. Wickline - June 11, 2015

Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Rodham Clinton will be the keynote speaker at the Democratic Party of Arkansas' annual fundraiser July 18 in North Little Rock, party Chairman Vince Insalaco said Wednesday.

Arkansas Republicans will hold their annual Reagan-Rockefeller fundraising dinner in Hot Springs on July 17, party Chairman Doyle Webb said Wednesday. Details and speaker information will be announced soon, he said.

Clinton, the wife of former President Bill Clinton, is a former Arkansas first lady, U.S. senator and U.S. secretary of state.

"As Arkansas' first lady, Hillary worked tirelessly to secure a better future for our children and families -- a responsibility that she continued as the first lady of the United States, a U.S. senator and as secretary of state," Insalaco said in a written statement. "We are excited to welcome her to an Arkansas homecoming that celebrates both that progress and looks toward a hopeful future."

Clinton moved to Arkansas in 1974 shortly after serving as an attorney for the congressional committee that investigated President Richard Nixon. She taught students at the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville before marrying Bill Clinton, who later won elections for governor and the presidency.

She co-founded Arkansas Advocates for Children and Families and led multiple campaigns to improve children's health and education in Arkansas, according to the state Democratic Party.

State Democratic Party Executive Director Candace Martin said the party hasn't endorsed Clinton for president.

Others who've said they're running for president as Democrats are former Rhode Island Gov. and U.S. Sen. Lincoln Chafee, former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley and U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Webb, the state GOP chairman, said Arkansas Republicans are trying to get the party's presidential candidates to help raise money at party events.

"Our Reagan-Rockefeller dinner, the RPA's largest annual fundraiser, will be held at the Hot Springs Convention Center in Horner Hall on July 17," Webb said in a written statement. "The RR dinner is the opening event of our state Republican Leadership weekend, which includes our summer State Committee meeting and workshops. The announcement of details and the speaker will be forthcoming."

Webb declined to say whether the keynote speaker will be former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee, who is among at least 10 Republicans who have said they are running for president in 2016.

Both Clinton and Huckabee ran unsuccessfully for their parties' presidential nominations in 2008.

Arkansas Republican Gov. Asa Hutchinson last month signed into law a bill moving the state's 2016 primary elections from May 24 to March 1 to allow Arkansas to participate with several other Southern states in what its supporters call the SEC presidential primary.

Other states that plan to hold a March 1 primary include Alabama, Georgia, Texas, Tennessee and Virginia.

The SEC is the Southeastern Conference, an intercollegiate athletic conference that includes many Southern states.

The party filing period will be from noon Nov. 2 until noon Nov. 9 in the state Capitol, said Chris Powell, a spokesman for Arkansas Secretary of State Mark Martin.

Webb said his party's 2016 filing fees will be decided July 17 by the party's executive committee, but he doesn't expect any change, including in the $25,000 fee for presidential candidates.

The state Democratic Party State Committee will determine the party's 2016 filing fees during its Aug. 15 meeting, Candace Martin said.

It's official: Hillary Clinton's logo is actually perfect // Quartz // Annalisa Merelli – June 10, 2015

As soon Hillary Clinton announced her presidential bid, commentators began dissecting each and every aspect of her communications strategy. Despite a few critics, many noted that the launch video successfully installed Clinton's campaign as a collective effort rather than emphasizing that Clinton was "destined" for the presidency.

What instead provoked nothing but bad reviews was the logo design—a patriotically blue, red and white "H" with an arrow pointing right at the center. Why is the arrow red (the Republican color in the US), some asked, and why is it pointing toward the right? Were voters going to interpret it as an imminent shift towards more conservative positions? Others plainly stated that the logo didn't say anything at all. Quartz's Anne Quito weighed in with the following:

As unoriginal and clunky as it may appear, Clinton's logo is perfectly functional. It's unique enough, with utility that holds up across print, broadcast, and digital platforms. On Twitter, the red arrow is even a nifty, albeit unnecessary, device that directs the eye right to the messenger.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton's new logo builds upon Obama's "O," which was much closer to a corporate brand than a traditional political logo.

The style informed both of Obama's campaigns, and forever changed the visual language of American politics, adding modern typography and design to an otherwise trite political visual vocabulary. Learning from that lesson, Clinton's 2016 one-letter logo is highly recognizable: Like a brand, the "H" is the complete logo and not accompanied by the full name nor the year—as to indicate a timeless commitment, and to separate this campaign from Hillary's bid in 2008.

Besides being bold, the one-letter logo is, as exceptionally social media friendly—no small quality, since compared to 2008 (and to an extent even 2012), social media channels have now become a campaign requirement.

"In the past, you got a lot of stars for being on a platform," Jon Jones, chief digital officer at the Incite Agency who worked as the first digital strategist for Obama's 2008 campaign, told Quartz. Now, he explained, it's much less about whether a platform is used, and why, and more about how it reflects on the candidate's image.

In this light, the square design is strategically sound: The strongest attribute of this design—what makes it particularly functional in the time of memes—is its flexibility which, unlike with Obama's "O," does not appear to be a lucky accident.

In the past two months the logo has already appeared in a number of avatars both on Twitter and Facebook, including the ones below:

It is through all these iterations that Clinton's logo fully displays its iconic value: It is highly recognizable despite the changes, and the much-criticized right-facing red arrow is now appears as it was likely meant to: pointing the way forward. The different backgrounds aren't just an innovative graphic solution—they are the visual embodiment of the values Clinton is building her campaign around. It vehicles a leadership based on collectivity and inclusiveness rather than the elitist individualism Clinton is often accused of.

"The real Hillary is what they are trying to get out there, as opposite to a top-down Clinton force," Jones explained.

The logo is young, modern, colorful. And the strategy of inclusiveness goes beyond the design, extending to the offline campaign (with campaign workers traveling by bus under the eyes of surprised reporters). Thus far, the best example has been Mary Jo for Hillary: In an unprecedented exercise in relinquishing control, Clinton handed her official campaign Twitter handle to Mary Jo Brown, a small business owner from New Hampshire, who posted tweets about a day in her life (and work) in support of the grassroots initiative of "small business owners for Hillary."

This, said Jones, is something 2008 Clinton would have stayed away from but, as other elements of her campaign—such as the pop merchandising, including items such as the pantsuit-printed t-shirt—is "a page of the Obama book."

Indeed, like Obama's 2008, Clinton's 2016 looks like a campaign designed to be remembered—not just to win.

Hillary to be honored at Wildlife gala after making // NY Post // Geoff Earle – June 10, 2015

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

There will be an elephant in the room Thursday when Hillary Rodham Clinton is an honored guest at the Wildlife Conservation Society's annual gala in New York: a big-bucks contribution the Clinton Family Foundation gave to the organization.

The group works to protect endangered elephants from ivory poaching and threats, among other wildlife projects.

The foundation gave the society a $25,000 grant in 2013 for its efforts, foundation records show.

The good feelings appear to be mutual.

The following year, at the 2014 gala — called "An Elephant's Tale" — Hillary and Chelsea Clinton were honored by the group for "their commitment to conservation and protecting wildlife and wild places."

An official release said they "have been tremendous allies in the fight to save the African elephant." and work "tirelessly" for the cause.

Hillary Clinton is listed as an "honorary chair" at Thursday's black-tie event, to be held at the Central Park Zoo, which this year is called "Turning Tides."

Meanwhile, Renee Ring, the group's corporate relations director, donated $5,000 to the pro-Clinton PAC Ready for Hillary in 2013, according to campaign records.

Bill Clinton contradicts Hillary on email claims // Fox News – June 10, 2015

Bill Clinton appeared Wednesday to contradict his wife's claims about their personal email use, saying he's only sent two emails in his life -- despite Hillary Clinton saying some of the private messages on her personal server were from her and her husband.

The former president addressed his very sparing email use at a Clinton Global Initiative meeting in Denver.

He said the "only time" he got on the Internet was to do "two emails" and order Christmas presents.

"Otherwise I found people said embarrassing things on emails. I didn't want to be one of them," Clinton said, to laughter.

The statement echoes what a spokesman told the Wall Street Journal in March -- that the ex-president had only sent two emails in his life, one to U.S. troops and the other to astronaut John Glenn.

Yet, when Hillary Clinton held a press conference in March explaining her personal email use, she said her private server "contains personal communications from my husband and me."

The now-Democratic presidential candidate gave this detail in asserting that she would not turn over her personal server for examination -- as Republican lawmakers have requested.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Her office, though, has turned over thousands of pages of emails to the State Department, which has started to release some of them.

De Blasio likely to skip Hillary Clinton's campaign launch // Crain's New York // Andrew Hawkins – June 10, 2015

Hillary Clinton is scheduled to formally launch her presidential campaign on Roosevelt Island Saturday, but Mayor Bill de Blasio's office would not say Tuesday whether her friend, former campaign manager and erstwhile supporter will attend.

A spokesman for the mayor did not respond to numerous requests for comment on Ms. Clinton's rally, the second major event of her presidential campaign to take place in New York City. Even so, the mayor of the city, a stalwart progressive Democrat, is unlikely to attend. He was absent from her speech on criminal justice at Columbia University in April. And despite numerous questions, the mayor has steadfastly declined to endorse her campaign, asserting that he wants to hear more "vision" from the candidate on income inequality and other such matters.

"Each of the candidates is beginning to address these issues," he said on CBS's "Face the Nation" Sunday. "I'm waiting to hear a fuller vision from each on how we'll actually tackle income inequality." Asked if that included Ms. Clinton, whom he has known for several decades and whose 2000 Senate campaign he managed, the mayor said, "Absolutely."

When questioned about whether an invitation had been extended to Mr. de Blasio to Saturday's rally, a spokesman for Ms. Clinton's campaign said he had no information. Some supporters were perplexed by the mayor's behavior.

"It strikes me as surreal and bizarre that de Blasio will be missing in action this Saturday when the presumptive candidate of his party has chosen to launch her candidacy in his city and host her campaign headquarters in his home borough," said a New York City-based operative close to the Clinton campaign.

Letitia James, the public advocate and Clinton supporter, plans to be there, but not City Council Speaker Melissa Mark-Viverito, who has yet to endorse a candidate. A spokesman for Comptroller Scott Stringer did not reply.

Much of the mayor's waffling has to do with his own national ambitions, namely his 13-point Progressive Agenda and his plans to host a presidential debate on income inequality later this year. As Mr. de Blasio sees it, he has to withhold his endorsement in order to remain a credible, unattached and authoritative voice in the national debate surrounding the politics of poverty.

Also, the mayor might lose credibility with his liberal fan base and lose leverage to move Ms. Clinton to the left if he were to endorse her before she takes a strong stand on his priorities, such as a much higher minimum wage and more taxation of the wealthy.

"Since she's appearing as a candidate and he's still neutral in the race, it would be strange for him to show up," said Kenneth Sherrill, professor of political science at Hunter College. "Showing up would be taken to be an endorsement. In this case, not showing up is good manners."

Democrats Line Up Hillary Clinton For Jefferson-Jackson Dinner // Talk Business – June 10, 2015

Arkansas Democrats are getting ready for Hillary.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Democratic Party of Arkansas announced Wednesday that former First Lady, U.S. Senator and U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton will be the keynote speaker at its Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner in July.

The 2016 Presidential contender will speak to state Democrats on Saturday, July 18 at Verizon Arena in North Little Rock.

"We are very excited to officially announce our 2015 Jefferson-Jackson Dinner, featuring special guest Secretary Hillary Rodham Clinton," said DPA Chairman Vince Insalaco. "I know you're as excited as I am that the former First Lady of Arkansas and the United States and now candidate for President of the United States will be coming to our state to join us for this incredible evening."

"As Arkansas's first lady, Hillary worked tirelessly to secure a better future for our children and families – a responsibility that she continued as the First Lady of the United States, a U.S. Senator, and as Secretary of State. We are excited to welcome her to an Arkansas homecoming that celebrates both that progress and looks towards a hopeful future," Insalaco added in the statement.

Clinton Has Edge Among Mass. Voters; Gov. Baker Remains Popular // WBUR // Fred Thys – June 10, 2015

Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton beat Barack Obama in the Massachusetts Democratic primary in 2008, but Massachusetts voters do not have a very high opinion of her currently, a new WBUR statewide poll (topline results, crosstabs) shows.

Of 502 registered Massachusetts voters surveyed late last week, only 48 percent of respondents have a favorable view of Clinton. That's compared to 38 percent of poll respondents who view her unfavorably.

Clinton is least popular among Republicans, as only 24 percent of Republicans view her favorably. But she's also relatively unpopular among the state's largest group of voters, the unenrolled: Only 42 percent of unenrolled voters view her favorably, compared with 43 percent who view her unfavorably. It's only among Democrats that Clinton enjoys a favorable image, with 66 percent of Democrats responding positively.

How voters view Clinton varies greatly depending on their race, the survey found. Only 44 percent of white voters view her favorably, compared with 73 percent of voters of all other races.

Clinton is most popular in the Boston area, with 54 percent of voters in Boston and surrounding cities and towns viewing her favorably. Clinton is in the Boston area Wednesday, attending a fundraiser in Newton.

She is least popular in western and central Massachusetts, where only 43 percent of voters view her favorably.

Sen. Elizabeth Warren, D-Mass., listens to testimony on Capitol Hill in February. Warren has publicly declared she will not be running for president. (Susan Walsh/AP)

Sen. Elizabeth Warren, D-Mass., listens to testimony on Capitol Hill in February. Warren has publicly declared she will not be running for president. (Susan Walsh/AP)

Still, by a large margin, most Democrats and unenrolled voters who say they are more likely to vote in the Democratic presidential primary than in the Republican primary say they would vote for Clinton (58 percent).

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Although U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren remains well liked in Massachusetts — 53 percent of respondents view her favorably — she comes in a distant second to Clinton, with 16 percent, among voters who say they are more likely to vote in the Democratic presidential primary.

Warren has said she's not running, and 67 percent of poll respondents say they do not expect her to run.

The WBUR live phone survey was conducted by the MassINC Polling Group. Voters were interviewed last Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The poll's margin of error is 4.4 percent.

The poll also finds that Gov. Charlie Baker continues to be highly popular among Massachusetts voters.

Sixty-nine percent of respondents view Baker, a Republican, favorably, compared with just 10 percent who view him unfavorably.

He's most popular among Republicans. Seventy-eight percent of Republicans view Baker favorably. But he's also extremely popular among unenrolled voters, as 72 percent of these voters view him favorably. And even Democrats view him favorably. Sixty-three percent of Democrats have a favorable view of him.

Among women, 64 percent have a favorable view of the governor. But Baker is more popular among men, with a 75 percent favorability.

Among the state's over-60 voters, Baker remains popular with a 76 percent favorable rating. His rating is lowest among the youngest voters, 18-29, though still relatively popular among them at 57 percent favorable.

The poll, as we reported earlier Wednesday, also finds 49 percent of voters opposing Boston hosting the Olympics in 2024, with only 39 percent supporting the idea.

No blueprint on cutting college debt // Boston Globe // Tracy Jan – June 11, 2015

WASHINGTON — Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont is calling for zero tuition at public colleges. Former Maryland governor Martin O'Malley says he will fight to erase debt for college graduates. Hillary Rodham Clinton, at a recent campaign event in Iowa, endorsed the goal of slashing such debt.

Promises to reduce, or even eliminate, the financial burdens of higher education represent the newest frontier in Democrats' call for taxpayer-sponsored social programs. The anxiety-inducing $1.3 trillion in student debt has quickly become a focus of the 2016 Democratic presidential primary contest.

But while the concept is attracting attention from financially challenged middle-class families, details are scarce on how government should pay for potentially the costliest initiatives since President Obama's health care overhaul.

The one concrete source of funding comes from Sanders, who proposes a new tax on Wall Street transactions. While that idea draws cheers from his populist fan base, it would be a political long shot for passage in today's Washington.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Sanders also has produced the only guess at the huge costs: three quarters of a trillion dollars over the first decade.

“This is a politically popular idea, but the solutions are hard and expensive,” said Terry Hartle, senior vice president of the American Council on Education, a nonpartisan policy and lobbying group in Washington for colleges and universities. “How you pay for it very quickly becomes a seriously complicating issue.”

Meanwhile, the effect of student debt on the national economy — frequently cited on the campaign trail as a key reason to ease the burden — is hard to measure. While politicians often link higher student debt to lower rates of homeownership, entrepreneurship, and retirement savings, no one can point to a reliable figure quantifying the effect of the debt on the overall economy.

‘This is a politically popular idea, but the solutions are hard and expensive.’

Quote Icon

“I would say it’s overreaching given the current landscape of research to suggest a link between student debt and a drain on the economy,” said Beth Akers, a Brookings fellow whose research focuses on the economics of higher education.

The squishiness of the candidates’ proposals is giving conservative critics easy ammunition to denounce the ideas as nothing more than liberal talking points.

“This has quickly become a rallying cry for Democrats and advocates and also somewhat of a litmus test for candidates: Are you with us or against us on this?” said Andrew Kelly, director of the Center on Higher Education Reform at the American Enterprise Institute, a conservative think tank based in Washington. “I see why it’s enticing as an election- year slogan, but there are some serious flaws.”

Senator Elizabeth Warren, a Massachusetts Democrat, got out front on the issue in 2013 when her first bill as senator called for reducing the interest rates that government charges student borrowers. Since then, goals have become far more sweeping.

Nudged along by liberal Democrats, party members in both the Senate and House are also looking for greater access to debt-free higher education. Warren, along with Senators Brian Schatz of Hawaii, and Chuck Schumer of New York, introduced a nonbinding resolution in April calling for states to reduce tuition at public schools; for the federal government to increase financial aid; and for a program that allows students to refinance loans at lower rates.

But the resolution has no teeth, and it makes no mention of how to pay for any of its lofty goals.

Warren, in an interview Wednesday, said the idea for the resolution is to “push us in the right direction.”

“We should be doing more as a country to leverage our federal dollars to give the schools incentives to drive down costs and to encourage states to invest more in their flagship schools,” Warren said. “We need resources and incentives to bring down costs. This is a one-two punch.”

Representative Katherine Clark, a Massachusetts Democrat, introduced a parallel resolution in the House, along with Representatives Raul Grijalva of Arizona and Keith Ellison of Minnesota, all Democrats.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clark, in an interview, acknowledged that without money attached to the resolution, it is simply a political guidepost, a “first step” in a national conversation.

So far, the resolution has garnered more than 70 cosponsors among Democrats in Congress, including Senators Edward Markey of Massachusetts, Richard Blumenthal of Connecticut, and Jeanne Shaheen of New Hampshire.

“Our ultimate goal is to make debt-free college central to the 2016 election and signal to the candidates that if they embrace the idea, they won’t be out on a limb,” said Adam Green, cofounder of the Progressive Change Campaign Committee, which lobbied Congress on the resolutions.

Borrowers owe an average of $28,400 in federal and private loans combined, according to the Project on Student Debt by the Institute for College Access & Success.

A May poll by Rasmussen Reports found that Democrats, women, and younger voters were more likely to believe that the government should pay for college. But among the 800 adults surveyed, Americans were nearly evenly split — 43 percent agreed with the government paying for college and 40 percent disagreed.

Marv McMoore Jr., former president of College Democrats of Massachusetts, who graduated from Northeastern University last month, recently moved back home with his parents on Long Island to save money while he attends graduate school at Fordham University in New York City.

The son of an auto mechanic, McMoore is the first in his immediate family to graduate from college. The 21-year-old estimates that he will have $60,000 of student loan debt by the time he receives his master’s degree next year. He views the debt-free college campaign as a way to energize a new generation of voters. “With voter apathy among young folks, this is a way to attract them back to the polls,” McMoore said.

The recent push goes further than President Obama’s proposal in January to make two years of community college free — which the White House estimated would cost the federal government $60 billion over 10 years but which stands little chance of passing. A White House official said the president is encouraged that Congress is engaged in the conversation but would not say whether Obama supports the debt- or tuition-free proposals.

Sanders’ bill, which was introduced last month and has yet to draw supporters in the Senate, Democrat or Republican, would cost $750 billion over 10 years, according to his office.

Under the legislation, two-thirds of the cost of tuition and fees would be borne by the federal government and the rest by the states. The federal share would come from a tax on Wall Street. The bill would also eliminate federal profits on loans, build on existing work-study programs to defray costs, and offer incentives for colleges to keep tuition down.

Making public colleges free, said Sanders, an independent running for the Democratic nomination, is the most efficient way to “create the best-educated workforce that we can have.” But critics say they fear the plans to inject more federal money to ease college debt would only prompt college costs to balloon and leave taxpayers on the hook.

Said Lindsey Burke, a fellow with the conservative Heritage Foundation: “We need to think of policies that actually fix the college cost problem, not take taxpayer dollars filtered through government programs and increased subsidies.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton plans 'Launch Party' in Concord during Monday visit // WMUR // John DiStaso – June 10, 2015

Hillary Clinton will host her first New Hampshire event that is open to the general public on Monday, WMUR has learned.

The Democratic presidential candidate will make her third visit to the state since announcing her candidacy in mid-April and will hold a "Launch Party with Hillary" in Concord at a venue and time to be announced, the campaign said. Those attending must RSVP and register on the Clinton web site.

The Concord event, which is free, will be among at least three stops she will make in the state that day.

She will also appear at the ticketed Manchester Democratic City Committee Flag Day Dinner at the Puritan Backroom Conference Center at 5 p.m. At least one other stop is being planned, the campaign said.

The visit will take place two days after her formal presidential campaign announcement rally in New York City.

In her prior two visits to the state, Clinton has held roundtables and gatherings with invited guests and what the campaign said were members of the public who expressed an interest in attending. She also met with Granite Staters at a quick stop at an ice cream stand in Derry.

How Huma Abedin became Hillary Clinton's confidante and 'translator' // Fortune // Nina Easton – June 10, 2015

Huma Abedin started as an intern at the Clinton White House. Now she is Hillary Clinton's closest aide, even in controversies.

When Huma Abedin first joined the Clinton White House in the 1990s, she hoped to be assigned to the press office. Growing up in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, she had longed to be a journalist—specifically Christiane Amanpour who "looked purposeful—and glamorous." Instead, she was assigned to Hillary Clinton's chief of staff, Melanne Verveer.

"Take a chance," her mother counseled her disappointed daughter, according to Abedin. "Don't be afraid of what you don't know. And don't fall in love with Plan A." Plan B paid off–big time. Two decades later, Abedin is at the center of Clinton's presidential bid, with a title of campaign vice chair. And by most accounts, she is candidate Clinton's closest aide—"Hillary's translator," as one insider puts it.

Abedin is the high-fashion figure glued to Clinton's side—passing notes, whispering in her ear, working her cell phone. During Clinton's 2008 campaign–when Abedin served as the candidate's "body woman"— Clinton communications aide Mandy Grunwald told Vogue: "I'm not sure Hillary could walk out the door without Huma. She's a little like Radar on M*A*S*H. If the air-conditioning is too cold, Huma is there with the shawl. She's always thinking three steps ahead of Hillary."

Two years ago, Abedin and her disgraced congressman husband Anthony Weiner were emerging from the carnage of his sexting scandal. The New York Times described the young couple's life with their toddler as "in retreat." She served as deputy chief of staff under Secretary of State Clinton while he planned his (ultimately unsuccessful) political comeback running for New York mayor.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As deputy chief of staff under Secretary of State Clinton, Abedin has spent hundreds of air-travel hours with Hillary, developing a relationship that colleagues describes as familial–along with an encyclopedic knowledge of the people and projects that populate the complicated global tangle of Clinton-world. A master of the "velvet no," Abedin calmly manages time demands on her candidate with apologetic grace.

But her tightness with Clinton also has costs. She's been caught up in questions about the propriety of the then-Secretary of State's private email server, and she is the target of an inspector general inquiry—prompted by a Senate Republican– into whether Clinton acted properly in hiring Abedin for government work even while she was employed by the private consulting firm Teneo Holdings. Abedin is also among the State Department aides on the list to be called as witnesses in a House committee investigation into the 2012 Benghazi terror attack.

Bill and Hillary Clinton have been the sun of Abedin's solar system ever since she joined the White House as an intern at age 21. Her late father, of Indian descent, was a university lecturer and her mother a sociology professor; both received their PhD's from the University of Pennsylvania. Born in Kalamazoo, Michigan before moving to Saudi Arabia, Abedin speaks fluent Arabic. She graduated from George Washington University.

At a 2012 Fortune dinner, Abedin said she has learned to take the advice of her mother, and the value of Plan B. "Sixteen years later, I wouldn't change a thing," she said at the time. "And I got to meet Christiane Amanpour."

Read more profiles of the top women behind Hillary Clinton's campaign operation. Next up: Women behind the GOP candidates.

Clinton Foundation donors have a bribery problem // The Washington Examiner // Sarah Westwood – June 10, 2015

Nigerian businessman Gilbert Chagoury's connections to the Clintons have come under scrutiny following revelations that State Department policy may have benefited him personally while Hillary Clinton served as secretary of state.

A pair of Clinton Foundation donors with financial ties to the former first family have both been at the center of major corruption cases, raising questions about why they chose to give millions to the Clintons' charity.

Nigerian businessman Gilbert Chagoury's connections to the Clintons have come under scrutiny following revelations that State Department policy may have benefited him personally while Hillary Clinton served as secretary of state.

Sen. David Vitter, R-La., has repeatedly pressed the State Department for documentation of Hillary Clinton's decision not to place Boko Haram on the terrorist watch list while serving as secretary of state.

"Disturbingly, while the department was refusing to make the [foreign terrorist organization] designation, former President Bill Clinton, also the head of the Clinton Foundation and account owner of the Clinton email domain, participated in events with a long-time donor and major Nigerian land developer, Gilbert Chagoury, who previously agreed to a $66 million plea deal during international investigation into corruption charges against him," Vitter wrote in a March letter to Secretary of State John Kerry.

"We need to know if Mr. Chagoury had any influence in the decision not to designate Boko Haram a [foreign terrorist organization], or had any other influence with Secretary Clinton's foreign policy decisions," Vitter added.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Chagoury's financial support of the Clintons has raised red flags in the past. In 1996, he was reportedly prodded by a Democratic National Committee fundraiser to give $460,000 to a nonprofit voter registration group that later won the DNC's business.

The group, Vote Now 96, drew attention "from congressional investigators because of its connections to the DNC and indications that in some cases, at least, donors ineligible to give to the party were steered to the voters group," the Washington Post reported in 1997.

Chagoury was one such ineligible donor whose gift to the supposedly nonpartisan organization nonetheless earned him a seat at a White House dinner for top DNC donors months later "although he is not a party contributor and could not legally give to the Democrats," according to the same Washington Post report.

Chagoury's donation was solicited by Mark Weiner, a top Democratic bundler who will co-host a fundraiser for Clinton's presidential campaign in Rhode Island Wednesday.

Chagoury was an adviser to Nigerian dictator Sani Abacha, who held power in Nigeria from 1993-98. He reportedly paid the incoming Nigerian government $300 million to avoid prosecution after Abacha's death.

Chagoury was "believed to have acted as a middleman for the late and corrupt Nigerian dictator Sani Abacha," according to the American Criminal Law Review.

Nigerian media outlets reported Chagoury and his brother, Jack, were among 80 local officials who were indicted in the Halliburton bribery scandal in 2010. The case alleged the Chagoury brothers were involved in a series of bribes to Nigerian officials that preceded Halliburton's acquisition of lucrative oil contracts in the country.

In April 2011, a Lebanese media outlet reported Fouad Siniora, prime minister of Lebanon, "suggested that the U.S. deliver to Chagoury a stern message about the possibility of financial sanctions and travel bans against those who undermine Lebanon's legitimate institutions."

Siniora's call for sanctions against Chagoury came after his ties to Lebanese officials gave the impression that he was interfering in Lebanese politics.

Chagoury did not return a request for comment.

But Chagoury isn't the only international businessman whose checkered past has raised questions about the Clinton Foundation's acceptance of generous donations from foreigners accused of bribery.

Victor Dahdaleh, a Canadian businessman and trustee of the Clinton Foundation, was arrested in October 2011 for his alleged role in a bribery scheme that funneled kickbacks from aluminum conglomerate Alcoa to Aluminium Bahrain.

Dahdaleh reportedly traveled with Bill Clinton through Europe in 2009, shortly after Hillary Clinton took office, and arranged speaking engagements for the former president dating back to 2005.

The U.K.'s Serious Fraud Office dropped its case against Dahdaleh in December 2013 after key witnesses backed down, Reuters reported.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The British agency had tapped lawyers from Akin Gum Strayss Hauer and Field to probe the bribery allegations, the same lawyers representing Aluminium Bahrain in "a 'hotly contested' U.S. civil lawsuit against Dahdaleh," which raised "a potential conflict of interest between their assistance to the [Serious Fraud Office] and their own interests in the U.S. legal action."

Akin Gump is also a Clinton Foundation donor.

OTHER DEMOCRATS NATIONAL COVERAGE

O'MALLEY

Martin O'Malley Backs Controversial Cybersecurity Bill // US News // Tom Risen – June 10, 2015

Cybersecurity is getting heightened attention in the wake of what could be the largest hack of government networks ever, and former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley is presenting himself as the best Democratic presidential candidate to confront the issue.

In an op-ed published Tuesday in Foreign Policy, O'Malley blamed congressional gridlock for delay of legislation he said could protect U.S. networks. Touting his work supporting cybersecurity investment as governor and as co-chairman of the Council of Governors, he said the data breach of the Office of Personnel Management shows "the urgent need to advance a new agenda to improve our nation's cybersecurity."

The Theodore Roosevelt Federal Building that houses the Office of Personnel Management headquarters is shown June 5, 2015 in Washington, D.C. U.S. investigators have said that at least 4 million current and former federal employees might have had their personal information stolen by Chinese hackers.

The hack that affected up to 4 million current and former government workers originated in China, federal investigators have determined, but it is unclear whether the country's Communist government was involved. O'Malley called on the Senate to respond to the data breach by passing the Protecting Cyber Networks Act, which would offer legal protections to companies and enable them to share with the government more information about threats to their networks.

The White House backs the cybersecurity legislation, which passed the House in April, but it also wants changes made in the Senate. Along with calling for amendments to limit the collection and sharing of unnecessary consumer data, the administration said giving companies too much legal protection for failing to protect consumer privacy or to act on hacker threat data "may weaken cybersecurity writ large." Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., announced on Wednesday that he wants to expedite passage of the Senate version of the bill, called the Cybersecurity Information Sharing Act, by attaching it to the National Defense Authorization Act now on the Senate floor.

Cybersecurity professionals, however, remain convinced both pieces of legislation could damage privacy rights and endanger networks by sharing unnecessary information.

Sen. Rand Paul, R-Ky., and Sen. Bernie Sanders, I-Vt., who are both presidential candidates, reportedly oppose the Senate bill because of the similar concerns about privacy, U.S. News has learned. O'Malley noted these concerns in his op-ed when he talked about his support for the Protecting Cyber Networks Act.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"After making changes to protect consumer data and ensure the appropriate level of legal protection for companies, Congress should pass this legislation," O'Malley said in the op-ed. "We need to ensure that privacy issues are directly and adequately addressed in order to build the trust necessary for businesses and other organizations to work with the government on the safeguards we need to protect both."

McConnell's move to attach cybersecurity legislation to a must-pass defense funding bill would damage the process to address privacy concerns, the Center for Democracy & Technology said in a blog post on Wednesday. The advocacy group warned that the Senate cybersecurity bill could enable the expansion of government surveillance and would not address the conduct of the National Security Agency and other agencies. The advocacy group wants the bill to discourage government conduct that could damage cybersecurity, including the stockpiling of "zero day" vulnerabilities in consumer software that could allow intelligence agencies to monitor or hack networks.

"This move would almost certainly stifle necessary debate on the privacy and civil liberties problems in the bill and thwart amendments that Senators have been crafting to address those problems," the blog post said.

A group of engineers from firms including Twitter and Cisco on April 16 sent a letter opposing the bill to House and Senate lawmakers, adding that security professionals already share threat data while complying with federal law.

"We do not need new legal authorities to share information that helps us protect systems from future attacks," the letter reads.

Strong national cybersecurity is a bipartisan issue likely to be advocated by all presidential candidates, but Congress has failed to pass a comprehensive bill on the issue in recent years because of concerns related to privacy protection. Support for stronger privacy on the issue could be a way for a candidate to stand apart in the 2016 election.

2016 hopeful O'Malley steps out on cybersecurity // The Hill // Cory Bennett – June 10, 2015

Martin O'Malley is trying to make his mark as the Democratic presidential candidate most focused on cybersecurity.

The former Maryland governor on Tuesday penned an essay for Foreign Policy that laid out his cyber agenda in the wake of the recent breach that exposed 4 million federal workers' records at the Office of Personnel Management (OPM).

"A new agenda is urgently needed to improve our nation's cybersecurity," O'Malley said.

The OPM hack has suddenly thrust cybersecurity into the 2016 election.

GOP hopefuls have used the breach to lambaste President Obama's policy on China, chastising him for not standing up to the Asian power.

But candidates seeking the Democratic nomination have been mostly mum on cybersecurity. Neither former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, the presumptive front-runner, nor Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) have made an issue of the OPM breach.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

O'Malley's essay wasn't directly critical of Obama, but he did argue the government needs to better promote collaboration between the public and private sector, while also boosting funds for state-level initiatives to bolster the nation's cyber defenses.

"Greater security requires greater investment," O'Malley said. "Investing more resources in cybersecurity is an economic and national security priority."

He pointed to the stalled cyber bill in Congress that would shield companies from legal liability when sharing data with the government about hackers. By enhancing this information exchange, the bill's backers believe the country can better understand and defend against cyber threats.

But concerns the measure will simply shuttle more private data to intelligence agencies have caused it languish in the upper chamber. Senate Republicans are now trying to attach the offering to the annual defense spending bill in an effort to speed up its timeline.

"We need to ensure that privacy issues are directly and adequately addressed in order to build the trust necessary for businesses and other organizations to work with the government on the safeguards we need to protect both," O'Malley said.

O'Malley also promoted state-level cyber investment, recalling his time as co-chairman of the Council of Governors.

"We pushed for every state's National Guard to develop cybersecurity units, which could be established quickly and affordably, and tap the skill sets of civilians," he said. "The federal government should support these efforts with financial and technical assistance."

He contended that he applied all of these agenda items during his time as Maryland governor. He pointed to CyberMaryland, "an initiative to attract and convene new cybersecurity firms."

"We targeted more than 40,000 state employees for cybersecurity training and conducted vulnerability assessments to test resilience to attacks," he said. "We also created a cybersecurity tax credit and launched a program to train 1,000 workers for the industry."

Cybersecurity was not a major campaign issue in the 2014 cycle, so it remains to be seen whether this flare-up lasts into the heat of the 2016 election season.

"Our digital information and networks are critical to our economic might and national security," O'Malley said. "We should treat them like the precious resources that they are."

SANDERS

Bernie Sanders Denies Internet Claim on Dual Israeli Citizenship // NYT // Gerry Mullany – June 10, 2015

Senator Bernie Sanders declared in a radio interview on Wednesday that "I do not have dual citizenship with Israel," batting away an incorrect assertion that has cropped up on the Internet.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Democratic presidential hopeful was appearing on the Diane Rehm Show on public radio when the topic came up. At one point, Ms. Rehm said to Mr. Sanders, “Senator, you have dual citizenship with Israel.”

To which Mr. Sanders replied, “I do not have dual citizenship with Israel.” He then added, “I’m an American.”

“I don’t know where that question came from,” he said

“I am an American citizen, and I have visited Israel on a couple of occasions,” Mr. Sanders continued. “No, I’m an American citizen, period.”

Mr. Sanders, who is Jewish, blamed the misinformation on “the nonsense that goes on in the Internet.”

Mr. Sanders then noted that his father came to the United States from Poland “at the age of 17 without a nickel in his pocket.”

Ms. Rehm, who herself comes from an ethnic Arab heritage of Greek Orthodox Syrian background, also asked Mr. Sanders if there were “members of Congress who do have dual citizenship or is that part of the fable?” Mr. Sanders replied that he did not know.

Internet searches provide numerous lists incorrectly showing scores of members of Congress and high-level members of the Obama administration holding dual American-Israeli citizenship. Ms. Rehm did not say where she got her information.

De Blasio to Skip Clinton Rally, Praises Rival Sanders // WSJ // Erica Orden – June 10, 2015

One of Hillary Clinton’s rivals for the 2016 Democratic presidential nomination received an informal boost Wednesday from a curious source: Mrs. Clinton’s former campaign manager, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio.

Mr. de Blasio, who managed Mrs. Clinton’s winning 2000 campaign for Senate and supported her 2008 presidential bid, said at an unrelated news conference that “I’ve always liked what I heard from Bernie Sanders,” the independent Vermont senator who is running for the Democratic 2016 nomination.

“I think Bernie Sanders is a great senator, is a great voice for a fair society and a fair economy,” he said.

Mr. de Blasio, a Democrat, also said that he wouldn’t attend Mrs. Clinton’s campaign rally on Saturday in New York City, on Roosevelt Island.

“I’m waiting to hear, as I’ve said, her larger vision for addressing income inequality,” Mr. de Blasio said when asked if he would attend her June 13 event. “I look forward to that.”

Mr. de Blasio has sought lately to cast himself as a national voice for liberalism.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

A spokesman for Mrs. Clinton didn't immediately respond a question about whether Mr. de Blasio was invited to the rally, nor to a request for comment on the mayor's remarks about Mr. Sanders.

The mayor also praised Mrs. Clinton more extensively on Wednesday than he has since the start of her campaign.

"I've been very impressed by the comment she's given so far on a host of issues," he said.

"I saw her speech on voting rights — it was very powerful," he said. "I thought her vision for that was exactly right. I'm very impressed by her criminal justice reform speech. What I am waiting to hear about is the fight against income inequality, how we raise wages and benefits."

Mrs. Clinton last week proposed that Americans be automatically registered to vote when they turn 18, unless they opt out, and called for an expansion of early-voting opportunities across the country.

Mr. de Blasio has had a lengthy relationship with both Mrs. Clinton and former President Bill Clinton, in whose administration he worked as an official at the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

This isn't the first time Mr. de Blasio has distanced himself from Mrs. Clinton's campaign or expressed reservations about her platform. In recent months he has said repeatedly that he hasn't decided whether to endorse her 2016 presidential bid.

In April, Mr. de Blasio said in an interview on NBC that he wouldn't endorse her "until I see an actual vision of where they want to go."

"She's a tremendous public servant," he told NBC. "I think she is one of the most qualified people to ever run for this office. And by the way, thoroughly vetted, we can say that. But we need to see the substance."

Sanders wants war spending paid for // The Hill // Jordain Carney – June 10, 2015

Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) wants to require Congress to pay for any spending in the Pentagon's war fund.

Sanders, who is seeking the Democratic presidential nomination, is offering an amendment to the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) that would require that lawmakers offset spending in the Overseas Contingency Operations (OCO) fund by raising new revenues.

Congress isn't currently required to pay for any spending through OCO. The war fund also isn't subjected to the congressionally mandated budget caps under the sequester.

Sanders has long criticized Congress for not paying for wars, and a fact sheet from his office says that the Iraq and Afghanistan wars "were put on the nation's credit card while the president cut taxes for millionaires and billionaires at the same time."

The 2016 contender's amendment to the defense policy bill comes after he called for a "war tax" earlier this year.

Sanders wanted to include a new tax on millionaires to finance the country's wars as part of a budget resolution.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Critics argue that the fund, meant to pay for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan and now financing operations against the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria, has turned into a slush fund for the Pentagon.

Sanders faces an uphill path to getting his amendment approved as part of the defense policy bill. Though Democrats have taken aim at an additional $38 billion in war funding included in the defense policy bill, they failed to gain enough support to fence off the money until Congress reaches a deal on the budget caps under the sequester.

Bernie Sanders, Gun Nut // Slate // Mark Joseph Stern – June 10, 2015

When Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders jumped into the 2016 presidential race, he was widely hailed as a far-left socialist who would appeal to the liberal wing of the Democratic Party. A liberal challenge to Hillary Clinton, said Politico. True progressives' liberal alternative, trumpeted FiveThirtyEight. But before liberal Democrats flock to Sanders, they should remember that the Vermont senator stands firmly to Clinton's right on one issue of overwhelming importance to the Democratic base: gun control. During his time in Congress, Sanders opposed several moderate gun control bills. He also supported the most odious NRA–backed law in recent memory—one that may block Sandy Hook families from winning a lawsuit against the manufacturer of the gun used to massacre their children.

Sanders, an economic populist and middle-class pugilist, doesn't talk much about guns on the campaign trail. But his voting record paints the picture of a legislator who is both skeptical of gun control and invested in the interests of gun owners—and manufacturers. In 1993, then-Rep. Sanders voted against the Brady Act, which mandated federal background checks for gun purchasers and restricted felons' access to firearms. As a senator, Sanders supported bills to allow firearms in checked bags on Amtrak trains and block funding to any foreign aid organization that registered or taxed Americans' guns. Sanders is dubious that gun control could help prevent gun violence, telling one interviewer after Sandy Hook that "if you passed the strongest gun control legislation tomorrow, I don't think it will have a profound effect on the tragedies we have seen." (He has since endorsed some modest gun control measures.)

None of these views are particularly shocking for a Vermont representative: Sanders' deep-blue state has both high gun ownership and incredibly lax gun laws, and it's perfectly logical for the senator to support his constituents' firearms enthusiasm. And a close friend of Sanders once said that the senator "thinks there's an elitism in the anti-gun movement."

The act's primary purpose is as simple as it is cold-blooded.

But Sanders' vote for a different kind of pro-gun bill is more puzzling—and profoundly disturbing. In 2005, a Republican-dominated Congress passed the Protection of Lawful Commerce in Arms Act (PLCAA). This law doesn't protect gun owners; it protects gun manufacturers, distributors, dealers, and importers. The PLCAA was the No. 1 legislative priority of the National Rifle Association for years, because it shields gun makers and dealers from most liability when their firearms are used criminally. It is one of the most noxious pieces of pro-gun legislation ever passed. And Bernie Sanders voted for it. (Sanders' campaign has not replied to a request for comment.)

Because the PLCAA deals with tort law—not a topic of great interest for most Americans—it didn't stir much outrage when first passed. But the act's primary purpose is as simple as it is cold-blooded. Every state imposes liability on manufacturers who are negligent in their production and sale of products. If I crash my Prius because its accelerator malfunctions, I can sue Toyota for negligently manufacturing a faulty pedal. If my child dismembers himself with a blender at Sears, I can sue Sears for negligently leaving that blender within a child's reach. If I get stabbed by a teenager with a switchblade, I might be able to sue the pawn shop owner who illegally sold a knife to a minor.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Before the PLCAA, most states imposed some form of tort liability on gun makers and sellers. If a gun manufacturer made an assault rifle that could slaughter dozens of people in a few seconds, for instance, one of its victims might sue the company for negligently making a gun that could foreseeably be used for mass murder. If a gun seller sold a gun to a customer without performing any kind of background check—and then the buyer opened fire on the subway—his victims might sue that seller for negligently providing a gun to a mentally unstable person. The standards in each state differed, but the bottom line remained the same: Victims of gun violence and their families could recover financially from the people and companies who negligently enabled gun violence.

The PLCAA changed all that. Remarkably, the act wiped out gun liability laws in all 50 states, rendering them invalid except for a handful of narrow exceptions. (So much for states' rights.) Thanks to the law, victims of mass shootings are barred from suing the companies that produced a wartime weapon that no civilian could ever need. With few exceptions, victims cannot sue a gun seller for negligently providing a semiautomatic weapon to a lunatic who shoots them in a movie theater. Even if a jury decides a gun maker or seller should be liable, the PLCAA invalidates its verdict. The law tramples upon states' rights, juries' rights, and fundamental precepts of America's civil justice system. And it received Bernie Sanders' support—in both 2003 (when it was first introduced) and 2005 (when it finally passed).

Every few years, the families of mass shooting victims take gun makers to court for creating a weapon seemingly designed to kill as many people as possible in as short a time as possible. Every time, they run headfirst into the PLCAA. Right now, the families of Sandy Hook victims are searching for a loophole in the law, so they can sue Bushmaster for making the gun that sent 154 bullets through 20 children and six adults in 264 seconds. They will probably fail.

Several liberal congressional representatives have recently spoken out against the PLCAA, and if Democrats retake both houses of Congress, they may make repealing the law a priority. Hillary Clinton, who voted against the act as a senator, would almost certainly sign a repeal bill. Would a President Bernie Sanders? Until he says otherwise, we have every reason to believe the ostensible progressive hero would stand behind the vile legislation he championed just a decade ago.

Lead, follow or get out of the way: Bernie Sanders opts for latter in Islamic State fight // The Washington Times // S.A. Miller – June 10, 2015

Democratic presidential candidate Sen. Bernard Sanders said Wednesday that the United States should not take a leading role in the war against the terrorist army known as Islamic State.

He said Middle East countries should "step up" and lead the fight to turn back the advancing Islamist terrorists in Iraq.

"At the end of the day … I do not believe the United States can or should lead the effort in that part of the world. What is taking place now is a war for the soul of Islam," Mr. Sanders said on NPR's Diane Rehm Show.

Mr. Sanders, an avowed socialist from Vermont, said that countries such as Saudi Arabia, which has the third-largest defense budget in the world, Turkey, Jordan and the United Arab Emirates should "step up to the plate and lead."

He said the United States and Western countries would play a supporting role.

Mr. Sanders' comments come as President Obama is considering a Pentagon proposal to send 400 more U.S. troops to beef up the training of Sunni forces in Iraq, hoping to turn back advances by the Islamic State, which is also known by the acronyms ISIS or ISIL.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The proposed build-up follows criticism of Mr. Obama saying Monday that he doesn't yet have a "complete strategy" to combat the Islamic State.

"I think everyone understands ISIS is a barbaric organization and that they must be defeated," said Mr. Sanders, though he added it wasn't worth the cost of getting the U.S. drawn into another Middle East war.

"But here is my nightmare, and I see it moving forward every day," he said. "You have a lot of Republicans who apparently did not learn anything from the never-ending war in Afghanistan, learned nothing from what happened in Iraq and want us in perpetual warfare in the Middle East. I'm strongly opposed to that."

Mr. Sanders' is waging a long-shot campaign to overtake front-runner Hillary Rodham Clinton for the Democratic nomination.

CHAFEE

Chafee: Hillary is 'more like the Republicans' // The Hill // Jesse Byrnes – June 10, 2015

Democratic presidential candidate Lincoln Chafee on Wednesday likened Hillary Clinton to a Republican, citing her hawkish positions on foreign policy.

"Really the main difference is our approach to the world," Chafee said in an interview Wednesday on "Fox and Friends," mentioning ongoing conflicts in the Middle East.

"She's more like the Republicans," Chafee said. "My argument is, you won't have a choice if Secretary Clinton is the Democratic nominee because she's so similar to the Republicans."

He echoed that sentiment in another interview on MSNBC's "Morning Joe," suggesting his party nominate "someone that differs from the Republican approach to the world."

"Where we're going in the world — her tenure as secretary of State, her vote for the Iraq war — kind of indicates a similarity to the Republican candidates that are running," he said on MSNBC.

The former Rhode Island governor is mounting a long-shot bid against Clinton, who is running well ahead of all her rivals for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Chafee has dished up relentless criticism of Clinton's 2002 vote as a senator authorizing the Iraq war, and has described her muscular approach to foreign policy as similar to the neo-conservatives who were part of the George W. Bush administration.

Last week he also discussed "questionable ethics practices" that have followed Clinton over the years.

"I think that our candidates should stick to the ideas that draw a contrast between our party and our party's agenda and the Republicans," Democratic National Committee Chairwoman Debbie Wasserman Schultz (Fla.) said on CNN when pressed whether Chafee's comments were appropriate.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Chafee somewhat doubled down Wednesday over his criticism of Clinton.

"Well obviously she has a credibility problem over a long history of ethical questions, most recently with the emails and the Clinton Foundation donations," he said on MSNBC.

"But really my main criticism, if I could, is in her approach to the world. And that's really what I want to talk about in the campaign."

The hidden history behind Lincoln Chafee's metric proposal // MSNBC // Alex Seitz-Wald – June 10, 2015

When Democrat Lincoln Chafee told a group of mostly young journalists and even younger college students that if elected president he would convert the U.S. to the metric system, the response in the room was laughter.

Virtually every other country in the world uses the metric system. But for this millennial audience, the idea of the U.S. making a switch seemed on par with the moon colonies of Newt Gingrich's 2012 presidential campaign.

For critics who have followed Chafee's political career more closely in Rhode Island, it was entirely in character. "He is very consistent in his bizarro world. That was not a bad day. It'll come up every day," said Steve Laffey, who challenged Chafee in the 2006 Republican Senate primary. (Chafee was a Republican until 2007.) "He's a good guy, he's just odd," Laffey added.

Chafee framed his push for a switch to metric as a way for the U.S. to improve its status in a world where every country except Liberia and Myanmar uses the metric system. Despite that goal, it's hard to find anyone — including metric advocates — taking Chafee's proposal seriously.

That's because measurement is woven into to the most fundamental parts of life, from how Americans cook our food (in Fahrenheit), commute to work (in miles), build our homes (in feet), and clothe ourselves (in inches). It would take an enormous psychological change and a huge expenditure of political capital to convert a country of 315 million people to metric.

That was, in fact, the argument against converting made in the 1970s by former Rhode Island Sen. John Chafee, Lincoln Chafee's father, who said the government had far more important issues to tackle than metrication, as the conversion is known.

In addition, even advocates for the metric system concede that American exceptionalism and its cultural identity are bad fits for a francophone international measurement system.

"We have this thing where the metric system is seen as un-American. It's a really emotional issue for some people," said Paul Trusten of the U.S. Metric Association, which has been leading the charge for metrication for the past 99 years.

When the Federal Highway Administration announced in 1977 that it was going to start putting kilometers on signs, it was inundated with 6,000 public letters, many from people who saw the system as communist plot. "This change to the Metric System is just part of the Communist Diversionary to keep our country in an uproar," wrote a man from Kansas City.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Conservatives and even anti-establishment liberals clubbed Jimmy Carter with metric, and when Reagan essentially killed the conversion in 1982, the board responsible for pushing metrication conceded there was “overwhelming” opposition.

Still, Trusten is glad Chafee is raising the issue. ”It’s been silent for so long, and now people are talking about it,” he said.

For those familiar with the history of the metric system in the U.S., Chafee’s idea is both more and less serious than it might appear.

Technically, but only technically, metric has been the official U.S. measurement standard for more than 100 years. In 1893, after a fire in London damaged the original British Imperial Yard — the physical metal bar that determined for the world how long three feet should be — the U.S. federal agency in charge of measuring stuff started defining U.S. measurements in relation to their metric counterparts.

Since then, a foot is officially defined as 0.3048 of a meter. A pound is 453.59237 grams. “We’ve actually been on the metric system since 1893, in a sense,” Trusten said.

For American metric advocates, widespread adoption seemed tantalizingly just over the horizon for decades or more. The closest the U.S. came to conversion was in 1975, as other countries were going metric and trade groups, scientists, engineers and others successfully lobbied Congress to follow suit. Two days before Christmas that year, President Gerald Ford signed a law making metric “the preferred system of weights and measures for United States trade and commerce.”

“To say that this legislation is historic is an understatement,” Ford declared. But there were warning signs, even then.

The next four presidents offered lip service instead of real action to move forward with metric. Finally, in the face of political opposition and status quo bias, momentum petered out to almost zero kilogram meters per second (the metric measure for momentum).

The U.S. Metric Association maintains a tally every time metrication is mentioned in the press and academic journals. The graph elegantly shows the rise and fall of the metric movement in America. Like a cartoon mountain, discussion of metrication starts near zero around the turn of the 20th century, then peaked in the mid-1970s, before falling back towards zero by the turn of the turn of the next century.

In 1982, Reagan defunded and abolished the U.S. Metric Board, which was supposed to spearhead conversion. That signaled the beginning of the end for metric conversion, even though Reagan six years later signed an omnibus law that, tucked deep inside, contained a measure stipulating the metric system “be used, to the extent economically feasible, in Federal agency’s’ procurements, grants, and other business-related activities.”

So some parts of the federal government have adopted metric, others still use the old system. A federal law requires consumer products packages to list both.

That helps explain why wine comes in 750-milliliter bottles, while beer comes in 12-ounce cans. Nyquil comes in 8-ounce bottles, but its active ingredients are measured in milligrams. Soda is available in both customary and metric, with 20-ounce and 2-liter bottles.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But widespread adoption never regained momentum, even after a conversion error between inches and centimeters was blamed for the crash of NASA's $125 million Mars Climate Orbiter in 1999.

Adam Toobin, who founded Students for Chafee at Brown University in Rhode Island, Chafee's alma mater and the school where he taught classes between stints as senator and governor, acknowledged metric may not be the most obvious way to fire up young people.

"I support it in theory, totally," he said. "It's not the perfect issue. The Internet would make a lot of fun with that one."

OTHER

Clinton, O'Malley, Sanders and Webb to attend Iowa dinner // AP – June 10, 2015

Four Democratic presidential hopefuls will appear at an Iowa Democratic Party event next month.

The state party organization announced Wednesday that their "Hall of Fame" dinner will be attended by former Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley, Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders and former Virginia Sen. Jim Webb. All but Webb have officially announced they are running for president.

The event will be held July 17 in Cedar Rapids. Clinton's Iowa spokeswoman Lily Adams confirmed that this is the first announced multi-candidate event for Clinton, the front-runner in the field. Some other Democratic candidates have previously appeared together.

Iowa Democrats have seen less big candidate round-ups than Republicans, given the smaller field of declared and potential contenders.

Warren shames both parties on college affordability // Politico // Allie Grasgreen – June 10, 2015

Progressive hero Sen. Elizabeth Warren on Wednesday hammered both Republicans and Democrats in an urgent call to make college more affordable.

Warren, a divisive figure who so far has had little success with her own legislative proposal to allow borrowers to refinance their federal student loans, seized the momentum of an issue that is resonating on the campaign trail to tell her colleagues on both sides of the aisle to get past their own hang-ups.

Story Continued Below

Warren spread around the blame, hitting states for divesting in higher education, Congress for letting resources taper off while the feds profit off student debt, and the Education Department for lax enforcement of troublesome loan servicers and for-profit colleges.

"It starts with courage — the courage of both Democrats and Republicans to admit how much is wrong and that the other side has a real point," she said, according to prepared remarks to be delivered at the headquarters of the American Federation of Teachers. "We can do it if Republicans admit that we will never have affordable college without investing more resources in education, and if Democrats admit that we will never have affordable college without demanding real accountability in exchange for those investments."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Warren's comments are a clear indicator that Democrats plan to keep pushing college affordability in Congress and in the presidential race — an issue that Hillary Clinton's campaign manager recently called "what voters are looking for."

Warren also pointed, aggressively, at colleges and universities for exacerbating the nation's student debt problem, which is about $1.2 trillion and climbing.

She's struck a similar tone at Senate education committee hearings of late, grilling college presidents who want Congress to ease regulations or increase federal aid, but won't commit to lowering tuition in return.

"Resources matter — but so do incentives," Warren said.

Following the economic recession, higher education bore the brunt of public funding cuts. Even now, colleges in almost every state are spending less per student than they were in 2008 — leading to program cuts, tuition increases and a heightened reliance on federal aid.

But colleges can't blame governments for their problems, Warren said. She took a swing at schools that "have doubled down in a competition for students that involves fancy dorms, high-end student centers, climbing walls and lazy rivers — paying for those amenities with still higher tuition and student fees."

Although Warren came down hard on the department — nothing new for the consumer watchdog, a seasoned critic of the agency's contracts and oversight — much of it will likely ring true. Just this week, Ted Mitchell, the top higher education official at the department, noted the risk of states supplanting their own funds with federal dollars through initiatives designed to increase college access and completion.

President Barack Obama's free community college proposal, for example, requires states to pick up part of the tab.

It's less clear how an increasingly popular "debt-free college" movement — of which Warren is a part — would have states contribute.

But with a move in that direction, Democrats are taking their focus on student debt from the 2014 midterm elections to an even broader, more progressive level.

High-profile Republicans have yet to come up with a proposal for reducing college costs that stands up to Democrats' sweeping campaign promises: 2016 contender Sen. Marco Rubio has offered several plans for reforming the student loan system, for example. And Republicans in Congress worked with Democrats in 2013 to strike a bipartisan deal that has reduced student loan interest rates in recent years.

But none of their proposals have the allure of Democrats' plan for college with no student debt at all.

Some Republican candidates, including Rubio, meanwhile, have track records of supporting for-profit colleges that could become liabilities. Rubio wrote the Education Department in the summer of 2014 to ask the department to show “leniency” towards the now-defunct Corinthian Colleges after the department placed the for-profit under strict oversight.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Jeb Bush also addressed the for-profit trade group Association of Private Sector Colleges and Universities in 2014, telling the crowd that “we must empower people to make choices about their education.”

Warren reiterated today that she wants to tighten the rules on for-profits.

In other cases, potential Republican candidates such as Scott Walker have proposed slashing state higher education budgets — another liability on the campaign trail.

Earlier Wednesday, Warren appeared with other members of the Congressional Progressive Caucus to highlight the growing interest from Democrats in the debt-free college idea. Senate and House resolutions supporting the concept have a combined 62 co-sponsors including Sen. Chuck Schumer and Rep. Bobby Scott, the ranking Democrat on the House education committee.

There, Rep. Keith Ellison told a crowd of debt-free advocates to “get ready to get your marching shoes on.”

Democratic presidential hopefuls are raising the issue on the campaign trail. Though Clinton hasn’t offered any specifics, liberals swooned when she said last month in Iowa, “We have to deal with the indebtedness — to try to move toward making college as debt-free as possible.”

Former Maryland Gov. Martin O’Malley recently told supporters nationwide that “every student should be able to go to college debt-free.”

And Sen. Bernie Sanders actually issued a concrete proposal, in the form of legislation that would make tuition free at public colleges.

Warren’s remarks come just days after the department offered a long-awaited plan to help thousands of students at shuttered for-profit college giant Corinthian Colleges deal with millions in student loan debt. More than a dozen congressional Democrats pushed the agency to forgive the debt of those students and others whose colleges may have committed fraud. (The department found that Corinthian falsified job placement rates, and the now-bankrupt company is also under investigation by several federal agencies and state attorneys general.)

But taxpayers will be stuck with the bill, to the tune of anywhere from more than $500 million, in the case of Corinthian students whom the department has already deemed eligible for loan forgiveness, to upward of $3.5 billion, the total loan portfolio of students who attended one of the college’s campuses in the last five years.

Warren also delivered the speech as work is heating up on reauthorization of the Higher Education Act, the massive bill governing federal financial aid and other college regulations.

In her speech, the Massachusetts senator endorsed some policies that are being considered in a process that Senate education committee Chairman Lamar Alexander insists will be bipartisan.

For example, Warren plugged her legislation that would require colleges to reimburse some portion of defaulted student loans, in theory encouraging institutions to “pay attention to rising costs and failing students.” Such risk-sharing concepts have gained traction from congressional Republicans, too.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The federal government should simplify the application process for federal student aid, she said — as Alexander and other members from both parties have said. Even the White House is on board with that one.

Other ideas are less likely to find broad support.

Warren floated a maintenance of effort rule for states, requiring them to maintain minimum investments in schools. That idea emerged at a reauthorization hearing last week — but Alexander shot it down, fast.

And, unsurprisingly, Warren touted her student loan refinancing legislation, which the Senate has blocked twice. Republicans have staunchly opposed lowering interest rates for existing borrowers, though Warren notes some states — like North Dakota, under Republican Gov. Jack Dalrymple — have done so on their own.

Some research has argued student loan debt is dragging down the economy, preventing borrowers from starting businesses and buying homes, cars and the like.

But that notion has its critics. At a hearing last week, for instance, Alexander asked why nobody's panicking about the comparable cumulative level of car loan debt.

It's more familiar and less intimidating, witnesses said.

GOP

BUSH

How Jeb Bush's campaign ran off course before it even began // WaPo // Ed O'Keefe and Robert Costa – June 10, 2015

When asked to pinpoint where Jeb Bush's presidential effort began running into trouble, many confidants utter a single word: Dallas.

Mike Murphy, Bush's political alter ego, decided early on to hold regular senior staff meetings at an unusual location: a Hyatt hotel inside the terminal at Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport. The idea was that it was a central and relatively inexpensive gathering place for a team scattered from Los Angeles, where Murphy lives, to Miami, where the would-be candidate resides.

It went fine at first but quickly became an awkward routine. Donors and other Republicans found the setup ungainly for a campaign-in-waiting that was supposed to be based in Florida.

Older Bush hands also grew unhappy with rapid hiring by new advisers, and relationships frayed, according to Bush associates. And as the former Florida governor began to founder on the trail and in the polls, the discussions flared into arguments about how to divvy up money and resources between Bush's allied super PAC and his official campaign.

"These things are always tug of wars," Thomas D. Rath, a Bush family friend in New Hampshire, said of the initial sessions. "It's almost like the first day of school, everyone trying to get to the right place and find the right seats."

Bush talks to the media after attending a house party in March in Dover, N.H., in March. (Matt McClain/The

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Washington Post)

The airport huddles were just one sign among many of a political operation going off course — disjointed in message and approach, torn between factions and more haphazard than it appeared on the surface. Bush's first six months as an all-but-declared candidate have been defined by a series of miscalculations, leaving his standing considerably diminished ahead of his formal entry into the race on Monday.

In interviews this week, dozens of Bush backers and informed Republicans — most of whom spoke on the condition of anonymity in order to comment candidly — described an overly optimistic, even haughty exploratory operation. Strategic errors were exacerbated by unexpected stumbles by the would-be candidate and internal strife within his team, culminating in a staff shake-up this week.

The original premise of Bush's candidacy — that a bold, fast start would scare off potential rivals and help him overcome the burden of his last name — has proved to be misguided.

His operation's ability to rake in large checks also fueled inflated expectations. Supporters acknowledged this week that an allied super PAC was likely to fall short — perhaps substantially — of predictions that it would bring in $100 million in the first half of the year.

On the stump, Bush has stuck to his pledge not to shift to the right to win the primary, but his middle-of-the-road positions on immigration and education have come off more as out of step with the base of his party than shrewdly pragmatic. His wonky question-and-answer exchanges with voters sometimes resemble college lectures rather than a friendly appeal for votes.

The troubles have eroded the image Bush has sought to present as the one Republican uniquely ready for the presidential stage. He has slipped in polls from presumed front-runner to one of several candidates jumbled toward the top of an increasingly crowded field.

"We've learned that the prospect of a big financial advantage is not going to keep people out of the race and that the notion of a new face is stronger than we might have thought," Vin Weber, an outside Bush adviser, said in an interview. "That requires modest adjustments in strategy, not wholesale changes."

After weeks of bad press, "donors were getting a little edgy," Weber said. "No one is ready to jump ship. Nobody has lost heart. But they have watched other candidates rise in the polls."

Speaking Wednesday in Berlin during an overseas trip, Bush expressed confidence. "It's June, for crying out loud, so we've got a long way to go," he said, adding later: "I'm going to compete everywhere. If I'm a candidate, there's no fifth-place, you know, kind of mentality in my mind."

Forced to make up lost ground, Bush, his aides and his super-PAC allies are now preparing plans to attack the records and experience of his GOP competition, especially Sens. Marco Rubio (Fla.) and Rand Paul (Ky.) and Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker. A summer originally envisioned as a season of slow and warm introductions to voters is now poised to be a battle as Bush tries to recapture his place atop the field.

"The Bushes have always underestimated the depth of the base's dissatisfaction with their policies, and they take the criticism personally," Laura Ingraham, a conservative talk-radio host, said in an interview. "Jeb has to try to understand the reasons why conservatives have problems with him instead of crowing about how principled he is."

Aides bristle at what they consider the media's relentless focus on Bush's personal and professional past. They say that out on the campaign trail, in visits to more than a dozen states, he has been doing exactly what he should.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“Interacting with people on the road who deal with real issues . . . that’s what brings true joy to Jeb,” Sally Bradshaw, a longtime consultant, said in a recent e-mail.

Bush started with an aggressive series of steps late last year and early this year— a kind of “shock and awe” entry that caught fellow contenders by surprise. The moves were designed to send an unambiguous signal to fundraisers and party activists and to reinforce a natural advantage Bush had with establishment donors.

At the same time, Bush’s inner circle operated on the theory that there was little that could be gained by trying to speed up the political clock and that most voters in early states would not begin paying attention until later in the year.

Bush revived a 650-member alumni network of aides who worked for him as governor and recruited 21 veterans of his father and brother’s administrations to advise him on foreign policy. He hired state directors in the first four early states, aides for outreach to evangelicals and Hispanics, and a spokeswoman dedicated to fielding questions from the Spanish-language press.

As Bush travels the country, he has fielded more than 900 questions from donors, reporters and voters, according to aides. He has maintained a busy schedule that stretches from the early-voting states of Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina and Nevada — where conservative Republicans remain skeptical — to places visited less frequently at this early stage by presidential candidates, including Denver, Seattle and Puerto Rico.

Despite those efforts, recent surveys put Bush in a five-way tie for the lead. Recent polls touted by his advisers give him a wide lead in New Hampshire, but others taken nationally and in the early states put him behind Rubio and Walker.

Sensing Bush’s vulnerabilities, Ohio Gov. John Kasich this week hired two veteran GOP operatives as he prepares to launch a bid and make a play for the same donors Bush has already wooed.

“I didn’t think I was going to be back up here again, because frankly I thought Jeb was just going to suck all the air out of the room, and it just hasn’t happened,” Kasich told New Hampshire business leaders last week.

Bush dispatched one possible rival early when Mitt Romney decided not to run again. His fast entrance also bruised the chances of New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, who is still pondering a bid. They did not regard Rubio as a likely opponent but were proved wrong when the young, telegenic Cuban American jumped in the race.

Early on, there were signs that Bush’s ability to command huge amounts of cash for his allied Right to Rise super PAC was emerging as the dominant characteristic of his potential candidacy. His team laid out presidential-style goals for fundraisers, asking them to hit goals of $50,000, $100,000, $250,000 or $500,000 by April 17. The money was flowing into the super PAC so rapidly that his advisers issued an edict — no contributions of more than $1 million, for now.

“He was more of a super-PAC candidate than a retail candidate,” said one Republican close to the Bush operation. “The candidate hasn’t been out stumping for a while. When was the last time he’s asked anyone for a vote? It’s been quite a few years.”

Those concerns, simmering under the surface, finally boiled over one week in mid-May with a series of interviews focused on the most obvious issue imaginable for a Bush: the Iraq war.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Starting with an interview aired on Fox News on Monday, May 11, Bush struggled over four days to answer whether he would have authorized the war begun by his brother given what is known now about bad intelligence. He first said yes, then said "maybe," and then refused to answer altogether.

Finally that Thursday he attempted to settle the issue at a campaign-style event in Arizona. "Here's the deal," he said. "If we're all supposed to answer hypothetical questions — knowing what we know now, what would you have done — I would have not engaged. I would not have gone into Iraq."

The episode served to crystallize some of the key concerns about Bush — his reluctance to criticize or distance himself from the unpopular policies of George W. Bush, and his tendency toward prickliness if pushed.

"We should have had that answer nailed down," one donor said. "There were people who were really shaken by that."

By the time major party donors gathered in Dallas in late May for a meeting of the Republican Governors Association's executive roundtable, the overwhelming sentiment was that Jeb Bush was less formidable than many thought he was going to be, according to several participants. Some flatly stated that they did not believe he could win the nomination.

People close to Bush started getting anxious, according to a top party fundraiser with close ties to his advisers — and things began to deteriorate inside the Bush team.

David Kochel, an Iowa-based strategist and former Romney aide, had been brought aboard in January as a de facto campaign manager. As the months wore on, Bradshaw and Murphy became jittery about Kochel's concentration on staffing issues rather than deflecting the shots being thrown Bush's way.

Meanwhile, Bush was growing chummy with Danny Diaz, a 39-year-old Washington native and onetime plumber, who was spotted several times on the trail while Kochel ground away at headquarters near the Miami airport.

By late May, Kochel's grip on power had eroded. Bradshaw and Murphy moved with the candidate's blessing to push Kochel into a lesser role and ensure they alone had final say about the allocation of resources. The candidate, urged on by his allies and donors, suggested that a more aggressive approach was necessary.

On Monday, just as Bush prepared to leave for Europe, Diaz was named the campaign manager.

Friends and donors are hopeful that Bush has corrected course and that his substantial resources will carry him further than others.

"He's going to try to do it his way without acting with every change in the wind, without doing full face-plants on the pandering," said Tallahassee lobbyist John "Mac" Stipanovich, a Bush ally.

Jeb Bush's 'It's June!' argument has two major flaws // WaPo // Philip Bump – June 10, 2015

"It's June, for crying out loud," Jeb Bush said with apparent exasperation on Wednesday, "so we've got a long way to go." Bush was responding to a question about his standing in the polls, which, given the size of the field, really isn't that bad.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But he was also responding to the strain of running a presidential campaign and to questions about the state of his campaign team, given prominent staff changes this week. His cry of "it's June!" was more a cry of 'it's too early for much of this to make a difference, so calm down.'

There's truth to that. If you look at how candidates did relative to polls from June of the year prior, the ones that ended up in the upper echelon usually didn't see a whole lot of up and down movement until the debates and primaries began in earnest. In 2011, Newt Gingrich started to spike toward the end of the year; Rick Perry came and went. But Gingrich, Mitt Romney and Rick Santorum were pretty flat until November. The middle part of the year didn't make much of a difference.

But in 2007, things looked a bit different. Fred Thompson pulled a Rick Perry, arriving and departing. Rudy Giuliani's slide began in March and continued unabated until October, at which point he was all but finished.

It's that Giuliani thing that offers an asterisk to Bush's "it's early" declaration. Usually, candidates hold pretty steady through the end of the year before the election. As Rudy showed, not always.

Past performance is no guarantee of future results, as daytime infomercials are legally obligated to remind us. So Bush's steadiness is by no means guaranteed, and questions about the state of his campaign are very much warranted.

And then we get to the other thing.

An April editorial in the Post decried candidates that "mock the law" by running for president without declaring that they are presidential candidates. There are legal (read: financial) reasons they don't, but by now most of the big names have accepted reality. They're running.

Bush's campaign launch is still a few days away. While he filed paperwork suggesting that he is a candidate, he hasn't filed with the Federal Election Commission.

In other words, most of the analysis about and machinations of Bush's team over the past few weeks related to someone who wasn't even technically running for president. So were we not all playing this game about how Bush isn't a candidate even though he's a candidate, he might have pointed out that before his campaign became subject to its death notice, perhaps it should actually begin.

His exclamation works the other way, too. It's June, for crying out loud, months after Bush started running and should have had things sorted out. There is a messy, subpar campaign that he's been running, despite the legal lines set by the FEC. The odds are good that the not-campaign won't fall apart more between now and December, it's true. But not-yet-campaigns have doomed candidates before.

Jeb Bush says U.S. bank rules may have contributed to systemic risks // Reuters // Reuters – June 9, 2015

Likely Republican presidential candidate Jeb Bush on Tuesday criticized the 2010 Dodd-Frank Wall Street oversight law, saying it did not stop banks from becoming "too big to fail" and may have contributed to new risks in the U.S. financial system.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Bush, the former governor of Florida, is expected to formally launch his bid for the White House on June 15, after he completes a five-day European trip.

Speaking in Berlin on Tuesday, Bush said reforms enacted in response to the 2007-2009 economic meltdown led to bigger banks and may have heightened risk in the U.S. financial system.

"We have more banks with more concentrated assets in the United States, and the systematic risk is perhaps greater now than it was when the law was signed," Bush said.

"And so I would beware of regulations in general. I think they need to be thoughtful," he said.

During the crisis, the biggest banks received government bailouts because regulators worried they were so big it would threaten financial market stability if they went under, a concept that came to be known as "too big to fail."

The 2010 Wall Street law made a wide variety of changes to financial oversight, such as forcing banks to rely less on debt for funding, in order to bolster financial firms and prevent them from needing bailouts in the future.

Critics of the White House administration of Bush's brother, George W. Bush, say tougher oversight of banks and the U.S. housing market could have prevented the crisis or lessened its impact.

But many critics of the 2010 law argue that instead of eliminating the "too big to fail" problem, the cost of complying with tougher rules forced smaller banks to shut down or sell themselves, resulting in fewer, more concentrated banks than before the meltdown.

Jeb Bush, who had long been expected to seek the presidency in the November 2016 U.S. election, said regulation was needed "around bad banks" to prevent another crisis that would hurt the middle class, but he said Dodd-Frank did not have the effect Congress desired.

Some seeking the Democratic nomination for the presidency, including former Maryland Governor Martin O'Malley and U.S. Senator Bernie Sanders, take the opposite view. They say Congress should go even further than it did with Dodd-Frank and break up the largest U.S. banks.

Jeb Bush After Shake-Up: 'I Don't Read the Polls' // NBC News // Benjy Sarlin – June 10, 2015

Days before his presidential launch, Jeb Bush told reporters on Wednesday that his decision to replace his campaign-manager-in-waiting was a strategic move rather than a response to his tepid position in the polls.

"I don't read the polls," he told reporters outside the Pestana Hotel in Berlin, where he is on the first leg of a trip through Germany, Poland and Estonia. "It's fun to see them when you're winning, not so fun when you're not. Doesn't really matter, though, its June for crying out loud, so we got a long way to go."

Bush said that he had chosen Florida Republican Danny Diaz as campaign manager over David Kochel, who was tapped for the role initially, to allow Kochel to take a different role masterminding the campaign's efforts in early states.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"You have a real focus on four states in February then you have an avalanche of states after that and you think about how to organize all that, how to develop the messaging part of this, the scheduling part of it, it's a pretty overwhelming challenge and so I decided to kind of split up the duties," Bush said. "David has got great success in these early states, particularly Iowa, he's also got a great strategic mind and Danny's a grinder."

He added that he was "confident that the team in place will do their job and I got to do my job as well."

Responding to a reporter's question about his early expectations, Bush pushed back against the idea that he should be in a more dominant position by now given his fundraising strength and high-profile name brand.

"I know I'm going to have to earn this," he told reporters. "It's a lot of work and I'm excited about the prospects of this. It's a long haul. You start whenever you start and you end a long, long way from today. I just urge everybody to be a little more patient about this."

Turning to his European tour, Bush repeated his call for a harder line against Russian President Vladimir Putin, who he called a "ruthless pragmatist" in Berlin on Tuesday at a conference hosted by Chancellor Angela Merkel's Christian Democratic Union party.

"He's a bully and you enable bad behavior when you're nuanced with a guy like that," Bush told reporters, urging America and its allies to make clear that he would face specific consequences if he continued his aggression in Ukraine or expanded it to other neighboring states.

As part of that effort, Bush said he supported a "more robust" American troop presence in Poland and Baltic countries that he would decide based on military leaders' recommendations.

Bush said he had not seen reports that President Obama is considering sending hundreds of American troops to Anbar province in Iraq to help advise and train local forces working to retake Ramadi, but that he hoped they would play a more active role in combat than the administration has allowed so far.

"I think our advisers, if that's what they are, ought to be embedded in the [Iraqi] military," he said. "It helps us with our intelligence gathering, it certainly helps with morale and their ability to train the troops."

Jeb: It's too early for poll-watching // The Hill // Jonathan Easley - June 10, 2015

Jeb Bush on Wednesday expressed frustration with the press over its obsession with the horse race aspect of the presidential race, telling reporters that it’s too early to be poll-watching and encouraged them to focus on more important matters.

Speaking to a gaggle of reporters on a sidewalk in Germany, Bush said he was “not at all concerned” by expectations from some Republicans that he should have further separated himself from the field of GOP contenders by now.

“I just encourage people to be a little more patient about this,” Bush said. “Ya’ll cover this kind of in the here and now, and who is winning and who is losing. It’s important, and I have to respect that, but if you have a strategy and you think about it over the long haul is a better approach, at least for me."

“Anybody have any questions about Germany?” Bush asked, nodding to the surrounding environment.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Bush has not officially entered the race for the Republican presidential nomination, but he's widely expected to make it official on Monday in Miami.

Bush has spent the past six months building a political team, amassing a huge campaign fund for his super-PAC, giving policy speeches, attending Republican cattle calls and seeking to curry favor with party leaders.

His name recognition and deep political ties have buoyed him in the early polls, but some conservatives question whether that support is durable. Bush faces deep skepticism from many in the party's base, and stiff competition from Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker and Sen. Marco Rubio.

"I don't read the polls," Bush said Wednesday. "Polls are, you know, it's fun to see them when you're winning, not as much when you're not. It doesn't really matter though. It's June for crying out loud, so we have a long way to go."

The state of Bush's campaign came into focus this week when he reshuffled his staff ahead of a five-day trip to Germany, Poland and Estonia.

Earlier this year, Bush brought on David Kochel, an Iowa GOP operative, for a leading role in his super-PAC, Right to Rise, with the intent of moving him over to campaign manager once he launched.

But this week, the Bush team announced that instead, Kochel would serve as chief strategist to the campaign, and Danny Diaz, an aggressive 39-year-old opposition researcher and conservative media consultant, would be the campaign manager.

The move stoked stories of struggle within the campaign and provoked questions over whether the Bush team was hitting the panic button at an early stage.

The former Florida governor downplayed the staff changes on Wednesday.

"This is an adjustment based on the skills of people that I've gotten to know over the past few months," Bush said.

"Nothing other than just the magnitude of the journey [provoked this change]," he continued. "You have the real focus on four states in February, and you have the avalanche of states after that, and you think about how to organize all of that, how to develop the messaging part of this, the scheduling part of this. It's an overwhelming challenge. So I decided to split up the duties, and David has great success in these early states, particularly Iowa, and he has a great strategic mind, and Danny is a grinder."

Jeb Bush is a compassionless conservative: His "Scarlet Letter" law was even worse than it sounds // Salon // Katie McDonough – June 10, 2015

In Jeb Bush's 1995 book, "Profiles in Character," the likely Republican presidential contender wrote that Americans have dropped the ball on public humiliation and called for a return to a time when "public condemnation" was used to deter people from "irresponsible conduct."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Public condemnation — and in the criminal justice system, sentencing intended to humiliate — never actually went anywhere, so Bush wasn't really calling for a return to humiliation — he just wanted more of it. Here's the excerpt on single parenting, which Huffington Post political reporter Laura Bassett unearthed on Tuesday:

One of the reasons more young women are giving birth out of wedlock and more young men are walking away from their paternal obligations is that there is no longer a stigma attached to this behavior, no reason to feel shame. Many of these young women and young men look around and see their friends engaged in the same irresponsible conduct. Their parents and neighbors have become ineffective at attaching some sense of ridicule to this behavior. There was a time when neighbors and communities would frown on out of wedlock births and when public condemnation was enough of a stimulus for one to be careful.

Bush points to Nathaniel Hawthorne's "The Scarlet Letter" as a reference for how this kind of thing might work, writing: "Infamous shotgun weddings and Nathaniel Hawthorne's 'Scarlet Letter' are reminders that public condemnation of irresponsible sexual behavior has strong historical roots."

Bush wasn't just riffing, he was setting up policy prescriptions for his future tenure as governor. As Bassett points out, Bush waived his veto power after the state legislature passed a 2001 law requiring single women who wanted to put a child up for adoption to publish their sexual histories in a newspaper. The ads included women's names, ages, physical descriptions including her hair, weight and eye color. Women were also required to provide details about their sexual encounters — including names of sexual partners, dates and locations.

From the bill:

The notice… must contain a physical description, including, but not limited to age, race, hair and eye color, and approximate height and weight of the minor's mother and of any person the mother reasonably believes may be the father; the minor's date of birth; and any date and city, including the county and state in which the city is located, in which conception may have occurred.

Women were required to pay for the ads, which ran once a week for the duration of a month. The law included no exceptions for victims of rape or minors. Bush expressed reservations about publishing these details, but declined to veto the law while it wound its way through the courts for two years.

Florida adoption lawyer Charlotte Dancui challenged the law in the Palm Beach County Circuit Court, representing six plaintiffs, including a 14-year-old girl and a rape victim. Dancui told the New York Times that in addition the women and girls she was representing in the lawsuit, others had come forward feeling terrorized by the law.

"I had a woman come to me who had a child 10 years ago while in college and now her husband of five years wants to adopt her child and in order to do that she had to put her name, her daughter's name and all the men she slept with in college in her college newspaper," she said.

But the law wasn't just being criticized by women's rights groups and the left — many conservatives opposed the law, arguing that violating women's privacy and subjecting them to public shame for choosing adoption would incentivize abortion and decrease adoption rates.

In 2003, after the law was declared unconstitutional, Bush signed a repeal. As the Times reported after the original law was overturned, the repeal replaced the provision to humiliate women with a new provision allowing men to electively enter into a confidential parental registry. Bush's was apparently satisfied with the change, according to a spokesperson for his office:

This was an important bill to sign and it has been two years in coming. It not only streamlines the adoption process by outlining specific steps for the unwed biological father but it also balances and protects the privacy rights of the mother and child.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But opponents of the bill were unimpressed that Bush acted only after the courts struck down the law. "Only a male-dominated legislature could possibly pass a law that facilitates adoptions by requiring public humiliation of women," Howard Simon, executive director of ACLU of Florida, told the Times.

"You've got to have a real narrow vision to congratulate the governor for signing a repeal of a statute that, as a result of a lawsuit we were involved in, the courts struck down as unconstitutional," he continued. "The legislature shouldn't have passed it in the first place."

One of the women involved in the lawsuit against the law told the Times that she welcomed the repeal and was relieved that other women wouldn't have to be subjected to that kind of humiliation. "They don't have to put their names in the paper in this barbaric gesture," she said. "They don't have to be afraid anymore."

Add this to the list of Bush's credentials as a compassionate conservative.

Hillary Clinton vs. Jeb Bush: A Boring Disaster Waiting to Happen // The Blaze // Chris Markowski – June 10, 2015

Some people have enough "celebrity status" that even announcing an announcement garners media coverage.

Jeb Bush recently proclaimed that on June 15 "an announcement will be made," and it's now all the media can talk about. "Another Clinton vs. Bush election?" is plastered across the headlines.

But Americans are clearly bored with these families.

While there are plenty of candidates who don't have family ties to the White House, those are not the candidates soaking up all the press. With Bush's announcement this year's presidential campaign is sure to be one for the books, but we certainly don't need another boring Clinton vs. Bush election. We're not being run by a monarchy here – even the Kennedy's couldn't pull it off. That snoozer of an election would bring the lowest voting turnout in ages.

We're bored with these families. Two Bush's in the past 20 years, a Clinton as well, and now one of each is running for president. If a Clinton or Bush is elected again, that says something about the United States. The media and Wall Street elites love it, but they're the only ones excited about it. We "peasants" cannot continue to allow the same families to have power over our country year after year, even if they have a longstanding record of holding office.

A great example of this is the Kennedy's, one of America's most loved and well-known political families. The family had at least one member in elective office in Washington for 64 years, yet only John Fitzgerald was able to reach the Oval Office. While many family members have been in Washington since Kennedy's assassination, none since have served as president.

Even great political families leave Americans feeling bored after a while. The country as a whole has decided to stop electing members of these families, so when will they decide to stop running altogether?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Furthermore, we don't need another Clinton vs. Bush election. Neither of these candidates are been doing well in the polls, and while they both have recognizable names and families, American voters are not fans. Although the candidates are from different parties, they are virtually interchangeable. Taking money from the same big Wall Street companies, having a well-known name, and engaging in shady political practices are all common factors for these two. These are not "rock the boat" kind of candidates, and what we really need here is a change.

In addition to being one and the same, these candidates aren't the type that will bring voters to the polls. While Barack Obama was able to bring out people who may have never voted before, a Clinton vs. Bush election will leave people wanting to stay inside on voting day. After advertising on MTV and social media, voters came out of the woodwork to place their votes for Obama, because it was made "cool." Neither Clinton nor Bush has that same kind of pull or appeal, and they definitely won't be able to make themselves seem "hip" or "cool" to the masses.

These candidates aren't able to generate any excitement with voters, because we've seen it all before. For these candidates and their families, the elections are all about power and being a part of the "dynasty" that their families have had in the past.

American's are understandably tired of these families, and I predict that it will show when it comes time to vote. We've had an "old boys club" in Washington for far too long. It's time that we have a new, non-establishment candidate in office.

Tom Coburn on Jeb Bush: 'His last name will kill 47 percent of the votes' // The Washington Examiner // Philip Klein – June 10, 2015

Former Oklahoma Sen. Tom Coburn had a blunt assessment of Jeb Bush's chances of capturing the White House: "I don't think another Bush can get elected."

In an interview with the Washington Examiner Coburn said, "I think there's Bush fatigue and I think you automatically lose a large percentage of the electorate."

He explained, "I like Jeb Bush. But the fact is his last name will kill 47 percent of the votes for him — potential votes in this country. That's a big deal to get over."

Though he said that he thought George W. Bush was a "great president," he's said he remained a polarizing figure.

"Why would you run a candidate that is going to have trouble with 47 percent of the electorate?" Coburn asked.

He made the comments in a wide-ranging interview with the Examiner. Stay tuned for more.

Shaming Unwed Moms Was the Law in Jeb Bush's Florida // The Daily Beast // Betsy Woodroff – June 10, 2015

Remember that time when Gov. Jeb Bush allowed a bill to become law that required unwed, pregnant women to publish their sexual history in the newspaper in order to give their babies up for adoption?

But this was just the beginning of the weird parental follies of Florida in the early 2000s.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In 2001, Bush didn't veto adoption-overhaul legislation that included a provision making it harder for unwed mothers to put their children up for adoption, as The Huffington Post recently reported.

And by taking a pass, he allowed a particularly offensive provision to become law.

This provision required any woman who wanted to put her child up for adoption, but who didn't know who the father was, to take out an ad in a local newspaper listing her name and description, as well as the name and description of each possible father and the locations where the baby could have been conceived.

In other words, women had to broadcast her sexual histories to, well, pretty much everybody before attempting to find stable homes for her children.

The law's sponsor, state Sen. Walter Campbell, said the provision was designed to keep "potential biological fathers from coming back and taking children out of adoptive parents' hands." And the law didn't include an exception for women who became pregnant because of rape.

"You cannot just allow someone to say they were raped and use that as an excuse not to provide a name," said Deborah Marks, who helped draft the law, at the time.

Alvin Coen, a veteran adoption lawyer, told the New Pittsburgh Courier at the time that concerns about birth fathers interfering with adoptions were baseless.

The bill passed overwhelmingly in the state house and by a 30-8 vote in the state senate. Bush said he decided not to veto it because Campbell told him the newspaper-reporting language would get fixed. That didn't happen. What did happen? More abortions. The Orlando Sentinel reported there were almost 2,000 more abortions in the first six months of 2002—after the legislation went into effect—than in the first six months of 2001.

After state courts declared the law unconstitutional, Bush signed legislation repealing it. The bill that took its place put the fathers-rights onus on potential fathers. The law still exists today.

"In place of the publication requirement, the new law establishes a ''father registry' through which men who believe they may be fathers must provide the name, address, and physical description of the mother and the date and place where conception took place to protect their parental rights," The New York Times reported.

This wasn't the only time children's issues have gotten the former governor in trouble. As governor, Bush drew sustained criticism for his adamant opposition to gay adoption. And Bill O'Reilly leveled harsh criticism at him after a young girl's disappearance from the state's foster-care system went unnoticed for years. Her death led to an overhaul of how the state handled foster care.

Basically, Florida men have some major issues when it comes to dealing with vulnerable children. And in the early 2000s, it appears Jeb Bush was no exception.

Jeb Bush to visit Jimmy Fallon on 'Tonight Show' next week // LA Times // Meredith Blake – June 10, 2015

Pesidential aspirant Jeb Bush will visit "The Tonight Show Starring Jimmy Fallon" on June 16, the day after he is expected to formally announce his candidacy.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It will be the first appearance by the former Florida governor — brother of George W., son of George H.W. — on a late-night talk show. Under Jay Leno, "The Tonight Show" was an all-but-required stop for presidential candidates and was considered a friendlier venue for Republicans than David Letterman's "Late Show" or either of Comedy Central's late-night shows.

Since Fallon took over the reins of "The Tonight Show" in February 2014, he has welcomed several politicians, including frequent guest Gov. Chris Christie of New Jersey and former GOP candidate Mitt Romney.

Bush is considered a frontrunner in the race for the White House and has been busy in Europe this week burnishing his foreign policy credentials. He faces stiff competition in the polls from fellow Floridian Sen. Marco Rubio, but he may get a leg up as the first declared candidate in the ever-expanding GOP field to make a visit to "Tonight."

RUBIO

Florida Poll: Rubio Gaining on Jeb // The Weekly Standard // Michael Warren – June 10, 2015

A new poll of Florida Republican primary voters finds a tightening race between the Sunshine State's two favorite sons in the 2016 GOP presidential primary. According to St. Leo University's Polling Institute, former governor Jeb Bush has 30 percent support among likely Republican primary voters in Florida, while Marco Rubio, the state's sitting junior senator, has 24 percent support. That's a surge of eight points for Rubio since St. Leo's last poll of the GOP primary in March, when the younger Republican had 16 percent support to Bush's 31 percent.

It's worth noting that since the March poll, Rubio has declared his candidacy, while Bush remains in the exploratory phase and is not officially a candidate.

Rubio continues to do well in Florida as a second choice for primary voters, with a field-high 29 percent calling him their second choice. Bush comes behind with 12 percent listing him as their second choice. And in a head-to-head matchup with no other Republican candidates? Rubio beats Bush by 8 points, 48 percent to 40 percent.

There was not much movement from March to June for the non-Florida Republican candidates in the poll. Wisconsin governor Scott Walker comes in at 7 percent, down from 10 percent in March, and retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson is at 7 percent as well, down from 9 percent in March. Kentucky senator Rand Paul stayed steady at 7 percent support while former Arkansas governor Mike Huckabee is up to 6 percent in June from 4 percent in March.

Florida's presidential primary usually follows the first three contests of Iowa, New Hampshire, and South Carolina. Given the state's large population and numerous (and expensive) media markets, Florida has often been a test of a campaign's big-money viability given the state's numerous and expensive media markets. This year, however, the Florida primary will occur two weeks after the "Super Tuesday" March 1 primaries taking place in 12 states, including several in the GOP-heavy south.

PAUL

At GOP fundraiser in Maryland, Rand Paul decries racial injustice, champions diversity // WaPo // Ovetta Wiggins – June 10, 2015

Speaking at a Maryland Republican fundraiser less than 15 miles from West Baltimore, where Freddie Gray was taken into police custody and rioting took place two months ago, Republican presidential hopeful Rand Paul told an audience made up mainly old white men about the recent suicide of a young black man who spent three years imprisoned without a trial.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Paul said he has relayed the story of Kalief Browder's imprisonment for more than a year, including a March visit to the historically black college Bowie State University. He said he considered not mentioning it since Browder's death last weekend.

Browder was accused of stealing a backpack and waited three years at Riker's Island for a trial.

"He wasn't even convicted," the Kentucky senator. "So when I see people angry and upset — and I'm not here to excuse violence in the cities — but when I see anger I understand where some of the anger is coming from. ... Imagine how [Browder's] classmates feel about American justice, imagine how his parents feel."

Paul's speech Tuesday night was a collection of his stances on not only criminal justice reform, but on the Patriot Act and NSA data collection, and party inclusion. He took swipes at Democratic presidential front-runner Hillary Clinton, saying her handling of Benghazi should "forever preclude her from being president."

Paul told the crowd that the Republicans must expand beyond its base.

"If we want to win elections we have to be a big party," Paul said. "I tell people that we've got to have people with tattoos, without tattoos, with long hair, without, with earrings, black, white, brown, rich, poor, working class. We've got to be a more diverse party."

Paul's appearance in Maryland is part of two days of events sponsored by the Maryland Republican Party in the Baltimore area. On Wednesday, the state party will partner with the Baltimore City NAACP for a panel discussion to discuss criminal justice reform.

The party is trying to make some strides in Maryland, where where Democrats outnumber Republicans by more than a 2-to-1 margin but Gov. Larry Hogan (R) captured a surprise win in November.

D. Bruce Poole, the chairman of the Maryland Democratic Party, said in a statement prior to Paul's appearance that the Republican candidate's message does not resonate in the deeply Democratic state.

"If Rand Paul wants to convince Marylanders and Americans that he is going to be a champion for the issues that matter most, then he will have to abandon his destructive policies that only help those at the very top. Unfortunately for Paul and the Republican Party, that train has already left the station," Poole said.

Since the libertarian Kentucky senator declared his candidacy in April, Paul has struggled to gain ground among rank-and-file Republicans, whose support he will need to win the nomination.

Many Republicans have expressed unease over Paul's stance on various issues, including security, criminal justice reform, and recent high-profile cases involving police conduct.

Paul has taken a hard-line stance on the NSA, leading the charge to block the renewal of the anti-terrorism law used to justify domestic spying programs. He has spoken forcefully about police officers who have killed unarmed African Americans, and has sponsored legislation to address inequities within the prison system.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

A recent Washington Post-ABC News poll shows Paul and Gov. Scott Walker of Wisconsin with each capturing 11 percent of the vote among Republicans and Republican-leaning independent registered voters. But, with a margin of error of plus or minus six percentage points, the contest remains wide open, with former Florida governor Jeb Bush and Sen. Marco Rubio of Florida with 10 percent each. The rest of the field received single digits.

WALKER

Walker makes case for education reforms nationwide // AP – June 10, 2015

Scott Walker touted changes he's made to K-12 education as governor in Wisconsin in a newspaper column published Wednesday, saying there's "no reason" what he's done in the state can't be matched nationwide.

Walker, expected to announce a run for the Republican presidential nomination within weeks, inflamed teachers across Wisconsin four years ago when he pushed for a law that took away their collective bargaining rights, while also forcing them to pay more for health and pension benefits, as part of an effort to balance the state budget.

"Now, more than ever, we need to push big, bold reforms to improve our schools," Walker wrote Wednesday in a column published by The Des Moines Register in Iowa. "If we can do it in Wisconsin, there is no reason we can't push positive education reforms across the country."

Walker's education policies have included expanding school choice efforts and cutting funding for public schools. His call to take such efforts nationwide elicited anger from his opponents in Wisconsin, who also vehemently opposed his efforts on union rights.

"When it comes to the damage Gov. Walker has inflicted on Wisconsin students, it's hard to come up with a short list," said Betsy Kippers, president of the statewide teachers union, the Wisconsin Education Association Council.

Walker's first state budget cut funding for public schools by $1.2 billion, the largest reduction in state history. This year, Walker proposed cutting public school funding by $127 million in the first year of a two-year budget, a move rejected by the Legislature's Republican-controlled budget committee.

Walker has also successfully expanded Wisconsin's private school voucher program statewide after it debuted in Milwaukee. Walker's pending budget proposal would gradually remove the program's enrollment caps and use tax dollars currently provided to public schools to pay for it.

Walker has argued the state, and schools specifically, are better off under the collective bargaining law, which affected nearly all state employees and led to his recall election in 2012. He renewed that argument in Wednesday's column, saying he fixed a "broken" system.

"Today, the requirements for seniority and tenure are gone," Walker said. "Schools can hire based on merit and pay based on performance. That means they can keep the best and the brightest in the classroom."

Walker also pointed to higher graduation rates, improved third-grade reading scores and the fact that Wisconsin's high school student ACT scores are the country's second best.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

He did not note that Wisconsin's graduation rates were increasing for years before he took office and the recent growth is not as strong as the national average. Wisconsin's ACT scores were also consistently among the nation's best prior to his election.

Walker also wrote that he opposes the Common Core academic standards. When he took office in 2011, Walker called for creating tests that were tied to the standards. He first objected to the standards during his re-election campaign last year.

His pending budget reiterates that school districts can't be forced to adopt the standards, a protection they already have under current state law.

In the column, Walker also mentions Megan Sampson, a teacher who was laid off after being named the outstanding first-year teacher by the Wisconsin Council of Teachers of English in 2010. Collective bargaining agreements in place at the time, since eliminated, protected those with more seniority from losing their jobs.

Walker often tells the story, and Sampson has repeatedly asked him to stop. She did so again Wednesday.

"I do not enjoy being associated with Walker's political campaign," Sampson said.

Walker: We changed broken education system // The Des Moines Register // Scott Walker – June 10, 2015

Megan Sampson was named the outstanding first-year teacher by the Wisconsin Council of Teachers of English in June of 2010. A week later, she received another certificate: a layoff notice from the Milwaukee Public Schools system.

Why would they get rid of a new teacher like Sampson — especially in Milwaukee, which was one of the most troubled urban school districts in the nation? Well, under the old union contracts, the last hired was first fired.

In 2011, we changed that broken system in Wisconsin. Today, the requirements for seniority and tenure are gone. Schools can hire based on merit and pay based on performance. That means they can keep the best and the brightest in the classroom.

Best of all, the reforms are working. Schools are better. Graduation rates are up. Third grade reading scores are higher. Wisconsin students now rank 2nd best in the country for ACT scores in states where more than half the students take the exam.

In addition to improving traditional public schools, like the ones my own sons attended, we increased the number of quality education choices all over Wisconsin. Over the past four years, we expanded the number of charter schools, lifted the limits on virtual schools and provided more help for families choosing to home school their children.

We also dramatically expanded the 25-year-old Milwaukee Parental School Choice program to add more students, more schools and working class families. Then, we expanded school choice across the state.

Last fall I had a chance to meet a mom by the name of Dana from Appleton. Her son and daughter were two of the first students to participate in the statewide school choice program.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Dana told me that her son was doing poorly in a public school a few years ago. He was being bullied and he hated going to school each day. Now, after Dana signed him up for the voucher program, his school scores had doubled, he plays the trumpet in the band and he signed up for the football team. Dana's son loves school. She thanked us for giving her son a chance to succeed.

Now, more than ever, we need to push big, bold reforms to improve our schools. If we can do it in Wisconsin, there is no reason we can't push positive education reforms across the country.

Nationwide, we want high standards but we want them set by parents, educators and school board members at the local level. That is why I oppose Common Core.

Money spent at the local and state level is more efficient, more effective and more accountable. That is why I support moving money out of Washington and sending it to states and schools. Students deserve a better education.

And every student in the our nation's capital should have access to a great education. Therefore, we should expand the options for families in the District of Columbia to choose the school that is best for their children.

As a father, an uncle and a governor, I believe that every child deserves access to a great education — be it at a traditional public, charter, choice, private, virtual or home school environment. We need leaders who value quality choices and who trust parents to put the interests of their children first.

Scott Walker Courting Mitt Romney Donors After Slamming Candidate Romney // Bloomberg News // John McCormick – June 10, 2015

Wisconsin Governor Scott Walker makes clear in his political memoir that he thinks Mitt Romney did a lousy job of running for president in 2012.

That isn't keeping Walker from traveling to the mountains of Utah Thursday to gain favor with the former Massachusetts governor -- and potentially tap his robust donor network.

"Instead of offering a big, positive vision for the future, Romney was working to make the campaign a referendum on President Obama," Walker wrote in his book, noting that Romney was trying to mimic the 1980 presidential run of Republican icon Ronald Reagan. "The problem was, the Romney team got the 1980 Reagan campaign all wrong."

"The problem was, the Romney team got the 1980 Reagan campaign all wrong."

Walker, 47, is among at least six declared or likely Republican presidential candidates scheduled to attend Romney's third annual retreat in Park City. The E2 Summit, mostly closed to the media, is meant to bring together influential business, political and policy leaders to discuss the U.S. leadership.

Roughly 250 guests can also play flag football with Senator Marco Rubio of Florida, skeet-shoot with Senator Lindsey Graham of South Carolina, and ride horses with Romney's wife, Ann.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Walker, of course, isn't the only Republican critical of Romney's 2012 missteps. Others have routinely knocked him for gaffes such as standing before rich campaign donors and asserting that 47 percent of voters are dependent on government assistance.

Misreading Wisconsin

Of the potential candidates attending the Romney gathering, Walker has been among the most outspoken about those failings, arguing the party's 2012 nominee didn't do enough to connect with voters or present his own positive vision.

In his book, "Unintimidated: A Governor's Story and a Nation's Challenge," Walker fills most of a chapter entitled "Misreading the Message of Wisconsin" with Romney criticism.

Walker writes that shortly after his June 2012 victory in Wisconsin's recall election, he realized Romney could lose the state in November. He recalled Romney saying the message of his victory was that Americans didn't want more police, firefighters and teachers, as Obama had asserted.

"Unfortunately, it was Romney who did not get the message of Wisconsin," Walker writes. The rollback of union power, he said, was meant to avoid mass layoffs of such public employees.

The chapter also provides a window into Walker's own likely presidential campaign, which he's expected to announce in early July after Wisconsin's two-year budget is completed.

47 Percent

Walker repeatedly suggests that Reagan had dealt with similar campaign situations more effectively.

"Reagan did not dismiss 47 percent of the country as a bunch of moochers," Walker writes. "Quite the opposite: At the Republican convention in Detroit he appealed to those who wanted nothing more than to get off government assistance and find work."

While Walker praises Romney's decency and compassion in the book, about the only thing he gives him credit for doing right in the campaign is picking Representative Paul Ryan of Wisconsin as his running mate.

Obama ultimately won Wisconsin, carrying it with 52.8 percent of the vote, about the amount Walker won in his recall.

Stuart Stevens, Romney's chief strategist in 2012, said he doesn't think criticisms from Walker or others bothered Romney during or after the campaign. "It's just not in his DNA," he said.

AshLee Strong, a spokeswoman for Walker's political committee, Our American Revival, said in a statement that Romney and Walker are friends.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“While Governor Walker has said he may have made some different campaign tactics in 2012, he has tremendous respect for Governor Romney as a leader and what he has done for the Republican Party,” Strong said. “Governor Walker believes that had Mitt Romney been elected in 2012, the U.S. would have restored its leadership position in the world and would be safer today.”

CEO Turnout

Besides Walker, Rubio and Graham, other declared or likely 2016 Republican candidates expected to attend the Utah gathering will be New Jersey Governor Chris Christie, Ohio Governor John Kasich and former Hewlett-Packard Co. Chief Executive Officer Carly Fiorina.

Some Democrats also will be there, including David Axelrod, Obama’s longtime strategist, and Lawrence Summers, a former U.S. Secretary of Treasury. Corporates leaders attending include General Electric Co. CEO Jeffrey Immelt and Meg Whitman, Hewlett-Packard’s CEO.

Walker is expected to meet privately with the Romneys. He’ll spend much of Thursday at their gathering and will join them for barbecue that evening. He’ll speak on Friday before departing on an almost week-long trade mission to Canada.

In his run-up to a campaign, the Wisconsin governor is trying to present a more working-class image than the one offered by Romney, a former private equity executive worth hundreds of millions of dollars.

Last weekend, Walker rode a rented Harley Davidson motorcycle in Iowa and talked about his modest family upbringing. And he’s fond of highlighting his frugality: from clipping coupons to tweeting photos of the ham-and-cheese sandwiches he brings to work.

“My brother and I did not inherit fame or fortune from our family,” Walker said in Iowa. “What we got was more important, and that is the belief that if you work hard and you play by the rules you can do and be anything you want in America.”

A teacher central to Scott Walker's education pitch would like him to stop using her story // Business Insider // Colin Campbell – June 10, 2015

Likely presidential candidate and Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker (R) regularly touts his education policies by citing a local teacher who long ago asked him to stop including her in his speeches and writings.

The teacher, Megan Sampson, repeated her opposition to Walker using her name in an email to Business Insider on Wednesday.

"I would like Walker to stop using my story as a political narrative for his campaign," the English teacher wrote.

Walker's most recent Sampson reference came Tuesday night in a Des Moines Register op-ed that began by mentioning her.

"Megan Sampson was named the outstanding first-year teacher by the Wisconsin Council of Teachers of English in June of 2010. A week later, she received another certificate: a layoff notice from the Milwaukee Public Schools system," Walker wrote. "Well, under the old union contracts, the last hired was first fired."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This part of the piece is almost identical to the opening of Walker's 2011 op-ed in The Wall Street Journal. The day that article was published, Sampson strenuously objected to being cited as part of the governor's policy advocacy, according to the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel.

Sampson told the newspaper's education reporter, Erin Richards, that the attention was unwelcome and resulted in "stress."

"My opinions about the union have changed over the past eight months, and I am hurt that this story is being used to make me the poster child for this political agenda," she said then. "Bottom line: I am trying to do my job and all this attention is interference and stress for me."

Business Insider reached out to Walker's government office and campaign team on Wednesday inquiring about why they decided to continue using Sampson's name; both have yet to respond.

Wisconsinites Blast Scott Walker's Stadium Deal As 'Outrageous' // Think Progress // Alice Ollstein – June 10, 2015

Depending on who you ask, building a new, publicly financed basketball stadium for the Milwaukee Bucks is either a horrendous example of corporate welfare and official corruption, or a chance to reinvigorate an economically depressed city.

With the fate of Wisconsin Governor Scott Walker's plan up in the air — hit by criticism from progressives and conservatives alike — the county held its first public meeting Tuesday night to discuss the proposal to use tens of millions of taxpayer dollars to keep the team in the city.

The large crowd took issue with many aspects of the deal, which would sell public land valued at nearly $9 million for $1 dollar to the team's billionaire owners.

Earlier this month, Milwaukee County Executive Chris Abele, a key architect of the deal, promised the plan to build a brand new stadium close to the 27-year-old existing venue would "create jobs, generate millions of dollars in economic activity and property value, and provide a great return on investment for taxpayers."

Local Milwaukee blogs have raised questions about whether it would also be a great return on investment for Abele personally, given that he recently purchased a $2 million condo directly next to the site of the proposed arena and the restaurants and stores slated to surround it.

"The appreciation for that condo will go sky-high," Milwaukee economics professor Michael Rosen told ThinkProgress. "I'm not saying that's why he bought it, but the fact is that will appreciate like crazy if the stadium gets built. He has an interest in this, even though his job as public official is to look out for this community."

Abele's office did not respond to an interview request from ThinkProgress.

Several local officials are also speaking out against the county's promise to collect $4 million per year in unpaid debts from residents, plus a penalty fee of 15 percent, to contribute to the stadium. For example, a woman who owed $1,000 for an old traffic ticket would be charged $1,150.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Milwaukee County Supervisor John Weishan, Jr. called the proposal to go after unpaid ambulance rides, delinquent property taxes and court fees "crony capitalism."

"This plan shifts the cost of the new arena from the state and the Milwaukee Bucks' new wealthy owners to the poorest in our community," he said. "I will not foreclose on someone's home or shake down a senior for unpaid medical bills in order to build an arena for millionaires and billionaires."

Whether or not it's morally right to collect these debts to pay for the stadium, some county officials say it may not be possible, because most of the residents that owe that money are indigent.

County comptroller estimated in an official report that the county could only collect about 2 percent of the money they're promising — in part because much of the unpaid court fees would go to restitution for victims of crimes if they ever got collected.

"This is phony money. This is hocus-pocus," Rosen told ThinkProgress. "They won't be able to collect it, and if they do, it's going to come from our poorest citizens, and that's outrageous."

The scramble to find a source of revenue for the stadium is exacerbated by Governor Scott Walker's pledge not to create any new taxes to pay for the project. But many lawmakers on both sides of the aisle remain critical of the plan, and say it's inappropriate to tuck it into the must-pass state budget. A growing bloc of lawmakers are demanding a separate vote.

Scott Walker To Remove Waiting Period For Wisconsin Gun Purchases // Breitbart // Awr Hawkins – June 10, 2015

Republican lawmakers passed a bill to do away with the 48-hour waiting period on gun purchases in Wisconsin, and Gov. Scott Walker is expected to sign it.

Spokeswoman Laurel Patrick said Walker supports laws which "make it easier for law-abiding citizens to access firearms and difficult for criminals to obtain illegal firearms."

According to the UK Independent, Wisconsin Democrats are already claiming that a repeal of the waiting period will lead to more gun violence. State representative Fred Kessler (D-12th) said taking away the 48-hour wait is "just going to result in more violence in our urban communities."

But Kessler is countered by Republicans who argue that women can more quickly acquire guns with which to protect themselves if they do not have to wait 48 hours before taking the gun home. For example, Rep. Samantha Kerkman (R-61), argued that removing the waiting period "would curb domestic violence against women" and she pointed out that "[she] purchased her own handgun to protect her own family."

The point is simple: A woman under threat from a former boyfriend or husband may not have 48 hours to wait for a gun. Any delay in getting a firearm simply provides her would-be attacker with a safe period in which he can come after her.

On June 3, Carol Bowne's former boyfriend allegedly stabbed her death while she was waiting on state's permission to buy a gun in New Jersey. Although New Jersey requires residents to wait much longer than 48 hours, the principle is the same — time spent waiting is time spent in a vulnerable condition.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

CRUZ

"If you live by the pen, you die by the pen" // WaPo // James Hohmann – June 10, 2015

Ted Cruz would spend his first day in office trying to undo some of Barack Obama's biggest achievements via executive order.

In a wide-ranging interview about how he'd spend his first 100 days as president if he won, the Texas GOP senator pledged to roll back more than just the president's controversial orders related to immigration.

"If you live by the pen, you die by the pen," Cruz said by phone Tuesday, as he traveled from Dallas to an afternoon tour of the Southern border. "Everything put in place by executive order can be undone by executive order."

Cruz said he would use the transition to bring a team together "to engage in a careful, systematic review of each executive action and to rescind every one of them that exceeds the Constitutional and legal authority of the president."

Cruz's comments underscored the tenuousness of some of Obama's biggest second-term accomplishments, enacted by executive order because of a Republican-dominated Congress. He's the first of several presidential candidates to outline his governing priorities in an interview with PowerPost, a new Washington Post site that will focus on the intersection of policy and politics.

Other highlights from the interview:

Cruz promised to do whatever it takes to stop Iran from getting a nuclear weapon, which he calls "the single greatest national security threat to the United States."

"On day one, I would expect to convene the national security team for a serious, careful, sober assessment of where Iran stands – how close they are to acquiring nuclear weapons – and to review every tool at our disposable to assure that under no circumstances does Iran acquire nuclear weapons," he said.

On Israel, he responded to this week's Supreme Court decision by saying that he would allow Americans born in Jerusalem to list Israel as their birthplace on passports. Though Republicans and Democrats have promised in the past to move the U.S. embassy from Tel Avis to the contested city, Cruz pledges that he would actually follow through.

The senator, who was the first major party candidate to formally announce his candidacy back on March 23, said he's running to try "to get a mandate from the electorate" to push far-reaching tax and regulatory reform. He really wants to eliminate the Internal Revenue Service, which he believes would be possible with a flat tax, but he recognizes how politically challenging such a proposition would be. So he would want to get the public behind it through the primary and general election.

"I intend to do everything possible to make 2016 a referendum on repealing Obamacare and adopting a flat tax,"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

he said.

Asked about his legislative priorities, Cruz said he would focus on tax and regulatory reform first. He would also push for Congress to "repeal every word of Obamacare."

He described himself as "cautiously optimistic" that the Supreme Court will side against the government in King vs. Burwell on the grounds that the federal government has "illegally collected billions of dollars in taxes from Americans who do not owe them." If the court invalidates coverage for millions now receiving health subsidies, Cruz said he wants legislation that would let states "opt-out of Obamacare" altogether.

Cruz promises on the trail to repeal the Common Core state standards.

"This administration has used Race To The Top funds to pressure states to adopt Common Core standards," he said. "At the very outset, if I'm elected, the administration would no longer use federal authority to coerce states into adopting Common Core."

Asked who he might appoint to his Cabinet if he were elected, Cruz said that engaging with that question in a detailed way would be like telling a woman on a first date what he would like to name his children.

"One step at a time," he said.

But Cruz said he could definitely see picking some of his GOP rivals in the 2016 race for prominent posts.

"Any Republican president would be a fool not to look very seriously at the men and women who will be on that debate stage as very serious and even likely members of a Republican cabinet and even a Republican dream team," he said.

Ted Cruz team looks beyond Iowa, New Hampshire // Politico // Katie Glueck – June 10, 2015

He's stuck in the middle of the pack in Iowa, lags in polls, and much of the GOP donor class views him with disdain.

But Ted Cruz is embracing a novel strategy for winning the nomination: He's lowering expectations in the early states while investing in later-voting states that hardly see a candidate before March.

In the past week or so alone, the Texas senator has taken his presidential campaign to Michigan and Massachusetts, staffed up in New Jersey and Tennessee, and skipped an Iowa cattle call to stump in North Carolina — all states expected to vote in March, with the exception of New Jersey, which has a primary slated for June 2016.

It's a risky bet that defies the usual wisdom — and historical precedent — that a candidate must achieve an early-state victory to stay in the game. But Cruz's team is bracing for a long fight based on picking up delegates — a battle they plan to stretch all the way to the convention, where, the theory goes, he'll be the last conservative standing — though a contested convention hasn't happened in nearly 40 years.

"Our strategy is taking it to the convention, which is why you've seen us announcing chairmen in California and New Jersey, as well as Iowa and New Hampshire," said Mark Campbell, Cruz's political director. "There are 2,470

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

[delegates] total, and you need 1,236 of them to win. None of these can be accumulated at any one time, which is why it's a marathon more than a sprint. So we are methodically going state by state, focusing on grass roots and party activists."

Campbell said they expect Cruz to place "in the top three" in Iowa, New Hampshire and South Carolina, and Cruz is spending time there as well — but he made clear that the real strategizing is, already, built around delegate counts.

"We expect to do well in all of the early primary states, which will give us sufficient momentum to do extremely well in the March 1 primaries ... and caucuses," he said. "Obviously Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina and Nevada are important, but then there are many large states that will be distributing their delegates starting March 1."

Betting big on later contests has little track record of success. There's often talk of a contested convention — as there was, briefly, in 2012 — but the last time that actually happened was in 1976, when Gerald Ford narrowly beat out Ronald Reagan over a contest for delegates at the Republican National Convention. And it's almost as rare for a nominee to clinch the title without winning at least one of the first two nominating contests. Bill Clinton and George McGovern failed to win Iowa or New Hampshire in 1992 and 1972, respectively, but both clocked in as strong second-place finishers in the Granite State, ultimately propelling them to the nominations. On the Republican side, no candidate has won the nomination without winning either state going back to when the Iowa caucuses gained prominence in the 1970s — a dynamic, Cruz's team notes, the senator himself has acknowledged.

"Candidates who play down the importance of a strong showing among early primary states do so out of necessity, not choice," said Chris Maloney, a senior vice president at Black Rock Group who worked for Mitt Romney and is well-versed in presidential campaign logistics. "While super PACs now carry the potential to sustain candidacies in place of early victories, it's difficult to envision a scenario where the eventual nominee does not possess a first-place finish in an early nominating contest. Campaign capital — donations, personnel — flows with momentum, not against it, and makes recruiting delegate slates, notaries and attorneys well-versed in onerous and often costly ballot-access requirements that much easier among states with later contests."

But there is a scenario, note people who have observed Cruz's strategy, in which three different candidates win Iowa, New Hampshire and South Carolina — which wouldn't necessarily be a surprise, given how crowded and fluid the GOP field is at this point. Then all of a sudden, delegates start to matter. So even in places where Cruz is highly unlikely to be the favorite of the bulk of the state's Republican primary voters — moderate Massachusetts, for example — in the states where delegates are allotted proportionally, he could still rack up some points.

"If essentially there becomes no clear front-runner, then it becomes important for a particular candidate to start looking at raw counts," said a Texas Republican operative. "The traditional focus on Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina becomes less important, and it becomes more important to deal with raw delegate counts."

Cruz's potential targets, where he has either campaigned or hired staff, include Massachusetts, Georgia, Oklahoma (where he will return this weekend), Tennessee and Cruz's home state of Texas — all of which are tentatively planning to vote on March 1. Then, on March 8, comes Michigan, where Cruz also visited last week, and North Carolina Republicans are hammering out details but are also eyeing March dates. But other places where he's investing resources — New Jersey, for example — aren't expected to have primaries till June, and party leaders hope and expect that there will be a nominee long before then.

In the meantime, Cruz — and, to some extent, Rand Paul, who has also maintained a relatively unorthodox campaigning schedule — is able to boost his name ID by soaking up the free media that accompanies visits to states where there are fewer candidates traipsing through.

"My guess is ... he's doing a solo media strategy, going where he can get 100 percent of the attention while the others are fighting for the attention in Iowa," said conservative radio host Erick Erickson, who is based in Georgia, where Cruz visited recently. He noted that over the weekend, Cruz was in North Carolina instead of at Iowa Sen. Joni Ernst's Roast and Ride (Campbell said the trip was long-planned and was an opportunity to pick up state co-chairs). "So none of the other guys got the media coverage he got by just going to North Carolina, which I guess if you're trying to do a free media campaign, that's the way to do it."

Ted Cruz Going After the Libertarian-Hawk Vote // Reason // Matt Welch – June 10, 2015

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

At National Review, Joel Gehrke reports that the Ted Cruz campaign "thinks it has identified a way to begin" to "pick off enough libertarian votes to hobble Rand Paul." How? By running to the right of Paul on national security:

Perhaps surprisingly, Cruz's [analytics] team discovered that national security is a prominent and growing concern among libertarian voters. "There is a plurality of libertarians whose top issue is national security today," [Cruz campaign director of research and analytics Chris] Wilson says, pegging the figure in the mid-30s. "Now, I doubt that was the case in 2008. It may not have been even in 2012. But today it is." Consequently, he believes that Cruz's support for the USA Freedom Act, which Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell backed begrudgingly after failing to pass a bill reauthorizing the Patriot Act, hit the sweet spot in terms of appealing to libertarians who dislike the NSA but fear ISIS.

Are libertarian-leaning Republicans really worried that Rand Paul is too soft on ISIS? Color me doubtful. While there's no doubt that Americans as a whole, Republicans especially, are more anxious about national security and more willing to send out American bombers than they were in 2013, hawks in my estimation have been wishful in their thinking that those numbers has made re-palatable notions like pre-emptive war and American boots on the ground in the Middle East. Being worried about ISIS is not the same as endorsing whatever Marco Rubio thinks we should do about the Islamic State. If interventionism was really back in vogue GOP candidates wouldn't have spend a week in mid-May stumbling over the Iraq War.

It's more likely here that analytics are being bent to fit a strategic reality and imperative. Which is to say, Ted Cruz is going after the libertarian vote (in addition to the overlapping Tea Party vote and especially the social conservative bloc), and he is more hawkish than Paul, so he's going to continue heightening the contrasts while looking for positions and rhetoric that don't totally alienate people who distrust the National Security Agency. I'm no Cruz fan, but I'd rather have two of the party's top five or six candidates vying for the libertarian vote than just one.

Ted Cruz And The False Narrative Of Christian Persecution // Forbes // Rick Ungar – June 10, 2015

If you ask Senator Ted Cruz (R-Texas) about the state of religious freedom in America, you are likely to get an earful on how Christians in this country are being forced to live through some terrible era of religious persecution.

Speaking at the Faith and Freedom Coalition summit in Iowa, Cruz told his audience that “There is a liberal fascism that is dedicated to going after believing Christians who follow the biblical teaching on marriage,” and that there is “no room for Christians in today’s Democratic Party.”

Really?

Last I checked—which was about five minutes ago—all but 30 (28 Jewish and 2 Muslim) Democrats serving in the United States House of Representatives and Senate identify as Christians.

These numbers might lead a more rational and less politically motivated observer to conclude that there is still quite a bit of room for Christians to be a part of the Democratic Party and its leadership.

In truth, even the most ardent evangelical should be able to summon the logic required to realize that using the Constitution to resolve disagreements and conflicts between Christian beliefs and the belief structures of their fellow Americans who think differently is hardly an act of persecution. Rather, these efforts are simply an act of fealty to our founding document and the men who wrote it—most of who were, themselves, Christian believers.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It is possible that Senator Cruz's inability to distinguish between legal disagreements and religious persecution may rest in his inability to recognize what persecution in America really looks like?

As Paul Waldman so aptly wrote a few years ago in The American Prospect,

"The impulse to jam that crown of thorns down on your head is a powerful one in politics. It means you've achieved the moral superiority of the victim, and the other side must be the victimizer. The problem is that these folks don't seem to have much of a grasp on what second-class citizenship actually looks like. Last time I checked, nobody was forbidden to vote because they're a Christian, or not allowed to eat in their choice of restaurants, or forced to use separate water fountains, or even be forbidden by the state to marry the person of their choice. That's what second-class citizenship is. Having somebody on television call your views retrograde may not be fun, but it doesn't make you a second-class citizen."

It seems unlikely that a victim of religious persecution would be permitted to make the statements we hear Ted Cruz utter—in his effort to rally the religious right to his cause —without suffering some form of personal repression or punishment. Can anyone testify to the effort being made by our government to silence Senator Cruz? So far as I can see, he remains completely free to say and do what he wishes, including publicly making fun of a grieving father who has just suffered the loss of his eldest son. Has he been forced to change his religious practices under threat of penalty? Has Ted Cruz's life or status in society been altered in any way merely because he is a Christian believer?

Further, is it unfair to ask why the cries of religious persecution pouring forth from those now claiming great offense are missing in action when a person of color, or one with a different sexual orientation, is treated with less respect or opportunity? Galatians 3:28 states, "There is neither Jew nor Greek, slave nor free, male nor female, for you are all one in Christ Jesus."

Is it not, therefore, a violation of Christian belief to allow a black man in America to be treated differently than a white man in America? Would it not be a violation of Christian belief to view a gay American as something 'lesser' than a straight American?

Let me be clear that I sympathize with the Christian baker or flower supplier who feels that being forced to provide their products to a gay wedding violates their religious convictions. Indeed, I agree that nobody should be required by law or otherwise to affirmatively perform an act that is in conflict with a religious conviction that can be legitimately traced to the roots of the religion in question.

I would, however, raise for the discussion the case of a religious Jew whose religion prohibits work, driving, or even speaking on the phone during the sabbath, being forced to do one or all of the same when his or her employer demands. I can't help but wonder where the cries of religious persecution are when this type of an event takes place.

In my view, there is a difference between the law providing same sex couples the equal opportunity to marry, which I anticipate the Supreme Court will soon confirm is a right in compliance with our Constitution, and forcing those who do not believe in the same to actively participate in that wedding. While I certainly agree that our Constitution protects the right of a same-sex couple to marry in the same way that I am entitled to such protection, I disagree with the notion that people should be required to commit an act that is in violation of their religious convictions. The decision of a local baker to politely decline to provide a cake for the wedding reception hardly constitutes a denial of a same sex couple's Constitutional right to marry as they please.

CHRISTIE

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In Washington Speech, Chris Christie Sounds Like He's Ready to Run // NYT // Nick Corasaniti – June 10, 2015

Gov. Chris Christie of New Jersey told reporters on Tuesday that his family was completely supportive of a potential presidential run; his decision hinged on his will to do it.

Speaking in Washington on Wednesday, he seemed ready to make the jump as well.

"I want to be a part of that discussion, I want to be a part of that debate, and I want to be part of the leadership that brings our country to new heights through the power and the goodness of each individual that makes up this country," he said at the Latino Coalition Small Business Summit.

Indeed, Mr. Christie seemed like someone ready to make his case to the country. To showcase his coalition-building potential, he ticked off the gains he made in his 2013 re-election effort, noting that he drew the support of a majority of Latinos in the state and doubled his support among African Americans. He plans to continue that outreach effort, he said, in contrast to some of his fellow Republicans.

"My party, quite frankly, has been guilty in some respects of speaking in a way that doesn't sound very welcoming to new members," he said, arguing that if "a club doesn't sound like it's welcoming you, you're not going to come, no matter how much you might agree with them."

He weaved in broad platitudes about his successes as a governor, speaking at length about Goya, the Latin American food purveyor, opening its headquarters in Jersey City in April, and he made few specific policy statements, aside from calling for the end of the Dodd-Frank financial regulatory law and for providing more choices in education.

He was reserved, at times even somber, invoking phrases like "the goodness of their heart" and "the goodness of the soul." But his trademark bluster emerged at the end of the session, when he responded to a question regarding education that recalled his battles with the teachers' unions.

Mr. Christie tore through a list of critiques of the unions, while calling on the need for "raw politics" to deal with them, and concluded with yet another indication that he's ready to run.

"If you're ready to start offending people in order to achieve a greater goal, you've found the right guy," he said. "I'm here to help offend people with you."

Court Ruling Removes a Bump From Chris Christie's Path // NYT – June 10, 2015

New Jersey's highest court handed Mr. Christie a victory on Tuesday when it allowed him to skip the pension payments he promised to make in a signature law.

That means he won't have to find the $1.58 billion a lower court had wanted him to restore to this year's state budget, and it will make balancing next year's budget a lot easier. He can decide whether to run for president, a call he has promised to make this month, spared of any "fiscal crisis" headlines.

The court sided with him against public employee unions, which may help remind Republican primary voters that the governor was willing to take on those powerful interests – a fight that spurred his rise to national stardom. But the decision could also reinforce doubts among Republicans about his fiscal management of New Jersey. Mr. Christie couldn't make the payments because the state's job growth has lagged well behind neighboring states and the nation. The missed payments resulted in a record nine credit downgrades.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

While Mr. Christie has been selling himself as a straight shooter, the court, despite its ruling for him, didn't make him seem like a man of his word.

"The loss of public trust due to the broken promises" in the law, the court wrote in its decision, "is staggering."

Mr. Christie speaks at a Latino Coalition event on Wednesday in Washington. He won a majority of Latino voters in his re-election two years ago and presents that victory as the kind that can help a Republican win the White House. But that was so many problems ago.

N.J. Gov. Chris Christie Uses Court Pension Win in Fundraising Pitch // WSJ // Heather Haddon – June 10, 2015

One day after New Jersey's highest court delivered Gov. Chris Christie a victory on a pension-funding fight, the potential 2016 Republican presidential candidate is using the issue to fundraise.

Mr. Christie's political-action committee, Leadership Matters for America, sent a fundraising email to supporters Wednesday that touted the court's decision as a sign of the governor's leadership abilities. It concluded by asking for donations to the PAC, according to a copy of the email.

"The greatest leaders in our history weren't afraid to fight for what was right, even if it was unpopular. Do you want a leader like that in Washington?" the email read. "If your answer is yes, donate $5 or more today and help us support the fight to send courageous leaders to D.C. once again!"

Mr. Christie's willingness to take on public-sector unions has helped raise his profile among Republicans nationally.

The fundraising solicitation came from Mike DuHaime, a senior advisor to Mr. Christie's PAC and a longtime strategist for the governor. Mr. DuHaime didn't respond to a request for comment.

On Tuesday, the New Jersey Supreme Court ruled that the Christie administration could slash funding to pensions for state workers, even though the governor signed a law requiring escalating payments into the underfunded benefit system.

If the court had ruled against Mr. Christie, it would have been another obstacle for the governor as he pursues the possibility of entering the presidential race. On Tuesday, state Democrats and the public-sector unions denounced the court's ruling

In a statement, Mr. Christie said the court's decision was a victory for state taxpayers who can't "afford these unsustainably high costs" and that all parties needed to resume discussions about how to make public-employee benefits more affordable.

Mr. Christie spoke before Hispanic leaders at a Washington D.C. luncheon Wednesday, where he attacked teachers unions for being more interested in the comfort of their members than doing more to improve student learning. The governor has spoken about the need to extend the school day and year.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On Thursday, Mr. Christie leaves for Iowa, home of the first-in-the-nation presidential caucus, for two days. Mr. Christie has said he'll announce a decision on whether he's running at the end of the month.

Christie faults GOP for sounding unwelcoming to Latinos // AP // Luis Alonso Lugo & Jill Colvin – June 10, 2015

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie faulted his party Wednesday for its unwelcoming tone at times to minority voters.

In a speech to a Latino Coalition small business conference, the potential Republican presidential contender also boasted about getting 51 percent of the Hispanic vote in his re-election as governor.

Christie portrays himself as the kind of Republican who can attract females, blacks, Hispanics and other voters who are normally drawn to Democrats.

Mitt Romney, the 2012 GOP nominee, won just 27 percent of the Latino vote in his contest against President Barack Obama — a disconnect that intensified interest among some Republicans in expanding the party's appeal to a broader spectrum of people, especially the growing Hispanic vote.

The GOP "has been guilty in some respects of speaking in a way that does not sound very welcoming to new members," Christie said. "If you want to be a leader in this country, you have to first reach your hand out and change the tone of our national conversation."

If Christie chooses to run for the nomination, he will face challengers who have already begun an aggressive outreach to Hispanic voters. One of them is former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, who speaks Spanish. And another is Florida Sen. Marco Rubio, who is Cuban American.

Christie credited his meetings with communities across New Jersey for his gains with Latinos and others in his re-election campaign. He was riding high in opinion polls in the aftermath of Superstorm Sandy and faced an opponent who gained little traction.

He said his experience "tells you that if we change the way that we hear each other, if you treat each other with respect, even when we disagree, we can bring people together."

Christie says he will decide this month whether to run for the Republican nomination.

For Chris Christie, 'good' news is relative // MSNBC // Steve Benen – June 10, 2015

The headline on the front page of The Hill yesterday was, for the most part, accurate: "NJ Supreme Court gives Christie a win on pensions." And insofar as the Republican governor hoped the state court would rule his way, yesterday offered Chris Christie some welcome news.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The New Jersey Supreme Court ruled Tuesday that Gov. Chris Christie (R) can move ahead with his proposed $1.57 billion cut to the state's public employee pensions system to clean the state's fiscal house.

The decision came as much-needed good news for Christie, who is expected to announce whether he'll run for president in the coming weeks.

When it comes to political, economic, and legal developments, the Garden State governor hasn't had it easy lately, and I don't doubt that Christie and his political team were delighted by the 5-2 ruling from the state Supreme Court.

But with Christie, "good news" is relative. As the New York Times reported this morning, "While Mr. Christie has been selling himself as a straight shooter, the court, despite its ruling for him, didn't make him seem like a man of his word. 'The loss of public trust due to the broken promises' in the law, the court wrote in its decision, 'is staggering.'"

In other words, in Christie's "win," the same judges who agreed with his legal argument also concluded that the governor broke his word and violated the public trust.

For those hoping for a refresher in this story, this 2014 column from the Star-Ledger's Tom Moran on New Jersey's pension reform efforts is worth another look.

[Christie] did only the easy part. He made public workers pay more for skimpier benefits, and froze cost-of-living adjustments for current retirees. That tough medicine was justified to deal with the emergency.

But the other half of the deal was just as important. For his part, Christie promised to ramp up state payments into the pension funds gradually, over seven years, to make up for the scofflaw governors in both parties who shorted these funds over two decades.

The point is that both sides had to absorb their share of pain. Public workers did their part. Now Christie is saying he will not do his, that he will short the funds by a whopping $2.4 billion through next year.

The GOP governor said he'd boost investments in the pension funds, but Christie was counting on increased job creation and improved economic growth to help provide additional resources. When New Jersey's economy lagged, the money wasn't there, and Christie didn't follow through.

A record nine debt downgrades soon followed.

The New Jersey Supreme Court sided with Christie, effectively saying he could legally pursue his preferred course: investing far less in the pension funds than he said he would. Whether or not this should be considered a Christie "victory" is a matter of perspective.

PERRY

Perry's cherry-picked claim that America would have lost 400,000 jobs without Texas // WaPo // Michelle Ye Hee Lee – June 10, 2015

"In the last seven years of my tenure, Texas created 1.5 million new jobs. As a matter of fact, without Texas, America would have lost 400,000 jobs."

–Former Texas governor Rick Perry (R), presidential announcement speech, June 4, 2015

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In declaring his second bid for the presidency, Perry touted one of his favorite talking points: job growth in Texas. Perry, the state's governor from 2000 to 2015, frequently makes references to the state's economic accomplishments, and this topic likely will be repeated through the campaign.

The Fact Checker recently examined separate claim from Perry about job creation in Texas, which earned him Two Pinocchios. Despite that rating, however, he unfortunately repeated the claim in his presidential campaign announcement. The Fact Checker has long urged readers to be wary of politicians using jobs numbers to highlight their success in office, as much of what happens in the economy is out of a politician's control and jobs data are subject to manipulation.

Is Perry's often-repeated statement correct?

The Facts

Texas' workforce as a whole, indeed, has grown since 2000. Texas has had noteworthy economic recovery compared to other states, for many reasons that cannot all be tracked to the decisions of a single policymaker or the state's chief executive.

Perry's staff cited the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Current Population Survey, a monthly survey of about 60,000 households. This is used to track changes of unemployment rates and labor force activity. It measures the number of people who are employed, unemployed and are unemployed but looking for work. Perry's figure comes from the survey's total civilian employment numbers, which includes agricultural, self-employed and unpaid family workers.

In December 2007, there were 10,997,356 employed residents in Texas and total U.S. employment was 146,273,000. (The U.S.-without-Texas employment was 135,275,644). In December 2014, there were 12,570,050 employed Texas residents, and 147,442,000 total employed residents in the United States. (The U.S.-without-Texas employment was 134,871,950).

So while Texas gained 1,572,694 jobs between December 2007 and December 2014, the United States gained 1,169,000 in the same period. The difference between the two (i.e., U.S.-without-Texas employment in December 2014 minus U.S.-without-Texas in December 2007) was 403,694 — essentially the figure Perry used.

But that is not the same as the number of "jobs" that would have been "lost" without Texas. In fact, the BLS warns against aggregating state-level data and adding them up to the national total, as state figures are adjusted at the state level.

The standard measure for job gains or losses is a different data set: BLS Current Employment Statistics, also called establishment survey or payroll survey. This is a monthly survey of about 588,000 worksites in the country and is an estimate of non-farm wage and salary jobs, not of employed Americans. It does not include agriculture, self-employed or unpaid family workers.

Economists, the BLS and the Federal Reserve use the establishment survey when measuring job growth. Perry's staff did not respond when we asked why he used the household survey instead of the more commonly cited establishment survey.

The establishment survey shows a much different picture. The seasonally adjusted non-farm payroll data show that between December 2007 (138,350,000) and December 2014 (140,592,000), there were 2.2 million net new jobs in the United States. During the same period, there were 1.2 million net new jobs in Texas (10,529,900 in December 2007 to 11,749,500 in December 2014).

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Let's see what happens when you apply Perry's logic to the establishment survey, despite the BLS's warning that this is not kosher math: Without Texas, America still would have gained 1,022,400 jobs.

There's more, still applying Perry's logic. (BLS officials can close their eyes for the next few paragraphs.)

If you pick the month of December during any other year Perry was governor of Texas, and compare it to December 2014 employment numbers, it begins to become clear why he picked 2007. If you compare December 2000 to December 2014, or compare December 2001 to December 2014, and so on, the only two years he can use to say that America would have "lost jobs" "without Texas" are December 2006 and December 2007.

As the graph shows, if Perry picked December 2001 to compare to December 2014, he would have to say: "Without Texas, America still would have gained 8.8 million jobs." If he picked December 2006 to compare to December 2014, he may have said: "Without Texas, America would have lost 240,000 jobs."

Last one, using the Perry logic: From January 2000 to December 2014 — Perry's entire tenure as governor — the United States gained 8.2 million net new jobs without Texas.

Further, the BLS establishment survey shows that after a bump in the number of jobs in Texas from December 2014 to January 2015, the number is decreasing — potentially due to the plummeting oil prices that affect states such as Texas more than others.

The Pinocchio Test

This is a classic case of politicians manipulating or cherry-picking numbers to put their state's performance in the best possible light. Perry used a BLS dataset used to measure unemployment rate, not job growth. He added up state employment numbers in the way that BLS says you shouldn't. And he picked a baseline year (December 2007) that over-inflates Texas' share of total U.S. employment and deflates what is happening to the rest of the country.

Perry has made similar claims in the past (FactCheck.org examined one earlier this year) and may repeat them as he launches his campaign. We wavered between Three and Four Pinocchios, but his raw numbers were rooted in accurate BLS data, so it tipped his claim, just barely, to Three.

Rick Perry Tries Again // HuffPo // Chris Weigant – June 10, 2015

I've been giving each of the major candidates for president a serious overview, right after they officially announce their candidacy. Today, we'll take a look at Rick Perry, who made his formal announcement last week.

Perry is the tenth Republican to throw his hat in the 2016 ring, joining Ben Carson, Ted Cruz, Carly Fiorina, Lindsey Graham, Mike Huckabee, George Pataki, Rand Paul, Marco Rubio and Rick Santorum. There are at least five other Republicans who will also likely make a run for their party's nomination, but they have yet to formally announced their candidacies.

Rick Perry served the longest term as Texas governor in the state's history, taking over the office from George W. Bush (when Bush left to become president), and Perry only stepped down from this post earlier this year. He, obviously, wants to follow the trail Bush blazed from the Texas governor's office to the Oval Office. However, this will be the second run for Perry, and he'll have to improve significantly on his previous performance to even have a chance of doing so.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This is likely the biggest obstacle Perry faces. In an incredibly crowded Republican field, there are only three men who are not making their first run for the presidency: Mike Huckabee, Rick Santorum and Perry. None of these three have exactly caught fire in the polls yet (although it is early, and anything could still happen). But it does seem that this time around the Republican electorate is looking for a completely new face to head their ticket, which could spell doom for the three also-rans.

Perry's 2012 run was impressive, at least at first. Right after he announced, he leapt to the top of the polling, beating out Mitt Romney and all the rest of the Republican field. Unfortunately for Perry, he didn't stay on top of the heap for very long, and his chances all but evaporated after a disastrous debate performance. When asked to name the three federal government departments he would work to abolish as president, Perry infamously could only name two of them. After hemming and hawing for a while, Perry just threw in the towel and replied: "Oops." This "oops moment" absolutely torpedoed whatever chance he might have had to beat Romney and the rest of the field, and his poll numbers quickly sank like a stone.

A plausible explanation for his disastrous debate performance was revealed later: Perry had undergone back surgery mere weeks before he announced his candidacy, and was on some serious painkillers during the debates (indeed, during his whole campaign). Anyone who has ever been on such painkillers can easy attest that they don't exactly go hand-in-hand with coherent thinking or clear-headedness. If Perry was popping pills before walking on the debate stage, it's a little more understandable that his memory wasn't fully in working order, in other words. Perry's big problem, however, is that you rarely get a second chance to make a first impression.

Perry falls somewhere in the middle of the conservative ideological spectrum. He's taken a very hard line on some issues dear to the Republican base, but then he's also championed some rather unorthodox positions as well, which might cause him problems if he does rise to the frontrunner ranks of the Republican pack (where his positions will get much more scrutiny from his fellow Republicans).

Perry, as governor, slashed the state's safety net to the bone, and pushed a conservative version of health care reform, which consisted mostly of "tort reform." But Texas is now the number one state in the country when it comes to the rate of uninsured citizens, meaning this panacea didn't exactly work wonders. Perry is a hardliner on abortion, and opposes it in almost all cases -- including for rape or incest victims -- and would only carve out an exception if the life of the mother is at risk. Perry is counting on the religious right's support (he announced his 2012 presidential candidacy at a prayer rally), and is stridently anti-gay-rights. He has expressed support for a constitutional amendment limiting marriage to a man and a woman. Perry is an Eagle Scout, and strongly supported the Boy Scouts banning gays from their ranks. He is (no surprise, for a Texas Republican) very pro-gun and presided over the executions of hundreds of Texas prisoners -- more than any other state by far. All these things are pretty standard Republican positions, well within the mainstream of his party.

Perry, however, has broken ranks with Republican orthodoxy in several notable ways. He signed a law in Texas to give undocumented immigrants in-state tuition rates at state colleges, which is much more liberal than most conservatives' position. Unlike some of the other Republicans running for president (Marco Rubio, chiefly), Perry actually stood behind this action and defended it, rather than running away from it in an effort to pander to Republican voters. Perry also championed mandatory HPV vaccine shots for young women, which raised eyebrows among many Republicans (and not only the anti-vaccine crowd). Perry has one further issue that has long been a bugaboo among the more conspiracy-minded Republicans (and libertarians). Perry supported the "Trans-Texas Corridor" project which would have created a major transportation route from Oklahoma to Mexico, in an effort to boost trade through his state. But this soon became the stuff of conspiracy theory, supposedly being just a preliminary to some sort of merger of Canada, Mexico and the United States into a supposedly-nightmarish regional government which would destroy life as we know it in America. Or something. This likely won't hurt Perry all that much, however, because so few people have heard about it, and because the project never really got off the ground.

Perry's strong point -- the foundation of his campaign, if last time is any indication -- is the explosive growth in Texas during his time in office. Perry likes to refer to this as the "Texas miracle," on the campaign trail. Texas showed an enormous amount of growth in jobs and population over the past 15 years, and (just as one indicator) the state added a whopping four seats in the House of Representatives in the last reapportionment (after the 2010 census) -- far more than any other state (California, by comparison, added zero seats, while New York and Ohio both lost two seats). Perry is running as the man who made such spectacular growth happen, in short. How much of the credit is his is debatable, as is much of the "Texas Miracle" itself, but politicians aren't exactly shy about claiming such credit, so Perry's claims are really just par for the course.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Perry may be weak on the actual fiscal record of Texas, however -- a point so far not being made by his opponents in the Republican field, but one which could gain traction if Perry starts doing better in the polls. While Perry was governor, the state began financing such basic services as roads (and other infrastructure) and unemployment benefits, by borrowing an enormous amount of money. The total state debt essentially tripled during his term as governor, due largely to his refusal to raise taxes. This may not go over very well with the fiscal conservatives in the Republican base -- again, if any of his opponents actually uses it to attack Perry.

Perry is also running as a strong proponent of beefing up border security, an issue where he's got more experience than most of his Republican opponents (Texas shares the longest border with Mexico of any state). He's hoping to defuse the immigration issue by being the strongest voice for increasing border patrols and stopping illegal entry on America's southern border.

Could Perry's candidacy catch fire the way it did the last time around? Well, anything's possible, especially this early in the race. But so far, it just hasn't happened. He has received a small bump in the polling, but he's still in tenth place overall -- right behind Donald Trump. If he's going to be considered a viable candidate, he'll have to get his poll numbers out of the bottom tier of candidates. Unfortunately for Perry, there are a lot of other people who will be attempting to do exactly the same thing.

If Perry does surprise everyone and start moving up, he's got as good a chance as most of the candidates to break into the top rank (currently occupied by Jeb Bush, Marco Rubio and Scott Walker). At the present time, however, there are no indications that this is going to happen. But perhaps one very good debate performance (to finally bury the notoriety of his previous debate performances) could move him up to challenge the frontrunners.

Perry's Texas swagger probably wouldn't go over all that well in a general election, though, if he were somehow to become the Republican nominee. In the first place, the last Republican who was president also had a pronounced Texas swagger, and look what that got us all. Perry will have a similar problem to Jeb Bush's, in separating himself from the man he took over the Texas governor's office from: George W. Bush. My guess is that if it came down to a race between Hillary Clinton and Rick Perry, Clinton would beat him pretty easily. But I would be very surprised if Perry got that far. I think his "oops moment" is going to be remembered by too many voters for him to recreate his image (glasses or not). I also think that the Republican electorate truly is looking for something new in their candidate of choice this year, and as a direct result Perry isn't even going to merit much attention from most Republican primary voters.

The Legal Trouble That Could Haunt Rick Perry's Presidential Campaign // Mother Jones // Patrick Caldwell – June 10, 2015

Rick Perry's recently launched presidential campaign is off to a relatively smooth start. Sure, unlike his 2012 bid, he's entering the field far, far behind in the polls—he's trailing Donald Trump!—but he's been getting good press. "Rick Perry's still got it," proclaimed Politico's Katie Glueck over the weekend, noting that "when it comes to glad-handing and working a crowd, Perry still sets the gold standard even if he trails in the polls."

But as he launches his second run for the White House, Perry faces ongoing legal trouble back home in Texas stemming from his time as governor. Last August, a grand jury indicted Perry for abusing his power as governor. Perry has repeatedly requested that judges dismiss the case, only to be rebuked as the allegations progress toward a trial—one that could play out during the heat of the GOP primaries.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The case is a bit convoluted, but it stems from Perry's 2013 effort to oust a county district attorney who investigates public corruption.

Texas has an unusual system of keeping politicians in check. There's no a state-level commission that scrutinizes political malfeasance. Instead, the Travis County DA—based in Austin—is responsible for conducting these investigations.

Texas Republicans had never been huge fans of a system that entrusts this liberal county with that power (especially after the Travis DA charged former US House majority leader Tom DeLay with violating election law in 2005). Nevertheless, the status quo had hummed along until April 2013, when police arrested Travis County DA Rosemary Lehmberg for drunk driving. Lehmberg, a Democrat, was caught on videotape the night of her arrest threatening police officers.

Republicans, including Perry, immediately called on Lehmberg to resign. But she refused, managing to hold onto her job despite various legal maneuvers to remove her from office. So Perry attempted a more creative method to get rid of Lehmberg. In 2013, he used the governor's line item veto power to cross out $7.5 million in funds allocated to the Public Integrity Unit, the subsection of the Travis County DA's office that investigates political corruption. Perry directly linked the veto to Lehmberg's arrest, saying he couldn't allow the funds to go to this outfit "when the person charged with ultimate responsibility of that unit has lost the public's confidence."

That raised the ire of Texans for Public Justice, a left-leaning good government outfit. It filed a complaint alleging Perry had abused his office's powers. "The governor overstepped his authority by sticking his nose in Travis County's business," the group's executive director said in a statement at the time. This led to a judge tasking a special prosecutor to look into the case, and that led to a grand jury and felony indictment for Perry on one count of abusing his official capacity and another count of coercing a public servant.

Perry has been dismissive of the case, turning his mugshot into a fundraising t-shirt. And a number of legal commentators, even liberal ones, have agreed, questioning the seriousness of the charges leveled against Perry. University of California, Irvine law professor Rick Hasen termed it "the criminalization of ordinary politics."

Yet judges in Texas aren't ready to shelve the charges. San Antonio Judge Bert Richardson has repeatedly turned down motions from Perry's lawyers to dismiss the case. In April, the case was assigned to a three-judge panel in Texas' 3rd Court of Appeals. No date has been set for initial hearings, so the case might not get fully aired until the peak of presidential primary season later this fall. If Perry he ends up getting convicted on both counts, he would face a maximum sentence of over 100 years of jail time.

No matter the outcome of the case, Perry soon might get his wish to see Lehmberg off the public corruption beat: The state house and senate both recently passed bills to reassign corruption cases to the Texas Rangers—a law enforcement agency that is overseen by the governor's appointees.

Perry Switches On Trade: TPP's Become 'An Animal' That 'Needs To Go Away' // The Daily Caller // Al Weaver – June 10, 2015

After initially offering up support for the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) deal, former Texas Gov. Rick Perry has withdrawn his backing ahead of a House vote to potentially approve a deal Friday.

In an interview on "The Hugh Hewitt Show" Wednesday, the 2016 candidate argued that much like the Ex-Im Bank, which Perry also supported until recently, the TPP has now become "an animal" that "needs to go away" at this point and time.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Perry had signaled his potential opposition to the TPP in May based on his lack of trust in President Barack Obama negotiating a trade deal.

"As you find out information, I don't mind — just like the Ex-Im Bank, I believe that America has to be a competitor out there. I think we have to do everything we can to well our products around the world. But like the Ex-Im Bank, when it came to be abundantly clear of the fraud and corruption that was going on there, I finally said 'listen, I can't support you anymore," Perry told Hewitt. "At this particular point and time, this thing needs to go away. And the TPP has now become that kind of an animal, if you will."

"When you will not tell Congress and when you will not tell the American people what is in a trade agreement — Washington has a real issue with trust as it is, and when you try to pull that on the American people and we start hearing some of the things that are in there — with this president's record of pulling some of the things he has done, we have to pass the bill so we'll know out what's in it type of rhetoric," Perry continued. "If you like your doctor, you can keep your doctor. If you pass Obamacare, the costs are going to go down…With that kind of record and not being honest and transparent with the American people, I think it's just easier — well, I wouldn't say easier, I think the wise thing to do is to say Mr. President, if you don't trust the American people to know what's in this trade deal, we don't trust you enough to pass it."

Perry had previously signaled reservations about a potential deal, as reported on May 19 by the Texas Tribune.

"I would rather Barack Obama not be negotiating for me right now, but he's going to be there for about 20 more months, and this deal needs to be transparent, and that's my greatest concern — is the lack of transparency in this piece of legislation," Perry said. "Until the public and Congress are comfortable that they know what's in this trade agreement, I'm not going to recommend that they sign it, and if we have to wait until there's a new president, then that's okay."

GRAHAM

The most interesting candidate you're not paying any attention to // WaPo // Chris Cillizza – June 10, 2015

When Lindsey Graham talks, the political world, generally, yawns. Graham, while a very well-regarded figure from his Senate perch, is not particularly regarded at all in the 2016 presidential race that he recently joined.

Graham is an asterisk -- or close to it -- in polling in every early state (except for his home state of South Carolina) and nationally. He's not even close to making the stage in the first Republican debate set for August. He's generally regarded as a cause candidate, with that cause being to represent the most hawkish views on foreign policy and national security against attacks by Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul.

Ok, fine. But, if you stop and actually listen to some of what Graham is saying -- particularly on the subject of bipartisanship -- you realize that he's one of the most interesting candidates in the field and one of the few who can genuinely sell himself as a change agent.

Here's Graham answering a question from "Meet The Press" host Chuck Todd about how he would address political polarization in Washington:

I think there's a market for a better way. When I talked to that young guy there, I said, you're going to have to work a little longer, pal. If I'm president, I'm going to ask you to work a little bit longer. What do people do between 65 and 67, they work two years longer. Ronald Reagan and Tip O'Neil showed us what to do. I'm making a bet here. I'm making a bet that you can talk about problem-solving in a Republican primary and still get the nomination. I'm making a bet that you can openly embrace working with Democrats and still get the nomination. I'm making a bet that with a war-weary public, you can rally them to go over there and keep the fight over there before it comes here. Now, if I lose those bets it doesn't mean America is lost, it just means I fell short. To a young person in politics, listen to what I'm doing here and see if it makes sense to you. There is a growing desire by the public at large to stop the BS. I feel it, I sense it, and I'm running on the idea that if you elect me, I'll do whatever is necessary to defend the nation. I'm running not as a candidate for a single party but for a great nation.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

If you believe the American people when they say they want leaders who are willing to work with one another and take positions because they believe in them not because the policies are popular, it's hard for me to imagine a better message than that paragraph from Graham above.

And, not for nothing, Graham's recent life in politics suggests he actually walks some of his talk. Graham was one of the leading voices in support of the comprehensive immigration reform proposal that passed the Senate in June 2013 only to die in the House. Unlike most of the Republican Senators involved in that effort  cough  MARCO RUBIO  cough , Graham stood steadfastly behind his support for immigration reform -- despite the fact that it drew him five primary challengers who cited it as exhibit A that he simply wasn't conservative enough for South Carolina.

Graham won that primary last June with 56 percent of the vote. How? Here's how The Atlantic's Molly Ball diagnosed it: "Graham talked about his support for a path to citizenship at nearly every campaign stop, touting his work with Democrats on the issue as evidence of his willingness to solve tough problems in Washington. By his calculus, voters would accept a difference of opinion, but they wouldn't accept insincerity."

That's pretty compelling stuff, right? A guy who not only says he is committed to work across the aisle but actually has done it -- and owned it?

And yet, Graham is where he is: An asterisk in the polls, classified, already, in the "also-ran" pile of GOP presidential candidates.

There's a case to be made that it's early in the process and Graham still has plenty of time to rise above his currently meager station in the polls and so on and so forth. True, if unlikely based on the history of these sorts of races.

To me though, Graham's candidacy is a sort of campaign thought experiment: What if politics produced a candidate that had lots and lots of what the public said it wanted but in a somewhat unlikely package (a southern-drawling lifetime politician) and without the buzz and fanfare that surrounds the so-called "top tier"?

Could a candidate like that possibly hope to break through?

Lindsey Graham to Sean Hannity: Knock it off // Politico // Nick Gass – June 10, 2015

Fox News host Sean Hannity went after presidential candidate Lindsey Graham on Tuesday night, responding to the South Carolina Republican's recent remarks that blamed both him and MSNBC host Rachel Maddow for the role they play in polarizing American politics.

"I've come to conclude that the Republican Party and the country as a whole needs to knock off some of this stuff," Graham told Hannity.

Story Continued Below

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Graham's initial comments, aired June 2 in an interview with NBC News' Chuck Todd, imagined what the two political commentators from opposite ends of the spectrum might have said to Benjamin Franklin.

"You know, Ben Franklin comes outside and Rachel Maddow and Sean Hannity jump on him, 'Don't give in, Ben.' Just think how hard it is in today's 24/7 news cycle [with] talk radio, cable television and money," Graham told Todd. "There is a group telling you to say no about everything."

Hannity ticked through his policy positions available on his website, touting his own solutions.

"Absolutely, you have solutions," Graham responded. "But so does Rachel Maddow. And the problem is that we can't blend these solutions."

"Wasn't Martin Luther King Jr. polarizing in a good way for justice?" Hannity asked. "He was a polarizing figure, right?"

Ronald Reagan was also described as "polarizing" when he took on sitting President Gerald Ford for the Republican nomination in 1976, Hannity said. The Fox News host also brought up Graham's own support of President Bill Clinton's impeachment while he was a member of the House, as well as his support of the troop surge in Iraq.

At times, Graham acknowledged he has been polarizing, but told Hannity that his solutions don't work. Shutting down the government over the Affordable Care Act, for example, Graham said, "made zero sense to me."

Lindsey Graham's abortion push could imperil fellow GOPers // Politico // Burgess Everett – June 10, 2015

Sen. Lindsey Graham is renewing a GOP push for a 20-week abortion ban — a bid that could boost his long-shot presidential campaign but spell trouble for vulnerable GOP senators up for reelection in swing states next year.

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) earlier promised a vote on the hot-button bill, which already passed the House. Abortion foes say a vote in the Senate would be a historical milestone, the most consequential vote on the issue in more than a decade.

But Graham's effort threatens to hand political ammunition to Democrats trying to knock off GOP senators in purple and blue states that will decide Senate control after the 2016 election. Among them are Rob Portman of Ohio, Kelly Ayotte of New Hampshire, Ron Johnson of Wisconsin and Pat Toomey of Pennsylvania.

Democratic leaders, cognizant of the damage that social issues like abortion have done to Republican candidates in the recent past, practically dared McConnell to take up the ban.

"They can do whatever they want. We're ready for them," said Minority Leader Harry Reid (D-Nev.).

Sen. Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.), one of the party's top electoral strategists, was slightly more measured.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“I don’t think it’s the right thing to do and I don’t think it helps them politically,” said the Democratic leader in waiting.

In an interview, the South Carolina Republican called his legislation “good policy” and “acceptable politics.” He waved away the possibility that he is imperiling some of his GOP colleagues running in tough states — in a year that’s expected to favor Democrats with Hillary Clinton at the top of the ticket.

Ayotte, Portman and Johnson have backed the 20-week ban in the past, and said they would do so again if it came to a vote. But they did not urge its speedy consideration on the Senate floor.

“Late-term abortions are obviously something that the American people don’t agree with. So I am looking at the bill and it’s up to the leader whether he brings it to the floor. But I’ve previously been against late-term abortions,” said Sen. Kelly Ayotte (R-N.H.), who in 2014 worked with Graham to pressure then-Majority Leader Harry Reid in putting the bill up for a vote, citing polls that show support for a 20-week abortion ban.

Graham asserted that the measure, which he plans to introduce formally at a news conference Thursday, would be tricky even for some Democrats who back abortion rights to oppose.

“A lot of pro-choice people would say, ‘Hey, that late in the pregnancy we probably should not allow wholesale abortion,’” Graham said.

Graham’s rivals for the GOP presidential nomination in 2016 uniformly endorse a ban after 20 weeks of pregnancy. And some governors running for president have overseen enactment of strict abortion legislation or, like Gov. Scott Walker (R-Wis.), are in the process of doing so.

But Graham would be leading the charge from the stage of the Senate floor, possibly in the thick of the 2016 primary season. Graham is running as a bipartisan pragmatist who’s strong on national defense; a high-profile anti-abortion campaign could raise his profile among social conservative activists, some of whom will stand aside him on Thursday morning when he makes his push for Senate action on the bill. Little known outside his home state and far behind in the polls, Graham is looking to jump-start his fledgling campaign.

“It’s a good debate to have. We’re one of seven countries I believe that allow wholesale abortion on demand five months into the pregnancy. I’d like to get out of that club,” Graham said. “This is a reasonable position to take.”

The abortion push is already causing some grumbling among some Republican senators who say the party should steer clear of a pitched battle over social policy that will never get past President Barack Obama’s veto pen even if it somehow managed to break a filibuster.

“I don’t think that should be the priority,” said Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine). Asked if she could support such a bill, she demurred: “I don’t think it is good policy for us to turn to that issue, period.”

For Graham personally, though, there’s little downside to pressing McConnell follow through on his pledge a year ago to put the abortion bill on the floor if he became majority leader. Graham has long been a staunch anti-abortion advocate, taking up the charge to pass the 20-week ban two years ago and successfully pushing through a law that legally recognized in utero children killed in crimes.

But the 20-week bill’s political complexity has confounded GOP leaders. In the House, GOP leaders were forced to pull the bill and rewrite it to assuage concerns of Republican women who objected to rape-reporting requirements in the bill. After four months of work, the legislation eventually passed the House last month. McConnell has said little about it since, giving no indication when it will come up for a vote in the Senate.

Graham said McConnell isn’t backing away from his pledge to have a vote.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“I have no reason to believe he’s changed his mind,” Graham said. But GOP leaders and senior aides suggested McConnell is no rush to bring the bill to the floor.

Democrats involved in 2016 Senate races indicated that they’re prepared to pounce if McConnell takes up the abortion measure.

“In 2016, voters across the country – men and women alike – will remember that Senate Republicans were more interested in playing politics with women’s health than in moving our country forward,” said Sadie Weiner of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee.

Republican leaders are defending 24 Senate seats next year, including in several states that President Barack Obama carried twice. Privately, some Republicans groused that putting the legislation up for the vote would revive “war on women” broadsides from Democrats and hurt the GOP in purple states. But several vulnerable GOP incumbents said they would likely support the 20-week bill.

“It’s pretty important to so many people that are pro-life, as am I. I think at some point in time it’s just reasonable to say that we should protect life,” said Sen. Ron Johnson (R-Wis.), whom former Democratic Sen. Russ Feingold is planning to challenge in what’s expected to be a close race.

From right to left: Sen. Rob Portman, Sen. Pat Toomey and Sen. Kelly Ayotte | AP Photo

Polls are mixed on abortion. The 20-week ban frequently garners a plurality or majority of support in polls, most of which were conducted in 2013. But last week a Gallup survey showed Americans self-identifying as “pro-choice” for the first time since 2008.

Republicans are reading the supportive polls for the 20-week bill as a reason to forge ahead. But Democrats remember their previously successful efforts to portray the GOP as insensitive on women’s healthcare.

“It’s yet another proof point of them being out of touch,” said Jess McIntosh of EMILY’S List. “They were elected to create jobs.”

National Republican Senatorial Committee chairman Roger Wicker of Mississippi brushed off that attack.

“It’s a fully formed baby at this point. The pregnancy is halfway over,” he said of the abortions the bill seeks to end.

A vote could help other Republicans politically.

Backing the the 20-week bill could allow Republican senators such as John McCain of Arizona, Roy Blunt of Missouri and Portman to flex their conservative muscles in primary races. And pro-abortion rights Sen. Mark Kirk (R-Ill.) could tout his opposition during a general election.

“That’s going to be an issue that probably works for our candidates,” said Sen. John Thune (R-S.D.), the No. 3 Senate Republican. “The politics of the life issue has changed dramatically in the past few years and the way that Lindsey’s approaching it is pretty good ground for us to stand on.”

But nobody may benefit more than Graham, who stands out among many of his conservative rivals for the Republican nomination as a lawmaker willing to compromise.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On Thursday morning he'll stand aside leaders from social conservative groups that say a vote on his bill is the most important abortion action in the Senate since former Sen. Rick Santorum (R-Pa.) managed to pass a partial-birth abortion ban a dozen years ago.

"This moment is tailor made for him," said Marjorie Dannenfelser, president of the Susan B. Anthony List, which opposes abortion rights.

SANTORUM

Rick Santorum is getting lost in the growing GOP pack // LA Times // David Horsey – June 10, 2015

Within days after Mitt Romney lost the 2012 presidential election, I began to receive emails from Rick Santorum's media relations staff. At the time, I thought to myself, "This guy is still running for president." And, of course, I was right.

Santorum, the former Pennsylvania senator, finished No. 2 in the 2012 Republican primaries, so it made sense that he might want to have another go at it. The unceasing flow of emails on his behalf did not mention the next election, of course. They were merely updates on Santorum's speaking schedule and statements about major issues arising in the news -- part of a coordinated effort to signal he remained a player in the political game.

Many of the news releases arrived under the banner of Patriot Voices, an organization formed by Santorum and his wife, Karen, in 2012 with a stated mission to "fight to protect faith, freedom, family and opportunity." The unstated, but rather obvious, underlying mission was to maintain a political organization Santorum could mobilize for another White House run. It also allowed him to avoid having to take a real job.

Santorum probably hoped his good showing in the last round of primaries and his unceasing effort to sustain grass-roots support would give him the inside track to the 2016 GOP nomination, but it has not turned out that way. In polls, he is now languishing near the bottom in the most crowded field of candidates in his party's history. Instead of fighting for first place with Jeb Bush, Marco Rubio and Scott Walker, Santorum is stuck between Carly Fiorina and George Pataki.

Still, there is no reason to give up. The Iowa caucuses are still eight months away and, as yet, no candidate holds a commanding position in an ever-expanding group of candidates that is splitting the polling numbers into smaller and smaller fractions. Anything could happen.

The uncertain nature of the Republican race at this point has made it easy for just about anyone to announce his or her candidacy and expect to be taken at least halfway seriously. Politically speaking, there are no heavyweights in the GOP ring in this election cycle, no prohibitive favorites. If you were a Republican with even a modest resume as a senator or governor or Fox News analyst (or, if you were Donald Trump, with an ego the size of Manhattan), it would be easy to look around at the competition and think, "Really? I'm at least as worthy as the rest of these guys."

And even though most of the announced and soon-to-be-announced candidates must know their chances are slim, they have also learned there are consolation prizes for also-rans. Mike Huckabee turned his failed candidacy in 2008 into a lucrative TV career that is paying for a gaudy mansion in Florida. A turn as a vice presidential nominee elevated Sarah Palin from a boring job as governor of Alaska to a glitzy celebrity career at the crossroads of politics and entertainment. For others, being a presidential candidate at least earned them frequent appearances on the Sunday morning political news shows.

Santorum may face more meager rewards if and when he loses again. Still, considering that Pennsylvania voters booted him out of the Senate in 2006, by November 2016, he will have spent much of a decade as a presidential candidate or candidate-in-waiting with all the perks and attention that go with that role. That's not nearly as good as getting the keys to the White House, but, for a politician, it is sure better than obscurity.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

HUCKABEE

Co-Author Of Mike Huckabee Books Was Accused Of Child Molestation In Two Legal Cases // Buzzfeed // Andrew Kaczynski – June 10, 2015

John Perry, a prolific author who co-wrote two books with former Arkansas governor and presidential candidate Mike Huckabee and co-wrote one with Alabama Supreme Court Justice Roy Moore, was accused of child molestation in two separate lawsuits, BuzzFeed News has found.

A 2012 police investigation of Perry's alleged offenses found that "the allegations of sexual battery were sustained" but that the statute of limitations had expired.

Perry co-wrote Do the Right Thing: Inside the Movement That's Bringing Common Sense Back to America about Huckabee's 2008 presidential campaign. He also did research and writing for Huckabee's 2007 book Character Is the Issue, a memoir of his early time as governor. Perry also co-wrote So Help Me God, Moore's autobiographical account of fighting to keep a monument to the Ten Commandments at Alabama's Supreme Court.

Those books are just a few of the titles produced with Perry's help: He wrote For Faith & Family: Changing America by Strengthening the Family with Richard Land, the president of Southern Evangelical Seminary, a book with former Southern Baptist Convention president James T. Draper, as well as a book with Frank Page, the president and CEO of the Southern Baptist Convention Executive Committee. Perry even co-authored The Vow, the book made into a feature film starring Rachel McAdams and Channing Tatum. Perry also lists writing two books for prominent pastor John F. MacArthur on his website.

In a sworn affidavit submitted during divorce proceedings, Perry's ex-wife attests that she "filed for divorce as a result of Mr. Perry's inappropriate marital conduct, to which he admitted to in his Response to Interrogatories numbers 1 and 2." Throughout the court documents, "inappropriate marital conduct" appears to be a euphemism for the alleged molestation.

Perry's responses are not included in the case file.

Another filing, submitted by Perry's ex-wife's attorney earlier in the same proceedings, refers to Perry's "admitted sexual abuse" of a minor child. Perry's response to that filing — also submitted prior to his ex-wife's affidavit — does not deny the abuse, or that Perry admitted it. Instead, Perry claims that "there was never any testimony or other evidence of any kind presented" to the court, "or any orders or findings of fact [...] regarding any alleged sexual abuse of any minor child relative to the parties' divorce or any other legal proceeding."

This claim is not, however, necessarily incompatible with Perry's ex-wife's claim that Perry "admitted to" the alleged "inappropriate marital conduct" during the discovery process, because it appears that those findings were not technically "presented" to the court.

Likewise, a police investigation launched in 2012 found the allegations against Perry "were sustained," according to a police department spokesperson, but that statute of limitations had passed.

"The alleged sexual battery was reported to have occurred when the victim was between the ages of 11 and 14," said Nashville police department spokesperson Don Aaron in a statement to BuzzFeed News.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"As a result of the investigation, the allegations of sexual battery were sustained, but it was determined that the statute of limitations had tolled, barring prosecution. The victim was age 18 when she first disclosed the allegations to non-law enforcement and said at that time she did not want the matter reported to the Tennessee Department of Children's Services or the police."

In a second series of lawsuits brought in a county court in Tennessee, and related to the same alleged acts of child molestation, Austin Davis, a former parishioner of Covenant Presbyterian Church in Nashville, claims that the church covered up Perry's alleged acts of child molestation and launched a campaign to silence and harass Davis.

Inquiries to Covenant Presbyterian were forwarded to their attorney. Autumn Gentry, a lawyer for Covenant Presbyterian, told BuzzFeed News they can't comment on ongoing litigation.

The individual Perry allegedly molested told BuzzFeed News that she believed that the church reacted appropriately, and did not cover up Perry's alleged offense. Perry has not returned multiple requests for comment from BuzzFeed News.

In an affidavit submitted as part of his case, Austin Davis claims the accuser told him that she had been molested between the ages of 11 and 13.

In Davis's court case, he presents what he alleges are minutes from Covenant Presbyterian Church meetings that show Perry resigning from the church's diaconate in 2008, and minutes from 2010 showing Perry was excommunicated from the church because he "has confessed to committing heinous and repetitive sin [...] and has not shown evidence of repentance." The minutes appear to have been introduced as evidence in one of Davis' lawsuits against the church. The church does not appear to have objected to the introduction of the minutes or contested their authenticity.

BuzzFeed News spoke to a longtime church member, who said he had obtained the minutes for Davis and vouched for their authenticity. The minutes are accessible to any church member. The individual Perry allegedly molested also told BuzzFeed News that Perry was excommunicated from the church as a consequence of the alleged abuse.

Catherine Davis, the wife of Austin Davis, likewise wrote in a sworn affidavit that during the summer of 2012, she spoke to the accuser, who confirmed the abuse occurred numerous times when the individual was a minor. Davis said the accuser told her that she broke her silence in 2007 and began telling friends, family members, church leaders, and school officials about what had allegedly occurred.

Spokespeople for Huckabee did not return a request for comment.

Huckabee: Fox News Staff Thought I Was A "Psychopath" For Owning An AR-15 // Buzzfeed // Christopher Massie – June 10, 2015

Former Arkansas Gov. and Republican presidential candidate Mike Huckabee said earlier this year that the staff of his Fox News show was "scared to death" and reacted like he was a "psychopath" when he told them he owned "several" AR-15 rifles.

"I'll never forget sitting around with my own staff at Fox News, New Yorkers all, and something came up about guns, and they were saying about how nobody should ever own an AR-15, 'Well, there's just no reason to own an assault weapon,'" Huckabee said, speaking at the Destiny Worship Center in Destin, Florida in January.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Huckabee said he challenged his staff's definition of the term 'assault weapon,' telling them that even "a pencil is an assault weapon if you poke it in someone's eye," before making them "really shocked when I said 'AR-15s, I got several of them.'"

"They were scared to death," Huckabee said. "I thought they were gonna dive under the table. I really did. It was like they were, 'Huh!' He's a psychopath.'"

Huckabee said he explained to his staff that the AR-15 rifles were less powerful "than the rifles that I deer hunt with" and that the features that make them look intimidating are "all practical functional features of the rifle to make it lighter, to make cooler, to make it easier to hold so that a woman as well as a man who is short or tall can use these."

"'You're just looking at it and you think because you saw it on a Rambo movie that it must be more lethal than anything else,'" Huckabee said he told his team. "And I said that's nonsense."

KASICH

Kasich Leads Field In Ohio // Public Policy Polling – June 10, 2015

PPP's new Ohio poll finds that John Kasich would be the first choice of Republican primary voters in his home state- more than a lot of the other GOP hopefuls can say in theirs. Kasich polls at 19% to 13% for Ben Carson and Scott Walker, 12% for Jeb Bush and Marco Rubio, 9% for Rand Paul, 6% for Mike Huckabee, 5% for Ted Cruz, and 4% for Chris Christie.

Kasich is pretty universally popular with Republican voters in the state- 72% approve of the job he's doing to only 17% who disapprove. But he still performs unspectacularly with voters on the right in the primary- among 'very conservative' voters he manages just a tie for third place with Marco Rubio at 12%, behind Ben Carson's 19% and Scott Walker's 17%. But he leads the field among the more centrist ideological groups within the Republican electorate. Among 'somewhat conservative' voters he gets 24%to 14% for Rubio, 11% for Carson, and 10% each for Walker and Rand Paul. And among moderates he ties Jeb Bush for the top spot at 23% with Walker at 11% and Rubio at 10% also in double digits.

Rubio has the highest favorability rating among GOP voters in Ohio, as we have found to be the case many places lately, at 58/16. Ohio makes yet another state where Christie is outwardly disliked by GOP voters- his favorability is 34/44- to put into perspective how poor that is the next least popular Republican we tested- Jeb Bush- is still at +16 at 48/32.

Hillary Clinton remains as dominant as ever on the Democratic side- she polls at 61% to 13% for Bernie Sanders, 7% for Michael Bloomberg, 2% each for Lincoln Chafee and Martin O'Malley, and 1% for Jim Webb.

We threw in Bloomberg because of the fascination of the New York media with a potential bid from him. We found that 1) Bloomberg isn't actually that well known- 54% of primary voters have no opinion about him and 2) he is not that well liked- only 22% of Democrats have a favorable opinion of him to 24% with a negative one.

This is the first poll we've conducted since O'Malley and Chafee formally got into the race and their 2% showing suggests neither has gotten much of an initial bump from his announcement. Neither has a positive favorability rating among Democratic primary voters in the state either.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton is polling over 70% with African Americans, over 60% with liberals, women, and seniors, and over 50% with moderates, men, and younger voters. There's no major demographic group within the Democratic electorate she fails to receive majority support from.

The general election match ups in Ohio are generally close with one exception- Kasich leads Clinton 47/40 in a hypothetical contest. Kasich boasts a solid 49/35 approval rating following his resounding reelection victory last year. The key to Kasich's advantage is that 89% of Republicans support him, compared to 75% of Democrats for Clinton.

The only other Republican who Clinton trails in Ohio is Rand Paul at 44/41. She also ties Marco Rubio at 44. She has small advantages over the rest of the GOP field- it's 44/43 over Ben Carson, Ted Cruz, and Scott Walker, 45/43 over Jeb Bush, 44/41 over Chris Christie, and 45/42 over Mike Huckabee.

Clinton may not be polling great against the Republicans in Ohio but there's still a huge gap between how she fares and how any other Democrat does in a general election match up. In match ups against Scott Walker, Bloomberg trails 40/32, Sanders 40/30, O'Malley 41/26, Chafee 39/24, and Webb 41/25.

CARSON

Ben Carson: Let's spy on government workers // MSNBC // Jane Timm – June 10, 2015

Republican presidential contender Ben Carson said Wednesday that if elected next year he might implement a "covert division" of government workers who spy on their coworkers to improve government efficiency.

The pediatric neurosurgeon-turned-candidate told a crowd of Iowa Republicans he is "thinking very seriously" about adding "a covert division of people who look like the people in this room, who monitor what government people do."

Carson suggested people would work harder if they suspected their coworkers of monitoring their work. "And we make it possible to fire government people!" he said to loud cheers.

Conservatives often criticize government employees as bureaucrats who live off public money and aren't accountable to taxpayers. Still, Carson's suggestion that such workers should spy on each other is the latest in a string of unusual — and often bizarre — ideas he's floated that win cheers from far-right crowds and raised eyebrows from everyone else.

It's true that firing government employees who underperform can be notoriously complicated – so much so that most agencies don't even try to do it, a Government Accountability Office report found earlier this year.

Campaign communications director Doug Watts tried to clarify Carson's comments in an email to msnbc. "Covert division? More like Secret Shopper, a quality control strategy used worldwide to improve customer service and customer care," Watts said.

While Carson is considered to be a long shot for the GOP nomination at best, his polling numbers and fan base are strong and active, indicating that Republicans can't count Carson – or his covert division – out just yet.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Carson: Gay rights aren't the same as civil rights // CNN // Alexandra Jaffe – June 10, 2015

Ben Carson said Wednesday night that he was "irritated" by the comparison between the fight for same-sex marriage rights and the Civil Rights Movement because there's no overt segregation against gays.

Speaking on Fox News' "Special Report", Carson elaborated on his remarks on CNN in March that he believes being gay is a choice because people "go into prison straight -- and when they come out, they're gay."

The GOP presidential contender told host Brett Baier that he "shouldn't have allowed my emotions" into the conversation, but was reacting to CNN host Chris Cuomo's line of questioning on the issue.

"I was a little bit irritated that he was equating the whole [gay marriage] issue with the Civil Rights movement. Because, quite frankly, I didn't remember any times when there were signs up that says, you know, 'everybody else here and gay people have to drink at this fountain,'" he said.

"I was a little irritated, but I shouldn't have allowed that to enter into the discussion," Carson said.

During his March interview on "New Day," Cuomo had pressed Carson on his assertion that the marriage issue should be left up to the states to decide, drawing a comparison to segregation against blacks.

"What if people of a state vote for a law, 100 to zero, that winds up infringing on the rights of a minority -- like happened very often with slavery? Like many would argue is happening now with people who are gay?" Cuomo asked.

Carson replied that "the Constitution was followed and we corrected those things" in the case of segregation against blacks, but suggested the case with gay marriage was different because being gay is a choice. His subsequent line of reasoning -- that it's a choice because some people come out of prison gay -- sparked a firestorm of criticism and eventually Carson apologized for the comments, admitting his words were "hurtful and divisive."

But on Wednesday night, Carson expressed satisfaction with how the controversy played out.

"They saw that as the opportunity to finally knock this guy out -- and they thought that they had done it. Stick a fork in him, he's gone. They were jubilant," he said of critics. "And now they're saying, I can't believe this guy's still here, are you kidding me?"

Carson came in seventh place in a late May CNN/ORC survey of the GOP presidential field, taking 7% support.

Carson identifies as 'pragmatic dove' for conservative voters // The Des Moines Register – June 10, 2015

Ben Carson identified himself as a "pragmatic dove" with a declaration against ISIS Wednesday morning.

The retired neurosurgeon's "only choice is to destroy them" stance won a round of applause near the end of a 30-minute speech at the Westside Conservative Club breakfast gathering in Urbandale.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Pragmatic doves do not allow themselves to be destroyed. They will do what they need to do to preserve themselves," Carson said to nearly 200 captivated faces packed into a side room at the Machine Shed Restaurant.

He added that he disagreed with the decision to invade Iraq in 2003.

The Republican presidential candidate shared his biography in brief, including an early desire to become a missionary doctor that faded with an "I'd rather be rich" realization in high school.

"Lord, what are you up to?" was a recurring question as he achieved success, influence and fame, he said. Carson was the youngest physician to head a major division at Johns Hopkins Medical Institution. He also sat on major corporate boards and got invited twice (1997 and 2013) to speak at the National Prayer Breakfast.

Carson said he heard the answer to his question when people started telling him to run for president, prompted largely by his harsh criticism of the Obama administration at the 2013 prayer breakfast.

"It was the good Lord giving me a lot of experience," Carson said before diving into a range of issues.

His speech depicted an America that is slipping away with special interest groups and intentional "purveyors of division" at the helm. He quoted Jesus, stating that a house divided cannot stand and how he will only answer to citizens.

"I would much rather lose than get involved with a special interest group," Carson said.

Lack of political experience was the first concern on the mind of David Stilley, a 59-year-old physician at the Wednesday event.

"Are we going to get right back where we were with someone who doesn't understand how government works on the day-to-day," Stilley said, highlighting Barack Obama's short political career prior to the White House.

Carson resolved some of those fears with anecdotes about overseeing finances on corporate boards and travel to 50-some foreign countries during his career.

"He's definitely stepped up a couple notches for my support based on his comments," said Stilley, who owns DoctorsNow Walk-in Care with three clinics in the Des Moines metro. "Fixing the economy fixes everything else."

Several Wednesday attendees – in an audience nearly 100 percent white and mostly above the age of 50 – pointed to the economy as their chief concern.

Kim Hiscox, owner of a West Des Moines real estate company, asked Carson about his solution for illegal immigration.

Carson said he would seal "all the borders, which we can do within a year ... and turnoff the spicket that's dispensing all the goodies."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hiscox, a 60-year-old Republican voter, called the response brilliantly thought-out. Carson won her over as a top choice, tied with Rick Perry, for a GOP candidate.

"Perry knows how to handle himself in public, fielding questions. Now I can see Carson also is a very capable public speaker," Hiscox said. "I don't respect canned, tele-prompted speeches."

SETTING: Machine Shed Restaurant in Urbandale for Westside Conservative Club breakfast

CROWD: Captive audience of nearly 200

REACTION: Many laughs and several rounds of applause paused Carson's 30-minute speech; several hands went up after and Carson answered five specific questions.

WHAT'S NEXT: This is part of a two-day visit for Carson. His schedule called for a busy Wednesday after the breakfast club: volunteering at a food bank in Waterloo, a meet-and-greet in Cedar Falls and an ice cream social visit in Eldora. He also plans to attend a coffee-with-residents gathering Thursday morning in Fort Dodge.

FIORINA

Fiorina's campaign-trail attacks leave out her own ties to Clinton Carly Fiorina // LAT // Joseph Tanfani – June 11, 2015

In a crowd of Republican presidential contenders hammering away at Hillary Rodham Clinton, no one has been more relentless than Carly Fiorina.

In speeches and media interviews, some of them while shadowing Clinton on the campaign trail, the former Hewlett-Packard chief executive has attacked the Clintons' family foundation for a lack of transparency amid reports that it accepted money from foreign governments. "She is not trustworthy," Fiorina says in a video on her website, itself named ReadytoBeatHillary.com.

In a Facebook post, Fiorina excoriated the Clintons for accepting donations from foreign governments "while making promises about transparency that they never intended to keep."

"What else don't we know? What don't we know about your donors?" she asked Wednesday on Fox News about the Clintons' charitable efforts. "What don't we know about the conflicts of interest that those donors represent?"

But in Fiorina's own philanthropic ventures, one of the key points of her resume as a White House hopeful, she has had a friendlier relationship with the Clintons and their foundation than she highlights on the campaign trail. And, in pressing for help for women around the globe, Fiorina is more similar to Hillary Clinton than she admits.

The discrepancies show how personal and professional ties can complicate life on the campaign trail for well-connected people like Fiorina, who also unsuccessfully ran for Senate in California in 2010.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

One Fiorina charitable effort, a campaign to fund women's empowerment projects around the globe, went forward with help from the State Department when Clinton was secretary.

And Fiorina has roles in two charities that participated in projects that became commitments with the Clinton Global Initiative, one of the organizations in the Clintons' worldwide philanthropic network in which charities and companies announce partnerships to pledge action on social projects.

She has also twice participated in Clinton Global Initiative events. In 2013, she spoke on a small panel that discussed how to boost female entrepreneurship. Last year, she appeared with former President Clinton and three other people on a televised panel discussion on how best to pull people out of poverty.

Fiorina at times sparred with the former president and criticized Democratic economic policies, saying that the Obama administration "made the rich much richer." But she also argued for the role of small business and praised the organization's work. "Seed capital, support, tools, energy -- all of the initiatives that the Clinton Global Initiative invests in to try and build Main Street entrepreneurship -- it has always been the hope of this country," Fiorina said.

A spokeswoman for Fiorina said she was "delighted" to participate in a session advocating for women who are entrepreneurs, and characterized the second discussion as "a debate with Bill Clinton."

Fiorina has contrasted her belief in transparency with Clinton's, saying last month: "Unlike Hillary Clinton, I am not afraid to answer questions about my track record or beliefs." She did not respond to follow-up questions about her involvement with the foundation or her work with the State Department.

Bill Clinton, speaking at a Clinton Global Initiative conference on Wednesday, said the foundation had always considered itself nonpolitical and had hosted a number of Republican politicians, including Mitt Romney and John McCain. He didn't mention Fiorina.

Fiorina helped spark a charitable drive in 2008 called the One Woman Initiative, targeting women's empowerment groups, mostly in Muslim countries. According to the organization, she set it up with help from the State Department, the U.S. Agency for International Development and then-Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice.

It took about a year to raise the money. By the time the approximately $500,000 in grants was released, in June 2009, President Obama was in the White House and Clinton was secretary of State. The initiatives included a microfinance program in Pakistan, a conflict-resolution program in the Philippines and an economic development program in India.

The initiative aimed to distribute grants with the help of corporate sponsors, and with support from the Department of State and USAID. The agencies also declined to comment on the initiative.

The Clinton Global Initiative draws together corporate and charity leaders for networking and to announce commitments to complete projects together.

Fiorina is connected to two groups that participated in such programs. She is board chairman of Good360, a Virginia-based group that connects companies who want to donate goods with charities that need them. Hilton Worldwide made that program a Clinton Global Initiative commitment in 2013.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Fiorina also is on the advisory board of the National Center for Entrepreneurship and Innovation, a group that wants to open a center celebrating inventors and entrepreneurs on the National Mall in Washington. That too was announced as a Clinton initiative commitment in 2013. But the plans have stalled, in part because the Smithsonian decided it couldn't devote resources to the project, said Philip Auerswald, the group's board chairman.

The advisory board and Fiorina didn't play a role in the decision to announce the project as a Clinton initiative commitment, he said, adding: "Carly has been nothing but supportive throughout this process."

Carly Fiorina Steps Up Cam paign Against Hillary Clinton // NYT // Amy Chozick – June 10, 2015

Carly Fiorina does not always seem entirely comfortable in her role as the Republican Party's designated Hillary Rodham Clinton attacker.

But that has not stopped the former Silicon Valley executive from doubling down on her strategy of trying to catapult her long-shot candidacy by focusing on attacking Mrs. Clinton in more aggressive and pointed ways than her male Republican rivals. The most recent instance: Ms. Fiorina is pushing traffic to ReadyToBeatHillary.com.

A play on the pro-Clinton group Ready for Hillary, the website, financed by the Fiorina campaign, does not have Ms. Fiorina's name or image on its homepage. Instead, a series of photos of Mrs. Clinton highlight the State Department's handling of the 2012 attack on a United States mission in Benghazi, Libya, when she was secretary of state; her family foundation's acceptance of foreign donations; and other criticism of the Clintons over the last couple of decades. If one clicks on the image and video of Ms. Fiorina criticizing Mrs. Clinton, a request for donations appears.

"So far, Hillary's been running one of the shadiest campaigns in presidential history," reads an email from Ms. Fiorina announcing the new website, which plays on the Clinton campaign's red arrow logo.

A Clinton campaign spokesman did not immediately reply to a request for comment.

Ms. Fiorina has drawn large crowds in Iowa and New Hampshire, and her candidacy, while hardly registering in national polling, has drawn increasing attention. For now, Ms. Fiorina's biggest task it building her name recognition and poll numbers so she can qualify for the first Republican debate on Fox News in August. The attacks on Mrs. Clinton, her campaign says, can only help get Ms. Fiorina a coveted spot on the debate stage.

OTHER

Republicans Still Playing Catch-Up on the Digital Campaign Trail // NYT // Ashley Parker – June 10, 2015

The criticism after the 2012 presidential election was swift and harsh: Democrats were light-years ahead of Republicans when it came to digital strategy and tactics, and Republicans had serious work to do on the technology front if they ever hoped to win back the White House.

Now, with the 2016 campaign already underway, Republicans are eager to show they have learned the lessons of past cycles and are placing a premium on hiring top digital talent to build the tools they deem necessary to compete.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But their immediate problem is slightly more low-tech: the basics of supply and demand.

“Shopping around for a digital data firm was already difficult — and when you’re one of 20 possible candidates in a party that has yet to establish its own expertise in this area, it’s even harder,” said Sasha Issenberg, author of “The Victory Lab: The Secret Science of Winning Campaigns.”

This type of work — often described in political circles as digital, data and analytics — encompasses many areas, from building email systems for small-dollar fund-raising to generating buzz on social media to analyzing data to help direct ads at specific groups of voters.

Using data to determine the most efficient and effective way to target voters, considered by many to be a crucial advantage for President Obama’s campaign in 2012, could prove particularly important in a crowded Republican primary in which every dollar counts. But it is another area in which only a handful of Republican companies specialize.

The lack of experience among Republican operatives and companies is captured in a coming study by Daniel Kreiss, an assistant professor of political communications at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and Christopher Jasinski, a graduate student there.

Using the Federal Election Commission and other data sources, including LinkedIn, the two identified 626 political operatives with experience in digital, data and analytics on every presidential campaign since 2004. The breakdown was stark: 503 of those staff members were hired by Democratic campaigns, 123 by Republicans.

They also found that 75 different political companies or organizations were founded by those former campaign workers on the Democratic side, but only 19 on the Republican side.

“Historically, the one thing that’s pretty clear is that the Democrats, over the course of three cycles, have been investing much more in creating a deeper pool of talent that can do things like work in digital, data and analytics, and that runs from top to bottom in the party,” Mr. Kreiss said.

The study also found that Democrats have done a better job of actively recruiting and attracting employees from places like Silicon Valley who bring innovative thinking and new technologies from the commercial sector into the political arena.

Though the imbalance seems to stem largely from recruitment efforts, Mr. Issenberg added that Republicans suffer from a cultural disadvantage as well. Many who work in technology have a somewhat libertarian worldview that, especially on social issues, more closely aligns with Democrats.

The limited number of Republican companies and the pressure to attract premium talent has added a new dimension to the so-called invisible primary, where candidates vie for expertise and money, and created unexpected opportunities for operatives with digital experience.

For instance, Targeted Victory — one of the largest companies on the Republican side, which ran Mitt Romney’s 2012 digital operation — has signed on with former Gov. Rick Perry of Texas, but also plans to split itself off into distinct parts to take on one or two other campaigns or outside groups.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“This is the first time there have been more campaigns that view digital as an actual weapon, as opposed to a box they have to check,” said Michael Beach, co-founder of Targeted Victory.

Vincent Harris and his company, Harris Media, which handled Ted Cruz’s 2012 Senate bid in Texas, is running the digital operation for the 2016 presidential campaign of Senator Rand Paul of Kentucky. And Senator Marco Rubio of Florida has hired both Optimus, one of the few Republican analytics companies, and Push Digital to lead his digital effort.

Other likely campaigns, including those for Gov. Scott Walker of Wisconsin and former Gov. Jeb Bush of Florida, are solving the problem by building in-house teams. Mr. Walker, for example, hired staff members who worked on Senator Joni Ernst’s successful 2014 campaign in Iowa and from the Silicon Valley office of the Republican National Committee.

Republicans say they are optimistic this cycle will help usher in a true cultural change, much as the 2008 Obama campaign did — with its emphasis on data and analytics that helped create a pipeline to recruit and nurture tech talent.

But the party faces a difficult path to building the vast operation that a general election requires, said Patrick Ruffini, founder of Engage, a Republican digital strategy company. “There is going to be a real challenge in terms of finding people who were at the level the Obama campaign people were four years ago,” he said.

Still, Republicans say they see progress. Anton Vuljaj, chief revenue officer for IMGE, a digital advocacy agency whose political clients are Republicans, said that after the 2012 cycle, companies like his have more leverage because campaigns now see the value in the work they do.

“We’ve had a lot more conversations with campaign managers and general consultants who know at least the very basics of what questions to ask us, like how are you segmenting and amplifying your email lists or how are you measuring the impact of your advertising,” he said.

Brian Stobie, a partner at Optimus, also said there were signs of change — even in the sheer number of campaigns willing to take a meeting. “Now everyone wants to have the meeting,” he said. “They may not sign on the dotted line, but they want to have the meeting. Before 2012, it was like, ‘Analytics? We don’t need that.’ ”

The digital firms are also getting to be increasingly choosy about just which candidate they work for — a perk of their elevated stature in the party hierarchy.

“Who we sign on with is very much tied to how much they buy into our worldview,” said Zac Moffatt, co-founder of Targeted Victory. “I don’t know that you would want to spend a year just running into a wall, so I think everyone we sign up with cares about the cost of efficiency and wants to have a plan for how we turn out 40,000-plus folks in Iowa.”

But some Republican operatives with digital experience privately wonder how much the emphasis on digital and analytics is simply for public image purposes. Will the digital team, they worry, still be the first item cut when the budget gets crunched?

“There’s a difference between having a seat at the table, because there are seats at the table, and then there’s the back room where all the decisions get made, and there’s who does the candidate call at 11 p.m. at night,” Mr. Ruffini said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

How much the Republican digital field evolves may not truly be known until after Election Day.

“If one of the campaigns that actually uses data to make decisions wins, then the culture changes,” Mr. Stobie said. “If one of the campaigns that uses data as a hood ornament wins, then nothing changes.”

New Hampshire Republicans Urge Networks to Alter Debate Crit eria // NYT // Alan Rappeport – June 10, 2015

Republicans in New Hampshire are urging Fox News and party leaders to reconsider its plans to limit participation in presidential debates based on performance in polls.

The group of local lawmakers and activists argued in a letter to Roger Ailes, president of Fox News, and Reince Priebus, chairman of the Republican National Committee, that limiting the number of candidates who can participate in debates would supplant the role that early nominating states such as New Hampshire play in allowing voters to narrow the field.

“Historically, it has been the responsibility of early primary and caucus states to closely examine and winnow the field of candidates, and it is not in the electorate’s interest to have TV debate criteria supplant this solemn duty,” they wrote.

The letter comes as Iowa is fighting to retain the significance of its straw poll and other traditional early contest states are increasingly fearful of losing their status as springboards for those who eventually capture the nomination.

Fox and CNN have said they would limit the number of candidates on the debate stage, basing the criteria on performance in national public polling. Lesser-known candidates like Carly Fiorina and Ben Carson have criticized this plan, and some political analysts have said that it will alter the way candidates campaign early on, as they focus on television exposure instead of retail politicking in hopes that they will get noticed. Bigger names, including Senator Lindsey Graham of South Carolina and Gov. John Kasich of Ohio, who is mulling a run, could also struggle to qualify to debate.

The New Hampshire Republicans suggested that Fox consider dividing the debate into two panels and use a random drawing to determine who will participate in each.

“The New Hampshire primary, as well as the contests in Iowa, South Carolina, and Nevada, exist to afford every candidate – regardless of money and polling – a level playing field and the opportunity to personally share their message and experience with as many voters as possible,” they wrote.

Craig Benson and Stephen Merrill, former governors of New Hampshire, are among the more than 50 people who signed the letter.

Fox is scheduled to broadcast the first debate on Aug. 6.

Their state economies may lag, but Republican hopefuls still brag // Reuters // Andy Sullivan – June 10, 2015

Various Republican governors with an eye on the White House can point to tax cuts and other business-friendly policies they spearheaded as they enter the crowded 2016 presidential contest. But many of them can't highlight robust economic growth.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Among the handful of governors and former governors competing for the Republican presidential nomination, only one - former Texas Governor Rick Perry, who declared his candidacy last week - can say that his state has outpaced the national economy over the past four years.

Economic growth lagged in other states whose governors are expected to run for president, according to U.S. government figures released on Wednesday.

"Only Perry can really brag," said George Mason University economist Stephen Fuller. "The other guys just haven't been there long enough and don't have anything to show for it, anyway."

The Texas economy grew by 17.8 percent between 2011 and the beginning of 2015, according to the U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis, well above the national pace of 6.3 percent during that period. The state's economy, however, has begun to show signs of weakness recently as oil prices have plunged.

In Ohio, Governor John Kasich, who has been mulling a White House run, presided over a state that grew by 6.0 percent over those four years, slightly less than the national average. Wisconsin Governor Scott Walker, considered a likely Republican contender, oversaw growth of 4.3 percent in his state.

In New Jersey, the state economy under Governor Chris Christie grew by 3.8 percent, while Louisiana grew by only 1.2 percent during that period under Governor Bobby Jindal. Both Christie and Jindal are eyeing White House bids.

Governors have a limited ability to shape a state's economy in the short term, economists say.

Investments in education and highways can take years to bear fruit, while tax cuts must be offset by spending cuts to keep budgets in balance, resulting in little overall stimulus in the short term.

"If you shift state tax policy to make it more inviting for businesses to expand here, that can increase employment," said Dale Knapp, research director at the nonpartisan Wisconsin Taxpayers Alliance. "But that's a long-term impact."

The dynamics of the particular industries that dominate in a region play a significant role as well. Economists say that manufacturing-heavy Wisconsin, for example, is more susceptible to recession than an oil state like Texas.

Experts say the true impact of any governor often isn't apparent until years after the person leaves office.

But that has not stopped potential candidates from talking up their economic track records on the campaign trail as they criticize Democratic President Barack Obama for presiding over sluggish growth at the national level.

Walker, for example, argues that tax cuts and weakened labor laws have helped Wisconsin climb out of recession, even if he fell far short of his promise to create 250,000 jobs by the beginning of 2015.

In Texas, Perry's spokeswoman said growth was boosted by Perry's focus on low taxes, business-friendly regulations and limits on lawsuits.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In Louisiana, Jindal's administration cites a growing population, rising income and favorable ratings by business magazines to argue that the economy has improved, despite the tepid growth of recent years.

In New Jersey, Christie spokesman Kevin Roberts said Democrats have slowed his efforts to cut taxes and implement other changes. New Jersey's economy also suffered when Hurricane Sandy devastated much of the coast in 2012.

No matter the facts on the ground, White House hopefuls will find a way to argue that they are leaving their states in better shape than when they arrived, said James Pethokoukis of the conservative American Enterprise Institute.

"For these guys there's only two kinds of situations: a booming economy or a turnaround economy, and in both situations they get the credit," he said.

Polling Memo: Clinton 'Clearly Unpopular' Among Battleground State Independents // GOP.com – June 10, 2015

The Republican National Committee (RNC) today released the following polling summary memo from American Viewpoint, showing Hillary Clinton's clear shortcomings in voter perception of her character, trust, and decision-making.

To: Chairman Reince Priebus

From: Linda DiVall, Randall Gutermuth

Re: Independent Battleground States Survey Key Findings

Date: June 9, 2015

The following are the key findings from a survey conducted on behalf of the RNC by American Viewpoint in 10 key battleground states with Independent voters, which provide 137 electoral votes. Interviews were conducted May 3-7, 2015, using mix-mode interviewing. The margin of error for the entire sample, N=1500, is +/- 2.5% at the 95% confidence level. N=600 interviews were conducted with a landline sample, N=600 interviews were conducted with a cell phone sample and N=300 interviews were conducted online in the following states:

Hillary Clinton is clearly vulnerable and already has a net unfavorable rating with these Independents.

· Clinton's favorable to unfavorable ratio is 44:49 and she trails the generic Republican candidate 40%-36% in these key battleground states.

Hillary Clinton's supposed superior strength with women is a myth with these battleground state Independent women.

· Clinton's favorable to unfavorable ratio with these Independent women is barely a net favorable (49:43) and she only leads the generic Republican by 3-points among them. Conversely, she trails among battleground state Independent men by 11-points (45%-34%) and her favorable to unfavorable ratio is an abysmal 39:56.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

· The Party, its candidates and its surrogates need to be very careful in their tone and demeanor towards Hillary Clinton to ensure she isn't able to turn the gender gap back in her favor.

The most significant driving factor to Hillary Clinton's perceptual issues is a question of trust.

· Throughout the data, this was the most unprompted hesitation voters gave and is the attribute that she scored the lowest on. This is all before an attack ad has run this cycle.

· Messages tested dealing with her email scandal and the influence peddling of her brothers underscore her untrustworthiness, but were not in the top tier overall because this perception is already established and doesn't move Independents as much as other issues.

Hillary Clinton's own personal problems are only further magnified by President Obama's poor ratings. However, this shouldn't be a race about the incumbent President.

· President Obama has a net unfavorable rating with these battleground Independents (45:50) and his job approval is a similar 43% approve, 52% disapprove. This is problematic for Clinton's candidacy as her favorable to unfavorable ratio is only 21:74 among those who disapprove of the job the President is doing.

When discussing Hillary Clinton's speeches, the focus needs to be less about her getting rich and more about how this hurts working families.

· Making tens of millions, flying in private jets and the outrageous demands she made of those giving her six figures for speeches may work well with the base, but for swing voters in these essential battleground states, it's more important to tie the millions taken from public universities to tuition rate increases and budget cuts.

To further drive down Hillary Clinton's support with Independent women, her hypocrisy on equal pay can be highlighted.

· The fact that Hillary Clinton only paid her female Senate staff 72 cents on the dollar raises real questions as to her claims of being a champion of equal pay.

The most important case to prosecute against Hillary Clinton is her mismanagement of the State Department as Secretary of State. This severely undercuts her perceived strength of resume.

· Specifically, the most persuasive message tested in this survey states "as Secretary of State, Hillary Clinton's State Department approved the sale of a Canadian uranium mining company to a Russian state atomic energy agency. This action allowed Russian President Vladimir Putin to control 20% of American uranium and poses a grave threat to U.S. national security."

Character, trust and decision-making are all key tests voters have for a candidate running to be President and Commander and Chief, and this survey clearly indicates a pattern of Hillary Clinton failing all three of these. Further conveying her problems on these tenets will prove to be very problematic for her.

GOP ready to counter Hillary Clinton's speech // The Washington Examiner //David Drucker – June 10, 2015

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Republican National Committee is ratcheting up its "Stop Hillary" campaign, planning a flurry of political hits on presumptive Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton to accompany her first major speech since announcing for president in April.

Clinton on Saturday will deliver a speech from Roosevelt Island in New York that her campaign is promoting as the former secretary of state's official 2016 launch event. The site is named for President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, the Democratic icon who was first elected in 1932 and was responsible for the creation of Social Security (FDR died in office during his fourth term.)

The RNC plans an aggressive response on traditional and social media, and on the ground in New York and in the early primary states where Clinton has spent the bulk of her time campaigning since kicking off her second presidential bid in mid April. This effort is part of the GOP's plan to offer public opposition to Clinton while the party's crowded field of presidential contenders focuses on themselves in their battle for the 2016 nomination. According to information shared with the Washington Examiner, the party's activities include:

— New web ad pushed nationwide with higher emphasis placed on targeting IA, SC, NH and NV

— Statements/Op-eds

— Releasing Hillary oppo book

— Bracketing Hillary's events in NYC, IA, SC, NH, NV.

— New gimmicks will be delivered to news outlets

— Surrogates booked on radio/TV.

— Staff on the ground for her state visits.

Additionally, the RNC commissioned a poll of independent voters that it claims proves Clinton's vulnerability with independents in 10 battlegrounds states, most of which the GOP has not won in a presidential race since at least 2004, if that. The states polled included Virginia, Florida, North Carolina, Iowa, Wisconsin, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Nevada, Colorado and Arizona. Arizona is the only state in the group that is solid red.

Among the poll's findings:

Hillary Clinton is clearly vulnerable and already has a net unfavorable rating with these independents.

• Clinton's favorable to unfavorable ratio is 44:49 and she trails the generic Republican candidate 40%-36% in these key battleground states.

Hillary Clinton's supposed superior strength with women is a myth with these battleground state Independent women.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

• Clinton's favorable to unfavorable ratio with these Independent women is barely a net favorable (49:43) and she only leads the generic Republican by 3-points among them. Conversely, she trails among battleground state Independent men by 11-points (45%-34%) and her favorable to unfavor*able ratio is an abysmal 39:56*.

• The Party, its candidates and its surrogates need to be very careful in their tone and demeanor towards Hillary Clinton to ensure she isn't able to turn the gender gap back in her favor.

The most significant driving factor to Hillary Clinton's perceptual issues is a question of trust.

• Throughout the data, this was the most unprompted hesitation voters gave and is the attribute that she scored the lowest on. This is all before a*n attack ad has run this cycle*.

• Messages tested dealing with her email scandal and the influence peddling of her brothers underscore her untrustworthiness, but were not in the top tier overall because this perception is already established and doesn't move Indepe*ndents as much as other issues*.

Hillary Clinton's own personal problems are only further magnified by President Obama's poor ratings. However, this shouldn't be a race about the incumbent President.

• President Obama has a net unfavorable rating with these battleground independents (45:50) and his job approval is a similar 43% approve, 52% disapprove. This is problematic for Clinton's candidacy as her favorable to unfavorable ratio is only 21:74 among those who disapprove of the job the President is doing.

The survey was conducted by American Viewpoint May 3-7, 2015, using "mix-mode" interviews: 600 via land line telephone, 60 via cellphone, 300 via the Internet. The margin of error was 2.5 percentage points.

Disclosure: The author's wife works as an adviser to Scott Walker.

TOP NEWS

DOMESTIC

Senate GOP denies funds for lawyers for immigrant children // AP // Andrew Taylor – June 10, 2015

A GOP-controlled Senate panel on Wednesday blocked President Barack Obama's request for $50 million to pay for legal help for unaccompanied immigrant children coming to the United States after fleeing violence in Central America.

Responsible for the move was Republican Sen. Richard Shelby of Alabama, chief author of a spending bill funding the Justice Department's budget. The measure won initial approval on Wednesday but has a long way to go before becoming law.

The flow of children fleeing gangs and other dangers in Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador and finding their way to the U.S. is down significantly from last year, when an influx created a humanitarian crisis, in states along the U.S.-Mexico border.

Without lawyers, children are much more likely to be sent back to their home countries. Under federal law, immigrant children have two options to seek legal status, including requesting asylum for fear of returning home to face gang violence.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Without legal help, the maze of documentation and legal requirements is far more difficult for a child to maneuver.

Republicans opposed to people who are in the United States illegally have greater priorities in the $51 billion measure, which also funds the Commerce Department and science-related agencies such as NASA.

The measure is one of 12 annual appropriations bills covering the day-to-day operations of government agencies. Such discretionary spending gets reviewed and funded annually unlike mandatory programs such as Medicare, Social Security and food stamps.

The 12 spending bills are at the center of a fight between Obama and Republicans, who have given the Pentagon almost $40 billion in relief from automatic spending curbs but are resisting Obama's demands for equal treatment for domestic agencies facing a funding freeze.

The battle is particularly bitter in the tea party-driven House. Republicans pressed ahead Wednesday with bills seeking to force further cuts to the agencies they particularly dislike, the IRS and the Environmental Protection Agency.

The House measures are full of provisions aimed at blocking various Obama policies, including implementation of the Affordable Care Act by the IRS and environmental regulations, including protections for the endangered sage grouse that are opposed by Western energy interests.

Republicans take aim at IRS budget // Politico // Rachael Bade – June 10, 2015

Ever since the IRS tea party scandal broke two years ago, House Republicans have redoubled their efforts to gut the agency's budget — year after year after year.

But now — for the first time since Lois Lerner's infamous 2013 apology — they're finally getting their moment to impose serious financial constraints on the tax-collecting agency they love to hate.

House GOP appropriators on Wednesday proposed chopping IRS resources almost 8 percent, reducing the agency budget to $10.1 billion. It would be a huge hit to the agency responsible not only for overseeing tax collections but administering Obamacare's health care subsidies.

And those cuts are bound to balloon even more once the bill hits the House floor. Republicans are eager to offer further amendments snipping at the IRS — especially amid headlines about the IRS targeting conservative groups, giving rogue employees bonuses and falling short of protecting taxpayer rights and privacy.

While House Republicans in past years have had to negotiate with the Democratic-controlled Senate — which was often able to restore the IRS budget or at the very least, ease proposed cuts — this time around, GOP allies are behind the wheel in the Senate.

That means President Barack Obama — who requested an 18 percent increase for the IRS — could be forced to sign a spending bill later this year that would add new hardships for the agency, which already is reeling from scandal and begging for more money to boost taxpayer services and protect taxpayers' information. Holding up a broader spending bill in the name of the IRS, after all, is a political no-no with an American public deeply skeptical of tax collectors. If the president were to refuse to sign a spending bill only because of cuts to the IRS, he'd risk serious political backlash.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"This will hold the agency's budget below the sequester level and below the fiscal year 2004 level," a House Appropriations Committee news release boasts. "This funding level is sufficient for the IRS to perform its core duties, but will require the agency to streamline and better prioritize its budget."

The bill would cut $838 million from the current IRS budget, bringing the agency's funding $2.8 billion below what Obama requested.

The bill, as in years past, would also block the IRS from proposing a controversial, much-awaited regulation aimed at reining in the political activities of 501(c)(4) tax-exempt groups like Crossroads GPS. Such groups are supposed to limit their campaign activity under law, but the IRS got in trouble during the tea party hubbub for holding up the approvals of conservative groups that weren't engaging in politics but advocacy.

Still, the IRS says it needs clarity for itself and for taxpayers about what is and isn't allowed.

Another thing it can't do under the GOP bill: Collect penalties under Obamacare's individual mandate. That would potentially save hundreds if not thousands of dollars for Obamacare protesters who refuse to buy coverage.

The agency argues that such cuts would only hurt taxpayers and leave a threadbare IRS unable to help people address their tax problems. The IRS also administers the core of Obamacare — health care tax credits — and recently experienced cybersecurity lapses that amounted to people's personal information being hacked.

The bill specifically gives the IRS a $75 million boost for taxpayer services, in an effort to prevent any cuts from hurting Americans who need their tax questions answered.

The cuts are part of a $20.2 billion financial services bill filled with political red meat designed to appeal to GOP lawmakers. While Republican appropriators have decried spending caps for other appropriations bills, leaving them in a tough spot cutting key priorities, they're more than happy to make reductions on this measure.

"While making good use of limited tax dollars, this legislation also makes great strides in reining in wasteful spending, and stopping harmful and unnecessary bureaucratic over-reach," House Appropriations Chairman Hal Rogers (R-Ky.) said in a statement.

Overall, the bill is about $1.3 billion below last year's level and $4.8 billion below what the president wanted.

The legislation makes cuts to prized Democratic agencies, including a proposal to bring the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau under the congressional appropriations process. Currently, it's funded through the Federal Reserve, but the change would give Congress — namely, Republicans — more power over the agency.

The bill is also packed with conservative policy provisions like one requiring the administration to "report to Congress on the cost and regulatory burdens of the Dodd-Frank Act," and another to bar the SEC from mandating political-donation disclosures in filings.

EPA takes crucial step toward climate rules for airplanes // Politico // Alex Guillén – June 10, 2015

The Obama administration took the first step Wednesday toward regulating airplanes' greenhouse gas emissions, adding yet another major industry to the roster of businesses falling under the crosshairs of President Barack

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Obama's environmental and climate agenda.

The EPA said it was proposing to declare that planes' carbon pollution threatens public health and welfare by significantly contributing to climate change. The agency's "endangerment finding" comes amid a flurry of activity by the EPA, which is also pushing ahead with a contentious regulation for wetland and waterways, preparing to tighten fuel efficiency standards for heavy trucks and nearing a midsummer launch for a landmark greenhouse gas rule for power plants.

But the aircraft rules — which will likely take years to write — may not reach the altitude that environmentalists are hoping for. They could also face pushback from the airline industry, which enjoys hefty lobbying power in Washington, particularly among lawmakers who jet home each weekend — and the Republican Party that rules the Capitol is always skeptical of EPA regulations.

"Just when I thought the EPA couldn't get more ridiculous," Sen. Tom Cotton (R-Ark.) said on Twitter, linking to POLITICO's coverage of the proposal.

Rep. Lamar Smith (R-Texas), chairman of the House Science Committee, predicted that the rules would increase the price of air travel and harm domestic airlines. "The sky is the limit when it comes to how much of the U.S. economy the EPA wants to control," he said in a statement.

But the Sierra Club said both airlines and travelers would save money as the regulations yield more efficient, less-polluting planes.

"President Obama is taking an important step on climate once again by finding that carbon pollution from airplanes poses the same danger to our climate as carbon pollution from other sources," Sierra Club attorney Joanne Spalding said. The World Wildlife Fund's Brad Schallert called the move "common sense," and urged EPA to "take the next step and close a major loophole that allows the airline industry to emit unchecked amounts of carbon into our atmosphere."

"Since today's announcement will likely cause a fight in Congress, we hope the president makes this a fight worth having by requiring real cuts in airplane pollution," said Heather Leibowitz, director of Environment America's New York chapter. "Bold action on climate should solve the problem of pollution from airplanes, not just acknowledge it."

Air travel is undeniably an international industry, and a growing one to boot. While airplanes are used more extensively in the U.S. than in many other nations — American air travel makes up 29 percent of global aviation emissions — getting cooperation from Europe, China and other major manufacturing centers and plane purchasers will be key to making the global effort work.

Green groups and the administration are already debating one key issue: whether the U.S. climate rules for airlines should match those being developed worldwide — or be even tougher.

The International Civil Aviation Organization, a United Nations body, plans to set international targets to limit airline emissions in 2016. The U.S., through the EPA and FAA, is contributing to that process, and many in the air travel industry maintain that a global setup would be a better bet than individual nations taking action that could create a regulatory patchwork across the planet.

Wednesday's proposal is "part of preparing for a possible subsequent domestic rulemaking process to adopt standards that are of at least equivalent stringency as the anticipated ICAO CO_2 standards," EPA says in its proposed rule. Member nations must adopt standards at least as stringent as what the international body approves, the agency adds.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

White House press secretary Josh Earnest said relying on an international standard is “common sense.”

“Obviously these airplanes operate in a variety of different countries in many cases,” Earnest said.

Bill Becker, executive director of the National Association of Clean Air Agencies, also called for the U.S. and the international body to cooperate. “It is critical that EPA and the rest of the world, through the International Civil Aviation Organization, move quickly and seek meaningful greenhouse gas emission reductions,” he said.

But environmentalists fear that the international targets will lead to only small reductions in global aviation emissions, particularly given that ICAO is generally considering only changes to newly designed aircraft engines, not retrofits to the existing fleet or designs already in production. Since aircraft remain in service for decades, emissions reductions would come slowly under that approach.

One environmental group, the Center for Biological Diversity, expressed unhappiness about the EPA’s attachment to the international standards.

“Passing the buck to an international organization that’s virtually run by the airline industry won’t protect our planet from these rapidly growing emissions,” said senior counsel Vera Pardee, whose group had previously sued and threatened to sue EPA for its slowness to regulate planes’ greenhouse gas emissions. “We’re disappointed that the Obama administration remains sufficiently captive to the airline industry to consider allowing unlimited aircraft carbon emissions for what could be decades to come.”

Airlines for America, the U.S. airline industry’s lead trade group, said it supports the international efforts to develop a carbon standard. It interpreted EPA’s action Wednesday as showing the agency’s “commitment to the ICAO process.”

“Aviation is a global industry, making it critical that aircraft emissions standards continue to be agreed upon at the international level,” A4A Vice President for Environmental Affairs Nancy Young said in a statement.

The U.S. already has a history of implementing the international aviation body’s standards. Twice in the last decade, the group has issued standards limiting emissions of acid-rain-causing nitrogen oxides from new planes — and both times, EPA has followed suit with rules conforming to those standards.

Environmentalists worry that the U.S. government may take a similar path when it comes to carbon emissions from planes. They hope to persuade EPA to set stronger standards that could serve as a runway to guide other nations toward tougher standards as well. Meanwhile, manufacturers fear that U.S. standards tougher than the rest of the world’s will only encourage engine makers to move overseas.

Along with the proposed endangerment finding, EPA issued an advanced notice that it is considering how to regulate the planes’ emissions under the Clean Air Act — under provisions that are both relatively untested and broader than the statutes used to write other pollution regulations.

EPA must consult with the FAA and cannot set standards that decrease safety or increase noise, but otherwise appears to face fewer limits in its authority than in the sections of the Clean Air Act regarding pollution from other sources. FAA is charged with writing separate rules to ensure compliance with EPA’s standards.

In its call for input, EPA is taking comment on when carbon standards should take effect, how stringent they should be and whether standards should apply only to newly designed aircraft or to designs already in production.

Any future regulations would almost certainly apply to manufacturers of planes and engines — specifically, jets

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

with a maximum takeoff mass of at least 6.3 tons and prop planes with maximum takeoff mass of at least 9.3 tons. That range that would cover everything from smaller jets to jumbo liners such as the Airbus A380 and the Boeing 747. (Smaller recreational craft and military planes are not covered by the proposal.)

But given that any price increase will be borne by carriers, the U.S.' major airlines are sure to weigh in on the climate rules, if not the endangerment finding itself.

Boeing spokesman Tim Neale told The Associated Press that the industry is already shrinking its carbon footprint. "We're hard at work on lighter airplanes, and GE is hard at work on more efficient engines," he said. "And we're working a lot of these operational issues with the carriers so they operate the planes more efficiently."

The administration has already weathered one flap over international emissions efforts.

In 2012, U.S. carriers balked when the European Union instituted an emissions trading scheme that would apply to flights that arrived at or departed from member airports. Congress passed legislation that allowed the Transportation Department to block U.S. airlines from having to comply, and the issue moved to the back burner for several years after the EU put that program on hold.

Legally speaking, EPA may be on solid footing with its proposed endangerment finding.

The Supreme Court has made it clear that EPA can regulate greenhouse gases like carbon dioxide so long as it determines those emissions threaten public health, and it upheld EPA's 2009 finding that cars pose such a threat. EPA later extended that finding to emissions from power plants, the greatest source of U.S. carbon pollution.

While critics will have a chance to weigh in via public comments, few expect EPA to alter course significantly in its final decision.

One potential argument against the endangerment finding is the fact that U.S.-related airplane emissions make up just 0.5 percent of global human-caused greenhouse gas emissions. But in the ramp-up to this December's international climate talks in Paris, every action helps build support, no matter the size.

EPA expects to finish the endangerment finding next year. While that would trigger a requirement to subsequently issue greenhouse gas regulations for planes, the timing means that the next president will oversee those efforts. Regardless of who wins the White House next year, a positive endangerment finding would legally require EPA to write the carbon regulations.

Environmentalists are pushing for the U.S. to set stricter goals and become a standard-bearer on the issue, but it remains unclear whether any administration would go beyond ICAO's eventual plan.

"President Obama has a unique and extremely important opportunity to demonstrate leadership not only domestically but, around the world," said Becker.

Senate shows Ex-Im support in test vote // The Hill // Kevin Cirilli – June 10, 2015

Supporters of the Export-Import Bank showed they have the support to break a filibuster against its renewal on Wednesday in a test vote highlighting the bank's support.

In a 31-65 tally, the Senate voted against tabling an amendment to reauthorize the bank.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The amendment was offered by Sen. Mark Kirk (R-Ill.). Sen. Kelly Ayotte (R-N.H.), who supports the bank, then removed the amendment.

"What we're trying to do here is basically show support for the Ex-Im Bank," said Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.), a bank supporter who is one of five senators running for president. "This is not the last vote we'll take on the Ex-Im Bank."

Twenty GOP senators joined 45 Democrats to support the bank.

Presidential candidates Sens. Ted Cruz (R-Texas) and Rand Paul (R-Ky.) voted against the bank. Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.), another presidential candidate and outspoken bank critic, did not vote.

Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.), who is running as a Democratic presidential candidate, also voted against the bank.

The Export-Import Bank will expire unless its charter is extended by the end of this month, and conservative Republicans in the House have mounted an effort to kill it.

Despite the show of support in the Senate, it appears unlikely the bank will be extended before June 30. Supporters will likely attach an amendment extending its charter to a transportation bill, but that legislation would not move until July.

Those opposed to the bank argue it is a form of crony capitalism in which favored companies get advantages. The bank finances overseas investments intended to boost U.S. exports.

INTERNATIONAL

Hackers May Have Obtained Names of Chinese With Ties t o U.S. Governm ent // NYT // - David Sanger & Julie Davis – June 10, 2015

Investigators say that the Chinese hackers who attacked the databases of the Office of Personnel Management may have obtained the names of Chinese relatives, friends and frequent associates of American diplomats and other government officials, information that Beijing could use for blackmail or retaliation.

Federal employees who handle national security information are required to list some or all of their foreign contacts, depending on the agency, to receive high-level clearances. Investigators say that the hackers obtained many of the lists, and they are trying to determine how many of those thousands of names were compromised.

In classified briefings to members of Congress in recent days, intelligence officials have described what appears to be a systematic Chinese effort to build databases that explain the inner workings of the United States government. The information includes friends and relatives, around the world, of diplomats, of White House officials and of officials from government agencies, like nuclear experts and trade negotiators.

"They are pumping this through their databases just as the N.S.A. pumps telephone data through their databases," said James Lewis, a cyberexpert at the Center for Strategic and International Studies. "It gives the Chinese the ability to exploit who is listed as a foreign contact. And if you are a Chinese person who didn't report your contacts or relationships with an American, you may have a problem."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Officials have conceded in the briefings that most of the compromised data was not encrypted, though they have argued that the attacks were so sophisticated and well hidden that encryption might have done little good.

The first attack, which began at the end of 2013 and was disclosed in the middle of last year, was aimed at the databases used by investigators who conduct security reviews. The investigators worked for a contracting firm on behalf of the Office of Personnel Management, and the firm was fired in August.

The broader attack on the personnel office's main databases followed in December. That attack, announced last week, involved the records of more than four million current and former federal employees, most of whom have no security clearances.

White House and personnel office officials have provided few details about the latest breach. But the Department of Homeland Security has been telling outside experts and members of Congress that it regards the detection of the attack as a success, because it made use of new "signatures" of foreign hackers, based on characteristics of computer code, to find the attack.

In a statement, the personnel office said Wednesday that "it was because of these new enhancements to our IT systems that O.P.M. was able to identify these intrusions." But the detection happened in April, five months after the attack began.

The list of relatives and "close or continuous contacts" is a standard part of the forms and interviews required of American officials every five years for top-secret and other high-level clearances, and government officials consider the lists to be especially delicate.

In 2010, when The New York Times was preparing to publish articles based on 250,000 secret State Department cables obtained by WikiLeaks, the newspaper complied with a request by the department to redact the names of any Chinese citizens who were described in the cables as providing information to American Embassy officials. Officials cited fear of retaliation by the Chinese authorities.

Officials say they do not know how much of the compromised data was exposed to the Chinese hackers. While State Department employees, especially new ones, are required to list all their foreign friends, diplomats have so many foreign contacts that they are not expected to list them all.

But other government officials are frequently asked to do so, especially in interviews with investigators. The notes from those interviews, conducted by a spinoff of the personnel office called the United States Investigative Service, were obtained by hackers in the earlier episode last year.

Intelligence agencies use a different system, so the contacts of operatives like those in the C.I.A. were not in the databases.

But the standard form that anyone with a national security job fills out includes information about spouses, divorces and even distant foreign relatives, as well as the names of current or past foreign girlfriends and boyfriends, bankruptcies, debts and other financial information. And it appears that the hackers reached, and presumably downloaded, images of those forms.

"I can't say whether this was more damaging than WikiLeaks; it's different in nature," said Representative Adam B.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Schiff, a California Democrat who is a member of the House Intelligence Committee, which was briefed by intelligence officials, the Department of Homeland Security and the personnel office on Tuesday. Mr. Schiff, who declined to speak about the specifics of the briefing, added, “But it is certainly one of the most damaging losses I can think of.”

Investigators were surprised to find that the personnel office, which had already been so heavily criticized for lax security that its inspector general wanted parts of the system shut down, did not encrypt any of the most sensitive data.

The damage was not limited to information about China, though that presumably would have been of most interest to the hackers. They are likely to be particularly interested in the contacts of Energy Department officials who work on nuclear weapons or nuclear intelligence, Commerce Department or trade officials working on delicate issues like the negotiations over the Trans-Pacific Partnership, and, of course, White House officials.

In a conference call with reporters on Wednesday, Senator Angus King, an independent from Maine on both the Intelligence Committee and the Armed Services Committee, called for the United States to retaliate for these kinds of losses. “Nation-states need to know that if they attack us this way, something bad is going to happen to their cyberinfrastructure,” he said.

But Mr. King said he could not say if the attacks on the personnel office were state-sponsored, adding, “I have to be careful; I can’t confirm the identity of the entity behind the attack.” The Obama administration has not formally named China, but there has been no effort to hide the attribution in the classified hearings.

The scope of the breach is remarkable, experts say, because the personnel office apparently learned little from earlier government data breaches like the WikiLeaks case and the surveillance revelations by Edward J. Snowden, both of which involved unencrypted data.

President Obama has said he regards the threat of cyberintrusions as a persistent challenge in a world in which both state and nonstate actors “are sending everything they’ve got at trying to breach these systems.”

The problem “is going to accelerate, and that means that we have to be as nimble, as aggressive and as well resourced as those who are trying to break into these systems,” he said at a news conference this week.

The White House has stopped short of blaming Katherine Archuleta, the director of the personnel office, for the breach, emphasizing that securing government computer systems is a challenging task.

U.S. Expands ISIS Involvement, Sending Up To 450 Military Personnel To New Training Site In Iraq //
Huffington Post – June 10, 2015

The United States will send another 450 military personnel to Iraq to help forces there combat the extremist Islamic State group, the White House announced Wednesday, signaling a shift in focus for the U.S. and a tacit acknowledgement that the extremists have not been weakened as much as the Obama administration has claimed.

The additional personnel will establish a new U.S. training site -- the fifth in Iraq -- at Taqaddum military base in Iraq's Sunni-majority Anbar province, according to White House spokesman Josh Earnest.

Earnest said that President Barack Obama made the decision following requests from Iraqi Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi and recommendations from top military commanders and national security advisers. But the announcement also suggests a possible resolution to an ongoing struggle within the Obama administration about how best to move forward in Iraq, as military commanders have previously said that sites in Anbar province -- such as the provincial capital, Ramadi, which was captured by the Islamic State last month -- are less important than potential offensives elsewhere.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The additional U.S. forces will not play a combat role, administration officials emphasized Wednesday afternoon in a call with reporters. Instead, they are intended to bolster Iraqi forces' morale in the embattled province, help the Iraqis respond more promptly to Islamic State advances and eventually strengthen them to the point where they can retake Ramadi and other towns like Fallujah. The officials tried to strike an optimistic tone, citing prior success at the al-Asad air base, an already-established U.S. training camp in Anbar province.

But that is a difficult message to sell in light of a Monday report from The Hill indicating trouble at the air base. U.S. military officials there are frustrated, according to the report, because the central Iraqi government has not sent new recruits to al-Asad for at least the past four weeks.

Officials on Wednesday's call said that recruitment for the new training mission will be facilitated by the Iraqi government's commitment to move closer to Sunni tribal fighters in Anbar province, something Iraqi leaders have made a priority following the fall of Ramadi. Ben Rhodes, the deputy national security adviser, told reporters that Baghdad's decision to audit its military rolls -- removing soldiers who have fled or defected -- would free up Iraqi cash to pay more soldiers, particularly Sunni tribal recruits.

Administration officials also emphasized that Wednesday's decision had been made in response to what the Iraqis said they needed. Abadi had sought a U.S. training presence with Sunni tribesmen for some time and reiterated the request after Ramadi fell, according to Rhodes.

"The Iraqis want to be in the lead themselves," he said.

The statements came one day after Salim al-Jabouri, speaker of the Iraqi parliament and a prominent Sunni politician, told Foreign Policy that he blames the Islamic State's success in Anbar province not only on problems in the Iraqi forces but also on a lack of urgent U.S. attention to the problem.

The White House also announced Wednesday that it will speed up the delivery of heavy equipment, notably anti-tank missiles, to its Iraqi partners on the ground. The administration did not say whether it would directly supply the Kurdish peshmerga forces in the north or the Sunnis already battling the Islamic State, although those communities have said they desperately need supplies because they claim Baghdad is slow to distribute equipment.

The White House did not indicate how Wednesday's development will affect previously announced plans to retake Mosul, Iraq's second largest city and a key prize for the Islamic State. Military officials controversially predicted in February that Mosul would be liberated in the spring, prompting vocal criticism from Iraq and a struggle to temper expectations. The New York Times reported on Wednesday that Mosul might not be retaken until next year.

Asked about the change in policy, Rhodes did not mention whether it will affect Mosul, where residents are reportedly living in fear of the militants. Rhodes said the administration is constantly revising its approach based on reports from the ground in Iraq and Syria showing what has and hasn't worked for the U.S.-led coalition against the Islamic State.

"I wouldn't think of it as a formal review process," he said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

He added that Obama is constantly thinking about force protection as he continues to approve an expansion of the U.S. military footprint in Iraq.

Elissa Slotkin, a top defense official, said on the call with reporters that the 450 additional troops for the new U.S. training camp will be built up beginning immediately, first by redeploying forces already within Iraq and then by sending U.S. troops there from elsewhere.

American Keith Broomfield killed fighting in Syria // CNN // Elise Labott – June 10, 2015

American citizen Keith Broomfield was killed fighting in Syria, a State Department official confirmed Wednesday.

The official said the State Department was in touch with Broomfield's family.

Jennifer Broomfield, a woman who identified herself on Facebook as Keith Broomfield's sister, shared an image of a text message conversation on the social medium, which she said were the "Last words I had with my brother."

"My unspoken prayers and tears for those in the Middle East were answered when he left to fight," she wrote. "I didn't think I would lose him."

The State Department said in its press briefing Wednesday that additional details on Broomfield's death were not immediately available.

Idris Nassan, Kurdish co-deputy foreign minister of the Kobani district, also confirmed to CNN Broomfield had been fighting alongside the Kurds against ISIS.

"Broomfield was fighting alongside the Kurdish People's Protection Units in the Kobani countryside when he was killed battling against ISIS," Nassan said. "It is unclear how long Broomfiled had been fighting with the Kurdish forces, but he had become well acquainted with the militiamen, even earning the Kurdish nom de guerre Damhad (meaning: it's the time to do something)."

OPINIONS/EDITORIALS/BLOGS

Jeb Bush's Learning Curve on Russia // NYT // Carol Giacomo – June 10, 2015

Few world leaders are easier to criticize these days than President Vladimir Putin of Russia. There can be no defense of his decision to annex Crimea, worsen Ukraine's civil war by sending troops and weapons to the eastern region and threaten nuclear responses if NATO tries to deter his aggression.

So it was no surprise that Jeb Bush, an all-but-declared Republican presidential candidate, used Mr. Putin as a target during a visit to Berlin on Tuesday and Wednesday that was intended to burnish his non-existent foreign policy credentials.

"Ultimately to deal with Putin you need to deal from strength – he's a bully and ... you enable bad behavior when you're nuanced with a guy like that," Mr. Bush said. He called for a "more robust" approach and asked, "Who can doubt that Russia will do what it pleases if its aggression goes unanswered?"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It was also no surprise that Mr. Bush took the opportunity to fault President Obama, saying the administration's attempt to "reset" relations with Russia had failed.

Despite the venue, his most important audience was not Germans or even Europeans but Republican voters who are eager to blame Mr. Obama for everything that goes wrong in the world.

It has sometimes been hard to watch the Europeans waffle over imposing sanctions on Russia. But they and the Americans have done just that, and the sanctions seem to be holding even if they don't seem to have altered Mr. Putin's outrageous behavior.

So what would Mr. Bush do differently? Nothing, it seems. He proposed a beefed-up presence of NATO troops along Russia's border with the Baltic states and said the allies should signal what further sanctions Russia could face if it persists in its aggression – things the United States and its allies are already doing.

Mr. Bush coupled his exhortations about strength with caution, insisting, "I'm not talking about being bellicose." That suggests the kind of nuance that Mr. Obama has tried to bring to his Russia policy. Getting the balance right is complicated by the fact that Mr. Putin's help is still needed to solve other challenges, including in Syria and Iran.

What Mr. Bush failed to offer is a detailed plan for ending the presence of Russian-backed troops in Ukraine.

He apparently saw no irony in the fact that while he faulted Mr. Obama for trying in 2009 to reset relations with Russia, his own brother, President George W. Bush, famously declared on meeting Mr. Putin in 2001 that he had gotten "a sense of his soul" and found him "trustworthy."

President Bush obviously went overboard with his naïve and cloying assessment. But like Mr. Obama, he was serving the national interest in trying to establish a working relationship with the leader of a major country that controls thousands of nuclear weapons.

As Jeb Bush correctly noted, Mr. Putin has changed and is far more aggressive than in the past. If he wants to be taken seriously as a presidential candidate, Mr. Bush will have to come up with more thoughtful explanations of what Mr. Obama's failings are and how he will tackle the world's most thorny problems differently.

Jeb Bush's recipe for a better society: Shame // WaPo // Catherine Rampell – June 10, 2015

Judge a little more, blush a little more, and all of society's ills will be cured.

So posited now-presidential hopeful Jeb Bush in a book published shortly after his unsuccessful first run for Florida governor in 1994.

"Profiles in Character" (which Bush co-authored with Brian Yablonski) is part compilation of platitudes about community, religiosity and integrity; part series of inspirational biographies (the "profiles" of the title); and part diatribe about bloated government. The juiciest and weirdest bits, though, are in a subchapter about the need to revive "shame."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“Society needs to relearn the art of public and private disapproval and how to make those who engage in undesirable behavior feel some sense of shame,” Bush writes.

The book argues that the diminishment of dishonor has contributed to all sorts of depravity. If only we as a populace were a bit more judgmental, the poor would stop being so poor, the promiscuous would learn restraint, deadbeats would pay their bills, criminals would keep to the straight and narrow, school shooters would lay down their arms and bastard children would finally start getting “legitimize[d]” (their term, not mine) through marriage.

To contrast today’s shamefully shameless culture with the past, the book waxes wistful about ye olden times: “There was a time when neighbors and communities would frown on out-of-wedlock births and when public condemnation was enough of a stimulus for one to be careful. Infamous shotgun weddings and Nathaniel Hawthorne’s Scarlet Letter are reminders that public condemnation of irresponsible sexual behavior has strong historical roots.”

His priceless Andover education notwithstanding, Bush may be a little confused about one of the great American literary classics. Hawthorne’s unforgiving, shame-wielding Puritan Salemites were not exactly portrayed as worthy of imitation.

But no matter; scarlet A’s for all sluts, please. In fact, after Bush won the governorship, Florida’s legislature passed a measure nicknamed the “Scarlet Letter” law because it required single women to publish information on their past sexual partners in a newspaper before they could put children up for adoption. The law was repealed after being struck down as unconstitutional.

Bush also pines for the days of “pillories and public dunkings,” and regrets that “much of today’s criminal justice system seems to be lacking in humiliation.” He endorses one idea, proposed by a Miami Herald columnist, that juvenile offenders should be shamed by dressing them “in frilly pink jumpsuits and making them sweep the streets of their own neighborhoods.” This sounds a lot like the infamous pink underwear inmates wear in Arizona’s Maricopa County, but apparently even that would be insufficiently emasculating.

Perhaps most astonishingly, Bush advocates using corporal punishment in public schools, because he says the humiliation involved (rather than the physical pain) is so effective.

Kids These Days “do not care if the teacher yells at them or if their test results are less than stellar,” Bush writes. In most districts, teachers have few available tools to adequately humiliate delinquents — but in some lucky districts, such as Florida’s Walton County, educators were still able to practice corporal punishment. (This was true when the book was copyrighted, in 1995; last year, the county school board voted to ban paddling.) “Profiles in Character” quotes an anonymous student who declares, “We feel ashamed when it happens to us, but when you’re in that classroom and you want to learn and somebody else won’t let you learn, well, they are dealt with.”

Bush then implies that spankings are the key to preventing more egregious forms of school violence: “To date, Walton County has never experienced a shooting at any of its schools.”

Yes, and I have an amulet that keeps away tigers.

Bush has some other strange and/or relatively retrograde things in the text, including some histrionics about the rise of no-fault divorce (as well as “no-fault psychotherapy”) and fierce objections to the fact that a criminal defendant’s childhood and life circumstances are ever taken into consideration before passing judgment.

The book was written 20 years ago, around the time that Hillary Clinton wrote an entire book about her pets (fun fact: rejected names for Clinton’s dog Buddy include “Arkanpaws” and “Clin Tin Tin”). So it’s hard to know which, if any, of these specific policies he still favors. (His spokesperson did not respond to questions about Bush's current views on shame and corporal punishment, saying only that people should look to his record as governor.)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But even if Bush no longer directly embraces, say, corporal punishment, his underlying philosophy is clear, and it's consistent with attitudes we've seen among conservatives now in power in places such as Kansas and Wisconsin: that the main reason people are broke, unmarried, in prison or unemployed is because it's all just too much gosh-darn fun.

Back Clinton for voting rights // The Quad-City Times // Elaine Baxter - June 10, 2015

In Iowa, we take voting seriously. Every four years, presidential candidates make Iowa their first stop on the road to the White House. In cities from Burlington to Council Bluffs, Iowans listen, carefully consider their options and then turn out on caucus night for their preferred candidate. Voting isn't just a civic duty here - it's a core part of what makes us Iowans.

When more people vote, it's better for our state, our country and our democracy. In Iowa, we have made it easier than most states. From same day registration to in-person absentee voting, we have eliminated barriers to the ballot box. Hillary Clinton agrees with us and offered concrete, common-sense policy proposals to increase participation in our elections for the entire country

Hillary is calling for no fewer than 20 days of early voting in every state, has called for the restoration of voting rights for convicted felons and she believes it's time for all eligible citizens to be registered to vote automatically when they turn eighteen in every state in the union.

When I was Secretary of State, making it easier for Iowans to vote was a primary goal of mine. My service convinced me more than ever that more people voting is never a bad thing. I applaud Hillary Clinton for her bold call to expand access to the ballot. Her solutions will strengthen our democracy and ensure that our leaders are accountable to the greatest number of citizens. That's just the way we like it in Iowa.

Bernie Sanders Was Just Another Hippie Rummaging Through My Mom's Fridge // The New Republic // Chelsea Summers – June 10, 2015

One hot night in July 1972, I walked into my family's kitchen to see my mother brandishing a broom at a skinny man who had his head stuck deep inside our refrigerator.

"You get out!" my mom yelled, hitting the man on his skinny ass. "Out, out!" Under her tan skin, my mother's face was red with indignation. We didn't have much in our fridge, but my mom would fiercely defend it. The man pulled his head out of the fridge, dropping the food on the shelf. His hair was curly; a cherub's full-bodied curls framed his startled face. Chagrined, he loped off to the other apartment housed in my family's converted two-room schoolhouse in Huntington, Vermont, the site of a late-night mock-up session for The Vermont Freeman, the alt-weekly my parents published. Years later, I'd find out that man was Bernie Sanders.

Standing on the waterfront park of Burlington, Vermont, on Tuesday, May 26, 2015, Sanders announced his candidacy for president. Shortly thereafter, Mother Jones published "How Bernie Sanders Learned to Be a Real Politician," an article detailing Sanders' decades-long shift from scruffy radical to hirsute politician. While the article delineates much of Sanders' early history, including his time with the doomed Liberty Union party, his multiple failed political bids, and his hardscrabble hippie-adjacent life, the media fixated on one element: The "50 Shades" satiric erotica that Sanders wrote for the Freeman in October 1972.

"A woman enjoys intercourse with her man," goes the most quoted portion of the essay, "she fantasizes being raped by three men simultaneously." Called "Man—and Woman," the short piece originally appeared in the "China" issue of the Freeman. You'd likely imagine that an underground Vermont newspaper would have a hard time drumming up enough copy to fill a China issue—and you'd be right. The piece is bad, but it speaks to the gendered zeitgeist of the time, the '70s confusion about who humans are when we can't rely on the gender roles we grew up in with. It's a confusion that lingers, suggesting that though his prose is execrable, Sanders is posing questions that were valid for the time, questions that the anger of Men's Rights Activists and fourth-wave feminist divisions suggest are still relevant.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"It is very bad," Frank Kochman, my father and co-publisher of the Vermont Freeman, said of Sanders's 1972 piece. "But it has a wonderful graphic."

"We were probably hard up for copy," Jennifer Kochman, my mom, another co-publisher, added.

Distancing himself from the piece, even Sanders called it "bad writing," but this was the text that the media fixated on; from NPR to the Washington Post and beyond, the media glommed onto Sanders's semi-salacious prose. It certainly was the first time that The Vermont Freeman was featured on "Meet the Press." From 1971-1974, the Freeman, with a circulation of about 1,500 ranging across the state of Vermont and into New Hampshire, lived and breathed in our converted two-room schoolhouse. My dad calls the Freeman a "heavy duty, Hanoi Jane, anti-war, people's revolution sort of thing—short of violent revolution; the Freeman never advocated actual revolution."

The newspaper's pages detailed the vicissitudes of the Vietnam War, local politics, labor strikes, generalized feminism, and whatever other food co-op–fed hobby-horses my parents and their friends were riding that particular week. Printed on newsprint with type laboriously cut and pasted by hand, illustrated by pictures my mom drew or found in clip-art, the Freeman looks like a forerunner to 'zines, and its copy often reads a lot like late-night posts to LiveJournal. Sometimes experienced journalists placed pieces too hot to publish anywhere else, but most of the paper had the feel of earnest kids doing everything they could to pretend to be real.

When I was a nine-year-old girl, I saw Sanders as just another one of the mop-haired, rangy hippies crowding my house. However, unlike all those other Freeman writers, Sanders was a radical who never left the political scene. While my parents left the Freeman to pursue other ventures—my dad became a lawyer and my mom did public relations for non-profits—Sanders didn't abandon his politics. Instead, he made a career out of them, running unsuccessfully for Vermont governor and U.S. Senate multiple times as a Liberty Union candidate before being elected as an independent to the House of Representatives in 1991 and to the Senate in 2007. (Sanders has always caucused with the Democrats.)

And it was as a candidate that Sanders first came into contact with the Freeman. In its identity as the liberal alternative to the then-conservative Burlington Free Press, the Freeman covered the nascent anti-war Liberty Union Party. Starting as early as October 1971, the Freeman covered the Liberty Union Party and its candidates, including a photo of a very young Senate hopeful Bernie Sanders with his son. Everyone looks so fluffy and soft, their children on their laps and nary a necktie to be seen.

By the next year, Sanders had grown disillusioned with the coverage of the Freeman, and he penned a letter to the editor. Beginning with a churlish charge that the paper "virtually ignored" his campaign, Sanders continued to lay out a three-point campaign platform consisting of "a radical revision of the state's regressive tax structure," an end to the Vietnam War, and an amorphous call to "abolish all laws which attempt to impose a particular brand of morality." Rather than an ethical argument, Sanders used finances as the basis for ending the Vietnam War and suggested that this money fund universal health care, low-cost housing, and environmental cleanup.

It's a three-point policy that's remarkably similar to Sanders' current presidential platform, which consists of income and wealth inequality, getting big money out of politics, and working against climate change and for environmental causes.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As Sanders' trademark truculent tone hasn't changed, so too has his political position remained notably consistent. The 1972 senatorial candidate who somewhat hazily pledged to "abolish all laws dealing with abortion, drugs, sexual behavior" in his letter to the Freeman became a U.S. representative who voted against the Defense of Marriage Act, and just as he opposed the Vietnam War as a candidate, he voted against the use of force in Iraq in 1991, 2001, and 2003.

In that 1972 letter, Sanders opposed the "gradual erosion of freedoms and the sense of what freedom really means" in the Nixon administration—a loosey-goosey, hippie-dippy expression that, forty-plus years later, makes it hard to know what freedoms Sanders is referring to, exactly. However, the passage of time has solidified Sanders' vague understanding of personal freedoms—or it has given him a well-defined foe, and he vociferously decried the Patriot Act and other "Orwellian surveillance," as he called it. His voting record stands against big banking but usually with the NRA, necessary if you want to get elected in hunter-heavy Vermont.

"Bernie really is not much different now than he was then," my dad says. "His ties and suits are way better—of course, he had no ties or suits, but he has been boringly consistent for 44 years."

In 1981, my first election as a voter, I voted for Sanders's first successful bid to be mayor of Burlington. It was the cool thing to do, and I did it to wear the button and prove my loyalty to the collective cool. Forty years later, it's an uncanny thing to see this person I've known since childhood become a viable candidate for president. It's like seeing my childhood validated, slapped on a campaign button, dissected by the press, and turned into a slogan.

My family moved out of that converted schoolhouse decades ago, but my mom loves telling the refrigerator story. She says she forgives him. "He was probably just hungry," she says. "We all were."

Alexandria Phillips

Press Assistant | Communications

Hillary for America | www.hillaryclinton.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Suzy George" <sgeorge@albrightstonebridge.com>
To: "Ben Chang" <bchang@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Alexis Keslinke" <akeslinke@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Bill Antholis" <wantholis@brookings.edu>
"Bill Woodward \(blackwoodward@gmail.com\)" <blackwoodward@gmail.com>
bill.danvers@gmail.com
"Brian Katulis" <bkatulis@americanprogress.org>
"Bruce Riedel" <briedel@brookings.edu>
"Caitlin McDonnell" <cmcdonnell@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Carol Browner" <cmbrowner@me.com>
"Carole Hall" <chall@brookings.edu>
"Catherine Whitney" <Catherine.Whitney@skadden.com>
"Chris Roberts" <croberts@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Dan Benjamin" <dbenjam61@hotmail.com>
"Daniel Silverberg" <danielsilverberg@yahoo.com>
"Denis McDonough" <denis.mcdonough@gmail.com>
"Derek Chollet" <dhchollet@gmail.com>
"Don Gips?? \(don.gips@gmail.com\)" <don.gips@gmail.com>
donkerrick <donkerrick@comcast.net>
"Eryn M. Sepp \(eryn.sepp@gmail.com\)" <eryn.sepp@gmail.com>
"Frank Lowenstein" <frankl03@yahoo.com>
"Greg Craig" <gcraig@skadden.com>
"Jake Sullivan" <jake.sullivan@gmail.com>
"Jamie Rubin" <JamesPRubin1960@gmail.com>
"Jan Stewart" <jstewart@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Jeff Smith" <jeffrey_smith@aporter.com>
"Jeremy Bash" <jeremybash@gmail.com>
"Jessica Lewis" <lewisje03@yahoo.com>
"Jim Miller - Department of Defense?? \(james.n.miller.jr@gmail.com \)" <james.n.miller.jr@gmail.com>
"Jim O'Brien" <jobrien@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Joanna Nicoletti?? \(info@forwardengagement.org\)" <info@forwardengagement.org>
"Joe Cirincione" <jcirincione@ploughshares.org>
"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
"Julianne Smith" <julsmi@gmail.com>
"Ken Lieberthal" <klieberthal@brookings.edu>
"Kurt Campbell" <kurtmcampbell@yahoo.com>
"Laura?? Huber" <lhuber@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Leon Fuerth" <hdpf@msn.com>
"Maida?? Stadtler" <mstadtler@apcoworldwide.com>
"Marcel Lettre" <mlettre@verizon.net>
"Marisa DeAngelis" <MDeAngelis@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Martin Indyk" <mindyk@brookings.edu>
"Michele Flournoy" <micheleflournoy3@gmail.com>
"Nadia Nowytski" <nadia.nowytski@aporter.com>
"Pat Griffin" <pgriffin@pmj-dc.com>
"Rich Verma" <rverma@steptoe.com>
"Rob Malley" <rmalley555@gmail.com>
"Samuel Berger" <sberger@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Steve Ricchetti" <sricchetti@cox.net>
"Strobe Talbott" <stalbott@brookings.edu>
"Susan Rice" <ricesusane@aol.com>
"Tara Sonenshine" <tsonenshine@earthlink.net>
"Theodore Waddelow" <twaddelow@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Tim Roemer" <tjroemer@gmail.com>
"Tom Daschle" <tom.daschle@dlapiper.com>
"Tom Donilon" <tdonilon@gmail.com>
"Tom Downey" <tdowney@dmggroup.com>
"Tommy Ross" <tommy_ross@reid.senate.gov>
"Toni Verstandig" <tonigverstandig@gmail.com>
"Tony Blinken" <ablinken@aol.com>
"Veronica Pollack" <Veronica.Pollock@dlapiper.com>
"Wendy Sherman" <wendyrsherman@gmail.com>
Date: 5/2/2014 7:55:38 AM
Subject: WSJ op-ed by Secretary Panetta

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

WALL STREET JOURNAL / OPINION

Playing Politics With Military Readiness in a Dangerous World

The armed forces are less and less prepared to respond to the threats facing the U.S.

By LEON E. PANETTA

April 30, 2014 6:54 p.m. ET

Thursday marks the third anniversary of the day when two dozen members of an elite U.S. special operations force flew 150 miles into Pakistan by helicopter and killed Osama bin Laden . As I watched the operation from the seventh floor of CIA headquarters in Langley, Va., I knew we had dealt a tremendous blow to the organization that attacked the U.S. on Sept. 11, 2001. But I also knew that his death did not wipe out all threats to America and our allies.

Three years later, the world is just as dangerous—maybe more so. While a mood of withdrawal and restraint is spreading in both political parties, recent events suggest that the U.S. may need to address crises around the world that threaten our national security. Our military must be prepared to respond if necessary. Consider the threats we face:

• Russia is threatening further military incursions into Ukraine. The U.S. may have to bolster both military and humanitarian aid to our NATO allies and others in the region.

• Syria remains a humanitarian catastrophe. It may require further U.S. involvement, including military aid and training the opposition.

• Al Qaeda is again on the rise in Iraq, Syria and North Africa. U.S. intelligence and special operations forces will be necessary to prevent an attack on the homeland.

U.S. army soldiers in a military exercise in Kosovo in April. AFP/Getty Images

• An unpredictable and nuclear-armed North Korea and an assertive China demand a continuing and strengthened U.S. presence in the Pacific.

• Iran's drive for a nuclear capability and continuing political turmoil in the Middle East require a strong U.S. force in the region to deal with any contingency.

• U.S. military assistance to nations in Latin America, Africa and elsewhere is essential to building alliances to fight terrorism, drug trafficking, cyberattacks and other transnational threats.

This is the world we live in. The president and his team have a strong record of addressing national security challenges—ending the war in Iraq, drawing down forces in Afghanistan, toppling Libya's Ghadafi, imposing crippling sanctions on Iran, and rebalancing our efforts to the Asian-Pacific region. But many diplomatic challenges lie ahead.

For diplomacy to succeed, it must be supported by a strong and credible defense. Now is not the time to weaken our military, but that is exactly what's happening. That's not to say the defense budget cannot be reduced responsibly. After more than 12 years of war and a blank check for government spending, significant savings can be achieved while protecting the strongest military force on earth.

But we are in danger of doing it the wrong way, as we have in the past. After every major conflict in recent history, deep defense cuts "hollowed out" the military. Troops were not adequately trained or equipped, maintenance was delayed, and key investments were postponed. A U.S. at peace has meant a U.S. without a military that can respond effectively to crisis.

The right way to reduce the defense budget is to provide stable, long-term funding, outlining the savings that will be achieved over a set time period. The secretary of defense should have the discretion to make spending reductions in a balanced and responsible way.

Congress started off on the right track. The Budget Control Act of 2011 required $487 billion in defense savings over 10 years. As defense secretary, I worked with military and civilian leadership at the Pentagon to develop a new defense strategy to guide our efforts to achieve savings. The strategy was approved by the president and the joint chiefs, and enjoyed broad support in Congress.

But then gridlock in Washington stalled progress. Congress and the administration have failed to agree on any long-term budget. Kicking this can down the road by passing short-term agreements, as well as sequester cuts and a government shutdown, all result in one thing that undermines a strong defense: uncertainty. At the same time, Congress has limited the discretion of the secretary, placed limits on force reductions and blocked procurement and compensation reform. The only place Congress has forced reductions, unfortunately, is in the readiness of the force.

While the temporary two-year budget deal in Congress provided some short-term stability, it failed to repair the extensive damage to readiness. There is simply no slack left in the system if the U.S. must respond to another crisis abroad.

In a troubled world, both our friends and our enemies will take note if we reduce our military readiness. No one questions the capability of our troops, our weaponry or our technology. What they do question is whether our democracy can function effectively to ensure our strength.

America must be willing to take the risks involved with leadership. The president and leaders in Congress must be willing to make difficult budget decisions—and, yes, compromises—that involve political risks. There's little appetite for compromise at a time when the extremes of both parties command attention, but that is what is essential to protecting our economy and our national security. Our national leaders cannot just give up until the next election. Events in a dangerous world will not wait for the next election.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The real strength of our nation lies in the brave Americans—like those who conducted the bin Laden operation three years ago—who are willing to fight and die for this nation when called upon to do so. We must not shortchange them by weakening our readiness at a dangerous time.

Mr. Panetta was the 23rd secretary of defense from 2011-13. He previously served as CIA director, White House chief of staff, OMB director and chairman of the House Budget Committee.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: Creamer2@aol.com
To: CAN@list.americansunitedforchange.org bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 12/26/2010 10:07:27 AM
Subject: [big campaign] New Huff Post from Creamer-During Holidays We Celebrate Progressive Values

During the Holidays We Celebrate Progressive Values

I was struck several days ago to hear Arizona's Senator Jon Kyl claim that the Democrats' insistence on considering the new START nuclear inspection treaty in the short time before Christmas somehow defiled the holiday.

Perhaps, I thought, Senator Kyl forgot for a moment that Christmas celebrates the birth of the "Prince of Peace" – that the Christmas story is about "Peace on Earth, good will to men." Could there be a better way to celebrate Christmas than to approve a peace accord that would reduce the risk of nuclear war?

Of course, this particular episode is actually emblematic of the fundamental disconnect between the values held by Senator Kyl and many of his radical conservative colleagues, and the progressive values that have served as the very definition of human morality, freedom and progress.

When you think of the heroes and heroines of American – and World – history you think of the likes of Abraham Lincoln, Martin Luther King, Nelson Mandela, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Cesar Chavez, Robert Kennedy, Mohandas Gandhi and Franklin Roosevelt.

They are people who expanded the realm of human freedom for everyone. They stood up for everyday people – not the rich and powerful -- of their times. They are the people who ended wars, not those who began them. They are the people who created mechanisms that help us avoid violence; who enhanced the ability of every child – no matter her background or income -- to live a fulfilling life; who stood up against ignorance and oppression and greed; who understood that we're all in this together –not all in this alone.

Most of all they were people who believed that what is important in life is what you can do for other people – not simply what you can do for yourself.

The progressive values that have always truly defined human progress are about hope not fear; unity not division. They are about mutual respect and loving your neighbor as yourself. They are the values that are celebrated in this holiday season.

Let's be clear: "Greed is good" is not being celebrated at Christmas. The values of Ebenezer Scrooge do not define the Christmas spirit – past, present or future. More tax breaks for the top one percent is not the moral of "A Christmas Carol."

The Right often characterizes progressive values as "soft," "utopian" and "naïve." But the hard fact is that progressive values have not only defined human progress in the past, they must prevail if human beings are to survive and prosper in the world of the future. Far from being "pie in the sky," "utopian" or "soft-headed," progressive values are the most precious, adaptive possessions of humanity – and they have provided the moral foundation for the unfolding story of American democracy.

The future of our society and our planet depends on our ability to create a world that reflects those values. And the growing power of our technology – our new ability to destroy human civilization, or alter our climate – means that we don't have forever to get ourselves on the right track.

A few years ago a planetary scientist named David Grinspoon wrote a book called Lonely Planets, that explores the question of extraterrestrial life – both basic biological life and intelligent sentient life.

Toward the end of his book, Grinspoon speculates on the chances of survival for intelligent life in the universe. He argues that every civilization of intelligent creatures must pass through a gauntlet that tests whether the values and political structures of the society are capable of keeping pace with the exponentially increasing power of the society's technology. If its values and political structures can keep pace with technological change, the society may pass into a phase of enormous freedom and possibility. If it does not, the power of its own technology will destroy it. Perhaps, he postulates, civilizations are like seahorses. Many are born, but only a few survive.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

For the first time, a little more than half a century ago, human society entered that gauntlet. The autocatalytic nature of technological growth reached a point of takeoff that for the first time gave us the power to destroy ourselves and all life on our tiny, fragile planet. From that moment on, the race began.

The next several generations of humans will decide how that race turns out. They won't simply observe it, or describe it; they will decide it. Whatever the future holds will be a result of human decision for which we are all responsible.

We will decide if we pass through that gauntlet or – like our cousins the Neanderthals – become evolutionary dead ends. We will decide if humanity passes into a new era of possibility and freedom – or the human story simply ends.

Progressive values are humanity's most precious possession. We must nurture them, fight for them, stand proudly for them, and celebrate them now during the holidays – and in all the battles we face in the coming year.

Robert Creamer is a long-time political organizer and strategist, and author of the book: Stand Up Straight: How Progressives Can Win, available on Amazon.com.

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail dubois.sara@gmail.com with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "David Dixon" <david@dixondavismedia.com>
To: "Oren Shur" <oshur@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 1/23/2016 4:16:55 PM
Subject: Re: BREAKING: DMR: Endorsement: Hillary Clinton has needed knowledge, experience

---

And congrats, btw...well earned.

On Jan 23, 2016, at 6:15 PM, David Dixon <david@dixondavismedia.com > wrote:

> Sure...we'll take a crack.
>
> On Jan 23, 2016, at 6:14 PM, Oren Shur <oshur@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
>
> > This is great, half of it reads like one of our ads.
> > Jim and I just discussed and we should deff cut a script from this.
> > Dixon Davis, are you guys available to take first crack?
> > My only question - whether we lean into "the presidency is not an entry level position" - and push off from it, or just let that part go.
> >
> > Sent from my iPhone
> >
> > Begin forwarded message:
> >
> > From: Zachary Petkanas <zpetkanas@hillaryclinton.com >
> > Date: January 23, 2016 at 6:00:48 PM EST
> > To: Clips <clips@hillaryclinton.com >
> > Subject: BREAKING: DMR: Endorsement: Hillary Clinton has needed knowledge, experience

DMR : Endorsement: Hillary Clinton has needed knowledge, experience

If there's one thing Democrats and Republicans agree on this year, it's the fact that the next president will face enormous challenges.

Domestically, this president must work with Congress in confronting the issues of immigration, health care, increased threats to national security, the disappearing middle class, the growing deficit, Social Security solvency, gun control, renewable energy, sentencing reform and more.

On the world stage, this president will have to work with foreign leaders in dealing with ISIS and other terrorists, climate change, the containment of nuclear threats posed in North Korea and Iran, the Russian incursions in Ukraine and foreign trade.

The presidency is not an entry-level position. Whoever is sworn into office next January must demonstrate not only a deep understanding of the issues facing America, but also possess the diplomatic skills that enable presidents to forge alliances to get things done.

By that measure, Democrats have one outstanding candidate deserving of their support: Hillary Clinton. No other candidate can match the depth or breadth of her knowledge and experience.

As first lady, she worked tirelessly on health care reform and, with bipartisan support, created the Children's Health Insurance Program that provides coverage for 8 million children.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As a senator, she reached across party lines and joined forces with conservatives, including Sen. Lindsey Graham and former House Speaker Newt Gingrich, to fight for job creation and universal health care.

ENDORSEMENT: Marco Rubio can chart new direction for GOP

NASH: Register faced tough decision in endorsements

RELATED:A history of Register caucus endorsements

As secretary of state, she helped secure international sanctions against Iran and redefined her job by expanding America's diplomatic agenda to include poverty, women's rights, the environment and other issues.

She is not a perfect candidate, as evidenced the way she has handled the furor over her private email server. In our endorsement of her 2008 campaign for president, we wrote that "when she makes a mistake, she should just say so." That appears to be a lesson she has yet to fully embrace.

Her changing stance on gay marriage, immigration and other issues has invited accusations that she is guided less by personal conviction than by political calculations. She refutes that, and argues persuasively that a willingness to change one's thinking on specific issues, while remaining true to what she calls "the same values and principles," is a virtue, one lacking in most politicians.

Over the course of two meetings, Clinton spent more than three hours with the editorial board, answering questions in a direct and forthright manner. She exhibited an impressive command of the issues, though we'd have liked to hear more from her on the debt and the future of Social Security. She was somewhat prickly and defensive when discussing her emails, but overall she was gracious, engaging and personable.

Her chief opponent for the nomination, Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont, has proven to be an honorable and formidable campaigner, and it's very likely that without him in the race, candidates in both parties wouldn't be discussing America's growing inequality in wealth and income.

Sanders has tapped into the public's anger and frustration with Washington, without demonizing government and resorting to the cheap demagoguery favored by Donald Trump and others. He has shown himself to be a man of courage and principle who has the ability to rally others to his cause.

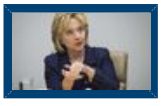
This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Buy Photo

Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton meets with the Des Moines Register editorial board Monday Jan 11, 2015, in Des Moines, Iowa. Rodney White/The Register

Buy Photo

Fullscr



This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

-
-

-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-

-
-
-
-

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
- -
-
-
-

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-

Next Slide

But Sanders admits that virtually all of his plans for reform have no chance of being approved by a Congress that bears any resemblance to the current crop of federal lawmakers. This is why, he says, voters can't simply elect him president, but must instead spark a "political revolution."

Easier said than done. Congress has the largest Republican majority since the 71st Congress of 1929-31.

A successful Sanders presidency would hinge on his ability to remake Washington in his own image. It's almost inconceivable that such a transformation could take place, even with Democrats controlling both chambers of Congress.

As for Martin O'Malley, the data-driven, wonkish former Maryland governor who has gained little traction in the campaign so far, he seems better suited to a Cabinet-level job in a Clinton White House.

In the final analysis, Iowa Democrats will have to choose between the lofty idealism of Bernie Sanders and the down-to-earth pragmatism of Hillary Clinton. For some, this will be a choice of whether to vote with their hearts or their heads.

Clinton has demonstrated that she is a thoughtful, hardworking public servant who has earned the respect of leaders at home and abroad. She stands ready to take on the most demanding job in the world.

This endorsement is the opinion of The Des Moines Register's editorial board:

David Chivers, president and publisher

Amalie Nash*, executive editor and vice president for news and engagement*

Lynn Hicks, opinion editor

Clark Kauffman, editorial writer

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Andie Dominick, editorial writer

Brian Smith, engagement editor

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Andrea Herrmann - Clean Water Fund" <activist@cleanwater.org>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 12/28/2012 11:06:14 PM
Subject: Deadline Approaching - We Need You Now!

Clean Water Fund logo with wave background

Dear Mary,

Can We Count on You?

Make A Tax Deductible Gift Today!

2012 is almost done – and what a year it was. We celebrated the fortieth anniversary of the Clean Water Act and stopped polluters from weakening landmark laws like the Clean Water Act and Clean Air Act. We organized communities in Colorado and Pennsylvania to fight pollution from fracking; worked with advocates in New Jersey, California, and Connecticut to protect our communities from chemicals and pharmaceutical waste; and cleaned up dirty energy in Michigan, Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Help us make sure Clean Water Fund is just as successful in 2013 – make a tax deductible year-end gift before the clock strikes midnight on December 31st!

We're making a difference across the country. In Florida, we're spreading the word about dangerous coal ash. In California and Texas, we're keeping trash out of our waterways by cutting down on disposable bags and foam products. Once again we've kept a moratorium on new nuclear plants in Minnesota and on new trash incinerators in Rhode Island. And we've made sure Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, D.C., and the other states in the Chesapeake Bay Watershed are making progress in bringing the Bay back to health again.

The common thread in all of our work is you! You are the power behind our work. Power us today, before the new year, with a special, tax-deductible gift .

We've been able to count on people who are passionate about protecting our water, empowering our families, and making sure our communities are healthy for decades. In short, people like you. Please join us this year, before time runs out, with a tax-deductible gift of $50 or more.

Thanks for your support!

For clean water,

Andrea Herrmann - Director of Development

National Office
1010 Vermont Ave | Suite 400 | Washington D.C. | 20005 202.895.0420

You are receiving this message because you or someone using your e-mail address, john.podesta@gmail.com, gave us permission to send it. Not interested anymore? unsubscribe now.

empowered by salsa

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sara DuBois" <sara@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: "Sara Du Bois" <sara@progressiveaccountability.org>
Date: 8/5/2008 1:42:50 AM
Subject: [big campaign] '08 Daily News Clips - 8/5

08 Election Daily News ClipsAugust 5th, 2008

Candidate Tracking:

All times in Eastern Standard Time

2pm McCain: Tours Nuclear Plant in Newport, MI
- Tracking scheduled for this event
7pm McCain: Tele-Town Hall for PA

News Clips:

MCCAIN NEWS

Oilman greases skids for McCain campaign (LA Times 8/5/08)
By Dan Morain
Among the donors from John B. Hess' company are an office manager and her husband, who pony up $57,000.
http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-trailhess5-2008aug05,0,2621587.story?track=rss
See TPM's "Hess "Driver" Maxed Out To McCain": http://tpmelectioncentral.talkingpointsmemo.com/2008/08/hess_driver_maxed_out_to_mccai.php
See WaPo blog's "Left Keeps Hammering McCain Oil Ties": http://blog.washingtonpost.com/the-trail/2008/08/04/left_keeps_hammering_mccain_oi.html
See TPM's "Multiple Oil Company Executives Gave Huge Contributions To Electing McCain Just Days After Offshore Drilling Reversal": http://tpmelectioncentral.talkingpointsmemo.com/2008/08/oil_company_executives.php

McCain's Oil Co. Donors (NYT blog 8/4/08)
By Michael Luo and Kitty Bennett
Senator John McCain received a burst of donations in June from oil company employees after he came out in favor of offshore drilling, according to a report released last week by Campaign Money Watch, a watchdog organization. But the largest collective response from a single company, the report noted, came from the Hess Corporation.
http://thecaucus.blogs.nytimes.com/2008/08/04/mccains-oil-co-donors/#more-5799

Track The Lobbyist Money That Bankrolls McCain's Campaign (And His Advisers) (Huffington Post 8/4/08)
When it comes to tracking the lobbyists and companies who either work for or have contributed to John McCain's presidential campaign, now you can play the same game Beltway journalists engage in every day from the comfort of your own home! McCainsLobbyists.com is the latest project from Campaign Money Watch, a nonprofit, nonpartisan organization. Still, they don't tend to take a positive view of the big corporate money that's fueling the presumptive Republican nominee's latest run for the White House.
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2008/08/04/track-the-lobbyist-money_n_116913.html

McCain to visit Monroe-area plant today (Detroit Free Press 8/5/08)
By Kathleen Gray
Sen. John McCain will make another trip to Michigan today, but he won't be seen by the general public or most of the media.
http://www.freep.com/apps/pbcs.dll/article?AID=/20080805/NEWS15/808050348/1014

GOP hopeful pumps energy policy at the Chip (Rapid City Journal 8/5/08)
By Kevin Woster
In his first-ever stop at the always-raucous Buffalo Chip Campground, Republican presidential candidate Sen. John McCain had thousands of boisterous supporters -- and more than a few loud motorcycles -- rocking and rumbling Monday night as he slammed his Democratic opponent, Sen. Barack Obama, for being weak on energy and national defense.
http://www.rapidcityjournal.com/articles/2008/08/05/news/top/doc4897d94106dca717274020.txt

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Link to video: http://videos.rapidcityjournal.com/p/iframe_widget?media_id=2049268&autoplay=0#

McCain visiting motorcycle rally, nuke power plant (AP 8/4/08)
By GLEN JOHNSON
STURGIS, S.D. - Thousands of motorcyclists greeted Republican presidential candidate John McCain with an approving roar Monday as he sought blue-collar and heartland support by visiting a giant motorcycle rally. ...His wife, Cindy, also paid tribute to the crowd, saying: "I'd like to thank all of you for your support of our troops, and here's why: I'm many things in my life, and one thing I'd like to be is your first lady. But more importantly, I'm Jack McCain's mother and Jimmy McCain's mother, one in the U.S. Navy and another one in the Marine Corps, an Iraqi vet."
http://news.yahoo.com/s/ap/20080805/ap_on_el_pr/mccain
See LA Times's "McCain campaigns at another sort of rally in Sturgis, S.D.": http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-mccain5-2008aug05,0,6838766.story?track=rss
See CBS's "John McCain Campaigns At Biker Rally": http://feeds.cbsnews.com/~r/CBSNewsPolitics/ ~3/355910564/main4320653.shtml
See Politico's "McCain tries to rev up bikers in S.D.": http://news.yahoo.com/s/politico/20080805/pl_politico/12309
See Motorcycle News blog's "John McCain Buys Motorcycle T-Shirt": http://news.motorbiker.org/blogs.nsf/dx/john-mccain-buys-motorcycle-t-shirt.htm

McCain Makes Campaign Appearance at a Small Business in Lafayette Hill, Pa (KYW 8/4/08)
by Brad Segall
Sen. John McCain says the energy crisis is hurting small businesses in this country, and during a stop at National Label Company in Montgomery County on Monday he called on Congress to do something about it now.
http://www.kyw1060.com/pages/2721862.php?contentType=4&contentId=2529177

McCain: I'll Come Back To Senate For Oil (The Huffington Post 8/4/08)
On Monday, John McCain lambasted Congress for adjourning without passing an energy bill, saying he'd be willing to "come off the campaign trail" and return to Washington if Democratic leadership would simply "come off of vacation" and go to work on off-shore drilling.
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2008/08/04/mccain-ill-come-back-to-s_n_116876.html

McCain: Let's Go Back to Work (NYT blog 8/4/08)
By Mary Ann Giordano
Come back, Barack. While some Republican members of the House are having a jolly time in Washington trying to embarrass the Democrats into returning to Congress to pass an energy bill, Senator John McCain on Monday issued a personal challenge to his Democratic rival to "come back into town and come back to work."
http://thecaucus.blogs.nytimes.com/2008/08/04/mccain-lets-go-back-to-work/

Factcheck.org Says Obama Ad Uses Incorrect Figure on Oil Donors (ABC blog 8/4/08)
By Jake Tapper
In his new TV ad in which he accuses Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., of being "in the pocket of big oil," Sen. Barack Obama, D-Illinois, said that McCain's campaign took $2 million from "Big Oil." "The truth is that McCain's campaign has received $1.33 million from individuals employed in the oil and gas industry, not $2 million," rules Factcheck.org.
http://blogs.abcnews.com/politicalpunch/2008/08/factcheckorg-sa.html

Negativity the norm in presidential campaign (AP 8/5/08)
By LIZ SIDOTI
For all the talk about John McCain's hard-hitting politics, Barack Obama is hardly innocent. Both candidates and their allies are fully engaged in creating unflattering caricatures of each other that they hope will stick in voters' minds for the next three months.
http://news.yahoo.com/s/ap/20080805/ap_on_el_pr/negative_politics

The Tire-Gauge Solution: No Joke (TIME 8/4/08)
By Michael Grunwald
...who's really out of touch? The Bush Administration estimates that expanded offshore drilling could increase oil production by 200,000 bbl. per day by 2030. We use about 20 million bbl. per day, so that would meet about 1% of our demand two decades from now. Meanwhile, efficiency experts say that keeping tires inflated can improve gas mileage 3%, and regular maintenance can add another 4%. Many drivers already follow their advice, but if everyone did, we could immediately reduce demand several percentage points. In other words: Obama is right.
http://www.time.com/time/politics/article/0,8599,1829354,00.html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

See AP's "Fact Check: Properly inflated tires cut gas use": http://ap.google.com/article/ALeqM5i4KolYrUJQ8NRDg8boAKDR49lluAD92BNSK00

Obama: 'National Priority' (Politico blog 8/5/08)
By Ben Smith
Here's a second contrast ad on the subject of energy from the Obama campaign, which seeks to paint McCain as the candidate of the past, of Washington, and of Bush, while Obama is the candidate of "new energy."
http://www.politico.com/blogs/bensmith/0808/Obama_National_Priority.html?showall
Link to video of ad ("National Priority"): http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=HHMbwk6CDLE

McCain -- "Big Oil's best investment": Obama (AFP 8/5/08)
by Stephen Collinson
Barack Obama branded John McCain a stooge of profit-soaked US oil giants, as the White House rivals dueled on high gasoline prices and energy policy exactly three months from election day.
http://news.yahoo.com/s/afp/20080805/pl_afp/usvote

Monday Morning Funnies (WSJ blog 8/4/08)
By Elizabeth Holmes
...Moments after the Boeing 737 was airborne, Salter swooped past the cabin-dividing curtain and gleefully handed out tire gauges that read "Obama's Energy Plan." The stunt pokes fun at Obama's suggestion that American's improve their gas mileage by filling up their tires and will be reportedly be replicated, compliments of McCain supporters, at Obama's appearance in Michigan Monday. Even more of a surprise? The appearance of John McCain in the back of the campaign plane—or at least the closest he's come as of late. A life-sized cardboard cut-out of the Republican candidate is now fixed to the divider between the press corps area and the campaign staff areas.
http://blogs.wsj.com/washwire/2008/08/04/monday-morning-funnies/

Romney: 'McCain Doesn't Ask For Any Tax Reduction For Oil Companies' (Think Progress 8/4/08)
For the first time, six of the giant oil companies — including ExxonMobil, Chevron, and Total — made more than $50 billion in combined profits in a single quarter last quarter, with ExxonMobil breaking the record for the highest corporate profits ever, at more than $11 billion.
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/08/04/romney-big-oil-tax-breaks/

McCain On HIV/AIDS Prevention: All Talk, No Action (Wonk Room 8/4/08)
On Saturday, the Center for Disease Control (CDC) reported that the number of Americans infected with HIV is "much higher than previously thought." According to the study, 56,300 people became infected with HIV in 2006, "40% higher than previous figures."
http://thinkprogress.org/wonkroom/2008/08/04/mccain-on-hivaids-prevention-all-talk-no-action/

Fiorina: 'McCain Has Consistently Said' He Will 'Balance The Budget By 2013' (Think Progress 8/4/08)
On CBS' Face the Nation yesterday, host Bob Schieffer asked McCain economic adviser Carly Fiorina how the newly announced projection of "a $480 billion deficit" would affect Sen. John McCain's (R-AZ) economic plans. "The deficit is a huge problem," admitted Fiorina.
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/08/04/fiorina-mccain-balance/

D.N.C. Web Site Seeks to Link Potential V.P.'s to Cheney and Bush (NYT blog 8/4/08)
by Michael Falcone
The Democrats are pledging to aggressively vet some of those rumored to be on John McCain's vice presidential short list.
http://thecaucus.blogs.nytimes.com/2008/08/05/dnc-web-site-seeks-to-link-potential-vps-to-cheney-and-bush/

McCain security ousts reporter (Florida Capital News 8/2/08)
By Paul Flemming
Tallahassee Democrat senior writer Stephen Price on Friday was singled out and asked to leave a media area at the Panama City rally of presidential candidate Sen. John McCain. Price was among at least three other reporters, and the only black reporter, surrounding McCain's campaign bus — Gov. Charlie Crist and his fiancee, Carole Rome, were already aboard — when a member of the Arizona senator's security detail asked the reporter to identify himself. Price had shown his media credentials to enter the area.
http://floridacapitalnews.com/apps/pbcs.dll/article?AID=/20080802/CAPITOLNEWS/808020312

OPINIONS AND EDITORIALS

McCain's Problem Isn't Bush (WSJ 8/5/08)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

...If you ask Barack Obama, he will tell you that a vote for Mr. McCain is a vote for a "third Bush term." It's a clever strategy, because it works on many levels. . ...however awkward Mr. McCain may find standing with President Bush, the greater danger is that Mr. McCain will buy into Mr. Obama's campaign theme. And that is what appears to be happening.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB121789241263411727.html?mod=rss_opinion_main

'Race card' theatrics (Boston Globe 8/5/08)
THE DEBATE over which presidential candidate played the "race card" first - John McCain or Barack Obama - is a distracting sideshow. Instead, the country needs new ways to talk about racial identity.
http://www.boston.com/news/politics/2008/articles/2008/08/05/race_card_theatrics/?rss_id=Boston.com+--+Top+political+stories

The color of politics (Washington Times 8/5/08)
By Tara Wall
Kudos to John McCain. He stood up and refused to accept being labeled a racist lying down. After his third attempt to inject race into the race, Barack Obama was stopped dead in his tracks when he made these remarks last week:
http://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2008/aug/05/the-color-of-politics/

The Unavoidable Issue (Washington Post 8/5/08)
By E. J. Dionne Jr.; A19
Last week's dust-up over race between John McCain and Barack Obama was entirely disappointing. Obama spoke first about how his opponents would try to "make you scared of me," noting that he "doesn't look like all those other presidents" on our currency. What Obama said was true, but he made the tactical mistake of suggesting that McCain was complicit in overtly racial politics.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/04/AR2008080401826.html?nav=rss_print/editorialpages

BUSH NEWS

Bush Says It's 'Important to Engage' China (Washington Post 8/5/08)
By Michael Abramowitz; A01
Three days before he is set to arrive in Beijing for the Olympics, President Bush offered a mixed assessment of China's role in the world, praising its efforts to curb the nuclear ambitions of North Korea and Iran, expressing disappointment about its recent move to help scuttle global trade talks, and saying that it is "really hard to tell" whether human rights in China have improved over the past eight years.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/04/AR2008080402460.html?hpid%3Dtopnews&sub=AR

Bush Arrives in South Korea (AP 8/5/08)
By PAUL ALEXANDER
President Bush is kicking off his Asian trip with a visit to a new friend while seeking solutions to sticky issues old and new. Air Force One landed Tuesday evening at a military airport near the South Korean capital, Seoul. Bush's official schedule starts Wednesday, when he will meet for the third time with the conservative, pro-American president, Lee Myung-bak. Lee took office in February with promises to patch up relations with Washington that became strained under Seoul's previous decade of liberal governments.
http://www.time.com/time/world/article/0,8599,1829443,00.html

Prayers, Protests Greet Bush in Seoul (WSJ 8/5/08)
Thousands of South Koreans gathered for a prayer service to welcome Bush on a visit that also sparked revived street demonstrations.
http://feeds.wsjonline.com/~r/wsj/xml/rss/3_7011/ ~3/356151124/SB121792164015312775.html

Bush tells troops Iraq no longer 'hopeless' (AP 8/4/08)
By BEN FELLER
EIELSON AIR FORCE BASE, Alaska — President Bush said Monday that U.S. troops going to Iraq soon will find a country dramatically different from the one that was "hopeless" before his troop buildup.
http://ap.google.com/article/ALeqM5j3b6xoPSXQAc5AoJwqPQit9OtitgD92BRS5G0

Stevens to Join Bush in Alaska (ABC blog 8/4/08)
By Jennifer Duck
Embattled Republican Sen. Ted Stevens of Alaska will be with President Bush in Fairbanks, Alaska tonight.
http://blogs.abcnews.com/politicalradar/2008/08/stevens-to-join.html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Book says White House ordered forgery (Politico 8/5/08)
By Mike Allen
A new book by the author Ron Suskind claims that the White House ordered the CIA to forge a back-dated, handwritten letter from the head of Iraqi intelligence to Saddam Hussein.
http://news.yahoo.com/s/politico/20080805/pl_politico/12308

UNCONVENTIONAL (American Spectator 8/4/08)
Vice President Dick Cheney will not make an appearance at the Republican convention in Minneapolis-St. Paul next month, according to sources in his office. Cheney has not sought a speaking slot at the convention, nor has his staff sought a role for him at the convention.
http://www.spectator.org/dsp_article.asp?art_id=13636

OTHER TOP NEWS

Obama reverses two positions in new energy plan (AP 8/5/08)
Democrat Barack Obama put forward a broad energy plan yesterday designed to end US reliance on imported oil within 10 years and shore up his standing amid a tightening White House race and high anxiety over gas prices. But his proposal includes two significant reversals of positions he has taken in the past, and he immediately drew accusations of flip-flopping from Republican rival John McCain, who has gained ground in the polls using the energy issue.
http://www.boston.com/news/politics/2008/articles/2008/08/05/obama_reverses_two_positions_in_new_energy_plan/?rss_id=Boston.com+--+Top+political+stories

1,250 Marines ordered to stay longer in Afghanistan (AP 8/5/08)
The Pentagon has ordered roughly 1,250 Marines serving as trainers for the Afghan security forces to stay on the warfront almost a month longer to continue a mission that military leaders say is a top priority, according to a senior military official.
http://www.usatoday.com/news/military/2008-08-05-us-troops-afghanistan_N.htm?csp=34

Report: U.S. may have taped Gitmo interviews (AP 8/5/08)
The State Department advised representatives of foreign governments that their interviews with their citizens being held at Guantanamo Bay would be recorded, The Washington Post reported Tuesday.
http://www.usatoday.com/news/world/2008-08-05-gitmo-interviews_N.htm?csp=34

First military commission doesn't end fairness debate (USA TODAY 8/5/08)
By Alan Gomez
Observers of the first U.S. war crimes trial since World War II have seen enough to render a verdict on the fairness of the trial, the first major test of the military commission system established by President Bush after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.
http://www.usatoday.com/news/washington/judicial/2008-08-04-gitmo_N.htm?csp=34

US nuclear sub visits Japan amid leak controversy (AP 8/4/08)
TOKYO: An American nuclear submarine making a regular stop in southern Japan does not present a risk, the U.S. Navy said Monday, just days after Japan's government suggested a similar U.S. vessel may have leaked radiation at the same port earlier this year.
http://www.iht.com/articles/ap/2008/08/04/asia/AS-Japan-US-Nuclear-Sub.php

Iraqis Fail to Agree on Provincial Elections (NYT 8/4/08)
By CAMPBELL ROBERTSON and SUADAD AL-SALHY
Iraqi political leaders met Sunday to try to reach a deal that would allow provincial elections to proceed, but they again failed to agree, further dimming prospects that the elections would be held this year.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/08/04/world/middleeast/04iraq.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

U.S. retail gasoline price falls to 11-week low: government (Reuters 8/4/08)
By Tom Doggett
U.S. drivers found more relief at the pump as the national price for gasoline dropped to its lowest level in 11 weeks, the government said on Monday.
http://www.reuters.com/article/domesticNews/idUSN0451143220080804?feedType=RSS&

GOP returns for Day 2 of talkathon (Politico 8/4/08)
By Daniel W. Reilly, John Bresnahan
If Friday's impromptu House protest session had all the passion of a revival meeting, Monday's Episode II was more like a prayer circle — intense but smaller, with shouts of glory replaced by wishful thinking.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://news.yahoo.com/s/politico/20080804/pl_politico/12300

GOP: Lift drilling ban or risk shutdown (Washington Times 8/4/08)
Sean Lengell
The showdown on Capitol Hill over expanding offshore drilling could lead to a threatened government shutdown when Congress returns from its five-week summer break in early September.
http://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2008/aug/04/lift-drilling-ban-or-risk-shutdown-gop-warns/

Wealthy Begin Feeling The Pain In Down Economy (AP 8/3/08)
Less Money Allocated For Luxury Goods, Investments And Credit Cards Are Signs That Rich, Too, Getting Squeezed
http://wcbstv.com/topstories/Wealthy.Spending.Down.2.786657.html

POLLS

Daily Presidential Tracking Poll (Rasmussen 8/4/08)
The Rasmussen Reports daily Presidential Tracking Poll for Monday shows the race for the White House is tied with Barack Obama and John McCain each attracting 44% of the vote. However, when "leaners" are included, it's McCain 47% and Obama 46%.
http://rasmussenreports.com/public_content/politics/election_20082/2008_presidential_election/daily_presidential_tracking_poll

--
Sara DuBois
Tracking / Communications Manager
ProgressiveAccountability.org
sara@progressiveaccountability.org
202-609-7681 (office)
410-967-7306 (cell)

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "David Donnelly" <david.a.donnelly@gmail.com>
To: researchalliance2008@googlegroups.com
"big campaign" <bigcampaign@googlegroups.com>
Date: 7/11/2008 8:14:56 AM
Subject: [big campaign] McCain's campaign finances and lobbyists research updated http://www.campaignmoney.org/campaigns/main/the-mccain-file

Here is a listing of all our reports, fact sheets, etc. -- we've updated a bunch of this with new, fresh numbers from McCain's June monthly report, which includes donations through May.

EMBEDDED OR IN BED? John McCain And His Lobbyist Problem

EMBEDDED OR IN BED? John McCain And His Lobbyist Problem lays out the financial entanglements and other relationships that exist between McCain and his cadre of 118 lobbyists who have represented some of America's largest corporations — many of which have had business before the Senate Commerce Committee McCain once chaired — but now find themselves advising, staffing and raising money for McCain's presidential campaign. Released June 13, 2008.
Download the PDF | Press release

John McCain, The EADS Tanker Deal, and The Lobbyists Who Made It Happen

In February 2008, the Air Force bypassed Seattle-based Boeing and awarded a multi-billion dollar contract to the European Aeronautic Defence and Space Company (EADS) to provide the next generation of in-flight refueling tankers. The decision came after Sen. John McCain twice intervened in the procurement process, and after EADS lobbyists, at least seven of whom are staffers or fundraisers for McCain's presidential campaign, launched a massive lobbying effort on their client's behalf. Updated July 11, 2008.
Read the report | Download the PDF

Oil Money: John McCain's Close Ties to The Petroleum Industry

With oil prices skyrocketing and the economy on the brink of a recession, Americans are looking for candidates up and down the ballot to introduce meaningful plans to provide relief at the pump and put the economy back on track. Yet John McCain continues to side with the oil companies that have given him more than $1 million in donations and line the pockets of the lobbyists who staff and raise money for his campaign. Updated July 11, 2008.
Read the report

McCain's Energy Plan: Written By Corporate Lobbyists, Bankrolled By Industry Contributions

John McCain's energy plan calls for offshore oil drilling along America's coastline and expanded use of nuclear power. Although some have criticized McCain as flip-flopping on energy issues, the positions McCain has staked out should not surprise anyone: They are similar to those advocated by the fifty-nine energy lobbyists on his campaign and fundraising staff, as well as those industry insiders who have donated millions of dollars to McCain's political career.Updated July 11, 2008.
Read the report | Download the PDF | Press release

John McCain and Telecom Immunity: The Donors and Lobbyists Behind the Confusion

Over the past few years, Sen. John McCain's (R-AZ) position on telecom immunity has been in flux. On various occasions he has stated that such immunity should only be granted if the telecommunications companies involved testified openly about their involvement and apologized, and if the language of the bill made clear that future warrantless wiretapping was unacceptable. But in recent months his position has become more ambiguous. Not only did he vote in favor of telecom immunity legislation that did not contain any of the above provisions, he has also backtracked on some of them altogether. One reason for his change of heart may be his campaign's close ties to the telecom industry.Updated July 11, 2008.
Read the report | Download the PDF

Following the Money Trail: Fortune 200 Companies, John McCain, and McCain's Lobbyists

The top 200 corporations in America are well represented among Sen. John McCain's campaign contributors and the lobbyists working to get him elected.Released June 26, 2008.
Download the PDF | Press release

McCain's Multiple Views on Public Financing of Elections

This Public Campaign Action Fund report details John McCain's shifting views on public financing of federal elections. After opposing comprehensive reform early in his political career, he gradually became a support of his own state's Clean Elections law. But once he began gearing up for his second presidential campaign, he started to backtrack. Released April 8, 2008.
Download the PDF: Part 1 , Part 2

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~

You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.

-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "American Security Project" <info@americansecurityproject.org>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 2/11/2016 2:01:24 PM
Subject: Latest News from the American Security Project

ASP Newsletter: Champion Free Markets, but Don't Risk National Security, Two Cheers for the President's Announcement on Clean Energy, and Upcoming Event

View this email in your browser

February 11th, 2016

Top Stories

Champion Free Markets, But Don't Risk National Security

American Security Project

Read ASP CEO BGen Stephen A. Cheney's statement on the proposed transactions by ChemChina and Zoomlion. In the statement, ASP CEO BGen Stephen A. Cheney. "In today's world," he argues, "foreign investment is a key driver of global economic growth. At any given time, U.S. companies are buying or investing around the world and foreign companies are doing the same here. However, when foreign investment places national security at risk, it's an entirely different story."

Click here for more...

Two Cheers for the President's Announcement on Clean Energy

Facebook Twitter
Website
YouTube
Google Plus

ASP in the News

ASP Panel Mentioned in The Daily Caller
The Daily Caller

ASP Board Member and former Secretary of Defense Chuck Hagel Interviewed on BBC BBC

ASP's Adjunct Fellow, Matthew Freear in RUSI Newsbrief
RUSI Newsbrief

Chairperson of ASP's Business Council for American Security Dante Disparte in Huffington Post
Dante Disparte, Huffington Post

ASP Senior Fellow Andrew Holland in Latin America Energy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Advisor
Inter-American Dialogue Latin America Energy Advisor

ASP CEO BGen. Cheney in Politico
Bryan Bender, Politico

ASP CEO BGen. Cheney Interviewed On International Security Concerns
John Bersia, UCF

This weekend, in his weekly address, the President announced a "Doubling Our Clean Energy Funding to Address the Challenge of Climate Change." This funding was announced in the Fiscal Year 2017 Budget, which was released on Tuesday, February 9.

Click here for more...

Upcoming Events

ASP and Lloyd's of London Risk and Resiliency Forum

Date	February 17, 2016
Time	12:00pm – 4:30pm
Location	Arnold & Porter LLP, 601 Massachusetts Ave NW, 11th Floor, Washington DC 20001

The American Security Project will host Lloyd's and ASP Risk Forum: Pathways to City Resilience in partnership with Lloyd's , JLT , and Risk Cooperative . This is an invitation-only opportunity for policymakers, business leaders and regulators to introduce the findings of the City Risk Index and share best practices and insights on risk assessment, mitigation, adaptation and transfer to help U.S. cities and institutions build greater resilience

To request an invitation, contact:

events@americansecurityproject.org

On Our Blog

American Competitiveness

Dante Disparte Featured in Huffington Post
Nicole Bohannon

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In a new post published in the Huffington Post, Disparte discusses the many opportunities to reverse the island's economic woes, which have triggered one of the largest non-conflict related resettlements in recent history.

Click here for more...

Asymmetric Operations

After ISIS: Issues and Questions for Stability

C. Alexander Doyle

If you follow the news closely, it seems that everyone has an answer on how to weaken or destroy ISIS. However, it seems that very few people are having the conversation on what happens after ISIS. Does the world just expect ISIS to be defeated and suddenly everything will be alright?

Click here for more...

On the Table? Turkey's Kurdish Policy

Elias Stahl

In a prescient article for The American Interest, Dov Friedman first exposes Turkey's divergent policy approach for the Kurdistan Region of Iraq (KRI) and the Syrian Kurdish administration (PYD), and then prescribes Turkish policy with the PYD to mirror its KRI counterpart more closely.

Click here for more...

Recruitment Problems? ISIS Stumbles in Jakarta

Elias Stahl

Although the Islamic State's recruiting success has been perhaps most visible in the West, it is global in reach. Despite these ambitions, ISIS is having a hard time replicating its success in Western Europe in majority Muslim countries outside the Middle East.

Click here for more...

Five Things to Watch for from ISIS in 2016

Pascale Siegel

Daesh will not go away in 2016, despite our repeated pledges and the West's renewed commitment. Here's five things to watch for from ISIS in 2016.

Click here for more...

Breaking the Brand: A New Way to Dismantle Perceptions of Terror

Esther Babson

American Security Project's Adjunct Fellow, Matthew Freear, was featured in this month's RUSI Newsbrief, arguing for "counter-branding" versus "counter-narratives" in the fight against terrorist branding.

Click here for more...

Radicalization Part 1: The Process

Anil Powers

Broken up into three parts, this blog post will examine the radicalization process, the sources of radicalization, and ways in which it can be mitigated in order to prevent future attacks.

Click here for more...

Radicalization Part 2: In Prison and on the Internet

Anil Powers

It is important to keep in mind that Islamist radicalization can occur in a variety of locations, from heavily scrutinized mosques, to prisons, and even on the Internet.

Click here for more...

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Radicalization Part 3: Mitigating the Threat of Terrorism

Anil Powers

To mitigate the threat of terrorism, governments have two options: adopting a proactive policy or a reactive policy. Within each policy approach, an array of programs and plans are already in effect or have been implemented to mitigate the threat of terrorism.

Click here for more...

Climate and Energy

Will Cheap Oil Derail the Paris Agreement?

Esther Babson

Plummeting oil prices have led to concern of whether states will follow through with the promises made in the Paris Agreement to combat climate change. The U.S. and China have maintained their supportive policies and rhetoric so far, but many reports have cautioned early optimism.

Click here for more...

The Age of Consequences: A New Climate Security Film featuring ASP

Esther Babson

The Age of Consequences, an upcoming climate security film featuring ASP's CEO, BGen. Stephen Cheney, explores the risk of climate change through the lens of national security and global stability.

Click here for more...

BCAS Member General Fusion Mentioned in Science News

Bryn Woollacott

Business Council for American Security member and Fusion Committee Chair General Fusion's work on nuclear fusion technology was the subject of a recent article in Science News.

Click here for more...

Resource Transparency and SEC Rulemaking

Andrew Vaccaro

The Securities and Exchange Commission has announced new regulations under Section 1504 of the 2010 Dodd-Frank Financial Reform Act. Unfortunately, the proposed rules fall short of providing the best possible solution. Fortunately, there is still time to offer a solution with greater resource transparency for everyday citizens.

Click here for more...

General Fusion is Named to the 2015 Global Cleantech 100

Esther Babson

For the second year in a row, the Business Council for American Security member General Fusion, a leader in the development of fusion power, was listed in the top 100 Global Cleantech companies of 2015.

Click here for more...

U.S. Navy Launches "Great Green Fleet"

C. Alexander Doyle

The Navy launched the "Great Green Fleet", with a ceremony in San Diego yesterday, a major milestone towards a 2020 goal of having 50% of its energy supplied by alternative energy resources.

Click here for more...

National Security Strategy

The Zika Virus - A Window Into Future Security Threats

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Nicole Bohannon

Over the next 20-30 years, a major epidemic could decide a country's stability. There must be international networks designed for earlier detection and coordination.

Click here for more...

Russian Aggression Prompts Refocused U.S. Spending

Bryn Woollacott

Secretary Ashton Carter has stated that the next defense budget must focus on “a return to great-power conflict” to guard against Russian aggression.

Click here for more ...

Iran and Saudi Arabia Headed for a Cold War Over a Heated One

Nicole Bohannon

The sudden and dramatic breakup of Saudi-Iranian relations has put the world on watch as the situation develops. Now, as diplomatic ties between them are officially severed, war is inevitable. Correct? The short answer: probably not.

Click here for more...

Iranian Revolutionary Guard: Rough Seas Ahead?

Ken Robbins

ASP Senior Adjunct Fellow Ken Robbins on what the recent events in Iran could mean in the long-term.

Click here for more ...

Saudi Arabia Ratchets Up Regional Tensions with Iran

Asha Castleberry

The diplomatic rift between Iran and Saudi Arabia is a clear sign that sectarian and national rivalries are getting worse in the region.

Click here for more...

Nuclear Security

North Korea Satellite Launch Prompts Missile Defense Discussion Posted

Bryn Woollacott

International efforts to limit North Korea’s ability to project military power have failed as this weekend the state launched an object into orbit. The U.S. and South Korea have discussed the deployment of missile defense systems to combat this threat, which may further escalate the situation.

Click here for more ...

Creating an International Standard to Prevent Nuclear Terrorism

Bryn Woollacott

The threat of global terrorism is at an all-time high, and increased global instability has intensified the risk of nuclear terrorism.

Click here for more...

S.2461 and NextGen Nuclear Energy

Andrew Vaccaro

The Senate will consider an amendment to the Senate energy bill, offered by Senator Crapo of Idaho, on advanced nuclear research. The Crapo amendment consists of the text of his recently introduced bill S.2461, the "Nuclear Energy Innovation Capabilities Act."

Click here for more...

The Iran Deal in Action

Maggie Feldman-Piltch

As Iran removes the core of their nuclear reactor and fills it with cement opening the door for the easing of sanctions in just a manner of days, it is clear times are changing.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Click here for more...

What to do About North Korea's Nuclear Weapons
Matthew Wallin
With North Korea's recent claims of having tested a hydrogen bomb, there is renewed concern about the situation on the Korean peninsula and the North's expanding nuclear program. Yet despite a possible increase in nuclear weapons capability, the strategic situation on the Korean peninsula has not changed since North Korea crossed the nuclear threshold.
Click for more...

Public Diplomacy

New Cuba Crisis Means It's Time to Kick Out Old Policies
Nicole Bohannon
The current massive Cuban exodus is an opportunity to foster better Latin American relations and an incentive to push the island towards liberalization.
Click here for more...

Ch-Ch-Changes in the US Anti-Extremist Messaging Strategy
Matthew Wallin
Rather than boosting large, officially labeled messaging centers overseas, the US should focus on skill-based training centers that are not focused on CVE.
Click here for more …

About the American Security Project

The American Security Project is a non-profit, nonpartisan public policy and research organization dedicated to fostering knowledge and understanding of a range of national security issues, promoting debate about the appropriate use of American power, and cultivating strategic responses to 21st century challenges.

American Security Project

1100 New York Avenue, NW • Suite 710W • Washington, DC 20005
Phone: 202.347.4267 | Fax: 202.470.6631
unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jake Sullivan" <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "Brian Fallon" <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com>
"Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com>
"Nick Merrill" <nmerrill@hillaryclinton.com>
"Lauren Peterson" <lpeterson@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 7/31/2015 5:41:21 AM
Subject: RE: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia

+ Nick and Lauren.

From: Brian Fallon [mailto:bfallon@hillaryclinton.com]
Sent: Friday, July 31, 2015 12:39 PM
To: Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
Cc: Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >; Christina Reynolds <creynolds@hillaryclinton.com >; Laura Rosenberger <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com >; John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >
Subject: Re: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia

Like this (w the handle). Lets do it

On Fri, Jul 31, 2015 at 12:35 PM, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

> I like including his handle.
>
> .@marcorubio you've got it backwards: Engagement isn't a gift to the Castros -- it's a threat to the Castros. Embargo hasn't worked for 50+ years. Cuban people deserve better.
>
> On Fri, Jul 31, 2015 at 12:26 PM, Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
>
> > Dan/Brian, would love your input on this.
> >
> > ---
> >
> > From: Christina Reynolds [mailto:creynolds@hillaryclinton.com]
> > Sent: Friday, July 31, 2015 12:18 PM
> > To: Laura Rosenberger <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com >
> > Cc: Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >; John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >; Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >; Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
> > Subject: Re: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia
> >
> > Love hitting him back. Will defer to the policy experts on which one, but I like mixing it up when we have the high ground.
> >
> > On Jul 31, 2015, at 12:16 PM, Laura Rosenberger <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> >
> > > I like that. Another option:
> > >
> > > @marcorubio I'm for the Cuban people. Time to stop helping the Castros through failed policies. Going back to those would be the mistake.
> > >
> > > ---
> > >
> > > From: Jake Sullivan [mailto:jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com]
> > > Sent: Friday, July 31, 2015 12:14 PM
> > > To: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >; Christina Reynolds <creynolds@hillaryclinton.com >
> > > Cc: Laura Rosenberger <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com >; Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >; Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
> > > Subject: RE: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia
> > >
> > > Adding Reynolds.
> > >
> > > Perhaps an HRC tweet along the lines of:
> > >
> > > Those who seek to lead our country should focus on the future, not try to pull us back to the past. Embargo hasn't worked for 50+ years. Let's try something new.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: John Podesta [mailto:john.podesta@gmail.com]
Sent: Friday, July 31, 2015 12:05 PM
To: Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >
Cc: Laura Rosenberger <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com >; Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >; Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: RE: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia

I'm good with either. Whatever is faster.

On Jul 31, 2015 8:00 AM, "Jake Sullivan" <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

> Adding Laura and Fallon. John, did you have in mind having HRC hit back, or campaign?
>
> From: Dan Schwerin [mailto:dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com]
> Sent: Friday, July 31, 2015 10:57 AM
> To: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >; Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >
> Subject: Fwd: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia
>
> Here we go...
>
> ---------- Forwarded message ----------
> From: Jeremy Massey <jmassey@hillaryclinton.com >
> Date: Fri, Jul 31, 2015 at 10:31 AM
> Subject: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia
> To: Clips <clips@hillaryclinton.com >
>
> User Actions
> Following
>
> Marco RubioVerified account @ marcorubio
>
> After Clinton's failed 'reset' with Putin, now she wants to do a 'reset' with Castro. She is making another mistake.
>
> https://twitter.com/marcorubio/status/627124174495055872
>
> --
> Jeremy Massey
> Research Department
>
> 847 736 9211
> JMassey@HillaryClinton.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Joel Benenson" <jbenenson@bsgco.com>
To: "Jesse Ferguson" <jesse@jesseferguson.com>
"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
"Robby Mook" <robbymook2015@gmail.com>
Date: 3/15/2015 7:17:38 PM
Subject: RE: Earned Media Update

Love the FOIA idea Jesse –
Could be a house member or a Senator --

From: Jesse Ferguson [mailto:jesse@jesseferguson.com]
Sent: Sunday, March 15, 2015 9:41 PM
To: John Podesta; Robby Mook
Cc: Joel Benenson; Jim Margolis; John Anzalone; Mandy Grunwald; Kristina Schake; Jennifer Palmieri
Subject: RE: Earned Media Update

To Joel's original point about someone to raise this point about Gowdy releasing his email, David Brock did it already - http://www.msnbc.com/msnbc/david-brock-top-hillary-clinton-ally-trey-gowdy-release-your-emails. I know we want Members, etc. to do it and will pursue but just flagging Brock did it. Also, Roy Blunt got challenged on it by Stephanopoulos on Sunday.

The other question is whether there is a member who would introduce a bill to end the FOIA exemption for Members of Congress? They should be just as transparent as they're demanding HRC be. It would put the focus on the Members keeping their emails private and would never actually pass.

From: John Podesta [mailto:john.podesta@gmail.com]
Sent: Sunday, March 15, 2015 9:35 PM
To: Robby Mook
Cc: Joel Benenson; Jesse Ferguson; Jim Margolis; John Anzalone; Mandy Grunwald; Kristina Schake; Jennifer Palmieri
Subject: Re: Earned Media Update

Better off with an H R C warrior. Who is her most fearsome House ally?

JP
--Sent from my iPad--
john.podesta@gmail.com
For scheduling: eryn.sepp@gmail.com

On Mar 15, 2015, at 8:50 PM, Robby Mook <robbymook2015@gmail.com > wrote:

> Do we think Cummings would do that? Certainly worth an ask.
>
> On Sun, Mar 15, 2015 at 8:48 PM, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com > wrote:
>
> > Who is the right person to raise a simple question of the audacity of members of congress asking others to release their emails when they don't ?
> > Do we have some D who can squarely at Gowdy and demand he release all his emails for that last two years so people can see for themselves how politically motivated his investigations are?
> >
> > From: Jesse Ferguson [mailto:jesse@jesseferguson.com]
> > Sent: Sunday, March 15, 2015 5:13 PM
> > To: Joel Benenson; Jim Margolis; John Anzalone; john.podesta@gmail.com ; Mandy Grunwald
> > Cc: Robby Mook; Kristina Schake; Jennifer Palmieri
> > Subject: Earned Media Update
> >
> > Hello All – Two quick things.
> >
> > 1) As you may have seen, ABC News reporting that Speaker Boehner and Republicans in Congress are pledging more investigation into Secretary Clinton on emails. Below are the key points we're sharing with Hill allies and TV surrogates this afternoon to get ahead of it and frame it as crazy GOP investigations AND GOP hypocrisy. We're trying to push folks to go after them.
> >
> > 2) Everyone asked on our last Comm call for more offense against GOP. While we can't do it perfectly before campaign is launched, we've had some success working with partners getting stories on Jeb and others. Clips attached.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Thanks. We'll try to keep these Earned Media Updates as often as we can.

POINTS

While it was permitted for Secretary Clinton to use one blackberry instead of two, looking back she's said it would have been better for her to use two. At the time, this just didn't seem like an issue. She's asked State Department to publicly release all of roughly the 55,000 printed pages of emails she provided them.

Secretary Clinton was the first and only former Secretary to respond to the Department's request last year, and was the only one to provide her work emails.

Secretary Clinton has asked the Department to make her work related emails publicly available, and just like every other Cabinet Secretary and U.S. government official, she gets to choose to keep her personal emails private.

Charlie Cook wrote that: "This is the classic kind of inside-the-Beltway, process story that politicos and reporters get in a lather over, but that resonates very little with average voters."

This isn't about emails, it's about Trey Gowdy furthering a partisan witch-hunt and Republicans in Congress distracting from their dangerous letter to the Iranian regime. There have been nine different Congressional committees that have held hearings on Benghazi . Secretary Clinton spent more than five hours testifying before the Senate and the House of Representatives and participated in briefings for Members.

Gowdy has been criticized for subpoenaing the State Department for emails already turned over to the Select Committee.

Gowdy and Republican have been caught numerous times trying to use the Benghazi investigation to fire up their base and raise money.

Republican Hypocrisy on Emails. They want to hold former Secretary Clinton to a different standard than they'd hold themselves.

Washington Post : "Jeb Bush used his private e-mail account as Florida governor to discuss security and military issues such as troop deployments to the Middle East and the protection of nuclear plants, according to a review of publicly released records." [Washington Post, 3/15/15]

Wall Street Journal : " But much like with Mrs. Clinton, the decision over which emails should be considered official and which remain private was made by Mr. Bush. It is unclear how many emails Mr. Bush withheld because he deemed them unrelated to state business. "He did exactly what Hillary did," said Barbara Petersen, president of the First Amendment Foundation, a Florida-based government watchdog group. In turning over emails from his private account, she said, Mr. Bush and his staff "went through those emails and decided what were public-record emails and what wasn't. […] The Wall Street Journal reports today: "When the Orlando Sentinel filed a public-records request for the emails from the private account about the legislative session, Mr. Rubio's spokeswoman said they had been deleted." (WSJ, 3/13/15)

Associated Press , "Several current and former governors who are considering a presidential run have found ways to delay or prevent public scrutiny of their communications while in office. That includes Republicans who have criticized their potential Democratic rival." [AP, 3/7/15]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Roll Call , "But the legislative branch, which has effectively exempted itself from the Freedom of Information Act, can keep its emails and other correspondence hidden for 20 years or more — and some forever." [Roll Call, 3/10/15]

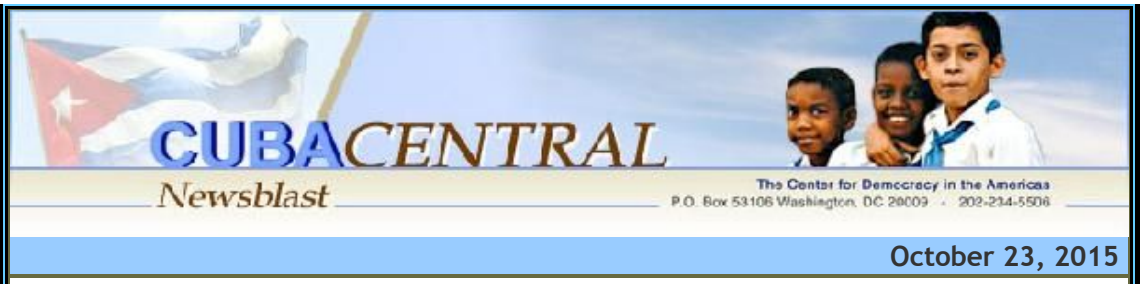
Congressman Jason Chaffetz, who chairs the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee, was caught by ABC News with a personal email address – a gmail account – on his Congressional business card. [ABC, 3/3/15]

In fact, people have called on Trey Gowdy to release his email if he wants to oversee this investigation. [MSNBC, 3/11/15]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sarah Stephens" <sarah@democracyinamericas.org>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 10/23/2015 11:47:29 AM
Subject: Navin R. Johnson's UN Vote Preview

Having trouble viewing this message? Click Here



October 23, 2015

Dear Friends,

Spoiler alert: On Tuesday, the United Nations General Assembly will consider Cuba's resolution on the "Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America on Cuba." The vote is not in doubt; a similar resolution condemning the U.S. embargo was adopted by a 188-2 margin last year. We freely admit that virtually no one takes this process as seriously as we do; news organizations tend to yawn, since the General Assembly has adopted these measures for 23 consecutive years, and are likely to yawn harder this year, now that the State Department has denied the rumor the U.S. would abstain rather than vote against the resolution, taking away any remaining mystery about next week's vote.

What's the big deal? If the press doesn't care, why should you? After all, we know how the vote will go down and, at this new, more hopeful stage in U.S.-Cuba relations, isn't the resolution, the vote, and the analysis just a set piece from another day? That's apparently what U.S. officials believe, who say they tried to get the Cubans to water down the resolution and take greater note of what diplomacy has produced so far, but felt rebuffed. In their telling, that ended the chance for a U.S. abstention. So, is there anything here that should concern any one of us?

Nerd Alert: We think so. Typically, the embargo resolutions request the UN Secretary-General to compile a summary of how UN agencies and each member nation of the General Assembly are affected by the global reach of U.S. economic sanctions. Every year, that report is "embargoed" by the UN until the eve of the vote. When we get our copy, as we did this week, the effect it has on one member of our team would remind Steve Martin fans of Navin R. Johnson's reaction when he discovers his name in the phone book for the first time.

Getting serious for just a moment, we suggest you either read the report yourself here, or take a look at the analysis that follows. In fact, what came back in the Secretary-General's report is pretty interesting, and here are some of the big themes that captured our attention.

The diplomatic breakthrough with Cuba bought the U.S. a lot of good will. Comments filed by Member states - allies and adversaries alike - recognize the Obama administration for talking to Cuba and making an effort to have a respectful policy. While President Obama had in previous years made reforms on travel and remittances, and no country took notice, several nations and UN agencies mentioned the opening of embassies, ending Cuba's listing as a state sponsor of terror,reforms that allow greater travel, the export of building materials to repair homes, and the like as welcomed steps forward. The report has never praised the U.S. before.

But that goodwill stretches only so far. Japan, for example, expressed support for the new,positive direction of the U.S.-Cuba relationship, but will support the resolution condemning the embargo because it imposes hardships on Cubans and because the extraterritorial reach of sanctions violates international law. Similarly, the European Union - allies whose policy toward Cuba is most like ours and welcomed the bilateral breakthrough - also believes "the United States measures are increasingly outdated and should be ended."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Then, there are the comments by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights which says that coercive economic sanctions justified on human rights grounds more often than not fail to improve those conditions, and punish the poorest people, the intended beneficiaries,at the cost of increased unemployment and poverty and risks to their health. It stings to read the example it offers that there is increased risk of mortality in Cuba because our sanctions restrict its access to chemicals that would otherwise protect Cuba's drinking water.

From Stinging to Strange to Stupid. Those who are cynical about the UN, those who are bored writing or reading the annual stories on General Assembly vote, might spend time reading the impact the embargo continues to have on vulnerable Cubans.

In the report, you can read about sanctions blocking Cuban access to diagnostic equipment for monitoring the treatment of leukemia patients; how sanctions prevent the sale to Cuban hospitals of devices critical for pediatric heart surgery patients; how sanctions hinder efforts by the UN Development Program getting medicine and support into Cuba for its 18,257 patients, people of all ages, living with HIV/AIDS. You can read about the month-long cutoff of funds that Cuba's government needed to pay for the housing and food costs for the Cuban doctors who were deployed in West Africa to fight Ebola.

On a lighter note, Cuba wants you to know that while it could be buying baseballs from the Wilson Sporting Goods Co., headquartered in Chicago, Illinois at $5.80 apiece, the embargo forces it to turn to a Japanese baseball manufacturer and spend $9.50 so that each ball can make its way to Cuba.For some reason, Cuba would also like you to know that because of the U.S. embargo, it has to spend over $35,000 more buying saxophones for 334 student musicians than it would if only it could purchase instruments made by Selmer in Elkhart, Indiana. Cuba: Point taken!

The report lays bare the economic contradictions of our policy. The great change in direction offered by President Obama's new policy is that we're supposed to stop strangling Cuba economically and instead give support to what can help make Cubans prosperous.

With the embargo, however, our new policy still has the old effects. For example, the Secretary-General's report is a reminder that we close off to Cuba its natural, most proximate export market.

The embargo stops Cuba from selling its biotechnology and medical services, its nickel,rum, cigars, coffee, lobsters, and honey to the eager consumers it would find in the U.S.A.The embargo stops Cuba from getting credit, it subjects Cuba to exchange rate risk, it places Cuban bank accounts and its funds in jeopardy of being seized, and it bans Cuba from using the U.S. dollar in international transactions. On top of the well-known problems that are due to Cuba's own economic policies, our embargo is a brake on Cuban economic growth and increases the struggles of the Cuban people.

Next Steps? After a really exciting year for U.S.-Cuba diplomacy, and strong leadership in the U.S.by President Obama on behalf of engagement, the Secretary-General's report reminds us that the embargo is still in place and it cuts pretty sharp.

For its part, Cuba's resolution and its lengthy section in the UN Report is focused on nudging President Obama to try harder, to use his executive authority again and again, because Congress doesn't have the votes to lift the embargo.

Cuba wants President Obama to help Cuba secure credit, use the dollar, open the banking system to Cuban entities and financial transactions, allow it to use the International Financial Institutions, and permit U.S. investment. He can do those things, and he should, but a year from now, are we going to be having the same debate, over the same resolution, covered or ignored by the same cynical press corps? Or, are there things that both governments are prepared to do in order to move the process along, further and faster?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This week in Cuba News...

U.S.-CUBA RELATIONS
- U.S will not abstain from annual U.N. vote condemning the embargo on Cuba
- Governor Chris Christie opposes flights between N.J. and Cuba, as new air and rail-to-cruise services are unveiled
- Update: Bill Introduced to Terminate the Wet Foot/ Dry Foot Policy
- Confirmation of U.S. ambassador to Mexico delayed by politics
- U.S. and Cuba agree to long-term shark protection plan

CUBA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS
- State Department Refutes Claims of Cuba's Military Involvement in Syria

IN CUBA
- Cuban artist released from jail after 10 months without a trial in Cuba
- Cuba plans to resume deep water oil exploration in 2016
- Fidel Castro's son blames bureaucratism, conservatives, and corruption for "immobility"

Recommended Reading
- What It's Like to Launch an Independent News Outlet in Cuba , Ernesto London, New York Times
- Capitol Facelift: Restoring a Cuban Landmark , Mark Trevor Burrel, Miami Herald
- Cuba-Illinois trade could boost ag economy, U.S. Rep. Cheri Bustos says , Chuck Sweeny, rrstar.com
- Cuba's Limited Absorptive Capacity Will Slow Normalization , Fulton Armstrong, American University Center for Latin America and Latino Studies

Recommended Viewing
- HBO showing film it saw on 'Cuba's Dylan' at Tampa Film Festival' Paul Guzzo, The Tampa Tribune
- The sensual photography of t erican artist loved by Cub he Ama , CNN
- DIY drone video captures unseen views of Cuba Patrick Oppman, CNN
- Cuba: How A Nation Comes Online , Social Media Week Miami
- VIVA LA (DIGITAL) REVOLUCION , Desmond Boylan, Fusion

U.S.-Cuba Relations

U.S. will not abstain from annual U.N. vote condemning the embargo on Cuba

Despite last year's diplomatic breakthrough, the United States will oppose a U.N. resolution condemning the embargo against Cuba because the draft doesn't "fully reflect" the new spirit of engagement between the U.S. and Cuba, according to an Obama administration official who spoke to the Associated Press this week on background.

"Regrettably the resolution tabled looks very similar to resolutions from previous years, and doesn't appear to fully reflect the spirit of engagement that President Obama has championed as the best way to advance our shared interests with Cuba," the official told the AP. In the unlikely event Cuba amends the text, the official left open the possibility that the U.S. would change its position and abstain. Last year, the resolution said the embargo has cost the Cuban people $833.7 billion, "a number the U.S. would never accept," according to AP.

In September, AP reported that the Obama administration was considering an abstention from the annual U.N. General Assembly vote on October 27, a move which could have sent a powerful signal to Congress of Obama's commitment to end the 55-- year--old embargo.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Governor Chris Christie opposes flights between N.J. and Cuba, as new air and rail-to-cruise services are unveiled

Governor Chris Christie sent a letter to the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey this week demanding that no flights be allowed to leave New Jersey's Newark Liberty Airport until Cuba extradites Joanne Chesimard, also known as Assata Shakur, who fled to Cuba in 1984 seven years after her conviction in connection with the killing of a New Jersey State Highway Patrol trooper.

"It is unacceptable to me as Governor to have any flights between New Jersey and Cuba until and unless convicted cop--killer and escaped fugitive Joanne Chesimard is returned to New Jersey to face justice," Christie wrote in a letter cited by Fox News . During his presidential campaign, Christie called Obama "dead wrong" for allowing the U.S. and Cuba to open embassies; he has also accused U.S. citizens traveling to Cuba of "participating in the oppression" imposed by Cuba's rulers, according to NJ.com .

His letter came after United Airlines applied for permission from the Port Authority to start flights between Newark's Liberty Airport and Havana. "We remain very interested in serving Cuba as soon as we are able to do so, and believe United's service would benefit the airport and the region," United Airlines told NJ.com .

Although General John Degnan, Chairman of the Port Authority, asked United to reconsider its service to Cuba after receiving the letter, the Port Authority Board met on Thursday and "decided the U.S. Customs and Border Protection, not the Port Authority, gets the final say on whether the flights can go ahead," according to the Washington Times.

Meanwhile, Delta Air Lines hopes to expand services to Cuba, according to a published report. Delta recently placed Atlanta--Havana on its schedule and filed to operate on Saturdays beginning April 2, 2016 with a Boeing 737--800, according to Airways News. (There are no seats for sale yet, likely because a bilateral agreement leading to commercial flights has yet to be approved.

Vacations by Rail also announced a new, New York--Miami--Cuba rail--cruise cultural exchange itinerary with trips beginning in February of 2016. Prices for the nine--day cruise that includes visits to Havana, Cienfuegos, Trinidad, Santiago de Cuba, and Baracoa start at $5,353. Since the thaw in diplomatic relations, U.S. travel to Cuba has surged; in September, U.S. visits in 2015, not related to family travel, reached 100,000, exceeding the figure reached in all of 2014. The number of U.S. travelers is likely to rise as more Americans find ways to travel there .

Update: Bill introduced to terminate the Wet Foot/Dry Foot Policy

Today, U.S. Congressman Paul A. Gosar, D.D.S. (AZ-04) introduced a bill that aims to repeal the 1996 Cuban Adjustment Act, also known as the "Wet Foot/Dry Foot" policy, for Cuban immigrants. The bill, the Ending Special National Origin-Based Immigration Programs for Cubans Act of 2015 (H.R. 3818), would remove the special status given to Cubans when they immigrate to the United States and reverse a policy that has been maintained by nine U.S. presidents and Congress. Representatives Dave Brat, Mo Brooks, Scott DesJarlais, Trent Franks, Louie Gohmert, Walter Jones, Steve King and Ted Poe are cosponsors on the bill, which is endorsed by Federation of American Immigration Reform (FAIR)and NumbersUSA.

Confirmation of U.S. ambassador to Mexico delayed by politics

Assistant Secretary of State Roberta Jacobson's appointment to serve as the next U.S. ambassador in Mexico City has been held up in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee since she was nominated by the Obama administration in June, Politico reports. According to Sen. Ben Cardin (MD), the ranking Democrat on the committee, the holdup has "everything to do with the Cuban policy." Jacobson, the State Department's assistant secretary for Western Hemisphere affairs, helped lead the negotiations that reestablished U.S. diplomatic ties to Cuba.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Sen. Marco Rubio (FL) and Sen. Robert Menendez (NJ), both Members of the Foreign Relations Committee, are both obstacles to Jacobson's appointment, according to Politico . Menendez denied that his concerns over her nomination are connected to her participation in the Cuba negotiations. However, Rubio and Menendez have historically opposed and even blocked Obama administration's nominees due to their views on Cuba.

The New York Times Editorial Board condemned "the pettiness of two senators," pointing to a July 15th confirmation hearing when Sen. Menendez questioned Jacobson's trustworthiness without offering evidence calling it into doubt, and also to a hold that Sen. Rubio placed on Oct. 8th to block progress on her nomination without explanation. Chairman Bob Corker (TN) has pledged to move the nomination along, promising a vote at the next committee meeting.

Cardin has called Ms. Jacobson "eminently qualified.

U.S. and Cuba agree to long-term shark protection plan

On Wednesday, Cuba launched an initiative in cooperation with the New York--based Environmental Defense Fund (EDF) to protect sharks whose populations have been in rapid decline, Reuters and Miami Herald report. The action plan reached through two years of collaborative research with EDF will set aside protected areas and better monitor shark catches, in addition to creating size, capture, and seasonal limits on fishermen.

While Cuba has perhaps the best--preserved environment in the region, sharks have been decimated by over fishing. As a result, "[g]etting fishermen involved in collecting data has been critical," Jorge Angulo, senior scientist with Cuba's Center for Marine Research, said in an EDF statement quoted by Reuters .

Cuba's Foreign Relations

State Department Refutes Claims of Cuba's Military Involvement in Syria

On Monday, Mark Toner, Deputy Spokesperson at the U.S. State Department told reporters that State Department experts and the U.S. intelligence community concluded there is no evidence to claims made by the University of Miami in a "Staff Report" that Cuban forces are working in support of the Russian military deployed in Syria.

In response to a reporter's question, "is there anything new on reports that Cuba has been sending troops into Syria?" Toner said:

> Sure. Well, you saw that the Cuban Government, in fact, denied those claims. And we discussed these allegations with our own experts here at State as well as in the intelligence community and have found nothing to substantiate or corroborate any of these reports. And moreover, no U.S. official has -- who would be knowledgeable of Cuban military presence in Syria would corroborate any of these reports. I know one of the articles quoted a U.S. official, but I'm not sure who that was or what their level of expertise or knowledge about this instance or this allegation was.

On October 13th, in a "CUBA BRIEF: CUBAN TROOPS IN SYRIA?" released by the Institute for Cuban and Cuban--American Studies at the University of Miami, the Institute claimed it had "received information that General Leopoldo Citra Frias, Head of the Cuban Armed Forces, visited Syria recently leading a group of Cuban military personnel sent by Cuba in support of Syria's dictator Assad and Russian involvement in that country."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Later, the report went on to say, "If this information about the presence of Cuban troops in Syria is confirmed, it would indicate that General Raúl Castro is more interested in supporting his allies, Russia and Syria, than in continuing to normalize relations with the U.S."

Once "An unnamed U.S. official told Fox News that intelligence reports confirmed that Cuban paramilitary and special forces were on the battlefield in Syria," as Newsmax reported, the conjecture contained in the University of Miami "Cuba Brief" was then reported as fact.

While Fox News reported that Cuban military operatives were spotted in Syria, where they said sources believe the troops are advising President Bashar al--Assad's soldiers in fighting rebel forces backed by the U.S., White House spokesman Josh Earnest said the U.S. government had seen no evidence to indicate the reports of Cuba's presence in Syria were true, according to Reuters and Fox News Latino .

Later, Cuba's government categorically refuted the reports. Gerardo Peñalver, who serves as the Cuban Foreign Ministry's Director General of Bilateral Affairs, released a government statement that denied the "irresponsible and unfounded information regarding the supposed presence of Cuban troops in the Syrian Arab Republic," Reuters reports .

In "Stories on Cubans in Syria Lack One Thing: Evidence of Cubans in Syria," Adam Johnson reminds readers that Cuba hasn't engaged in overseas military operations in decades. However, for those who echoed the claims about Cuban forces in Syria, this wasn't "seen as a red flag that the story is suspect, but rather as an invitation to frame their supposed secret expedition as a significant departure from 25 years of foreign policy."

In Cuba

Cuban artist released from jail after 10 months without a trial in Cuba

Cuban artist Danilo Maldonado, better known as "El Sexto" (The Sixth), was released from jail on Tuesday morning after being held since he was arrested last December for what Cuban authorities called "disorderly conduct." On December 24, 2014, El Sexto was arrested in Cuba on his way to put on a performance art piece named after George Orwell's Animal Farm called "Rebelión en la Granja," which included two pigs decorated with the names Fidel and Raúl, according to the Human Rights Foundation .

In September, Maldonado went on a 22--day hunger strike in jail until Cuban authorities said they were considering his release. Maldonado's case attracted attention from U.S. lawmakers and civil rights groups, like Amnesty International , who placed Maldonado on their "Prisoner of Conscience" list. In a statement to the Washington Post, Erika Guevera Ross, Amnesty International Americas Director, applauded the release by saying, > Danilo's release is great news but he should have never been jailed in the first place. Peacefully expressing an opinion is not a crime... This long awaited positive move must open the door for much needed political reform in Cuba, where people are routinely harassed, arrested and thrown in jail on spurious charges for speaking their minds... This needs to change urgently if Cuba is serious about respecting human rights, including the rights of people opposing the Cuban government.

Assistant Secretary of State Roberta Jacobson tweeted, "#ElSexto released from jail in #Cuba. Live your art, son of @MDCollege. #HumanRights #FundamentalFreedoms" Since his release, he has expressed desires to spend time with family, particularly his daughter, as he recovers from months of hard conditions. Maldonado hopes his case will help "stretch the line of prohibition" in regards to artistic liberty and freedom of expression in Cuba, according to the Miami Herald .

Cuba plans to resume deep water oil exploration in 2016

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Cuba plans to drill exploratory deep--water wells in the Gulf of Mexico by the end of 2016 or beginning of 2017, officials from the state oil monopoly told Reuters on Wednesday. Cuba--Petroleo (Cupet) has contracts with Venezuelan state oil company PDVSA and Angola's Sonangol to drill exploratory wells as deep as 7,000 meters (223,000 ft) in waters of up to 3,000 meters in production.

The announcement that Cuba will drill for oil in deep water creates "an added urgency and the urgency is to do things before drilling begins," as Lee Hunt, chair of the Safe Seas, Clean Seas conference that took place in Havana this week, told CCTV .

Currently, the U.S. trade embargo does not allow Cuba to purchase oil rigs fitted with American drilling and safety devices or oil recovery equipment that could alleviate safety concerns over a major oil spill in Cuba waters.

Previously, as the Tampa Tribune reported this summer, "Five nations with Caribbean shorelines -- Mexico, the Bahamas, Jamaica, Cuba and the U.S. -- spelled out how they'll react when a spill extends beyond one nation's territorial waters." Additionally, the Obama administration's new Cuba policy "calls for the U.S. Department of Commerce to license for export to Cuba any items deemed necessary for protection of U.S. coastal environments."

While executive authority exists for the Obama administration to do more to protect the coast line in advance of Cuba and its partners resuming the search for oil in the Gulf, there is still debate over how expansive that authority is.

Previous efforts by Cuba to find commercially recoverable deposits of oil with several global partners have ended in failure, though experts believe great quantities exist offshore.

For more information about the history of Cuba's search for offshore oil and the impediments posed by the U.S. embargo in protecting our coasts, read this study by the Center for Democracy in the Americas.

Fidel Castro's son blames bureaucratism, conservatives, and corruption for "immobility"

Fidel Castro's third son, Alex Castro, recently blamed "bureaucratism," conservatives, and corruption for the slowness of changes in Cuba in an interview on a Chilean news channel, cited by El Nuevo Herald . "It's moving very slowly. I am one of the people who would like things to move more quickly. There are very conservative people. The conservative currents are dangerous, because a change is for the better and if it is not, you change again," he said without specifying who made up this conservative group.

At the same time, he also said that economic changes on the island are being implemented in ways to avoid subjecting the people to "a policy of shock where many can be on the street, homeless."

Alex Castro is the third son of Fidel; the second from his second marriage to Dalia Soto del Valle. He studied electrical systems engineering and currently works as professional photographer. Although not an official of the state, he has a public image as Fidel's son, and, the opinions he expressed align closely with the perspective of his uncle, President Raúl Castro, who implemented the economic reforms and policy of engagement with the U.S.

Alex Castro complained about the pace of the reforms, particularly the Cuban Communist Party's hope to unify the dual currency system back in 2011. He declared that he hopes to see major progress in foreign investment in Cuba and more opportunities for Cubans who want to grow their business into major corporations. Alex also dismissed rumors that the government might promote political reform to move away from a one--party state, but added "Here in Cuba, the family dynasty does not exist."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Recommended Reading

What It's Like to Launch an Independent News Outlet in Cuba , Ernesto Londono, New York Times
Interview with Elaine Diaz, the first Cuban journalist to receive a Nieman Fellowship at Harvard, after she has launched an independent news outlet Periodismo de Barrio .

Capitol Facelift: Restoring a Cuban Landmark , Mark Trevor Burrel, Miami Herald
Cuba's "Capitolio" is undergoing renovation. When complete, the building will again be the seat of government for the first time since 1959. The restoration, Spain, Italy, Germany, and Mexico have provided material; Cuba has provided funding for the project.

Cuba-Illinois trade could boost ag economy, U.S. Rep. Cheri Bustos says , Chuck Sweeny, rrstar.com
U.S. Rep. Cheri Bustos went to Cuba last week on a trade mission, hoping to increase Illinois agribusiness exports to Cuba. "We also should build relationships with Cubans," Bustos said, "it would be good for Cuban farmers to come to a farm here to learn about modern farming methods. I have a whole tour worked out for them. They're using 50--year--old Russian tractors, which they somehow manage to keep running."

Cuba's Limited Absorptive Capacity Will Slow Normalization , Fulton Armstrong, American University Center for Latin America and Latino Studies
A discussion of Cuba's economic institutions and how they're strength could affect normalization with the U.S.

Recommended Viewing

HBO showing film it saw on 'Cuba's Dylan' at Tampa Film Festival' Paul Guzzo, The Tampa Tribune
"The Poet of Havana" will be televised at 8 p.m. today, October 23, on HBO Latino. HBO discovered the documentary at the sold out world premiere screening in March at Tampa's Gasparilla International Film Festival.

The sensual photography of the American artist loved by Cuba , CNN
Select images from photographer Peter Turnley who has covered Cuba for the past 40 years.

DIY drone video captures unseen views of Cuba , Patrick Oppman, CNN
Drone footage of various scenes of Cuba. After years of strict regulations, Cubans have recently been able to fly drones on the island.

Cuba: How A Nation Comes Online , Social Media Week Miami
Experts discuss the availability of technology and access to social media platforms on the island, the opportunities this has created, the technological tools that are not yet in use in Cuba, the challenges to the introduction or adoption of such tools, and the opportunities that may arise if technology and social media were more widespread on the island.

VIVA LA (DIGITAL) REVOLUCION , Desmond Boylan, Fusion
Photos of people on cellphones at popular WiFi hotspots in Cuba.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Until next time,

The Cuba Central Team

Like our work? Consider a monthly donation!

The Cuba Central Newsblast is produced by the Center for Democracy in the Americas (CDA). CDA is devoted to changing U.S. policy toward Cuba and the other countries of the Americas by basing our relations on mutual respect, fostering dialogue with those governments and movements with which U.S. policy is at odds, and recognizing positive trends in democracy and governance. For more information, check out the CDA website. You can also like us on Facebook or follow us on Twitter .

© 2015 Center for Democracy in the Americas. All rights reserved.

Forward email

SafeUnsubscribe

This email was sent to john.podesta@gmail.com by sarah@democracyinamericas.org | Update Profile/Email Address | Rapid removal with SafeUnsubscribe ™ | About our service provider.

Trusted Email from Constant Contact FREE
Try it FREE today.

Center for Democracy in the Americas | PO Box 53106 NW | Washington | DC | 20009

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 8/13/2014 6:46:02 AM
Subject: Correct The Record Wednesday August 13, 2014 Afternoon Roundup

Correct The Record Wednesday August 13, 2014 Afternoon Roundup:

Tweets:

Pres. Bill Clinton @billclinton: Grateful for the life of Robin Williams, a true talent and a wonderful friend. He will be missed by so many. [8/12/14, 6:34 p.m. EDT]

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: HRC said "best solutions...will come from harnessing energy & creativity of youth" #HRC365 #internationalyouthday http://www.state.gov/secretary/20092013clinton/rm/2012/08/196362.htm … [8/12/14, 6:02 p.m. EDT]

Headlines:

Media Matters for America: "Maureen Dowd Reaches Self-Parody: Links Robin Williams' Death To Hillary Clinton Attack"

"Maureen Dowd's long descent into anti-Clinton self-parody hit a new low last night when she managed to transition from discussing the death of Robin Williams to an attack on Hillary Clinton."

Wonkette: "Cool Robin Williams Story, Maureen Dowd"

"Maureen Dowd has been eating jazz cookies again. One time she met Robin Williams, which makes her think about her friend Michael Kelly, who later died covering the war in Iraq, and that's why Hillary Clinton is a monster. Wait, what?"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Huffington Post: "Obama, Clinton Camps Move To Downplay Schism"

"In the end, advisers said they expect Obama and Clinton to disagree on foreign policy matters. It would be odd if there was no divergence. And more likely than not, Clinton will come off as more aggressive than Obama. But the breaks, they said, shouldn't be over-emphasized, considering the more copious common ground."

The Hill: "White House says media won't see Obama, Clinton hug it out"

"If President Obama and Hillary Clinton hug it out Wednesday night, the news media won't be there to witness it."

National Journal: Ron Fournier: "Groveling, Backpedaling, and 'Hugging It Out:' The Fear of Being Authentic"

"Throughout her long career as a lawyer, a public wife, and a public servant, Hillary Rodham Clinton has been a role model for millions of young people, especially women, entering politics and government. I hope none of them are paying attention now."

Washington Post blog: The Fix: "Hillary Clinton's Barack Obama problem"

"Hillary Clinton made a strategic move to begin to distance herself from President Obama's foreign policy over the weekend. It failed."

The Daily Beast: "So How Hawkish Is Hillary Clinton?"

[Subtitle:] "She's not a neocon. She has a humility they lack. However, she could stand to show a little more humility toward Democratic primary voters."

The New York Times blog: Taking Note: "Hillary Clinton Doesn't Know When to Stop"

"When she runs in 2016, she will want to separate herself from Mr. Obama. That's normal. Doing it now, more than two years ahead of time, is inadvisable."

Slate blog: David Weigel: "Ben Carson's New Book Just Outsold Hillary Clinton's"

"According to Nielsen BookScan, Carson has pushed past Hillary Clinton and become the author of the year's second-best-selling nonfiction book."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Articles:

Media Matters for America: "Maureen Dowd Reaches Self-Parody: Links Robin Williams' Death To Hillary Clinton Attack"

By Ben Dimiero and Hannah Groch-Begley

August 13, 2014

Maureen Dowd's long descent into anti-Clinton self-parody hit a new low last night when she managed to transition from discussing the death of Robin Williams to an attack on Hillary Clinton.

In her August 12 column following the news that Williams died in an apparent suicide, Dowd opened by recounting an interview she once conducted with the comedian, before abruptly transitioning into an attack on Hillary Clinton (emphasis added):

"As our interview ended, I was telling him about my friend Michael Kelly's idea for a 1-900 number, not one to call Asian beauties or Swedish babes, but where you'd have an amorous chat with a repressed Irish woman. Williams delightedly riffed on the caricature, playing the role of an older Irish woman answering the sex line in a brusque brogue, ordering a horny caller to go to the devil with his impure thoughts and disgusting desire.

"I couldn't wait to play the tape for Kelly, who doubled over in laughter.

"So when I think of Williams, I think of Kelly. And when I think of Kelly, I think of Hillary, because Michael was the first American reporter to die in the Iraq invasion, and Hillary Clinton was one of the 29 Democratic senators who voted to authorize that baloney war."

Dowd's bizarre segue was immediately greeted with widespread ridicule from both conservatives and liberals.

Conservative website Twitchy -- which Media Matters agrees with very seldomly -- asked, "How does that make any sense whatsoever?" The site also highlighted criticism from numerous pundits, including NYU journalism professor Jay Rosen, who wondered whether "the New York Times is too embarrassed to edit Maureen Dowd anymore"; Bay Area News Group editor Daniel Jimenez, who called the column "stupefyingly embarrassing" and posited that Dowd was "destroying" the Times' brand; and Forbes contributor Tom Watson, who said the Times should "be ashamed."

Fox News contributor Mary Katharine Ham, writing for conservative site Hot Air, called Dowd's transition from Williams to Clinton "the most graceless, tacky, incoherent segue in recent memory." Referencing Dowd's ill-fated experiment with edible marijuana, Washington Examiner senior writer Philip Klein wrote, "From now on, I'm just gonna assume that Maureen Dowd writes all her columns from a Denver hotel room." (Examiner colleague Tim Carney replied, "I literally assumed there was an editing error.")

Several critics noted Dowd's tendency to turn any news event into an attack on the Clintons. Wonkette's Rebecca Schoenkopf called the piece "as glowing an example of Maureen Dowd's Hillary vendetta as any we've seen yet," while Mother Jones' Kevin Drum asked, "I wonder if there's anything left in the world that doesn't remind Dowd of Hillary Clinton?"

The answer is no. Dowd's bizarre obsession with Hillary Clinton dates back more than two decades, during which she has attacked the former secretary of state and first lady in at least 141 columns. A Media Matters analysis of Dowd's work since 1993 found that the columnist has repeatedly used popular culture references to attack Clinton, managing to link her to everything from the movie The Stepford Wives to a Picasso painting.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Wonkette: "Cool Robin Williams Story, Maureen Dowd"

By Rebecca Schoenkopf

August 13, 2014, 7:43 a.m. EDT

Maureen Dowd has been eating jazz cookies again. One time she met Robin Williams, which makes her think about her friend Michael Kelly, who later died covering the war in Iraq, and that's why Hillary Clinton is a monster. Wait, what?

"As our interview ended, I was telling him about my friend Michael Kelly's idea for a 1-900 number, not one to call Asian beauties or Swedish babes, but where you'd have an amorous chat with a repressed Irish woman. Williams delightedly riffed on the caricature, playing the role of an older Irish woman answering the sex line in a brusque brogue, ordering a horny caller to go to the devil with his impure thoughts and disgusting desire.

"I couldn't wait to play the tape for Kelly, who doubled over in laughter.

"So when I think of Williams, I think of Kelly. And when I think of Kelly, I think of Hillary, because Michael was the first American reporter to die in the Iraq invasion, and Hillary Clinton was one of the 29 Democratic senators who voted to authorize that baloney war."

This is as glowing an example of Maureen Dowd's Hillary vendetta as any we've seen yet. There were 29 Democratic senators (or almost 60 percent of the caucus) who voted to authorize that baloney war, says Maureen Dowd. When she thinks about Michael Kelly (and Robin Williams), does she think about

Blanche Lincoln

Dianne Feinstein

Chris Dodd

Joe Lieberman

Joe Biden

Thomas Carper

Bob Nelson

Max Cleland

Zell Miller

Evan Bayh

Tom Harkin

John Breaux

Mary Landrieu

John Kerry

Jean Carnahan

Max Baucus

Ben Nelson

Harry Reid

Bob Torricelli

Chuck Schumer

John Edwards

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Byron Dorgan

Fritz Hollings

Tom Daschle

Tim Johnson

Maria Cantwell

Jay Rockefeller

or Herb Kohl?

Hint: one of those people is currently vice president of the United States, and is possibly maybe thinking about running for president again too! But when Maureen Dowd remembers her fallen comrade because she met Robin Williams once, she thinks about Hillary Clinton. When doesn't Maureen Dowd think about Hillary Clinton? Never. She never doesn't think about Hillary Clinton. Eggs on toast? Hillary Clinton. Caught in the rain? Hillary Clinton. Watching unexplainably popular Disney flicks? Hillary Clinton. Eating Chinese takeout with "Game of Thrones" on in the background? Hillary Clinton. Watching a TMC marathon of The Birds or whatever? Hillary Clinton. Soused at a drunken Irish Thanksgiving? Well, if that doesn't put every one of us in mind of Hillary Clinton, I don't know what would.

Maureen Maureen Maureen.

Huffington Post: "Obama, Clinton Camps Move To Downplay Schism"

By Sam Stein

August 12, 2014, 6:17 p.m. EDT

For months now, political junkies and the national press corps have been salivating over the prospects of Hillary Clinton and President Barack Obama once again applying proverbial chokeholds to each other.

Conflict seemed inevitable since she -- contemplating a presidential run -- needed distance from him -- wallowing in some of his lowest approval ratings on matters of foreign policy. After a few instances of apparent friction passed without much of a stir, the flames finally erupted over the weekend.

Interviews by the president and his former secretary of state put them at odds over (at least) two matters -- one specific, the other expansive. Clinton told The Atlantic Magazine that the failure of the U.S. to arm the moderate rebels in Syria had left a vacuum that Islamic State extremists had filled. Obama, meanwhile, told The New York Times that it was absurd revisionism to think that sending arms would have changed the course of the Syrian revolution. The president, in that interview, defended a foreign policy based on prudence, planning, and caution. Clinton, meanwhile, derided the Obama-themed tag line, "Don't Do Stupid Shit" as insufficient and uninspiring as an organizing principle.

And there you had it: Enough fodder for Republican trolling, liberal hair-pulling, intra-camp sniping, and a provocative, umbrage-heavy tweet from David Axelrod, Obama's longtime counsel.

If you had flashbacks to the heydays of the 2008 campaign, when foreign policy rifts defined the Democratic presidential primary, you could be forgiven. By midday Tuesday, the emerging wisdom was that Clinton had committed the same mistake that cost her that contest.

And yet, below the surface, several Democrats insisted the rift may underwhelm. Clinton's spokesman put a statement Tuesday afternoon, saying she had reached out to the president to assure him that her interview was not "an attempt to attack him, his policies, or his leadership" and to narrow the perceived schism.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“Secretary Clinton has at every step of the way touted the significant achievements of his presidency, which she is honored to have been part of as his secretary of state,” said Nick Merrill. “While they've had honest differences on some issues, including aspects of the wicked challenge Syria presents, she has explained those differences in her book and at many points since then. Some are now choosing to hype those differences but they do not eclipse their broad agreement on most issues.”

Tellingly, earlier in the day, Merill declined a request for comment, saying there was not much to add to Clinton’s previous remarks. Such reserve usually comes when one thinks a story is on the verge of petering out. Indeed, elsewhere on Tuesday, several other Democrats made the case that the gulf between Clinton and Obama — at least on the specifics -- wasn’t vast.

“We are not talking about big differences in foreign policy,” Howard Dean, the former Democratic National Committee chair and Vermont governor, told The Huffington Post. “I think the Hilary versus Obama stuff is inside the Beltway kerfuffle, irrelevant and typical Washington crap.”

The substantive component of Dean’s point was that on the issue of Syria, Obama and Clinton ended up largely in the same place. While Obama clearly moved slower than Clinton wanted, he did end up sending arms to the rebels -- even if he thought it was futile. In June, he asked for $500 million more.

Clinton also firmly backed the president's push to launch military strikes in September 2013 -- strikes that were called off when it became clear the president lacked congressional support, and a separate deal to rid the country of chemical weapons emerged.

And while Clinton may have expressed regret that the administration moved slowly to put its imprint on Syria’s civil war, she peppered her position with skepticism (“I totally understand the cautions that we had to contend with”) and drew limits to U.S. involvement.

“Most Americans think of engagement and go immediately to military engagement,” Clinton said. “That’s why I use the phrase 'smart power.' I did it deliberately because I thought we had to have another way of talking about American engagement, other than unilateralism and the so-called boots on the ground.”

As for her criticism of “Don’t Do Stupid Shit,” not all old Obama hands were offended.

“I feel like that [phrase] has been misinterpreted. It’s not an organizing principle and it hasn’t been one for Obama,” said Tommy Vietor, a former Obama White House national security spokesman who has advised Clinton during the rollout for her book. “It is a shorthand rebuke to Bush administration.”

The problem, in the end, isn’t so much the substance or tone as the history -- namely, Hillary’s. Her support of the Iraq War spooked liberals in 2008 and she hasn’t earned back their trust since. In a phone conversation, Dean -- the first Democrat to run for president on an explicitly anti-war platform -- seemed to urge people to take a second look. He praised Obama’s foreign policy as laid out in his West Point address (“He is not interested in getting in a scrum with a lot of bad guys”) and offered confidence that Clinton would not deviate.

“She is very, very smart,” said Dean. “And she is more experienced with respect to foreign policy, really, than probably any American president since, gee, I don’t know ... Wow, you’d have to think how far back. Eisenhower I guess. I guess with the exception of George H.W. Bush.”

That may seem like wishful thinking to some. Certainly, there is ample evidence that Clinton’s hawkishness is not an act, meant to prop up the perception of her toughness, but an honest reflection of her worldview. Her insistence that Iran have no uranium enrichment capability, and her unbending, almost defiant, support for Israel in that same Jeffrey Goldberg interview suggest as much.

But Clinton’s defenders are certainly aware of the downside of that. Over the weekend, one loyalist told The Huffington Post that what made him nervous, heading into a presumptive 2016 presidential run, was disaffection on the left over matters of foreign policy. Clinton's remarks to The Atlantic likely caused their share of angina.

In the end, advisers said they expect Obama and Clinton to disagree on foreign policy matters. It would be odd if there was no divergence. And more likely than not, Clinton will come off as more aggressive than Obama. But the breaks, they said, shouldn’t be over-emphasized, considering the more copious common ground.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“Having a different point of view on policy than your secretary is not a rift. It is why you have smart advisers around,” said Vietor. “The notion that she has to be lockstep is ridiculous, as is the notion that he demands fealty. He is not a guy who is easily aggrieved by comments like this.”

The Hill: “White House says media won't see Obama, Clinton hug it out”

By Justin Sink

August 13, 2014, 1:00 p.m. EDT

If President Obama and Hillary Clinton hug it out Wednesday night, the news media won't be there to witness it.

The press won't be allowed into the birthday party where Clinton and Obama will meet, White House spokesman Eric Schultz told reporters on Martha's Vineyard.

"I appreciate the request, but I do think this is a private social gathering for someone’s birthday, so it’s going to be hard to bring all of you lovely people in," Schultz said.

The event will be the first time Clinton and Obama will see each other since the former Secretary of State made several comments critical of the president's foreign policy, including that “don’t do stupid stuff” is not “an organizing principle” worthy of “great nations.”

A spokesman for Clinton said the remarks were not intended as an attack on Obama and that the former first lady was looking forward to "hugging it out" at the birthday party of the wife of a prominent Democratic fundraiser.

But Schultz swatted down reporters' requests to be present for the highly anticipated gathering.

“I believe the president and Secretary Clinton have had many hugs over the years, and many of them have been caught on camera,” Schultz said.

The White House spokesman said that Obama “appreciated” that Clinton had already phoned him over the interview, in which she argued Obama’s restrained approach to the civil war in Syria had created a vacuum that enabled the rise of Sunni extremists now targeting minorities in Iraq.

Schultz defended the president, saying Obama was concerned that U.S. weapons “could have fallen into the hands” of ISIS if he had begun providing rebels with weapons earlier. He also said that few would agree it was wrong to avoid doing “stupid stuff.”

Clinton’s comments had clearly irritated people close to Obama.

David Axelrod, Obama’s former campaign adviser, on Tuesday took a veiled shot at Clinton, tweeting that “‘don’t do stupid stuff’ means stuff like occupying Iraq in the first place, which was a tragically bad decision.”

Clinton voted for legislation authorizing military action in Iraq, a decision she said in her new memoir was a mistake.

The Obama and Clinton camps have sought to play down the dispute by highlighting the get together on Wednesday.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Schultz the administration was "looking onward and upward" after the rift, and described the friendship between Obama and Clinton as "close and resilient."

“The president appreciates her counsel and advice, but more importantly, he appreciates her friendship,” Schultz said.

Schultz did offer one crumb of news for 2016-watchers, however: President Obama will meet with Vice President Biden — among Clinton's biggest rivals for the Democratic presidential nomination — when he briefly returns to Washington next week.

National Journal: “Groveling, Backpedaling, and 'Hugging It Out:' The Fear of Being Authentic”

By Ron Fournier

August 13, 2014

[Subtitle:] Long a role model for young Americans, especially women, Hillary Clinton rewards bad-boy behavior.

Throughout her long career as a lawyer, a public wife, and a public servant, Hillary Rodham Clinton has been a role model for millions of young people, especially women, entering politics and government. I hope none of them are paying attention now.

The statement she issued Tuesday to calm an offended Obama White House was exactly the type of behavior you don't want your daughters modeling—groveling to a thin-skinned boss, eating her own words, and swallowing her pride by "hugging it out."

It's silly, really, this entire Obama versus Clinton frame. Barack Obama, Hillary Clinton, and former President Bill Clinton never looked smaller than when they were race- and sex-baiting during the 2008 Democratic nomination fight. They never looked bigger than when they covered the scars and formed a genuine "Team of Rivals" in the Obama White House.

Now they're back to the petty. And over what? Hillary Clinton's criticism of Obama was fair and smart—and it might even be right. She rebuked his foreign policy principle of "Don't do stupid shit," arguing that Obama should have armed the Syrian rebels to prevent the creation and growth of an Islamic state.

She didn't call him an idiot. She didn't say he was a bad leader. In fact, she praised the president more than she criticized him, and her critique gave Obama an opportunity to better explain his foreign policy principles. Who doesn't want what Obama plans to do about this scary new world order?

Instead, he acted like a typical politician. Mr. Hope-and-Change dialed the 20th century and sicced his attack dogs on Clinton. His top consultant, David Axelrod, tied her to President George Bush's decision to invade Iraq, as if none of what's occurred in the Mideast these past six years is Obama's responsibility.

I made a mistake at the end of my column Tuesday, "The Audacity to Be Authentic: Hillary Clinton's Risky Hedge Against Obama." For the first 16 paragraphs, I challenged conventional wisdom that Clinton was distancing herself from Obama and that doing so was an obvious political victory. I noted that Clinton's remarks, consistent with her long-held interventionist views, actually ran counter to those of a majority of the public, especially the Democratic base. Why would she be willing to do that? "Call me naïve," I concluded "but maybe Clinton is simply being honest."

I was naïve.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

A few hours after that column posted, Clinton issued this statement through a spokesperson:

“Earlier today, the Secretary called President Obama to make sure he knows that nothing she said was an attempt to attack him, his policies or his leadership. Secretary Clinton has at every step of the way touted the significant achievements of his presidency, which she is honored to have been part of as his secretary of State. While they've had honest differences on some issues, including aspects of the wicked challenge Syria presents, she has explained those differences in her book and at many points since then. Some are now choosing to hype those differences but they do not eclipse their broad agreement on most issues. Like any two friends who have to deal with the public eye, she looks forward to hugging it out when she they see each other tomorrow night.”

There are several problems with her statement.

It's inaccurate. Clinton certainly did criticize some of Obama's policies, most directly with the "stupid stuff" formulation.

It's inconsistent. She denies attacking "him, his policies or his leadership," and two sentences later notes "honest differences." If you can't be honest about "honest differences," what are you going to be honest about?

It's borderline demeaning, like a subordinate trying to get back in the boss's good graces. Clinton is an accomplished person who has challenged glass ceilings. She shouldn't have to come even close to apologizing for her opinions.

Her interview with my Atlantic colleague Jeffrey Goldberg wasn't "hyped," it was covered fairly, and now she's trying to blame the messenger.

It's too cute by half, too Clintonian. She's trying to distinguish her policies from Obama's without upsetting all the president's men. She can't have it all.

For young people who might be paying attention to politics, I hope they don't take away the wrong lessons. They're already abandoning government and politics in alarming numbers.

Clinton didn't make a mistake challenging a male authority figure. She wasn't wrong to speak her mind. Her aspirations are not dependent on her "hugging it out." The lesson here is to be true to yourself. Stick to your guns. Be authentic. After all, that's really what Americans want in a leader.

Washington Post blog: The Fix: “Hillary Clinton’s Barack Obama problem”

By Chris Cillizza

August 13, 2014, 10:49 a.m. EDT

Hillary Clinton made a strategic move to begin to distance herself from President Obama's foreign policy over the weekend. It failed.

Clinton's team, concerned about the blowback from Obamaworld for her critique of his "don't do stupid stuff" comments, put a statement out Tuesday evening seeking to quiet the tensions. "Earlier today, the Secretary called President Obama to make sure he knows that nothing she said was an attempt to attack him, his policies, or his leadership," said Clinton spokesman Nick Merrill.

That statement, of course, is not, technically, accurate. If Clinton wasn't talking about Obama in saying that "don't do stupid stuff" wasn't an organizing principle for foreign policy then c-a-t spells "dog". This is a clean-up-the-mess statement; the Clinton people know that it stretches credulity but don't really care -- they needed to publicly defuse the tension before the two meet on Martha's Vineyard tonight (more on that below) and this, they believe, is the best way to do so.

But, the sturm und drang of the past 72 hours proves two things: 1) The kumbaya story that the Obama and Clinton teams tell about their relationship isn't the whole story and 2) Clinton's attempts to distance herself from some of the less-popular policies of the Obama Administration will be more difficult than her team may have realized.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On the first point, there has been much effort over the past six years -- from people in both camps -- to paint the relationship between the erstwhile 2008 rivals as one of professional respect and even personal friendship. But, old wounds rarely heal over so easily and it's clear that, at least for some, the tensions that dominated the race for president six years ago remain.

In the wake of Clinton's critique-except-it's-not of Obama's foreign policy, David Axelrod, Obama's closest political adviser sent out this tweet:

[TWEET]

Now, one tweet does not a rift make. But, there was other pushback -- mostly private and to journalists -- from the Obama camp that suggested Clinton was re-writing history in advance of her 2016 bid.

That tension flies in the face of the story Clinton has been working on building for months in the lead-up to her expected 2016 bid: That she was fusing the best of the Obama world and the best of her team into one superteam. Ready for Hillary, the super PAC functioning as Clinton's campaign-in-waiting, has hired Jeremy Bird and Mitch Stewart, the two men who led the Obama ground game, and Tommy Vietor, a former Obama campaign spokesman turned national security communicator in the White House, helped Clinton with her recent book tour.

The reality is -- and always has been -- that the papering-over of the nastiness of the 2008 campaign was somewhat flimsy. By all accounts, the two principals respect one another but, at the staff level, some lingering hard feelings remain.

Those hard feelings have begun to crop up as the political paths of Obama and Clinton begin to diverge in earnest -- a process that will continue over the coming weeks and months. That reality -- coupled with the fact, as Republicans are quick to remind reporters, that Clinton was Obama's top diplomat for four years, will make the process of creating some distance between the two on a policy front difficult for the former Secretary of State.

What Clinton really wants to spend the next year (or so) doing is laying out her vision for the future of the country -- a vision that, at least from what we have seen of it to date, borrows far more from the policies of her husband's time in office than those of President Obama. That means, at least in part, that she wants to make clear some of the differences between she and the president, particularly in the foreign policy space.

The problem that raises for Clinton, however, is that among Democratic base voters -- particularly among African Americans -- Obama remains incredibly popular and any attempt to "get away" from him will be met with resistance. That distancing goes double for Clinton who is always and forever fighting a battle over authenticity -- whether she genuinely has a core set of beliefs or whether she takes positions solely for political positioning.

Working in Clinton's favor is the fact that there appears to be no serious challenger to her in a primary, which, theoretically, allows her more leeway in positioning herself as a centrist of sorts. Of course, if Clinton did continue to antagonize the Obama forces and the liberal left, there is the possibility that someone on the sidelines right now -- Elizabeth Warren, anyone? -- could step forward although that remains very unlikely.

The back and forth over the last 72 hours -- and the incredibly awkward "hugging it out" that a Clinton spokesman suggested might happen at the party both the president and the former Secretary of State will be at tonight -- should serve as a reminder that the relationship between the Obamans and the Clintonites is like an iceberg: What you see above the water is only a small part of what's really going on under the surface.

The Daily Beast: "So How Hawkish Is Hillary Clinton?"

By Michael Tomasky

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

August 13, 2014

[Subtitle:] She's not a neocon. She has a humility they lack. However, she could stand to show a little more humility toward Democratic primary voters.

Okay, everybody. Deep breath, back to equilibrium. Yes, Hillary Clinton talked some smack on Barack Obama to Jeff Goldberg in that interview. But beyond those three or four sentences—and when yanked out of their larger context, sentences like that always carry more shock value than they do in context—did she really say very much that set her dramatically apart from Barack Obama? How different, really, would a Clinton foreign policy be?

Despite Clinton's very public efforts to make up with the president, the consensus verdict over these last three hyperventilating days is: dramatically different. Hillary's a neocon! Robert Kagan, operatic Iraq war enthusiast, admires her. MoveOn, the grassroots liberal group, snarled at her like a tiger—specifically, one freshly on the prowl for a non-Clinton alternative for 2016: "Secretary Clinton…should think long and hard before embracing the same policies advocated by right-wing war hawks that got America into Iraq in the first place and helped set the stage for Iraq's troubles today."

Having read through the interview a few times now and talked to some folks about it, I'm less convinced that the differences—with two key exceptions—are that dramatic. But those exceptions are big ones, and they make me wonder not only about any future Clinton foreign policy priorities, but about her political judgment today.

The main, non-headline-making takeaway from the whole interview is that she wants a bigger American footprint in the world than Obama seems to. Okay, we've known that, but she spelled out what that means at some length. And she's actually pretty nuanced about it. She does not mean, as people to her left reflexively seem to think she means, going bombs away. Money quote:

"I think we've learned about the limits of our power to spread freedom and democracy. That's one of the big lessons out of Iraq. But we've also learned about the importance of our power, our influence, and our values appropriately deployed and explained. If you're looking at what we could have done that would have been more effective, would have been more accepted by the Egyptians on the political front, what could we have done that would have been more effective in Libya, where they did their elections really well under incredibly difficult circumstances but they looked around and they had no levers to pull because they had these militias out there. My passion is, let's do some after-action reviews, let's learn these lessons, let's figure out how we're going to have different and better responses going forward."

What did she just say there? No Iraqs. Good. But more aggressive pushing on Egyptian moderates to form political parties, get in the game, and not leave the competition to just military vs. Muslim Brotherhood (she had spoken at length on this earlier). And more follow-through in Libya. I don't think those are positions that would have her marching in the shoot-'em-up parade next to John McCain. A bit later, Goldberg gently challenged her that the constituency in America for her middle-ground views between Obama and the neocons might not exist, and she acknowledged that by making a good point in her own defense: "…most Americans think of engagement and go immediately to military engagement. That's why I use the phrase 'smart power.' I did it deliberately because I thought we had to have another way of talking about American engagement, other than unilateralism and the so-called boots on the ground."

Sentiments like these left me, and others, with the feeling that differences with Obama in a lot of cases would not be that great—more presence, more follow-through, more diplomatic pressure, but not war-mongering. Heather Hurlburt, who worked for President Clinton and is now at the New America Foundation, told me: "Clinton and her closest advisers are more rooted in a style of visible, public American leadership developed in the 1990s, before the catastrophes of the 2000s, to which Obama's personal style is in many ways a reaction. But Clinton's assessment of the world—that the United States wields great power, has great responsibilities, and best exercises both in close coordination with others—is not fundamentally different."

Brian Katulis of the Center for American Progress largely agreed, but he pointed to Clinton's talk of smart power and her identification of "prosperity" as a central organizing principle as providing something of a contrast. "I don't see much difference here in substance, but perhaps there is one of emphasis. Clinton talks about this more. Of course, President Obama continues to have this element in his foreign-policy outreach," Katulis told me. "But Clinton seems to keep this concept closer to the core of her world view, which places less emphasis on limits than Obama does."

There were two issues, though, in addition to the much-discussed Syria example, where Clinton's comments were alarming. The first was her balls-to-the-wall defense of Benjamin Netanyahu. First of all, as Peter Beinart wrote for Ha'aretz, she left a lot of inconvenient facts out of her narrative. She sounded like she was reading from an AIPAC press release—particularly surprising, said Matthew Duss, the new president of the Foundation for Middle East Peace, given the way the Netanyahu government has been trashing Clinton's own successor, John Kerry. "To completely back Netanyahu both on substance—about having control of security in the West Bank—and to do so after several weeks in which the Netanyahu government has really gone out of its way to embarrass and humiliate your successor…that's really troubling," says Duss.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The other issue on which Clinton got pretty far out there was on Iran and the current nuclear negotiations. The position she took in the interview—no working centrifuges for Iran, or a very small number of "discrete, constantly inspected" centrifuges—sounds much harder-line than the Clinton of 2010, when she told the BBC that Iran should be "entitled to the peaceful use of civil nuclear energy." So maybe she's just being politically crafty here, but that's not much of a defense. The potential long-term implication is that the Obama administration could negotiate a deal with Iran that would permit civilian centrifuges to operate, and then a President Clinton could come into office and derail the deal—a deal that she, as secretary of state, had helped forge! "Again, it's troubling to see her weigh in on the side of U.S. hardliners," says Duss.

Those hardliners don't all feel like Kagan. I emailed with Elliott Abrams about this yesterday, and he thinks that Clinton "has moved all over the place," from "totally pro-Israel" as a New York senator to not so much as secretary of state, and now apparently back again. "And as Gates's book reminds us, her views on the Iraq surge were apparently politically motivated rather than sincere," Abrams continued. "Her track record is hard to decipher, and most of what she billed as major speeches are just laundry lists of problems we face. There's no sense of priorities or strategy."

I don't think she's a neocon hawk. I think she's what we might call a muscular internationalist. And yes, there are differences. The main one is about American hegemony: It is the neocons' core belief that America is and must remain the world's sole superpower and can do whatever it needs to do, unilaterally or otherwise, to maintain that status. Obama is a cautious internationalist, and on the whole I see Clinton as closer to Obama than to McCain. Yes, she agreed with McCain on Syria, but arming the Free Syrian Army is essentially a muscular-internationalist position for which the neocons are having to settle. And unlike McCain, who preens his way around Washington saying that that ISIS's strength is entirely Obama's fault, at least Clinton says, "I don't think we can claim to know" what would've happened had the FSA been armed two years ago. That's a humility the neocons lack. It's a crucial distinction, and it's a pretty damn important quality in a president.

However, the interview suggests she may lack another kind of humility—toward the Democratic primary voter. Yes, she's probably invincible. There appears to be (emphasis added) no one out there who is like Obama was in 2008—someone, that is, who could knock her off. And if her hawkishness is the left's concern, then Elizabeth Warren isn't the answer, since foreign policy isn't her portfolio. So it's hard to picture Clinton not getting the nomination.

Still, she should remember that it was in large part her hawkishness—her pro-Iraq war vote—that cost her the nomination in 2008. She should be aware that U.S. public opinion, and certainly Democratic primary-voter opinion, while not exactly pro-Palestinian, is not as enthusiastically pro-Israel as it once was. And she should keep in mind that the foreign-policy establishment of Washington, D.C., whose favor she's clearly currying in sections of this interview, consists of only a few thousand voters. To the millions who'll vote in Democratic primaries, she'll need to be considerably clearer about those differences between her and the neocons.

The New York Times blog: Taking Note: "Hillary Clinton Doesn't Know When to Stop"

By Andrew Rosenthal

August 13, 2014, 12:33 p.m. EDT

It's hard to dispute that Hillary Clinton is the smartest person in most rooms. That's why The Times editorial board endorsed her in the Democratic primary in 2008 over Barack Obama.

She just doesn't know when to stop. It was her problem when her husband was in the Oval Office. It was her problem in 2008, and it's her problem now.

In her failed run for the Democratic nomination, Mrs. Clinton's team cynically introduced race into the campaign, repeatedly. Should the country be more excited about a woman president or a black president? Had African Americans really needed a white leader to achieve their civil rights goals?

The "red phone" ad was a marvel of inappropriateness. It questioned Mr. Obama's leadership abilities, tried to terrify people about the crisis that would follow his election.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Mrs. Clinton gleefully led the way to making the Pennsylvania primary of 2008 a low point in campaigning. She put Mr. Obama in the same list of disasters as the 1929 stock market crash, Pearl Harbor, the Cuban missile crisis, the cold war and 9/11. She talked about how she would be prepared to “obliterate” Iran if it attacked Israel.

Mrs. Clinton lost and Mr. Obama made her secretary of state – a mixed act of graciousness and smart politics. And Mrs. Clinton did well in that job until she decided to retire in 2013 and begin her run for the presidency in 2016.

Pretty soon, her inability to stop when she should stop began to show itself. There was the bizarre interview about gay marriage in which she ended up snapping at the host of Fresh Air, Terry Gross, for daring to ask about her evolving views on same-sex marriages, instead of simply answering the question.

The most recent episode, about Mr. Obama’s toughness in foreign affairs and her supposed opposition to his Syria policies while she was Secretary of State, takes Mrs. Clinton’s lack of an internal braking mechanism to new heights.

Maureen Dowd did a masterful job this morning of summing it up.

I’ll just add a couple of thoughts and questions. First, Mrs. Clinton did debate Mr. Obama on Syria. But in the end, she was part of the decision he made and she can’t wiggle out of that. (Just as she can’t wiggle out of her vote for the invasion of Iraq when she was in the Senate.) And the timing of her criticism was very strange, just before Mr. Obama started dropping bombs in Iraq. Her office said the interview had been long scheduled, but I find it hard to believe that Mrs. Clinton was not briefed on what was coming in Iraq, as a former secretary of state. And she still chose to attack.

When she runs in 2016, she will want to separate herself from Mr. Obama. That’s normal. Doing it now, more than two years ahead of time, is inadvisable.

Slate blog: David Weigel: “Ben Carson's New Book Just Outsold Hillary Clinton's”

By David Weigel

August 13, 2014, 12:37 p.m. EDT

It's hard to gauge how seriously to take the political ambitions of Dr. Ben Carson. For starters, it's unclear exactly what his ambitions are. He lives in blue Maryland, where Democrats have comfortably won every Senate race since 1986, and where Democrat Anthony Brown is expected to soon become the state's first black governor. He has formed a PAC, and he's heading to Iowa this month -- I talked to local Carson fans who are trying to get people to his book tour stops in the western and eastern parts of the state. But as a public speaker, he's sort of unfocused, spending lots of time re-litigating the latest liberal calumny against him.

And yet. According to Nielsen BookScan, Carson has pushed past Hillary Clinton and become the author of the year's second-best-selling nonfiction book. Carson's One Nation has sold 224,990 copies, a massive success for his publisher, Random House. (The book came out under the conservative Sentinel imprint.) Clinton's Hard Choices has sold 222,822 copies. The two of them have been bested only by Bill O'Reilly, whose Killing Jesus has sold 228,811 copies. They are joined in the blockbuster circle by Michael Lewis (189,726 copies of Flash Boys), Charles Krauthammer (177,121 copies of his column collection) and Thomas Piketty (158,668 copies of Capital). Carson's book is substantially shorter than Clinton's, and retails for $9.05 less, but he gets bragging rights if he decides to jump into politics.

Oh, and Elizabeth Warren's A Fighting Chance has sold 71,930 copies. You were the one who asked.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Stephen Miles" <stephen@winwithoutwar.org>
To: "Stephen Miles" <stephen@winwithoutwar.org>
Date: 9/6/2012 11:28:59 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Win Without War calls for action to prevent war with Iran, Sept 19-20th

(Apologies for cross-posting)

Just wanted to pass along the following announcement from Win Without War. The Win Without War coalition has decided to call for coordinated grassroots action in September to help prevent war with Iran. We are specifically urging organizations to help drive calls and emails to Congress on September 19-20th. As you'll see from the information below, we have a number of organizations on board already, but the more we can get, the more impactful this effort will be. At this point we are encouraging calls/emails to both the House and the Senate if organization's capacity allows for it. If narrower targeting is helpful, we would urge activists to target the Senate and a further narrow list of Senate targets is available upon request. As the message below says, we'll be providing more information next week, but I just wanted to make sure everyone saw this today.

Please feel free to contact me with any questions, comments or concerns.

All the best,

-Steve

Announcing Days of Action to Prevent War with Iran - September 19-20th

The Win Without War coalition is calling for a collaborative day(s) of action, September 19-20, to send calls (and emails) to Congress to prevent war with Iran.

Over the past several weeks, the talk of war with Iran has severely ratcheted up. While the media continues to debate the likelihood of a potential Israeli military strike against Iran, the Israeli political leadership increasingly shows signs of preparing for war. Meanwhile, Iran has declared that it will view any attack as the joint work of the U.S. and Israel and respond against both, almost ensuring a broader military conflict. Here at home we have become increasingly concerned that Members of Congress, indeed many previously strong allies, are either unwilling to speak out against war or fear doing so because of a perceived lack of support from their constituents. And while all of this goes on, we remain dangerously close to an inadvertent war with Iran, a reality brought home by U.S. naval accidents this summer in the Persian Gulf.

Iran poses serious challenges for the United States and Israel that must be dealt with, but military action and war will only increase these challenges at a dramatic cost.

It's time to tell Congress that we must prevent a war with Iran. That is why we're asking like-minded organizations to take part in a coordinated action, sending calls and messages to Congress on September 19-20th.

Members of Congress need to hear from their constituents who know that while we all want to prevent Iran from acquiring nuclear weapons, military action is not the answer. As the past decade of war has shown us, wars seldom follow the scripts their advocates claim they will, and the neocons pushing war with Iran now have proven to be particularly horrible at understanding what will happen once the bombs start falling. Yet Members of Congress are being lobbied hard to be more hawkish on Iran. Now they need to hear from those of us who believe that another war in the Middle East would be devastatingly costly and counterproductive and must be prevented.

A number of Win Without War member organizations will be taking part in this action, including CREDO Action, USAction, AFSC, Sojourners, PeaceAction, WAND and others.

We encourage organizations to issue an action alert on September 19th or 20th (or as close to these dates as possible) urging your activists to call Congress and tell them "Give Diplomacy a Chance, No War with Iran." At this point, Congress is one of the chief proponents of military action, and without our voices, Members of Congress will continue to push for war. They must hear from their constituents telling them that now is the time to prevent war, not to start one.

Please email Stephen Miles (stephen@winwithoutwar.org) directly if your organization is able to participate in this action. In the coming days we will provide further message guidance and can help craft action alerts upon request.

We know that right now everyone is in the midst of electoral craziness. With the conventions wrapping up and the debates not far away, many will be preoccupied with numerous, important efforts. However, the threat of war with Iran is real and we must use what capacity we have to stand up to help prevent it. As one of our members recently said, 'activists, organizations and elected officials are waiting to see what we say about this. If we believe that we must avoid a war with Iran, it is up to us to stand up now and say something.'

Please join us September 19-20th in telling Congress to prevent war with Iran.

As always, please feel free to contact us with any questions, comments or concerns.

All the best,

-Stephen Miles

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Coalition Coordinator
Win Without War

--
Stephen Miles
(504) 289-3594 - cell
stephen@winwithoutwar.org

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to dubois.sara@gmail.com

E-mail dubois.sara@gmail.com with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jennifer Palmieri" <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com>
"Brian Fallon" <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com>
john@algpolling.com
"Betsaida Alcantara" <balcantara@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 10/4/2015 8:35:32 AM
Subject: RE: BS and guns

Being added today. Plus Betsaida who is collecting. Edits are do at 5 pm if any other commetns.

From: Mandy Grunwald [mailto:gruncom@aol.com]
Sent: Sunday, October 4, 2015 3:30 PM
To: bfallon@hillaryclinton.com ; john@algpolling.com
Cc: kofferdahl@hillaryclinton.com ; arenteria@hillaryclinton.com ; caitlin@grunwald-communications.com ; creynolds@hillaryclinton.com ; dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com ; david@db-research.com ; ellen.esterhay@gmmb.com ; ha16@hillaryclinton.com; jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com ; jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com ; Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com ; jbenenson@bsgco.com ; jp66@hillaryclinton.com ; john.podesta@gmail.com ; kfinney@hillaryclinton.com ; kschake@hillaryclinton.com ; mmarshall@hillaryclinton.com ; mharris@hillaryclinton.com ; mvlacich@hillaryclinton.com ; mfisher@hillaryclinton.com ; Mona@algpolling.com ; oshur@hillaryclinton.com ; re47@hillaryclinton.com ; slatham@hillaryclinton.com ; sbay@hillaryclinton.com ; scurrie@bsgco.com ; tgoff@hillaryclinton.com ; tcarrk@hillaryclinton.com ; vanand@hillaryclinton.com ; hstone@hillaryclinton.com
Subject: Re: BS and guns

There have been a couple stories in the last few days about past HRC positions on gun control, like this one in Buzzfeed about HRC OPPOSING federal gun control standards and arguing (as on minimum wage now) that states had different needs.

http://www.buzzfeed.com/christophermassie/clinton-in-2008-it-doesnt-make-sense-for-federal-government#.nfQAQdNqz

I also saw something about her supporting a 25% tax on gun sales back in 1993.

I didn't see q and a on either of these in the briefing.

Mandy Grunwald
Grunwald Communications
202 973-9400

-----Original Message-----
From: Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >
To: John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com >
Cc: Kate Offerdahl <kofferdahl@hillaryclinton.com >; Amanda Renteria <arenteria@hillaryclinton.com >; caitlin <caitlin@grunwald-communications.com>; Christina Reynolds <creynolds@hillaryclinton.com >; Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >; David Binder <david@db-research.com >; Ellen Esterhay <ellen.esterhay@gmmb.com >; Huma Abedin <ha16@hillaryclinton.com >; Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >; Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com >; Jim Margolis <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com >; Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com >; John Podesta <jp66@hillaryclinton.com >; John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >; Karen Finney <kfinney@hillaryclinton.com >; Kristina Schake <kschake@hillaryclinton.com >; Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com >; Marlon Marshall <mmarshall@hillaryclinton.com >; Maya Harris <mharris@hillaryclinton.com >; Mike Vlacich <mvlacich@hillaryclinton.com >; Milia Fisher <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com >; Mona Thinavongsa <Mona@algpolling.com >; Oren Shur <oshur@hillaryclinton.com >; Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com >; Sara Latham <slatham@hillaryclinton.com >; Sawsan Bay <sbay@hillaryclinton.com >; Shannon Currie <scurrie@bsgco.com >; Teddy Goff <tgoff@hillaryclinton.com >; Tony Carrk <tcarrk@hillaryclinton.com >; Varun Anand <vanand@hillaryclinton.com >; Heather Stone <hstone@hillaryclinton.com >
Sent: Sun, Oct 4, 2015 3:24 pm
Subject: Re: BS and guns

Circling back around on guns as a follow up to the Friday morning discussion: the Today show has indicated they definitely plan to ask bout guns, and so to have the discussion be more of a news event than her previous times discussing guns, we are going to background reporters tonight on a few of the specific proposals she would support as President - universal background checks of course, but also closing the gun show loophole by executive order and imposing manufacturer liability.

On Friday, October 2, 2015, John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com > wrote:

> Here is the BS interview last night on tragedy/guns last night I referenced on the call where he punts on gun manufacturer liability. He also keeps using the term “sensible” gun legislation
>
> MSNBC’s All in With Chris Hayes: Bernie Sanders on Gun Control and Oregon Shooting
>
> Link: http://mms.tveyes.com/PlaybackPortal.aspx?SavedEditID=5d507cd6-3074-4f06-aabe-41c26000012a
>
> Rough Transcript

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

CHRIS HAYES: i just spoke with presidential candidate Bernie Sanders, vermont senator, and i asked him for his reaction to today's mass shooting.
BERNIE SANDERS: you know, chris, i saw the president's statement. and i know him well enough to know that this was very personal for him, that he is disgusted, he is angry, he is sick and tired, as we all are, of sending our condolences to the families of people who have been murdered in cold blood. and the president is right. condolences are not enough. we've got to do something. we have to stop shooting at each other. we need sensible gun control legislation. and by the way, we need to significantly improve mental health services in the united states of america. and i pledge to do everything that i can in both of those areas.
CHRIS HAYES: yeah, if you were elected president is this something that would be a priority for you? have you thought about how you go about putting in place the policies that could reduce the amount of mass shootings we see?
BERNIE SANDERS: well, i don't think anyone has all the answers, but i think some of the components are first of all guns should not be in the hands of people who should not have them. people who have criminal records, people who are mentally ill. and that means we need a very strong instant background check system. number two, we have a huge loophole right now in gun legislation in that unlicensed gun dealers can sell guns at these gun shows. that's the gun show loophole, which has to be eliminated. and in my view, which is somewhat controversial, i don't think in this country we should be selling or distributing weapons of mass -- weapons that are designed just to kill people, automatic weapons, military type weapons. and that's what i voted for. but what we need, chris, as a nation is to get beyond the shouting. some people want to ban every gun in america and some people believe in nothing at all. i think the vast majority of the american people, as the president indicated, including gun owners, and i know that's true here in vermont, want sensible gun control legislation and they also believe that we should have more access to mental health facilities and counselors than we presently do. the bottom line is if somebody is suicidal, somebody is homicidal, you've got to make sure that person gets care and attention immediately, not two months from today.
CHRIS HAYES: you reference that your constituents in vermont, a state of course you represent, that's a state that it's my understanding of the statistics has relatively high levels of gun ownership, relatively low levels of gun violence. compared to some other states.
BERNIE SANDERS: yeah.
CHRIS HAYES: you also -- you voted for some gun safety legislation and against others. you voted for the brady bill, for instant background checks, against a bill that would have allowed lawsuits against gun companies. has your thinking on this evolved over time? have you been influenced in how you think about it in discussions with your constituents who are gun owners?
BERNIE SANDERS: well, i think we are all disgusted and horrified by these mass killings. and as the president indicated, we're tired of sending condolences and we know that it could happen tomorrow, it could happen again a month from now. i have voted as i said a moment ago for what i think is the most important provision, and that is strong instant background checks to make sure that people who should not have guns do not have guns. and i have voted to eliminate this gun show loophole, which is what we have got to do. and i think, chris --
CHRIS HAYES: but the fact --
BERNIE SANDERS: -- that at the end of the day --
CHRIS HAYES: if i could just say, senator --
BERNIE SANDERS: yes.
CHRIS HAYES: there's two things about this. one is it strikes me it may prove to be a more difficult policy problem than we're prepared to admit about keeping guns out of the hands of the wrong people. and it may be that that isn't enough. the sort of items that you've indicated, that if we need to take a more robust approach like, say, in australia or england, which the president mentioned today.
BERNIE SANDERS: well, i don't -- i don't know that anybody knows what the magic solution is. what we do know is the current situation is not tenable. it is clearly not working. and as the president indicated we can and must do a lot better. i believe -- i'll tell you what else i believe. you can sit there and say i think we should do this and do that states in this country where but you've got a whole lot of people want virtually no gun control at all. and if we are going to have some success we are going to have to start talking to each other. and here's what i think is the good news, that i think there is a consensus for serious gun control including among people who own guns. and i think that's what we have to bring about. and the fact we have folks in congress who don't even want us to get information about shootings in this country and fatalities, that's pretty crazy stuff. so i think the job is to bring people together and say yes, we've got to move forward, we've got to move forward aggressively, stop the shouting and let's work together to do something that's realistic.
CHRIS HAYES: senator Bernie Sanders.

John Anzalone
Partner
Anzalone Liszt Grove Research
(o) 334.387.3121
Website | Twitter | LinkedIn | Facebook

From: Kate Offerdahl <kofferdahl@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: Friday, October 2, 2015 at 6:01 AM
To: Amanda Renteria <arenteria@hillaryclinton.com >, Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >, "caitlin@grunwald-communications.com" <caitlin@grunwald-communications.com >, Christina Reynolds <creynolds@hillaryclinton.com >, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >, David Binder <david@db-research.com >, Ellen Esterhay <ellen.esterhay@gmmb.com >, Huma Abedin <ha16@hillaryclinton.com >, Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >, Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com >, Jim Margolis <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com >, Joel Beneneson <Jbenenson@bsgco.com >, John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com >, John Podesta <jp66@hillaryclinton.com >, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >, Karen Finney <kfinney@hillaryclinton.com >, Kristina Schake <kschake@hillaryclinton.com >, Mindy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com >, Marlon Marshall <mmarshall@hillaryclinton.com >, Maya Harris <mharris@hillaryclinton.com >, Mike Vlacich <mvlacich@hillaryclinton.com >, Milia Fisher <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com >, Mona Thinavongsa <Mona@algpolling.com >, Oren Shur <oshur@hillaryclinton.com >, Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com >, Sara Latham <slatham@hillaryclinton.com >, Sawsan Bay <sbay@hillaryclinton.com >, Shannon Currie <scurrie@bsgco.com >, Teddy Goff <tgoff@hillaryclinton.com >, Tony Carrk <tcarrk@hillaryclinton.com >, Varun Anand <vanand@hillaryclinton.com >,

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Heather Stone <hstone@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: Accomplishments for 8AM

Dear all,

Please see the below foreign policy accomplishments, for discussion on today's 8am call.

Thanks!
Kate

She has a long list of accomplishments, but to name 3...:

- She built the toughest sanctions regime on Iran in history , twisting arms in China, Russia, and dozens of other countries, to force Iran to the negotiating table. And when pressure started working, she sent her closest aides to explore a deal that would cut off Iran's path to a nuclear weapon.

- She personally negotiated an end to Hamas rockets raining down on Israel in 2012 and worked to build stronger defense programs for Israel, including upgrading the Iron Dome rocket defense system, which has saved the lives of so many Israelis.

- She fought to make women's rights a priority in international relations. She stood up against sex trafficking of women and children, intervened in Saudi Arabia to prevent child marriage, and led the fight for a UN Security Council resolution to combat sexual v iolence against women and children around the world that passed unanimously.

...And 3 more....

- She ov ersaw negotiation and worked to ensure ratification of the New START treaty, which will make the world safer by reducing U.S. and Russian nuclear arsenals to their smallest size in 50 years.

- She helped build the unprecedented global effort to combat climate change, joining with President Obama to stand up to the Chinese in Copenhagen and get them to take responsibility for the first time, resulting in last y ear's major climate agreement.

- She stood up to Russia, China, and Iran on internet freedom and fought for the "freedom to connect" around the world.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "t r u t h o u t" <messenger@truthout.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 9/14/2014 10:12:49 AM
Subject: Time Is Running Out for Activists to Halt Fracked Gas Pipeline

View Recent Newsletters

Tell a friend about Truthout!

Sunday, 14 September 2014

truthout

Donate Today!

Truthout is a 501(c)3 nonprofit organization; donations are tax deductible.

Time Is Running Out for Activists to Halt Fracked Gas Pipeline Into New York City, Connecticut, Rhode Island

Ellen Cantarow, Truthout: Unless an extension is granted, concerned citizens have until September 29 only to comment to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission about the Algonquin Pipeline Extension pushing fracked gas through sensitive regions in New York, Connecticut and Rhode Island - creating environmental and nuclear hazards.

Read the Article

How the West Created the Islamic State

Nafeez Ahmed, Medium: Since 2003, Anglo-American power has coordinated direct and indirect support for Islamist terrorist groups linked to al Qaeda across the Middle East and North Africa. This ill-conceived strategy is motivated by ambitions to dominate regional oil resources, defend an expansionist Israel and re-draw the map of the Middle East.

Read the Article

At Least Some Unions Step Up for Big Climate March!

Abby Scher, Truthout: New York City and key national unions like the Service Employees International Union and Communication Workers of America are stepping up in a broad coalition to support the People's Climate March in NYC September 21. But some from labor groups say unions need to create their own climate protection strategy that democratizes the energy sector.

Read the Article

A Campaign Primer: Native American Voters Count

Dennis Worden, Truthout: Political influence for Native Americans and Indian tribes has grown in federal elections in recent years. Native voters often make the difference in certain races. What are the implications for Congress and who is paying attention?

Read the Article

BuzzFlash

The Buzzflash commentary for Truthout will return soon.

Video Purports to Show Islamic State Beheading of British Aid Worker

Read the Article at The Washington Post

"Treasure Map": The NSA's Plan to Map the Entire Internet

Read the Article at Der Spiegel

Contractors Ready to Cash in on ISIS War

Read the Article at The Daily Beast

Despite Multiple Malpractice Payouts, Doctors Often Keep Practicing

Read the Article at CBS News

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Four Ways Industrial Ag Is Destroying the Soil - and Your Health

Hannah Bewsey and Katherine Paul, Organic Consumers Association: If the numbers are any indicator, there's a crisis in worldwide soil health that is rapidly becoming a crisis in human health. Converting from factory farms and conventional crops to pasture-grazing livestock and organic farming are the solutions.

Read the Article

On Patriotism and Constitutional Amendment: An Interview With Film Director Miyazaki Hayao

Asato Ikeda, The Asia-Pacific Journal: This interview with famed animated film director Miyazaki Hayao covers a wide range of topics. Throughout, Hayao presents a strong criticism of Japan's current Abe government, especially its proposal of a constitutional amendment.

Read the Interview

Paul Krugman | "You Call Yourself an Economist?"

Paul Krugman, Krugman & Co.: Some believe that "real economics" is about singing the praises of the free market. It's inconceivable to them that you could have a more nuanced view without being a Marxist.

Read the Article

World's Last Remaining Forest Wilderness at Risk

Stephen Leahy, Inter Press Service: The world's last remaining forest wilderness is rapidly being lost - and much of this is taking place in Canada, not in Brazil or Indonesia, where deforestation has so far made the headlines. More than 104 million hectares of forests have been destroyed or degraded.

Read the Article

US Government Threatened Families of Beheaded Reporters With Prosecution if They Raised Ransoms

Read the Article at AFP

Study: High Cost of Housing Forcing Elderly Americans to Cut Back on Food and Health Care

Read the Article at Common Dreams

Django Unchained Actress Accosted by LAPD After Kissing White Husband

Read the Article at Gawker

Scott Walker's Snow Job

Mary Bottari, PR Watch: The governor's race in Wisconsin between the Republican incumbent, Scott Walker, and his Democratic challenger, Mary Burke, is coming down to one issue: jobs, jobs, jobs.

Read the Article

Why I'm Marching for Climate Action

Michael Brune, OtherWords: It's so important that, as a society, we increase the pressure on our leaders to take action right now to advance clean energy solutions and resist the temptation to drill, mine and frack as if there were no consequences and no tomorrow.

Read the Article

A Wild That Leaves Us Speechless

Brooke Williams, Earth Island Journal: As the Wilderness Act turns 50, those of us continuing to advocate for more designations find ourselves in a tough spot. Our new opponents argue that if we love wilderness in these times of global warming, we need to intervene in it to protect it.

Read the Article

This week in Speakout:

Leslie Thatcher interviews Undocumented in a Pirate Sea author Jeffrey R.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

McCord about his book; Emily Cleath points out the fallacy in the "official" US poverty rate; Dan Falcone interviews Professor Lawrence Davidson about media misinformation concerning the Islamic State; Reprieve reports arms industry firms bought access to a recent NATO summit; Pam McAllister recounts the history of the term "tree hugger" as the People's Climate March approaches; Dean Baker critiques The New York Times for failures in its reporting on Rhode Island's management of pensions; Terri Shofner and Erin Niemela demand school children receive solid science and math education instead of exposure to violence; and more.

Read the Articles

Support Truthout with a tax-deductible donation

Please add messenger@truthout.org to ensure you receive our messages

Truthout is a proud member of the New spaper Guild/CWA, Local 36047

Subscribe | Unsubscribe

Privacy Policy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Eryn Sepp" <eryn.sepp@gmail.com>
To: "Blakemore, Emily D. EOP" <Emily_D_Blakemore@who.eop.gov>
Date: 5/7/2015 11:51:13 AM
Subject: Re: Our President's Visit to Our Hometown of Beaverton —and My Children's Request

Thanks Emily. Got your other email. I'll forward to the family. What a turnaround!

> On May 7, 2015, at 6:40 PM, Blakemore, Emily D. EOP <Emily_D_Blakemore@who.eop.gov> wrote:
>
> John -
>
> We have 4 tickets to the event in Beaverton tomorrow. I will forward the details to Eryn and they should be all set.
>
> Best,
> Emily
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: Dumas, Clay A. EOP
> Sent: Thursday, May 7, 2015 5:25 PM
> To: 'John Podesta'; Breckenridge, Anita J. EOP; Blakemore, Emily D. EOP
> Subject: RE: Our President's Visit to Our Hometown of Beaverton—and My Children's Request
>
> Thanks John. Will work with Emily to make sure Anita sees and whether anything can be done.
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: John Podesta [mailto:john.podesta@gmail.com]
> Sent: Thursday, May 7, 2015 5:20 PM
> To: Breckenridge, Anita J. EOP
> Cc: Dumas, Clay A. EOP
> Subject: Fwd: Our President's Visit to Our Hometown of Beaverton—and My Children's Request
>
>
> ---------- Forwarded message ----------
> From: Pam and Rob and Miko and Isaac Vergun <vergun@alumni.stanford.edu <mailto:vergun@alumni.stanford.edu> >
> Date: Thu, May 7, 2015 at 3:28 PM
> Subject: Our President's Visit to Our Hometown of Beaverton—and My Children's Request
> To: John Podesta <podesta@law.georgetown.edu <mailto:podesta@law.georgetown.edu> >
>
>
>
> Dear Mr. Podesta,
>
>
> I am contacting you with a somewhat unusual request and the hope that you might be able to convey this wish by my children to an appropriate staff person for President Obama in spite of the short notice.
>
> Thank you. And thank you so much for the work you have been doing. I hope you are able to encourage Hillary Clinton to come out strongly to address dangers from Climate Change.
>
> Sincerely,
> Pam Vergun, Ph.D., M.P.A.
>
>
> Dear Mr. President,
>
> I hear that you are coming to our hometown of Beaverton tomorrow down the street from where my children were in a two-way Spanish immersion public school. I know this is a long shot, but I would like to tell you about the work my children and I are doing to help you stop Climate Change in case you would like to meet them.
>
> Also, months ago, my son, who is also one of your fans, asked me to invite you to his Bar Mitzvah. Although we just learned that you will only be in Beaverton during the morning, I'm sure you would like Isaac's D'Var teaching will be on taking even more serious action on Climate Change.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

>
>
> My son is African-American, my daughter was born in the Marshall Islands, and my husband and I are European-American, and together we are doing all we can to impact policies especially the ones most needed to protect our planet. My son has been talking with the City of Beaverton about his petition to Mayor Doyle regarding fossil fuels and nuclear power. The links below are to the little websites I made for their Mitzvah projects, so Miko and Isaac can speak for themselves. Please glance at them to see if you could use them to inspire or highlight your own work as you have inspired us.
> Miko's: >https://shalvahalizah.wordpress.com<
> Isaac: >https://yitzchakadin.wordpress.com<
>
> Thank you so much.
> With Love and Blessings to you and Michelle and your daughters, Pam Vergun
>
> Sent from my iPhone
>
>
> Dr. Pamela Bea Wilson Vergun, M.P.A.
>
> Pam and Rob and Miko and Isaac Vergun
> vergun@alumni.stanford.edu <mailto:vergun@alumni.stanford.edu>
> 3545 NW Ashland Place
> Beaverton, Oregon 97006
> Hm: 503-645-6642 <tel:503-645-6642>
>
> Mo: 503-332-7633 <tel:503-332-7633>
>
>
> Wherever you live, sign Isaac's petition to the City of Beaverton's Mayor Doyle and the City Council:
>> https://campaigns.gofossilfree.org/petitions/divest-the-city-of-beavert >> on-from-fossil-fuels-and-nuclear-power<
> Thanks!
> And, for more on Miko and Isaac's work to help protect our planet, please visit their websites:
> Miko: >https://shalvahalizah.wordpress.com<
> Isaac: >https://yitzchakadin.wordpress.com<
>

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: David.Willett@Sierraclub.org
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 8/5/2008 4:42:39 AM
Subject: [big campaign] McCain Nuke Plan: No Waste Through AZ, But Just Fine For 44 Other States

The AP and the Washington Post have picked up on the meltdown storyline:
http://ap.google.com/article/ALeqM5iE2JCSH5p9r2GBkQWS9TWAMzmuvQD92C58480 http://blog.washingtonpost.com/the-trail/2008/08/05/mccain_touts_expanded_nuclear.html#more http://action.sierraclub.org/site/MessageViewer?em_id=65822.0

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: August 5, 2008
CONTACT: Josh Dorner, 202.675.2384
David Willett, 202.675.6698

McCain: Not Comfortable With Nuclear Waste Through Arizona, But Just Fine for 44 Other States
McCain Touts Plan at Nuke Plant That Partially Melted Down, Gave Rise to Term "China Syndrome" & Caught Fire Just This Past May

Washington, D.C.--As John McCain is paying a visit today to the Enrico Fermi nuclear generating station in Monroe, Michigan he can be expected to tout his costly plan to build 45 new nuclear plants by 2030 and 55 more after that. This plan would effectively double the number of nuclear reactors and the amount of dangerous high-level nuclear waste that would need to be transported across the country.

The Sierra Club is today calling attention to the YouTube video that surfaced earlier this year which shows John McCain clearly saying—while shaking his head 'no'--that he would not be comfortable with nuclear waste traveling through his own home state of Arizona on its way to the unsafe and unproven Yucca Mountain site--something for which John McCain has been one of the Senate's biggest proponents.

The video can be viewed at: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=GPlaHQCKc34

Transcript (beginning at 1:14): Interviewer: What about the transportation? Would you be comfortable with nuclear waste coming through Arizona on its way, you know going through Phoenix, on its way to uh Yucca Mountain? McCain (Shaking Head): "No, I would not. No, I would not."

"Why does John McCain think it's ok for 77,000 tons of dangerous nuclear waste to go through some 44 other states but yet too dangerous to go through his own home state?" said Cathy Duvall, Sierra Club National Political Director. "John McCain simply can't have it both ways when it comes to the nuclear waste issue. It's hypocritical and unfair that he supports running hundreds of shipments of dangerous nuclear waste through 44 states and sticking Nevadans with 77,000 tons of it forever, while at the same time saying he's uncomfortable with it going through his own backyard for even a day."

The Sierra Club also pointed out that the very nuclear plant that Senator McCain is visiting today partially melted down in 1966. Indeed, the term "China Syndrome"—a nuclear reactor melting down and going "all the way to China"—was coined as a result of the incident. It also gave rise to both a book and song (performed at the original Musicians for Safe Energy/No Nukes concerts in the 1970s) entitled "We Almost Lost Detroit." More recently, the operating reactor, Fermi II, experienced a leak in 2005 and the decommissioned reactor, Fermi I, caught fire just this past May.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

John McCain supports the Bush administration's plan to store our nation's nuclear waste at the unsafe and unproven Yucca mountain site--a white elephant that has wasted two decades and billions of taxpayer dollars. A plan to transport the waste released by the State of Nevada based on Department of Energy plans details the likely rail, truck, and barge routes that high-level waste would take on its way to Yucca Mountain. Approximately 15,000 casks of waste would travel through at least 45 states. Each cask would transport between 2 and 15 tons of high-level waste. In total, the dangerous waste would travel through more than 703 counties in 45 states. More than 123 million people live along the proposed truck routes alone. And more than 10 million people live within a half-mile of the proposed routes.

"John McCain is asking Nevadans and the residents of 44 states to gamble with their safety, yet it's not even a bet he's willing to take for Arizona," said Duvall. "Just like with subsidies—he's against them, except when it comes to nuclear power and so-called 'clean coal'--John McCain wants to have his cake and eat it too on the nuclear waste issue. He's all for moving thousands of tons highly radioactive waste through communities across the country, except when it comes to his home state of Arizona."

In addition to being dangerous, John McCain's nuclear plan is a costly distraction from the real solutions to global warming. Based on cost estimates for new nuclear power plants put forth by utilities like Florida Power and Light, McCain's plan for 100 new nuclear plants could cost more than $1 TRILLION.

Over the years McCain has cast vote after vote in favor of Yucca Mountain and billions in subsidies for the nuclear industry, yet he has consistently voted against renewable energy and has refused to support extending key clean energy incentives that are in danger of expiring at the end of this year. Twice in recent months when extending these incentives failed by just a single vote and every single other Senator voted, McCain was nowhere to be found. Failing to extend these incentives could throw 116,000 people out of work in the wind and solar industries alone and sacrifice billions in lost economic growth.

Barack Obama, by contrast, opposes storing nuclear waste at the Yucca Mountain site. With regards to the role of nuclear power in general, Obama's energy plan released yesterday states:
"Before an expansion of nuclear power is considered, key issues must be addressed including: security of nuclear fuel and waste, waste storage, and proliferation."

# #

Paid for by the Sierra Club Political Committee, http://www.sierraclub.org/, and not authorized by any candidate or candidate's committee.

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Amitabh Desai" <adesai@clintonfoundation.org>
To:	"Bruce Lindsey" <blindsey@clintonfoundation.org> john.podesta@gmail.com
Date:	4/18/2012 5:47:19 AM
Subject:	FW: Clinton Foundation Letter
Attachments:	DOC120417-20120417164915.pdf

In reading the attached letter from the Barbados PM, I'm a bit inclined to recommend WJC writing back and delicately saying something like: this is an issue of shared importance and I'd like to be helpful but am not sure yet exactly what a project could or should look like (and how much it would cost and over what timeline, with what specific deliverables) and I therefore would welcome input from you (the PM) and other leaders in the region before this is discussed publicly, and I'd like you to speak with my staff (listing us and not Ira).

And/or we can call the UN Secretary General's folks and say their UNDP/energy folks should deal with us and not Ira.

The above seems like a nuclear option but at this point unless we do something, it seems like Ira is going to proceed on something that we don't really have a handle on, and it could be good, but on the other hand - and given precedence with CHAI and CCI - it could spend (a lot of) money without us knowing specifically what WJC and the world will get in terms of results (on a timeline) and/or us being able to control how WJC's name / legacy are being impacted / used in relation to this project.

Maybe I am being petty but just wanted to raise this option with you, and I'm happy to proceed as you wish. Tackling islands is something we all believe in but it's hard to know what Ira's plan is and hard to trust it since we seem to learn of things after the fact, as evidenced by us learning of this "launch" via the email below today. Thanks.

-----Original Message-----
From: Ira Magaziner
Sent: Wednesday, April 18, 2012 9:29 AM
To: Terry Krinvic
Cc: Amitabh Desai
Subject: FW: Clinton Foundation Letter

Terry:

Attached is a letter that will come to President Clinton from the Prime Minister of Barbados inviting him to speak on May 8 at a high level conference of energy Ministers from all of the Island nations in the world. The conference is being sponsored by UNDP and we will be participating. I will be there.

UNDP is providing funds to the Clinton Foundation for our work on clean energy and we will be launching our work at this conference.

Obviously, if President Clinton can speak, that would be great. If he cannot attend but could provide a video, that would also be very helpful.

I am sorry for the short notice, but the conference has come together rather quickly.

Thanks

Ira

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Lee Fang" <lee@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: "Lee Fang" <lee@progressiveaccountability.org>
Date: 7/30/2008 4:33:40 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Media Monitoring Report - Morning 07/30/08

Main Topics: McCain negativity, Crist interviews

Summary: The most prominent Presidential election news continues to be running mate speculation. Some pundits noted the degree of negativity coming from the McCain campaign. Following a strong trend of earned media for campaign ads, the new RNC sponsored 'German techno' web video was played several times on the cable stations. Major networks led with coverage regarding the Los Angeles earthquake yesterday. Other segments included the Senator Ted Stevens indictment, a soldier arrested for murder, California wildfires, and footage of a New York police officer beating a man.

Highlights:
1. MSNBC: Crist has 'no idea' if Obama wants to lose war, questioned about offshore drilling
2. FNC: Crist interviewed, touts offshore drilling
3. MSNBC: Morning Joe hosts highlight negative attacks from McCain campaign, compared to Lee Atwater
4. COMEDY: Daily Show mocks McCain for weak campaign, seemingly going for pity vote
5. MSNBC: Though Todd offers that VP could 'reboot' McCain campaign, Scarborough reminds him McCain doesn't use a computer

No Clips
6. CNN: In effort to combat McSame branding, Republicans compare Obama to unpopular Democrats [no clip]
7. KTVN-CBS-NV: Seniors groups highlight McCain's zero filled record with elderly [no clip]
8. KOLO-ABC-NV: Protestors outside McCain event [no clip]
9. KRNV-NBC-NV: McCain event attracts protesters [no clip]
10. KTVN-CBS-NV: Dozens gather to protest McCain in Nevada [no clip]

Clips:

Highlight #1
Crist Has 'No Idea' If Obama Wants To Lose The War; Questioned About Offshore Drilling (MSNBC 07/30/08 8:39am)
CHARLIE CRIST: Good morning Joe how you doing buddy?

JOE SCARBOROUG: I'm doing well. We're talking this morning about John McCain's campaign turning negative. He has one TV spot which we've been running Obama's response to where he blames Barack Obama for higher gas prices. How can he do that?

CRIST: Well I mean if you're not willing to try to increase the domestic supply of oil, if you're not willing to utilize nuclear power, you know, it speaks for itself doesn't it? I think we have to be open minded to realize we have to increase our domestic production. Senator Obama is not supporting drilling and continuing to have more of our domestic supply, winning us off foreign oil. You know when you hit 4 dollars a gallon at the pump, common sense ought to kick in and tell you we've got to produce more at home, we've got to expand our nuclear supply, we've got to have renewables, we've got to conserve more, you know got to do all of it.

SCARBOROUGH: Charlie what do you, Governor, what do you, John McCain and I have in common? We've opposed offshore drilling in Florida for years. So if he's part of the problem, aren't you part of the problem, and John McCain part of the problem and myself part of the problem?

CRIST: The facts have changed and I think that's something we all need to realize. Once you have an economic situation, and the economy is the issue, and I think everyone is very well cognoscente of that. The fact is when you hit 4 dollars a gallon at the pump, it slows down tourism here in Florida, it slows down the economy generally, people's ability to get out and you know contribute to the economy by taking their families out to restaurants and other things they might want to do. So you have to look for alternatives and you have to wake up and smell the roses and understand that its time for a change. We need to do what's right. We need to address this issue and we need to help people.

SCARBOROUGH: Charlie there's another attack out there. John McCain has said Barack Obama would rather win a campaign than win the war. That is about as harsh of an attack as I've ever heard on a political candidate.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

CRIST: Well Senator McCain understands war, better than any of us. I mean, look at the facts. This is a guy who is a true American hero. A man who served over 5 years in a prisoner of war camp.

SCARBOROUGH: But does Barack Obama really want America to lose this war?

CRIST: Well what I think Senator McCain wants is for us to win this war.

SCARBOROUGH: But Senator McCain is suggesting that Barack Obama wants us to lose this war if it gets him to the White House. You have to admit that's a pretty stunning charge.

CRIST: Well as you know Joe, I mean you've been in the political arena for a long time as well. There's a lot of back and forth and we've got less than 100 days before the people will go to the polls and make their decision. It is time for people to understand that we've got to talk about these issues in a very direct way. And Senator McCain understands what it means to fight for freedom first and make sure we're doing whats right to protect our country.

SCARBOROUGH: You've been in the public eye for a very long time. You've run in a lot of campaigns, campaigns that you always win. You've got high approval ratings. Have you ever suggested a political opponent of yours wanted America to lose a war?

CRIST: It's never been an issue in one of my campaigns. No I can't say that. I have said some of my opponents want to raise taxes like Senator Obama wants to do. Senator McCain on the otherhand wants to lower taxes and that's important for people to know.

SCARBOROUGH: I again though I will ask you one more time. Because I know what you're saying about John McCain and we've said on the air that John McCain was right about the surge, he's been right about awful lot of things. I need to ask you one more time about yourself, personally as Governor of the state of Florida and how many people 17 million people there?

CRIST: Almost 20 now, it's amazing. We still get 500 to 1,000 new people everyday.

SCARBOROUGH: 20 million. You represent 20 million people. I'm curious what do you think as a public official about Barack Obama? Do you believe the Democratic nominee wants America to lose the war in Iraq?

CRIST: I have no idea. I would hope not. But who knows. What I do know he is a gifted politician. He communicates very effectively and he turns out big crowds. But what's important is how do you keep these two candidate feel about issues? If you want a candidate who wants to lower taxes, you want John McCain. If you want a candidate who wants to raise your taxes, you want Senator Obama. If you want someone who understands we need to drill for more oil domestically, to ween ourselves off of foreign oil, if you want somebody then you want McCain. McCain wants to do everything that we can in order to make America independent, to make America strong, to make sure we have energy resources that make the American family that much stronger and the economy that much more secure. This is a clear, crystal clear decision for the American people coming in November. And Senator John McCain is the right guy for the people of America and the people of Florida.

SCARBOROUGH: Charlie Crist, Governor of the state of Florida. I think his approval rating, 96%. Mika, ask him the question.

MIKA BRZEZINSKI: Oh come one. Alright are you on the short list? Are you going to take the job? Do you want it? Oh come on you did the whole offshore oil drilling thing. We've got to get something from it.

CRIST: Mika I have the greatest job in the world.

Highlight #2
Crist Pushes for Drilling in Florida (FNC 07/30/08 8:21am)
BRIAN KILMEADE: Governor, Jeb Bush says we're not going to drill off the shore of Florida. You're saying you're open to it. Why?

CHARLIE CRIST: Because gas is $4 a gallon. It's amazing how ridiculous this issue has become, how expensive it is on the backs of the American family, and how really John McCain gets it, understands it, and it's a shame that Senator Obama doesn't have an open mind to trying to produce more domestic oil, making sure we have nuclear energy, and that we have renewable and that we conserve. I mean, all of these things are very, very important. Senator McCain has put this issue front and center, and it's certainly something that's front and center on the minds of the American people and their pocketbook, and they're hurting, and we need to try to help them as much as we can and wean ourselves off this dependence on foreign oil. It's killing us.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

MARTHA MACALLUM: . . . I do get a chance to squeeze in this question I have for you on drilling off the shore of Florida. Russia, and I know china is also negotiating to drill about 35 miles off the coast of Florida, so is this something you think Americans need to be more aware of, and do you think the United States more capable of drilling in a cleaner, better, more efficient way than some of these other countries?

CRIST: There's no doubt. The United States is one of the most safest and secure countries on the planet, as we all know, and if we're going to venture into this water, so to speak, I certainly would rather have the United States doing it, than anybody else. As a governor of Florida, it's important to me that what we do is make sure that it's far enough, clean enough, and safe enough so that we don't hurt our beautiful beaches and tourism, but that can be accomplished. And I know that our U.S. Senators are working on it. Certainly Mel Martinez is. Our members of our congressional delegation. This is an issue that john McCain talks about all the time, and getting the congress to at least vote on the issue so that states have the right to make a decision on it.

Highlight #3
Morning Joe Hosts Highlight Desperation, Negative Attacks From McCain Campaign (MSNBC 07/30/08 8:20am)
JOE SCARBOROUGH: John McCain has made a decision and it goes against type. It goes against the John McCain that so many loved in 2000. He has decided he's going to take on the Lee Atwater approach. We're going to blame Barack Obama for gas prices. That's ridiculous. We're going to say Barack Obama doesn't love the troops. Ridiculous. The Washington Post saying its not true. What's the danger of John McCain just punching and swinging, he's like a boxer swinging wildly hoping that one of those punches land.

JOHN HEILEMANN: Well I think if you take the three things from last week. One, the change of his slogan to country first. Which is basically saying Obama doesn't love his country. The thing about how Obama would rather campaign than win the war, and then this troops ad, with them shooting hoops, which you know I think they, the McCain campaign likes the image of Obama as a bling'ed out NBA star because it kind of, sort of exacerbates or enhances this image of him being you know other and being full of himself. They think they need to drive his negatives way up. And your question is what are the dangers to McCain? I think the danger to McCain is that he's not very good at this. He's not very good at driving a negative message in a consistent way. I think they may be right that the only way to win is to make Obama unacceptable. The problem is McCain is just not good at doing it. In addition to the fact that its going to soil his own image, he just doesn't do it very well.

SCARBOROUGH: It plays against type so much.

HEILEMANN: The question is in this election whether you think he's ever, anybody's ever going to affirmatively, apart from hardcore Republicans, whether anybody's going to vote for McCain. The vote among undecided's is going to be a default vote because they decide Obama's unacceptable and okay I'll vote for McCain.

SCARBOROUGH: Which goes back to what we're saying. It's because the Republicans have mishandled things so badly over the past 8 years. This is all about whether Americans trust Barack Obama to be the President. Because not a lot of people are going to be all that excited about voting for a Republican.

HEILEMANN: Even a lot of Republicans are not that excited for voting for that Republican.

Highlight #4
Daily Show Hosts Say Weak McCain Campaign Performance Is Actually A Bid For Pity Vote (COMEDY 07/29/08 11:15pm)
JON STEWART: Isn't there a danger here? Doesn't it have to be the right kind of pity?

JOHN OLIVER: Absolutely right Jon. You don't want your magoo like doddering to turn into coryhang (sp) like hopelessness. That's why its not just about tearing yourself down, its about building your opponent up. Now in this ad, McCain attacks Obama for skipping a trip to meet with troops during his trip to Germany. And yet, the footage they choose to use in the ad is of Obama playing basketball with the troops.

STEWART: To undermine one's own accusation so viscerally.

OLIVER: Jon, it's adroitly incompetent, brilliantly retarded. To allow another fight to so viciously pound on you that the crowd cannot help but pray for your resurrection. It's not even a rope-a-dope. It's a dope-a-dope.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

STEWART: Others have tried it, famously Walter Mondale, Dukakis.

OLIVER: Sure. But they didn't want to lose it badly enough. There was always that hint of self-respect and integrity. But I believe, McCain has the wrong stuff.

Highlight #5
Todd Says VP Could Reboot McCain Campaign, But Scarborough Reminds Him That McCain Doesn't Use A Computer (MSNBC 8:10am)
CHUCK TODD: There's another thought process that McCain could just use a simple reboot, you know? You know your computer and its starting to be sluggish, you know particularly when you don't have a Mac and you're using one of these PCs, gets a little sluggish.

JOE SCARBOROUGH: Yes Microsoft NBC go ahead.

TODD: And your thinking alright I need to do a reboot. I need to do that control alt delete. I need to get the computer working again. And these is this some thought McCain particularly somedoay if it isn't Romney, somebody new, if it's somebody that just says you what, we're all going to be kind of interested in who the guy is or we're all going to be impressed with sort of the uniqueness of the pick. Well then do it now. Reboot the campaign. And sort of get back on your own path. Take control of your message again.

SCARBOROUGH: You know there's a big problem with that, that whole reboot. John McCain doesn't use a computer.

TODD: Well okay. Its still at the end of the day still a PC is what your saying.

SCARBOROUGH: Yeah I guess so.

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Andres Moreno" <andres@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: "Ilan Goldenberg" <igoldenberg@nsnetwork.org>
Date: 7/19/2008 3:03:11 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Re: HUGE STORY

Here is an excerpt and full text of interview

EXCERPT:

SPIEGEL: Would you hazard a prediction as to when most of the US troops will finally leave Iraq?

Maliki: As soon as possible, as far as we're concerned. US presidential candidate Barack Obama is right when he talks about 16 months. Assuming that positive developments continue, this is about the same time period that corresponds to our wishes.

SPIEGEL: Is this an endorsement for the US presidential election in November? Does Obama, who has no military background, ultimately have a better understanding of Iraq than war hero John McCain?

Maliki: Those who operate on the premise of short time periods in Iraq today are being more realistic. Artificially prolonging the tenure of US troops in Iraq would cause problems. Of course, this is by no means an election endorsement. Who they choose as their president is the Americans' business. But it's the business of Iraqis to say what they want. And that's where the people and the government are in general agreement: The tenure of the coalition troops in Iraq should be limited.

FULLL TEXT OF INTERVIEW:

SPIEGEL: Germany was opposed to the war. The German economics minister was in Baghdad last week, Daimler AG plans to build trucks in Iraq, and you will travel to Berlin this week. Has everything been smoothed out between Germany and Iraq?

Maliki: We want closer relations, and it is my impression that the Germans -- the government, the people and German companies -- want the same thing. Our task is to rebuild a country, and the Germans are famous for effective and efficient work. We have great confidence in them and want to involve them in the development of our country.

SPIEGEL: And there is truly no resentment against a country that opposed the war in 2003?

Maliki: We do not judge our partners on the basis of whether or not they were militarily involved in toppling Saddam. The decisions back then corresponded to the national will of the countries, and we respect that.

SPIEGEL: What exactly do you expect from the Germans and from German companies?

Maliki: We want to get to know them, and we want to know what they want -- and the things they fear when thinking about Iraq. We have to start over again in many areas, including oil production, the development of the power grid and all industries. There is much to be done.

SPIEGEL: What do you expect from the Germans, politically and militarily? The Bundeswehr (German Armed Forces) occasionally trains Iraqi security forces -- but only in neighboring countries.

Maliki: What matters most to us is that we develop resilient political relationships and work together economically. Our security forces are steadily improving, partly as a result of German efforts. We will be pleased to turn to the Germans to equip our police and military; and should there be new training programs with the German Bundeswehr, we will be happy to accept their help. However, we would clearly prefer that the training take place in Iraq in the future. Overall, I believe that we are gradually becoming self-sufficient.

SPIEGEL: Three weeks ago, your government filed a civil lawsuit in New York against companies that allegedly paid bribes to officials in the Saddam regime. The defendants include three German companies: Daimler, Siemens and B. Braun Melsungen. How is this compatible with your overtures to German industry?

Maliki: We are in negotiations with Siemens for the construction of power plants, which shows just how serious we are. Whether the suit you mention succeeds will be for the courts to decide. Under no circumstances will the consequence be that we no longer wish to work with the companies in question.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SPIEGEL: Large parts of Iraq's assets abroad remain frozen -- and inaccessible to creditors. What will happen to this money when the UN Security Council mandate for Iraq expires at the end of this year?

Maliki: We have hired several international law firms to deal with these assets. At the moment, they are protected by UN resolutions, American law and the personal commitment of President George W. Bush -- and we want this protection to remain in place after the end of UN mandate on Iraq. We consider the claims being lodged against this money to be unjustified. Iraq cannot be punished for crimes that were committed by the dictator. This is very important to us, and a key aspect of our negotiations over the future status of US troops in Iraq.

SPIEGEL: Germany, after World War II, was also liberated from a tyrant by a US-led coalition. That was 63 years ago, and today there are still American military bases and soldiers in Germany. How do you feel about this model?

Maliki: Iraq can learn from Germany's experiences, but the situation is not truly comparable. Back then Germany waged a war that changed the world. Today, we in Iraq want to establish a timeframe for the withdrawal of international troops -- and it should be short. At the same time, we would like to see the establishment of a long-term strategic treaty with the United States, which would govern the basic aspects of our economic and cultural relations. However, I wish to re-emphasize that our security agreement should remain in effect in the short term.

SPIEGEL: How short-term? Are you hoping for a new agreement before the end of the Bush administration?

Maliki: So far the Americans have had trouble agreeing to a concrete timetable for withdrawal, because they feel it would appear tantamount to an admission of defeat. But that isn't the case at all. If we come to an agreement, it is not evidence of a defeat, but of a victory, of a severe blow we have inflicted on al-Qaida and the militias. The American lead negotiators realize this now, and that's why I expect to see an agreement taking shape even before the end of President Bush's term in office. With these negotiations, we will start the whole thing over again, on a clearer, better basis, because the first proposals were unacceptable to us.

SPIEGEL: Immunity for the US troops is apparently the central issue.

Maliki: It is a fundamental problem for us that it should not be possible, in my country, to prosecute offences or crimes committed by US soldiers against our population. But other issues are no less important: How much longer will these soldiers remain in our country? How much authority do they have? Who controls how many, soldiers enter and leave the country and where they do so?

SPIEGEL: Would you hazard a prediction as to when most of the US troops will finally leave Iraq?

Maliki: As soon as possible, as far as we're concerned. US presidential candidate Barack Obama is right when he talks about 16 months. Assuming that positive developments continue, this is about the same time period that corresponds to our wishes.

SPIEGEL: Is this an endorsement for the US presidential election in November? Does Obama, who has no military background, ultimately have a better understanding of Iraq than war hero John McCain?

Maliki: Those who operate on the premise of short time periods in Iraq today are being more realistic. Artificially prolonging the tenure of US troops in Iraq would cause problems. Of course, this is by no means an election endorsement. Who they choose as their president is the Americans' business. But it's the business of Iraqis to say what they want. And that's where the people and the government are in general agreement: The tenure of the coalition troops in Iraq should be limited.

SPIEGEL: In your opinion, which factor has contributed most to bringing calm to the situation in the country?

Maliki: There are many factors, but I see them in the following order. First, there is the political rapprochement we have managed to achieve in central Iraq. This has enabled us, above all, to pull the plug on al-Qaida. Second, there is the progress being made by our security forces. Third, there is the deep sense of abhorrence with which the population has reacted to the atrocities of al-Qaida and the militias. Finally, of course, there is the economic recovery.

SPIEGEL: Critics have accused you of striking harshly against the Mahdi army of Shiite leader Muqtada al-Sadr, while going easy on his rival Ayatollah Mohammed Baqir al-Hakim's Badr militia.

Maliki: That's not true. We proceed just as firmly against anyone who breaks the law. Just a few days ago, we had an incident with a group associated with the Badr people. The army moved in immediately and arrested them all. No one was spared. The punishment is based purely on the nature of the crime, not on the identity of the criminal.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SPIEGEL: In southern Iraq, where you come from, you have been compared with Saddam Hussein when it comes to harshness.

Maliki: That's the sort of thing that people say who don't understand how urgently Iraq needs stability -- or these people prefer instability. We don't want to spread fear and terror in Iraq. We have, for example, given the militias several deadlines to hand over their weapons. Their resistance was tremendous, so we had to oppose them with tremendous force of our own.

SPIEGEL: What role do you envision for your chief rival, Muqtada al-Sadr? Can there ever be national reconciliation in Iraq without his participation?

Maliki: You can only reconcile with someone who wants to reconcile. His Excellency Muqtada al-Sadr can be a political partner, especially if, to that end, he draws on the great spiritual legacy he has inherited from his ancestors. He has understood that his following was eventually infiltrated by criminal elements, by men from the former regime, al-Qaida people and others. The fact that he is now in the process of systematically separating himself from these elements makes him even stronger as a political partner. As a politician, I might add, not as a militia leader.

SPIEGEL: You spent part of your exile in Iran, and you have visited the country several times since you took office. Can you explain to us what the leaders in Tehran are up to? Are they building a nuclear bomb? Do you see this as a serious threat?

Maliki: I have not been made privy to the details of the Iranian nuclear program. Iranian representatives assure us, however, that this program serves peaceful purposes. Even if Tehran wanted to develop a nuclear weapon, it would take a very long time, simply from a technical standpoint. It is obvious that our region is far too fragile for even a single country to possess nuclear weapons, because it will always be an incentive for other countries to also build their own.

SPIEGEL: Exactly 50 years ago, the monarchy in Iraq was overthrown and a republic established. But we didn't see any celebration of this event at all. What does that day mean for the history of Iraq?

Maliki: There may have been people who celebrated. But certainly not all Iraqis. On July 14, 1958, and era came to an end, but what came afterwards didn't live up to our expectations and hopes. What came were decades of military putsches and the dictatorship. We are still dealing with the aftermath today.

SPIEGEL: Mr. Prime Minister, your job is probably one of the most dangerous a politician can have. How do you cope with this, and what do you do to make it bearable?

Maliki: I lead a very simple life -- one that is shaped by external forces, which is apparently what fate has determined for us Iraqis. In that regard, the past few decades of dictatorship have not changed all that much. What keeps me going? The constant exertion of my job -- and the successes we are now having. It means a lot to me to see how much closer we are today to a democratic Iraq, one that respects human rights, than we were only a few months ago.

SPIEGEL: Mr. Prime Minister, thank you for taking the time to speak with us.

Interview conducted by Mathias Müller von Blumencron and Bernard Zand in Baghdad

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: Ilan Goldenberg <igoldenberg@nsnetwork.org >
Date: Sat, Jul 19, 2008 at 9:07 AM
Subject: [big campaign] HUGE STORY
To: "bigcampaign@googlegroups.com " <bigcampaign@googlegroups.com >

This is absolutely huge. Maliki just essentially endorsed by name the Obama Iraq plan

http://www.democracyarsenal.org/2008/07/its-over.html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It's Over
Posted by Ilan Goldenberg

Not much to say here. Other than the fact that this is a huge huge huge deal. Article speaks for itself.

In an interview with Der Spiegel released on Saturday, Maliki said he wanted U.S. troops to withdraw from Iraq as soon as possible.

"U.S. presidential candidate Barack Obama talks about 16 months. That, we think, would be the right timeframe for a withdrawal, with the possibility of slight changes"

And

Asked if he supported Obama's ideas more than those of John McCain, Republican presidential hopeful, Maliki said he did not want to recommend who people should vote for.

"Whoever is thinking about the shorter term is closer to reality. Artificially extending the stay of U.S. troops would cause problems."

And

"The Americans have found it difficult to agree on a concrete timetable for the exit because it seems like an admission of defeat to them. But it isn't," Maliki told Der Spiegel.

Is there anything left to say?

July 19, 2008 at 05:59 AM | Permalink

http://www.reuters.com/article/vcCandidateFeed2/idUSL198009020080719

Print | Close this window
Iraqi PM backs Obama troop exit plan: report
Sat Jul 19, 2008 7:38am EDT

BERLIN (Reuters) - Iraqi Prime Minister Nuri al-Maliki told a German magazine he supported prospective U.S. Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama's proposal that U.S. troops should leave Iraq within 16 months.

In an interview with Der Spiegel released on Saturday, Maliki said he wanted U.S. troops to withdraw from Iraq as soon as possible.

"U.S. presidential candidate Barack Obama talks about 16 months. That, we think, would be the right timeframe for a withdrawal, with the possibility of slight changes."

It is the first time he has backed the withdrawal timetable put forward by Obama, who is visiting Afghanistan and us set to go to Iraq as part of a tour of Europe and the Middle East.

Obama has called for a shift away from a "single-minded" focus on Iraq and wants to pull out troops within 16 months, instead adding U.S. soldiers to Afghanistan.

Asked if he supported Obama's ideas more than those of John McCain, Republican presidential hopeful, Maliki said he did not want to recommend who people should vote for.

"Whoever is thinking about the shorter term is closer to reality. Artificially extending the stay of U.S. troops would cause problems."

Maliki, who is due to visit Germany this week, has suggested a timetable should be set for a U.S. withdrawal but U.S. officials have been more cautious, despite an improving security situation.

The White House said on Friday President George W. Bush and Maliki had agreed that a security deal under negotiation should set a "time horizon" for meeting "aspirational goals" for reducing U.S. forces in Iraq.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"The Americans have found it difficult to agree on a concrete timetable for the exit because it seems like an admission of defeat to them. But it isn't," Maliki told Der Spiegel.

Some five years after the U.S.-led invasion, there are still some 146,000 U.S. soldiers in Iraq.

(Reporting by Madeline Chambers; Editing by Jon Boyle)

--
Andres Moreno
Deputy Director - Tracking/Media Monitoring
ProgressiveAccountability.org (PAO)
202-609-7688 (office)
703-501-6661 (cell)
andres@progressiveaccountability.org

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: Ilan Goldenberg <igoldenberg@nsnetwork.org >
Date: Sat, Jul 19, 2008 at 9:07 AM
Subject: [big campaign] HUGE STORY
To: "bigcampaign@googlegroups.com " <bigcampaign@googlegroups.com >

This is absolutely huge. Maliki just essentially endorsed by name the Obama Iraq plan

http://www.democracyarsenal.org/2008/07/its-over.html

It's Over
Posted by Ilan Goldenberg

Not much to say here. Other than the fact that this is a huge huge huge deal. Article speaks for itself.

In an interview with Der Spiegel released on Saturday, Maliki said he wanted U.S. troops to withdraw from Iraq as soon as possible.

"U.S. presidential candidate Barack Obama talks about 16 months. That, we think, would be the right timeframe for a withdrawal, with the possibility of slight changes"

And

Asked if he supported Obama's ideas more than those of John McCain, Republican presidential hopeful, Maliki said he did not want to recommend who people should vote for.

"Whoever is thinking about the shorter term is closer to reality. Artificially extending the stay of U.S. troops would cause problems."

And

"The Americans have found it difficult to agree on a concrete timetable for the exit because it seems like an admission of defeat to them. But it isn't," Maliki told Der Spiegel.

Is there anything left to say?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

July 19, 2008 at 05:59 AM | Permalink

http://www.reuters.com/article/vcCandidateFeed2/idUSL198009020080719

Print | Close this window
Iraqi PM backs Obama troop exit plan: report
Sat Jul 19, 2008 7:38am EDT

BERLIN (Reuters) - Iraqi Prime Minister Nuri al-Maliki told a German magazine he supported prospective U.S. Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama's proposal that U.S. troops should leave Iraq within 16 months.

In an interview with Der Spiegel released on Saturday, Maliki said he wanted U.S. troops to withdraw from Iraq as soon as possible.

"U.S. presidential candidate Barack Obama talks about 16 months. That, we think, would be the right timeframe for a withdrawal, with the possibility of slight changes."

It is the first time he has backed the withdrawal timetable put forward by Obama, who is visiting Afghanistan and us set to go to Iraq as part of a tour of Europe and the Middle East.

Obama has called for a shift away from a "single-minded" focus on Iraq and wants to pull out troops within 16 months, instead adding U.S. soldiers to Afghanistan.

Asked if he supported Obama's ideas more than those of John McCain, Republican presidential hopeful, Maliki said he did not want to recommend who people should vote for.

"Whoever is thinking about the shorter term is closer to reality. Artificially extending the stay of U.S. troops would cause problems."

Maliki, who is due to visit Germany this week, has suggested a timetable should be set for a U.S. withdrawal but U.S. officials have been more cautious, despite an improving security situation.

The White House said on Friday President George W. Bush and Maliki had agreed that a security deal under negotiation should set a "time horizon" for meeting "aspirational goals" for reducing U.S. forces in Iraq.

"The Americans have found it difficult to agree on a concrete timetable for the exit because it seems like an admission of defeat to them. But it isn't," Maliki told Der Spiegel.

Some five years after the U.S.-led invasion, there are still some 146,000 U.S. soldiers in Iraq.

(Reporting by Madeline Chambers; Editing by Jon Boyle)

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

--

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Andres Moreno
Deputy Director - Tracking/Media Monitoring
ProgressiveAccountability.org (PAO)
202-609-7688 (office)
703-501-6661 (cell)
andres@progressiveaccountability.org

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~

You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Fariba Yassaee" <fyassaee@albrightstonebridge.com>
To: "Alice Cosgrove" <alice.e.cosgrove@gmail.com>
"Anna Stolitzka \(Debbie?? Wasserman Shulz\)" <stolitzka.anna@gmail.com>
"Anne Hall" <Anne.Hall@APORTER.COM>
"Bill Antholis" <antholis@virginia.edu>
bill.danvers@gmail.com
"Brian Katulis" <bkatulis@americanprogress.org>
"Bruce Riedel" <briedel@brookings.edu>
"Caitlin McDonnell" <cmcdonnell@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Carol Browner" <cmbrowner@me.com>
"Carole Hall" <chall@brookings.edu>
"Catherine Whitney" <Catherine.Whitney@skadden.com>
"Chris Roberts" <croberts@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Colin Kahl" <colin.h.kahl@gmail.com>
"Dan?? Benjamin" <dbenjam61@hotmail.com>
"Daniel Silverberg" <danielsilverberg@yahoo.com>
"Debbie Schulz" <hrtsleeve@gmail.com>
"Denis?? McDonough" <denis.mcdonough@gmail.com>
"Derek Chollet" <dhchollet@gmail.com>
"Don Gips \(don.gips@gmail.com\)" <don.gips@gmail.com>
"Don Kerrick" <donkerrick@gmail.com>
"Eryn Sanders" <eryn.sepp@gmail.com>
"Fariba Yassaee" <fyassaee@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Greg Craig" <gcraig@skadden.com>
"Jake?? Sullivan \(Jake.sullivan@gmail.com\)" <Jake.sullivan@gmail.com>
"Jamie Rubin" <JamesPRubin1960@gmail.com>
"Jan Stewart" <jstewart@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Jasmine Battle" <jbattle@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Jeff Smith" <jeffrey_smith@aporter.com>
"Jeremy Bash" <jeremybash@gmail.com>
"Jessica?? Lewis" <lewisje03@yahoo.com>
"Jim Miller - Department of Defense?? \(james.n.miller.jr@gmail.com \)" <james.n.miller.jr@gmail.com>
"Jim O'Brien" <jobrien@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Joanna Nicoletti?? \(info@forwardengagement.org\)" <info@forwardengagement.org>
"Joe Cirincione" <jcirincione@ploughshares.org>
"John Norris" <jnorris@americanprogress.org>
"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
"Julianne Smith" <julsmi@gmail.com>
"Ken Lieberthal" <klieberthal@brookings.edu>
"Kurt Campbell" <kurtmcampbell@yahoo.com>
"Leon Fuerth" <hdpf@msn.com>
"Maggie McCloud?? \(mmccloud@dmggroup.com\)" <mmccloud@dmggroup.com>
"Maida Stadtler" <mstadtler@apcoworldwide.com>
"Marcel Lettre" <marcel.lettre@gmail.com>
"Mariah Sixkiller \(mariah6@gmail.com\)" <mariah6@gmail.com>
"Martin Indyk" <mindyk@brookings.edu>
"Michele Flournoy" <micheleflournoy3@gmail.com>
"Mike?? Morell \(mike08082013@gmail.com\)" <mike08082013@gmail.com>
"Pat Griffin" <pgriffin@pmj-dc.com>
"philip.gordon \(philip.gordon@verizon.net\)" <philip.gordon@verizon.net>
"Rob Malley" <rmalley555@gmail.com>
"Rose Marie?? Owen" <rmowen@virginia.edu>
"Samuel Berger" <sberger@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Sharon Burke" <burkese@comcast.net>
"Steve Ricchetti" <sricchetti@cox.net>
"Strobe Talbott" <stalbott@brookings.edu>
"Susan Rice" <ricesusane@aol.com>
"Suzy George" <suzygeorge8@gmail.com>
"Tamara Wittes \(twittes@brookings.edu\)" <twittes@brookings.edu>
"Tara Sonenshine" <tsonenshine@earthlink.net>
"Theodore Waddelow" <twaddelow@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Tim Roemer" <tjroemer@gmail.com>
"Tom Daschle" <Tom@DaschleGroup.com>
"Tom Donilon" <tdonilon@gmail.com>
"Tom Downey" <tdowney@dmggroup.com>
"Tommy Ross" <trossjr@gmail.com>
"Toni Verstandig" <tonigverstandig@gmail.com>

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Tony?? Blinken" <ablinken@aol.com>
"Veronica Pollack" <veronica@daschlegroup.com>
"Vikram Singh" <vsingh@americanprogress.org>
"Wendy Sherman" <wendyrsherman@gmail.com>
Date: 8/18/2015 7:46:14 AM
Subject: Albright: Another Bush Gets It Wrong on Iraq

All, pasted below and at link is a piece Madeleine wrote in response to Jeb Bush's position on Iraq.

http://www.politico.com/magazine/story/2015/08/another-bush-gets-it-wrong-on-iraq-121435.html#.VdJv8oKCOnM

IN THE ARENA
Another Bush Gets It Wrong on Iraq
By MADELEINE K. ALBRIGHT

August 17, 2015
Since leaving office, I have come to a détente with many of my Republican friends, agreeing not to keep rehashing mistakes of the past and to instead focus on the future of America's foreign policy. However, Republican presidential candidate Jeb Bush's brazen attempts to rewrite history in a series of campaign appearances last week cannot go unchallenged. By blaming President Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton for the rise of ISIL, Governor Bush is clearly seeking to absolve his brother's administration of responsibility for today's problems in Iraq. This argument may serve Governor Bush's political interests, but it does a disservice to the truth

No honest discussion of the situation today in Iraq can brush aside the mistakes that were made by the Bush administration during the invasion and its aftermath, much of it based on faulty intelligence and flawed assumptions. They sent too few troops to secure the country. They replaced a government that was a sworn enemy of Iran with one that had close ties to the mullahs. They disbanded the Iraqi Army and dismissed thousands of Sunni officers, who soon launched a violent insurgency.
None of these facts were acknowledged by Governor Bush in his speech at the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library or in his recent campaign appearances in Iowa, because they undermine his attempts at blame shifting.

According to Bush's emerging narrative, the fatal U.S. error in Iraq was the withdrawal of our troops on December 31, 2011. If that is the case, then the error was made by President George W. Bush, who negotiated that withdrawal date in a binding agreement reached with Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki in 2008. The Obama administration sought to extend the mission for U.S. troops, and by all accounts Secretary Clinton strongly supported such a residual presence. But Prime Minister Maliki refused to give U.S. troops immunity from prosecution—and the administration wisely decided not to put U.S. troops at risk to support a government that did not want them there any longer.
It is these circumstances that Governor Bush believes led to the rise of ISIL, but once again, he is only telling part of the story. ISIL, which emerged from al Qaeda in Iraq, was established in 2003 in the chaos that followed the invasion. AQI became a magnet for disaffected Sunnis and remnants of Saddam Hussein's army, who still help lead ISIL.

No one, Democrat or Republican, would claim that all is going well in the Middle East today. The Obama administration has certainly made mistakes, and the Bush administration did not do everything wrong. We should also not fall into the trap of assuming everything is America's fault. Sectarian Iraqi leaders, the Assad regime in Syria and malign Iranian influence also bear responsibility for the tremendous problems facing the region.

Still, the United States has been and will be an important force in the Middle East. Our country does not need a backward-looking partisan fight over our policy in the region. Instead, we should be having a substantive, forward-looking discussion about the kind of role we can play in bringing stability to a critical part of the world.

To his credit, Governor Bush did present some ideas for how his administration would deal with Iraq. While his rhetoric has been lofty, and his criticism of President Obama and former Secretary Clinton has been sharp, the policies he proposes look remarkably similar to what the administration is already doing—supporting the Iraqi military in their fight against ISIL. The areas where he appears to differ are his willingness to put more U.S. lives at risk by sending troops into combat, and his unwillingness to rule out waterboarding in interrogations.
Governor Bush also spoke of the importance of alliances, but his rhetoric and proposed actions would jeopardize these important sources of strength. Nothing would infuriate our European allies more than Governor Bush's plan to break away from the nuclear agreement with Iran that they spent years negotiating alongside us. Similarly, Governor Bush made a point of using the term "Islamic terrorists," a phrase that our allies in the Arab world have pressed us not to use because it feeds the false narrative that we are at war with a religion.

Words matter in the world of diplomacy, and so does leadership. The reputation of the United States was severely damaged during President' Bush's administration. Today, America's place in the world is far stronger than it was in 2009 thanks to the leadership of President Obama and former Secretary Clinton. They renewed alliances, relentlessly pursued our terrorist enemies, and forged international coalitions on Iran sanctions and on the fight against climate change. That's a laudable record of achievement—one that needs no re-writes.

In the months ahead, I would encourage Mr. Bush to be a true student of foreign policy rather than a hurler of political potshots. The United States cannot afford another President Bush who blinds himself to global reality and who forges ahead into chaos. Americans deserve a president who will acknowledge the past and will forge a better future.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Read more: http://www.politico.com/magazine/story/2015/08/another-bush-gets-it-wrong-on-iraq-121435.html#ixzz3j7jyKZKa

Fariba Yassaee | Vice President
Albright Stonebridge Group LLC
1101 New York Avenue, NW | Suite 900 |Washington, DC 20005
T +1.202.842.7222 | D +1.202.370.3584 | Skype: fariba.yassaee
fyassaee@albrightstonebridge.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Melissa Cantrell" <mcantrell@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	hrcrapid@googlegroups.com
Date:	5/15/2015 2:29:26 AM
Subject:	May 15 Cable News Roundup
Attachments:	5.15.15 Morning Cable News.docx

Document attached, 2016 highlights below:

MSNBC's Morning Joe: Two 6-8 minute segments on Jeb Bush's struggles answering the Iraq question. The panel agreed coverage has been bad for Bush and he should have had a good answer teed up. Eugene Robinson noted that Jeb's final answer can be parsed. Jeremy Peters said both HRC and Bush have legacy issues and Stein responded that HRC has actually distanced herself from her legacy issue: WJC's record in some policy areas. One 12 minute segment on the donation by Stephanopoulos. The panel agreed he should have disclosed and he may need to do more to weather the storm.

CNN's New Day: Three minute segment on Jeb Bush now clarifying that he would not have gone to war in Iraq. Included a clip of Bush stating that he was not going to go out of his way to criticize his brother and father's actions. Dana Bash rehashed Bush's various stances on the question throughout the last week. Many Republicans are criticizing Bush for his comments. Dana Bash went on to say that this is only the first time that Bush will face questions about his brother's administration.

Fox News' Fox and Friends: Report on George Stephanopoulos's donations to The Clinton Foundation; showed footage of Stephanopoulos's interview with Peter Schweizer; used footage of Marc Thiessen's comments on Fox News' The Kelly File last night in which Marc Thiessen accused Stephanopoulos of echoing Hillary for America's talking points; Elisabeth Hasselbeck said there were questions about whether this would be the end of Stephanopoulos's career; teased to a poll on the Fox News website that asked whether Stephanopoulos's donations would affect his legacy. There was also an eight minute segment on Jeb Bush's struggle to answer a question about the Iraq war. Karl Rove and Joe Trippi debated his various answers and the media's response before transitioning into a conversation about George Stephanopoulos' donation to the Clinton Foundation; both agree that his reputation has been put at risk by the donation.

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com .
To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Daniel Kalik" <dankalik@jstreetpac.org>
To: "Amanda Renteria" <arenteria@hillaryclinton.com>
john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 7/28/2015 8:05:30 AM
Subject: Amanda/John: New Poll of Jewish American show 60% support for Iran Deal
Attachments: July_2015_Iran_Deal_Poll_One-Pager.pdf

Hi Amanda and John

I hope you are both doing well. I wanted you share with you a new poll of Jewish Americans on the Iran deal released by J Street this morning.

Top line is that we find 60-40 support for the agreement and for Congress voting to approve. This 20-point margin tracks the 18-point margin that the LA Jewish Journal found last week in its poll of Jewish Americans as well as the 18-point margin we saw in our June poll that we went over in our meeting in Brooklyn earlier this month.

Below is the press release and the full results, pollster memo, cross tabs, etc can be found at this link .

I have also attached a one-pager with some key highlights from the poll.

Let me know if you have any questions or if you would like me or our pollster to walk though this data.

Dan

Daniel Kalik

Vice President of Political Affairs

J Street

Office: (202)248-5866

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

July 28, 2015
CONTACT: Jessica Rosenblum, Jessica@jstreet.org , 202.448.1600 /202.279.0005 (m)

NEW POLL: Majority of American Jews Support Iran Nuclear Deal

WASHINGTON—The majority of American Jews support the Iran nuclear deal and do so at a higher rate than Americans as a whole, according to a new poll.

The poll, conducted by Jim Gerstein of GBA Strategies and released today by J Street, finds that 60 percent of American Jews support the agreement reached between the P5+1 and Iran. This, as compared to the 56 percent of American adults who backed the deal when asked the exact same question in a July 20 Washington Post-ABC poll.

"These results make clear that American Jews overwhelmingly support this deal and see this diplomatic agreement as the best way to keep Iran from getting a nuclear weapon," says J Street President Jeremy Ben-Ami. "The numbers just go to show—once again— that the pundits and those who speak most loudly on behalf of the Jewish community are flat- out wrong in their presumption that Jewish Americans are hawkish on Iran or regarding U.S. policy in the Middle East in general."

The full survey, crosstabs and analysis can be found here.

As a fierce battle over the deal between pro-Israel advocacy organizations takes shape on Capitol Hill, American Jews want their Members of Congress to approve the agreement by the same 20-point margin, 60 to 40 percent.

Support for the agreement cuts across demographic groups. There is broad and, in most cases, majority support for the agreement across the Jewish community, regardless of age, gender, region, Jewish organizational engagement and knowledge of the issue.

"These findings underscore that American Jews are a solid base constituency of support for the agreement," says Gerstein. "The massive public campaign launched by AIPAC and the Republican Jewish Coalition against the agreement doesn't reflect the views of most American Jews."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The 20-point margin in favor of the agreement is consistent with the 18-point margin found in the LA Jewish Journal's survey released last week, as well as the 18-point margin in J Street's survey conducted prior to the agreement.

Jewish awareness of the Iran issue has notably risen since the signing of the agreement, with 79 percent reporting to have "a great deal" (32 percent) or "some information" (47 percent) about the deal. This marks a 13-point increase in awareness since the J Street survey conducted prior to the deal.

Despite a high level of awareness about the Iran deal, Jews indicate that Iran and Israel are low voting priorities, with the two tied for ninth place in a list of 11 issues they want the President and Congress to prioritize. Only ten percent listed Iran and Israel as one of their top two priorities, but it is notable that these percentages are up from six and seven percent, respectively, from the June poll, and both were at the highest level ever found in prior J Street surveys.

President Obama's job approval and personal favorability have increased slightly since the agreement was reached, and there is also an improvement in the national mood. Obama's job approval among Jews now stands at 59 percent, which marks a 3-point bump since J Street's June survey. Also, his personal favorability has risen from +7 (48 favorable/41 unfavorable) to +15 (52 favorable/37 unfavorable), and there has been a 5-point bump to 44 percent who believe the country is headed in the right direction. Favorability for Benjamin Netanyahu (+18), John Boehner (-54), and the Republican Party (-51) remains largely unchanged.

GBA Strategies designed the questionnaire for this national survey of American Jewish adults. The survey was conducted July 21-23, 2015 and includes 1,000 self-identified Jews. The survey is subject to a margin of error of +/- 3.1 percentage points at the 95 percent confidence level. GBA Strategies contracted the research company Mountain West Research Center to administer the survey by email invitation to its web-based panel, which is regularly updated and consists of nearly 900,000 Americans.

###

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: john.podesta@gmail.com
To: sewallconroy@comcast.net
Date: 10/25/2008 4:11:14 PM
Subject: Re: liz sherwood randall

Probably makes sense. Helps to not compound the Perry distance. Maybe leave her in an advisory position, but get Bill and Michelle to give her a real assignment. Alt B is ask Ash to utilize her on his work.

Sent via BlackBerry from T-Mobile

From: <sewallconroy@comcast.net>
Date: Sat, 25 Oct 2008 17:46:19 -0400
To: <john.podesta@gmail.com>
CC: <Don.Gips@Level3.com>
Subject: liz sherwood randall

John,

I know that it is important to include Liz Sherwood Randall in the transition. Based on her ability to contribute to the DOD Agency team to date, we had assigned her to the Russia policy team.

However, the organizational structure that Susan and Jim agreed upon today now leaves Liz with a minor role (albeit one consistent with having a family in CA). Given the level of interest, I wanted to double back with you.

Should we put Liz Sherwood back on DOD Agency team so she has the choice of a more significant role? Pls advise.

–sarah

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Moira Whelan" <mwhelan@nsnetwork.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 6/13/2008 7:20:59 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Davis and connections to Ukrainian politician who poisoned his opponent

All, this is the first shot across the bow of what hopefully will be a much bigger story.

It would help a lot if people could work to get this around. In the meantime, David Donnelly, NSN and others are working to make this much, much bigger.

http://abcnews.go.com/Blotter/story?id=5063617&page=1

Alleged Russia Ties Entangle McCain Campaign Manager

McCain's Campaign is Blasting a Report that Manager Worked for Kremlin-Backed Candidate in Ukraine

By JUSTIN ROOD
June 13, 2008
ABC NEWS
Post a Comment FONT SIZE AAA
EMAIL
PRINT SHARE

John McCain's presidential campaign is blasting a New York Times report that his campaign manager once worked for a Kremlin-backed politician, and that McCain likely knew of his efforts.

(ABC News Photo Illustration)

The McCain campaign is strongly denying the paper's reporting that in 2005, a White House National Security Council staffer called John McCain's Senate office to complain that Rick Davis, at the time a GOP lobbyist, was "undercutting American policy on Ukraine" by ferrying a Kremlin-backed politician, Viktor Yanukovich, around Washington D.C., the paper reported.

The Bush White House -- and McCain – opposed Yanukovich, whom the United States and others had accused of election fraud, and benefiting from violence and intimidation towards journalists.

Related

Ethics Concerns Claim Another McCain Adviser

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

McCain's Lobbyist Friends Rally 'Round Their Man

McCain Pastor: Islam Is a 'Conspiracy of Spiritual Evil'

McCain's campaign categorically denied that Davis was involved in his firm's work for the Ukranian politician – did not prepare briefings for U.S. officials or lawmakers, did not schedule meetings involving Yanukovich, did not draft talking points, and did not make phone calls on Yanukovich's behalf.

"He was not involved in any work his firm did on Ukraine, including Yanukovich," said McCain spokesman Brian Rogers.

If the account of the NSC staffer's call is true, it suggests McCain should have known Davis' business -- but installed him as campaign manager anyway. McCain's campaign, which had earlier referred a New York Times reporter to McCain's Senate office, now disputes that such a phone call ever happened.

"It's absolutely nonsense, it never occurred," Rogers said.

The story also raises the possibility that Davis may have violated the Foreign Agents Registration Act, a 1938 anti-espionage law requiring all agents of foreign powers to register with the U.S. government and disclose their activities. Davis never filed -- though according to the campaign, of course, he had no reason to do so.

-

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Arizonans for Ann" <info@kirkpatrickforarizona.com>
To: "John Podesta" <podesta@law.georgetown.edu>
Date: 9/6/2014 9:49:10 AM
Subject: SIGN YOUR NAME

KIRKPATRICK FOR ★ ARIZONA

John --

The Grand Canyon delivers 12,000 jobs and over $700 million to our local economy each year.

That's why it's absolutely critical we seek a long-term solution to protect the Grand Canyon from new uranium mining.

John, will you sign our petition and demand that Congress pass a permanent ban on new uranium mining in the Grand Canyon?

---------- Original Email ----------

From: Ann Kirkpatrick
Subject: Protect The Grand Canyon: [PETITION]

John --

12,000: Jobs created by the Grand Canyon
$700,000,000: Yearly income the Grand Canyon provides to our local economy.
28,800: Number of people who have signed our petition to save the Grand Canyon.

The Grand Canyon is our district's own personal Wonder of the World.

But more uranium mining around the Canyon poses a real threat to our natural treasure. This practice could contaminate our water supply, pollute our communities and destroy our local economy.

It's absolutely critical we seek a long-term solution to protect the Grand Canyon. Will you join me in calling on Congress to permanently protect the Canyon?

John, click here to sign our petition and add your name to the list of supporters demanding Congress ban new uranium mining in the Grand Canyon >>

As a native Arizonan, the Grand Canyon is especially important to me. But if we're going to protect it, we need your help.

ADD YOUR NAME: http://action.kirkpatrickforarizona.com/Grand-Canyon

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Thanks,

Ann

Paid for by Kirkpatrick for Arizona

This message was sent to: podesta@law.georgetown.edu | Change or update your email address by clicking here . We believe that emails are a crucial way for our campaign to stay in touch with supporters. Click here if you'd like to unsubscribe from these messages. Thanks for your support!

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Reid Detchon" <RDetchon@unfoundation.org>
To: "Adele Morris" <amorris@brookings.edu>
"Andy Karsner" <akarsner@manifestenergy.com>
"Bob Nordhaus" <rrn@vnf.com>
"Boyden Gray" <cbg@cboydengray.com>
"Charles Curtis" <curtis@nti.org>
"Dan Esty" <daniel.esty@yale.edu>
"David Orr" <dorr@oberlin.edu>
"Greg Dotson" <gdotson@americanprogress.org>
"Larry Schweiger" <ljschweiger@larryschweiger.net>
"Maggie Fox" <maggielfox@gmail.com>
"Mark?? Safty" <mark.safty@ucdenver.edu>
mikef@turnerfoundation.org
"Pete Rouse" <prouse@perkinscoie.com>
"Rhea Suh" <rsuh@nrdc.org>
"Richard Branson" <Helen.clarke@virgin.com>
"Richard Cizik" <rcizik@aol.com>
"Rush Holt" <rholt@aaas.org>
"Scott DeFife" <SDeFife@restaurant.org>
"Steve Symms" <ssymms@prdands.com>
"Susan Eisenhower" <susan@eisenhowergroup.com>
"Debbie Masterson" <debbie.masterson@tedturner.com>
"Thea Lee" <tlee@aflcio.org>
"Tim Wirth" <twirth@unfoundation.org>
"Tom Daschle" <Tom@DaschleGroup.com>
"Thomas Lovejoy" <tlovejoy@unfoundation.org>
"Vic Fazio" <vfazio@akingump.com>
Date: 5/7/2015 1:50:46 PM
Subject: Energy Future Coalition: Agenda for May 12
Attachments: Agenda150512.docx

As a reminder, the next Energy Future Coalition Steering Committee meeting will be on Tuesday, May 12 – from 10 am to noon at our offices, 1750 Pennsylvania Ave., NW, in the conference room on the 12th floor. An agenda is attached.

We will discuss current thinking about geoengineering – direct human interventions to affect climate change – based on a report earlier this year by a committee of the National Research Council. The report was issued in two volumes – Climate Intervention: Carbon Dioxide Removal and Reliable Sequestration and Climate Intervention: Reflecting Sunlight to Cool Earth – to distinguish the two approaches, and our discussion will also follow that pattern.

We will hear from two members of the committee – first an overview by David Titley, founding Director of the Center for Solutions to Weather and Climate Risk at Penn State and the former Chief Operating Officer at NOAA. To discuss carbon capture, use, and storage – particularly biological capture, Jen Wilcox will join us by phone. She heads the Clean Energy Conversions Laboratory at Stanford. We also have a number of additional participants joining us to enrich the discussion – including Rafe Pomerance, longtime climate advocate and now a member of the National Academies' Polar Research Board; Brenda Ekwurzel, Senior Climate Scientist at the Union of Concerned Scientists; Andrew Deutz, Director of International Government Relations for The Nature Conservancy; and Ernie Shea, who in addition to running 25x'25 has pulled together nearly 40 ag and environmental groups into the newly formed North American Climate Smart Agriculture Alliance.

We expect to have a fascinating discussion, and we look forward to seeing you on Tuesday, May 12.

As it happens, the following came across the transom, so I can't vouch for it, but you might find it interesting and provocative reading in advance:

Rutgers University climatologist Alan Robock talks with the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists about geoengineering and nuclear winter. He says that geoengineering is not the solution to global warming because of its many risks and unknowns. He notes that some of the technology that would be required to implement geoengineering has not been developed and that many socio-political questions would have to be resolved before it could be put into practice--questions such as who decides what the global temperature should be? The world would have to reach agreement on a target temperature and on what entity should do the implementing. Robock's biggest fear with regard to geoengineering is that disputes over these questions could escalate into nuclear war which in turn could cause nuclear winter, producing global famine among other effects. Robock goes on to describe interactions with the Central Intelligence Agency regarding their interest in geoengineering, and his meeting with Fidel Castro.
http://bos.sagepub.com/content/71/3/1.full.pdf+html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

If we haven't heard from you already, as always, we welcome RSVPs to Caitlin Shubick at cshubick@energyfuturecoalition.org or by phone at (202) 778-1638.

With best regards,
Reid

* * * * *

Reid Detchon
Executive Director
Energy Future Coalition
1750 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 300
Washington, DC 20006
Phone: (202) 463-8744
Fax: (202) 887-9021
www.energyfuturecoalition.org

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "S. Daniel Abraham Center for Middle East Peace" <info@centerpeace.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 10/26/2015 6:57:56 AM
Subject: News Update - October 26

S. DANIEL ABRAHAM
CENTER FOR MIDDLE EAST PEACE

Israel and the Middle East News Update

Monday, October 26

Click here for a printer-friendly version.

Headlines:

- PM Considers Canceling 80,000 Arabs' Residency in East Jerusalem
- Police Block Waqf from Installing Own Temple Mount Cameras
- Palestinians to Ask UN to Set Deadline for Ending Occupation
- UN Chief Welcomes Bibi's Decision on Maintaining Status Quo
- 2 Israelis Wounded, Assailant Killed in 3 West Bank Attacks
- Police: Israeli Arabs Stopped Rioting, Fear of Jewish Boycott
- Arab Israeli Uses Paraglider to 'Join Rebel Fighters in Syria'
- Lieberman: 'Syria Fighting Over Soon, Hezbollah Turning Sights on Israel'

Commentary:

- Washington Post: "We're Lifelong Zionists. Here's Why We Boycott Israel."
  - By Steven Levitsky, Harvard University and Glen Weyl, University of Chicago
- Times of Israel: "The Political Center's Role: Security and Morality"
  - By Yair Lapid, Chairman of Yesh Atid party and Knesset member

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ynet News

PM Considers Canceling 80,000 Arabs' Residency in East J'lem

Prime Minster Benjamin Netanyahu recently raised the possibility of canceling the residency status of the 80,000 Palestinians living in East Jerusalem neighborhoods on the other side of the separation wall. Shuafat refugee camp and Kafr Aqab would be among the affected neighborhoods. Netanyahu brought up the need to address the situation in East Jerusalem's neighborhoods during a cabinet meeting two weeks ago. "There is no enforcement there, no law," Netanyahu said. "We need to examine the possibility of canceling their residency. There needs to be a discussion about it."

See also, "Netanyahu Mulls Revoking Residency of Palestinians Beyond E. Jerusalem Separation Barrier" (Ha'aretz)

Times of Israel

Police Block Waqf from Installing Own Temple Mount Cameras

The Muslim authority administering the Temple Mount in Jerusalem's Old City said it tried to install its own cameras on the Temple Mount, but was blocked by Israeli police Monday. The installation of surveillance cameras is a key provision of a deal reached over the weekend between Israel, Jordan and the Palestinian Authority to defuse tensions over the holy site. The Jordanian-run Waqf said a team was "working on the installation of cameras belonging to the Islamic Waqf… but the Israeli police interfered directly and stopped the work."

See also, "Kerry Lays Out Steps to Ease Israeli-Palestinian Strife" (Reuters)

See also, "Netanyahu: Holy Site Surveillance Cameras in Israel's Best Interest" (Voice of America)

Ha'aretz

Palestinians to Ask UN to Set Deadline for Ending Occupation

Saeb Erekat, secretary general of the Palestine Liberation Organization's steering and monitoring committee, announced Sunday that the PLO and Arab League are preparing a motion for the UN Security Council that sets a deadline for ending Israel's occupation of the West Bank. At a press conference in the Palestinian embassy in Cairo, Erekat said that alongside this proposal, Palestinians will seek international protection in the Security Council as well the establishment of a commission of inquiry into the current violence.

See also, "Palestinians to Renew UN Bid for Israeli Withdrawal Deadline" (Times of Israel)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ma'ariv

UN Chief Welcomes Bibi's Decision on Maintaining Status Quo

UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon welcomed Prime Minister Netanyahu's announcement confirming Israel's commitment to upholding the status quo on the Temple Mount in both words and actions. His statement noted that he had taken note of Israel's commitment not to divide the holy places and to respect Jordan's special role as stipulated by the peace agreement and its historic standing. He said that he hoped the security arrangements between Israel and the Jordanian Waqf would make it possible for visitors and worshippers to behave with restraint and to respect the sanctity of the site.

See also, "UN Chief Praises Netanyahu's Status Quo Commitment" (Times of Israel)

Jerusalem Post

2 Israelis Wounded, Assailant Killed in 3 West Bank Attacks

Palestinian assailants wounded two Israelis, and Border Police shot and killed a Palestinian teenager who threatened them with a knife, in three separate attacks on Sunday in the West Bank. In the evening, a Palestinian stabbed and seriously wounded a man at the Ariel junction in the West Bank. Magen David Adom paramedics said they found a 25-year-old man sitting on the sidewalk near the entrance to the city suffering from multiple stab wounds to his upper body. He was hospitalized in serious but stable condition at The Rabin Medical Center- Beilinson Campus in Petah Tikva.

See also, "Israeli Stabbed Close to Jerusalem by Attackers Wearing Traditional Jewish Garbs" (i24 News)

Arutz Sheva

Police: Israeli Arabs Stopped Rioting, Fear of Jewish Boycott

Israel's Arab citizen population has stopped the rioting that accompanied the current terror wave at its outset, according to the police. "For two weeks, there was an awakening and an intensification of the protests and riots, Chief Superintendent Doron Malka, Spokesman for the Police's Northern District, told Walla! Monday. "But for the last week and a half there has been utter quiet in the Northern District." The riots began October 1, with organized protests in several northern cities and villages. The violence then spread to most of the northern Arab communities, and included dozens of instances of blocking roads with burning tires, as well as hurling rocks and firebombs and police and civilian vehicles.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Guardian

Arab Israeli Uses Paraglider to 'Join Rebel Fighters in Syria'

An Arab Israeli has crossed into Syria using a paraglider, with the apparent goal of joining rebel fighters there, the Israeli army has said. "A surveillance post identified an Israeli civilian entering Syrian territory using a paraglider" late on Saturday, an army statement read on Sunday. "The preliminary review indicates that the civilian that entered is a resident of Jaljulia", an Arab town in central Israel . A military spokeswoman said the army was "examining the possibility he had entered Syria in order to join rebels." The army said the paraglider took off from the southern section of the Israeli-occupied Golan Heights, next to southern Syria. It challenged speculation that he may have been blown off course and crossed the border inadvertently.

See also, "Israeli Paraglides Into Syria in Apparent Attempt to Join Rebel Group" (Ha'aretz)

Jerusalem Post

Lieberman: Syria Over Soon, Hezbollah Turning Sights on Israel

Yisrael Beytenu chief Avigdor Liberman warned Monday that comments made by Hezbollah chief Hassan Nasrallah over the weekend suggest that the organization intends to set its sights on Israel as soon as it extricates itself from fighting in Syria's civil war. During a rare public appearance in Beirut to mark the Shi'ite Ashura holy day, Nasrallah attacked both Israel and the US, saying that Hezbollah has fought Israel in the past and will continue to do so. "Anyone who thinks that we will retreat or give up- that won't happen. We will win," he vowed.

Washington Post – October 23, 2015

We're Lifelong Zionists. Here's Why We Chose to Boycott Israel.

By Steven Levitsky and Glen Weyl

We are lifelong Zionists. Like other progressive Jews, our support for Israel has been founded on two convictions: first, that a state was necessary to protect our people from future disaster; and second, that any Jewish state would be democratic, embracing the values of universal human rights that many took as a lesson of the Holocaust. Undemocratic measures undertaken in pursuit of Israel's survival, such as the occupation of the West Bank and Gaza and the denial of basic rights to Palestinians living there, were understood to be temporary.

But we must face reality: The occupation has become permanent. Nearly half a century after the Six-Day War, Israel is settling into the apartheid-like regime against which many of its former leaders warned. The settler population in the West Bank has grown 30-fold, from about 12,000 in 1980 to 389,000 today. The West Bank is increasingly treated as part of Israel, with the green line demarcating the occupied territories erased from many maps. Israeli President Reuven Rivlin declared recently that control over the West Bank is "not a matter of political debate. It is a basic fact of modern Zionism."

This "basic fact" poses an ethical dilemma for American Jews: Can we continue to embrace a state that permanently denies basic rights to another people? Yet it also poses a problem from a Zionist perspective: Israel has embarked on a path that threatens its very existence.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As happened in the cases of Rhodesia and South Africa, Israel's permanent subjugation of Palestinians will inevitably isolate it from Western democracies. Not only is European support for Israel waning, but also U.S. public opinion — once seemingly rock solid — has begun to shift as well, especially among millennials. International pariah status is hardly a recipe for Israel's survival.

At home, the occupation is exacerbating demographic pressures that threaten to tear Israeli society apart. The growth of the settler and ultra-orthodox populations has stoked Jewish chauvinism and further alienated the growing Arab population. Divided into increasingly irreconcilable communities, Israel risks losing the minimum of mutual tolerance that is necessary for any democratic society. In such a context, violence like the recent wave of attacks in Jerusalem and the West Bank is virtually bound to become normal.

Finally, occupation threatens the security it was meant to ensure. Israel's security situation has changed dramatically since the 1967 and 1973 wars. Peace with Egypt and Jordan, the weakening of Iraq and Syria, and Israel's now-overwhelming military superiority — including its (undeclared) nuclear deterrent — have ended any existential threat posed by its Arab neighbors. Even a Hamas-led Palestinian state could not destroy Israel. As six former directors of Israel's internal security service, Shin Bet, argued in the 2012 documentary "The Gatekeepers ," it is the occupation itself that truly threatens Israel's long-term security: Occupation forces Israel into asymmetric warfare that erodes its international standing, limits its ability to forge regional alliances against sectarian extremists and, crucially, remains the principal motive behind Palestinian violence.

In making the occupation permanent, Israel's leaders are undermining their state's viability. Unfortunately, domestic movements to avert that fate have withered. Thanks to an economic boom and the temporary security provided by the West Bank barrier and the Iron Dome missile defense system, much of Israel's secular Zionist majority feels no need to take the difficult steps required for a durable peace, such as evicting their countrymen from West Bank settlements and acknowledging the moral stain of the suffering Israel has caused to so many Palestinians.

We are at a critical juncture. Settlement growth and demographic trends will soon overwhelm Israel's ability to change course. For years, we have supported Israeli governments — even those we strongly disagreed with — in the belief that a secure Israel would act to defend its own long-term interests. That strategy has failed. Israel's supporters have, tragically, become its enablers. Today, there is no realistic prospect of Israel making the hard choices necessary to ensure its survival as a democratic state in the absence of outside pressure.

For supporters of Israel like us, all viable forms of pressure are painful. The only tools that could plausibly shape Israeli strategic calculations are a withdrawal of U.S. aid and diplomatic support, and boycotts of and divestitures from the Israeli economy. Boycotting only goods produced in settlements would not have sufficient impact to induce Israelis to rethink the status quo.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It is thus, reluctantly but resolutely, that we are refusing to travel to Israel, boycotting products produced there and calling on our universities to divest and our elected representatives to withdraw aid to Israel. Until Israel seriously engages with a peace process that either establishes a sovereign Palestinian state or grants full democratic citizenship to Palestinians living in a single state, we cannot continue to subsidize governments whose actions threaten Israel's long-term survival.

Israel, of course, is hardly the world's worst human rights violator. Doesn't boycotting Israel but not other rights-violating states constitute a double standard? It does. We love Israel, and we are deeply concerned for its survival. We do not feel equally invested in the fate of other states.

Unlike internationally isolated states such as North Korea and Syria, Israel could be significantly affected by a boycott. The Israeli government could not sustain its foolish course without massive U.S. aid, investment, commerce, and moral and diplomatic support.

We recognize that some boycott advocates are driven by opposition to (and even hatred of) Israel. Our motivation is precisely the opposite: love for Israel and a desire to save it.

Repulsed by the Afrikaners' ethno-religious fanaticism in South Africa, Zionism founder Theodore Herzl wrote, "We don't want a Boer state, but a Venice." American Zionists must act to pressure Israel to preserve Herzl's vision — and to save itself.

Steven Levitsky is a professor of government at Harvard University. Glen Weyl is an assistant professor of economics and law at the University of Chicago.

Times of Israel – October 25, 2015

The Political Center's Role: Security and Morality

By Yair Lapid

What is the role of the political center during days like this?

To recognize that our reality is complex. That there are no simple solutions.

We know that national resilience means we must protect ourselves — both from terrorists with knives and also from people who want to change us into something we cannot become.

It's true that Jews will no longer go like sheep to the slaughter and if someone runs towards us with a knife we must shoot to kill. But it is also true that Jews do not cheer over a bleeding corpse because our tradition teaches "when your enemy falls do not rejoice," and we do not sanctify death, we sanctify life.

It is true that you can protect yourself however necessary. But it is also true that it is forbidden to carry out a lynch against a person lying unconscious on the floor, even if he is a terrorist.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It is true that Jews have been praying towards the Temple Mount for 2,000 years and that the liberation of the Western Wall was nothing short of a divine miracle. But it is also true that we don't want a Third Intifada and we don't want to ignite the Jihadi fire throughout the Arab world.

It is true that Jerusalem will not be divided. But it is also true that if concrete barricades successfully protect nursery schools, then it is better to put up those barricades because children should not have to fear Molotov cocktails. They are not soldiers, they are children.

It is true that destroying the homes of terrorists is a justified step in our fight against terror. But it is also true that when the Supreme Court demands this be carried out according to proper legal procedures then that is how it must be and we should not back down one inch in the face of those who provoke. The rule of law is the basis of our lives here and without the Supreme Court there is no democracy.

It is true that there is a lot of anti-Semitism — half the world is against us and the international press is hostile. But is also true that we have many friends and we have to be willing to listen to what they are saying and value the fact that they stand beside us.

It is true that the Palestinians — 3.5 million Muslims who are stuck like a bone in our throat — are not partners but the enemy. But it is also true that specifically because of this we must separate from them as quickly and efficiently as possible, with the IDF retaining its ability to operate in their territory to protect Israeli citizens.

It is true that the Arab members of Knesset, especially those from the Balad party, are irresponsible and try to ignite the street and undermine coexistence, and that the Knesset needs to consider what to do with them. But it is also true that we cannot play into their hands and we must recognize that there are 1.2 million Israeli-Arabs and we must find a way to live together with them.

It is true that the radical left is bizarre and traitorous and the radical right is violent and breaks the law. But it is also true that most of us are not like that. Most Israelis are in the center, which is not prepared to allow extremism to control our lives.

We expect our leadership to find solutions.

The leadership that we bring to Israel says that our test is to stand strong against our enemies without flinching but also to protect our identity — to remember that there are no instant solutions, that this is a long road, that we cannot choose between survival and Jewish values — we must implement both.

During days like these we must unite.

Unity is created when everyone recognizes that it won't be 100 percent the way they wanted or believed. Because, in the words of Maimonides, "the upright path is the middle path."

What this country needs during these days, more than ever, is to rediscover our common language. Our true strength comes from our unity and our unity comes from understanding that we are complex.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

We are determined and we are ethical. We are fighting for our lives and preserving human dignity. We are defending Jews and remembering Jewish values.

If we hate, we will lose. If we become like them, we will lose.

If we find the way – even during these difficult days — to preserve that which unites us, no one will be able to defeat us — ever.

Yair Lapid is a member of Knesset and the chairman of the Yesh Atid party.

S. Daniel Abraham Center for Middle East Peace
633 Pennsylvania Ave. NW, 5th Floor, Washington, DC 20004
www.centerpeace.org

2015 S. Daniel Abraham Center for Middle East Peace, All rights reserved.
YOU ARE RECEIVING THIS EMAIL BECAUSE YOU SIGNED UP FOR OUR NEWS UPDATES.

unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Phil Barnett" <pbarnett@sb-atalaya.com>
To: "Heather Samuelson" <hsamuelson@cdmillsgroup.com>
Date: 10/17/2015 4:18:09 PM
Subject: Re: Friends & Allies TP's

On Heather's point about getting a consistent number for the prior congressional investigations, here's the list we have in the fact sheet comparing the Benghazi investigations to prior investigations into terrorist attacks:

• In December 2012, the Senate Committee on Homeland Security and Government Affairs released a report on the Benghazi attack.
• In April 2013, the Chairmen of the House Armed Services, House Foreign Affairs, House Judiciary, House Over sight and Government Reform, and House Intelligence Committees released a report on the Benghazi attack.
• In September 2013, the majority and minority staffs of the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee released separate reports on the Benghazi attack.
• In January 2014, the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence issued a report on the Benghazi attack.
• In February 2014, the House Armed Services Committee issued a majority staff report on the Benghazi attack.
• In February 2014, the House Foreign Affairs Committee issued a report on the Benghazi attack.
• In November 2014, the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence issued a report on the Benghazi att ack.

This makes seven prior congressional investigations if you count (as we did) the report by the five Republican chairmen.

If we want to use seven as the number instead of six (which is the number in the talking points), it might make sense to rephrase the talking point so it is referring to prior congressional investigations, not prior committee investigations, since the five Republican chairmen are not technically a "committee."

One other point is that there is very little in the talking points about the emails. That may make sense, but if you want talking points for allies to use, here would be two possible ones to add:

* While Republicans criticize Secretary Clinton's email practices, Secretary Clinton has called for all of her emails to be released publicly. No prior cabinet secretary has ever taken this step. There are now thousands of her emails available to the public, more any other cabinet secretary in history. There are thousands of her emails available on the State Department's website; there are zero emails from any of her predecessors.

* Republicans and the press naturally focus on a small subset of her emails. But if you look at all of them, you will see a much different picture. You will see a Secretary working hard -- and long hours -- to reach a nuclear arms agreement with Russia, build an international coalition against Iran, advance women's rights, and aid countries in need.

Phil

On Sat, Oct 17, 2015 at 4:40 PM, Heather Samuelson <hsamuelson@cdmillsgroup.com > wrote:

My edits and questions attached.

From: Brian Fallon
Sent: Saturday, October 17, 2015 1:49 PM
To: Cheryl Mills
Cc: Milia Fisher , Jake Sullivan , John Podesta , Dan Schwerin , Adrienne Elrod , Mandy Grunwald , Philippe Reines, Sara Latham , Heather Samuelson , David Kendall , Katherine Turner , Jennifer Palmieri , Huma Abedin , Phil Schiliro , Phil Barnett , Matt Siegler , Varun Anand , sbay@hillaryclinton.com , Corey Ciorciari

Attached is an updated version of Friends and Allies TPs document to reflect the settled-upon goals/themes for the hearing. Please send along any edits/comments. We want to provide this to folks in time for the Sunday shows tomorrow.

On Fri, Oct 16, 2015 at 4:19 PM, Cheryl Mills <cheryl.mills@gmail.com > wrote:

Dear Team

In advance of tomorrow's call, please find a summary that seeks to capture our discussion.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Welcome comments and redline edits.

best.

cdm

On Fri, Oct 16, 2015 at 2:01 PM, Milia Fisher <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

Hi all-

As discussed on today's call, we'll reconvene this hearing prep group on Saturday morning, 8:30-9:30 am. Calendar invite to follow.

Dial in: 1 (718) 839-6957 // NO PIN

Best,
Milia

--
Milia Fisher
Special Assistant to the Chair
Hillary for America
mfisher@hillaryclinton.com
c: 858.395.1741

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jacob Roberts" <jroberts@progressivemediausa.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 6/25/2008 2:48:50 PM
Subject: [big campaign] Media Monitoring Report - Evening 06/25/08

Main Topics: McBush, energy, terrorism and economy, McCain's military roots, AUFC's Bush Bus

Summary of Shift: President Bush today spoke about Zimbabwe and met with the president of Iraq. Ralph Nader's comments on Obama's treatment of race and class were a source of much conversation between panelists and pundits. With Hillary and Bill Clinton's support now behind Obama, pundits spent a vast amount of time on how the upcoming Unity event will go. Almost all programs and stations dedicated a noteworthy chunk of time to Barack Obama's iPod content, recently published in Rolling Stone.

Highlights
1) McBush
   a. CNN: Jeanne Moost compares McCain's and Bush's computer illiteracy
   b. CNN: Panel has a few yucks at McBush's expense
2) CNN: McCain's energy proposal does not sit well with Nevadan voters
3) CNN: Fortune editor expresses surprise at McCain's opinion on #1 threat to economy
4) MSNBC: Author of pro-McCain book describes McCain as having the American military in his blood
5) FNC: AUFC's Bush Legacy Bus and awesome communications director on Shepard Smith's program
6) MSNBC: Olbermann cites McCain: 'Bin Laden may have just given us a little boost' during segment on Black's Fortune comments [no clip]
7) MSNBC: Olbermann mentions how McCain promotes eBay as a way for Americans to make money [no clip]
8) MSNBC: Olbermann mocks McCain for basically admitting his offshore drilling proposal is a gimmick [no clip]
9) NBC WRC summarizes the McCain message from Las Vegas today [no clip]
10) CBS WUSA outlines the AP-Yahoo poll about who is better suited to deal with the Iraq war and the LA Times domestic issue poll. They also briefly discussed the music both candidates have on their iPods [no clip]
11) MSNBC: Chris Matthews asks panel whether Charlie Black's terror comment in Fortune magazine was smart, citing recent polls that show the public trusts McCain more with terror. Panel concludes: no. Matthews also cites McCain's similar '04 statement on Bush [no clip]

Clips
Highlight #1
Computer Illiterate, Just Like President Bush (CNN 06/25/08 06:59pm)
JEANNE MOOST: We don't expect the President to be the Liberace of the keyboard but still. Should the next President of the United States know how to work a computer?

KID ON THE STREET: I mean, yeah. I guess so. It would be helpful. Why not?

MOOST: Ask John McCain. Here's how he describes his computer skills:

JOHN MCCAIN: I am an illiterate that has to rely on my wife for all the assistance that I can get.

WOMAN ON STREET: Oh that's absolutely ridiculous.

[…]

MOOST: While Cindy McCain's been spotted scrolling on her blackberry, John McCain tends to be handed a blackberry to talk on. Barack Obama on the other side is one of those guys so intent on reading his black berry that he could run into something. […] A far cry from this guy:

GEORGE BUSH: I hear there's rumors on the internets. One of the things I've used on the Google.

MOOST: Just the other day President Bush did it again.

BUSH: They can go on their computers and dial up volunteer.org .

[…]

MOOST: But McCain's admission that he is computer illiterate was fodder for debate at something called the

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Personal Democracy Forum. The online expert who had worked for John Edwards got into it with the Internet expert from the McCain campaign.

MCCAIN EXPERT: You don't necessarily have to use a computer to understand how it shapes the country.

EDWARDS EXPERT: That's the point. You do.

MOOST: But when McCain's guy said this:

MCCAIN EXPERT: John McCain is aware of the Internet.

MOOST: John McCain is aware of the Internet became a joke on the Internet. […] At least John McCain knows the difference between a lap dance and a laptop even if jokesters made a mock up of John McCain's real website with: How does this thing work? And should I double click here?

Panelists Laugh at McCain's Expense (and Bush's) (CNN 06/25/08 6:40pm)
[Clip opens with President Bush endorsement of John McCain.]
WOLF BLITZER: All right. He's out on the campaign trail obviously. What do you think?

GLORIA BORGER: Third Bush term. I think he's asking for a third Bush term for John McCain. He's using the McCain' campaign slogan. 'This isn't the kind of change you want. I can provide the kind of change you need,' and that the kind of change Barack Obama provides is 'fake.' This is George Bush right now campaigning for his legacy.

[…]

JACK CAFFERTY: What does he got? A 28% approval rating? Nobody cares at this point […].

PANELIST: I think Bush is onto something. The real change would be bringing Alberto Gonzalez back as attorney general, Don Rumsfeld back as secretary of defense and McCain's vice president: Larry Craig. […]

Highlight #2
McCain Names Energy Proposals The Lexington Project, Nuclear Plans Worry Voters in Nevada (CNN 06/25/08 7:04pm)
DANA BASH: McCain has been pushing energy related ideas for nearly 2 weeks. Today he labeled those proposals, The Lexington Project. Named for a Revolutionary War site, its intended as a simple way to communicate to voters that he's leading . […]

JOHN MCCAIN: In a world of hostile and unstable suppliers of oil, this nation will achieve strategic independence by 2025.

BASH: A lofty goal aimed at invoking John F. Kennedy and some Harry Truman for good measure.

MCCAIN: 3 decades of partisan paralysis on energy security is enough. Since I am not President I cannot say the buck stops here but I will say that it must stop now.

BASH: But beyond the snappy sound bites, many of the ways John McCain's wants to wean America from oil are controversial. Take Nuclear Energy:

MCCAIN: I will set this Nation on a course to build 45 new reactors by the year 2030.

BASH: That's a promise voters he was speaking to in Nevada are weary of. Because of congress's plan to store nuclear waste in their state, Yucca Mountain. Something McCain has supported.

MCCAIN: We well need to solve complex problems of moving and storing materials that will always need safeguarding. We will need to do all these things and do them right.

Highlight #3
Fortune Magazine Editor David Whitford "Surprised" That McCain Thinks Biggest Threat to Economy is Terrorism, Says It's "Very Telling" (CNN 06/25/08 12:10pm)
JOHN ROBERTS: [...] In the interview you did with John McCain you asked him what the greatest threat to the American economy is and he said 'radical Islamic terrorism.' Were you surprised by that answer?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

DAVID WHITFORD: Yeah, I was pretty surprised. I was expecting him to say something about, I don't know, rising gas prices or climate change or something like that. But it was very telling that he turned it around to an answer about national security. I think he feels that that's the issue on which he's got the best chance of winning in November. And I think we're going to see a lot of that this year. Questions directed at John McCain that he will try to turn into national security issues.

ROBERTS: So if John McCain can in fact make the economy a national security issue, he has admitted that the economy is not his strongest point, but if he manages to make that connection, could he mitigate any disadvantage that he has on Issue #1 with Barack Obama.

WHITFORD: Yeah, possibly. I mean he's gained some familiarity with economic issues over the years. And he really has a plan that's very different [...] I would start with Free Trade. John McCain has been an advocate, a longtime advocate of Free Trade for breaking down trade barriers [...]

ROBERTS: Big differences on energy policy as well David. John McCain advocating a gas tax holiday, as well as expansion of offshore drilling. Are either one of those plans viable?

WHITFORD: Well I think neither has very good political prospects. I mean certainly, his proposal for a summer gas tax holiday has zero chance of ever even being introduced in Congress, much less being passed. And he would admit himself that's not the sort of thing for a long-term positive effect on energy prices. In fact, I think that most economists would say that the effect might even be detrimental because it would increase demand for gas and demand seems to be what's driving up gas prices.

His other proposal, to open up offshore drilling conceivably, I suppose, if it were to become law might have the effect of increasing supply and that might have the effect of bringing down energy prices long term but again I think it's unrealistic and maybe moving us in the wrong direction. We need to begin weaning ourselves from fossil fuels not finding new ways to exploit them.

Highlight #4
Author of Pro-McCain Book: McCain is the Product of the US Military (MSNBC 06/25/08 12:47pm)
CONTESSA BREWER: You know, we have seen a lot of liberals criticizing John McCain and saying, 'He's no maverick. He backs up President Bush. I mean, he's backing up President Bush on the issues like offshore drilling and the tax cuts and the surge in Iraq.' So why do you call it a 'maverick life'?

PAUL ALEXANDER: I think if you look back at the first Bush term, the first four years of the Bush presidency, he fairly consistently worked against almost everything the Bush Administration was advancing, the tax cuts—there was a great story. He was supposed to be—have dinner at the White House one night but he was actually at the capitol, trying to derail one of the Bush tax proposals. He couldn't go have dinner with the president 'cause he was trying to shoot down his tax proposals.

There was a sort of a sear—on the econ—on the…you know, econ—ecology, you know….

BREWER: Environmentalism.

ALEXANDER: Environmental issues. All that. So there's a long—if you go back and look at the record a lot of what he did in those first four Bush years was fight against the president.

BREWER: […] Did he learn lessons from [the 2000 republican primary] that he's now put into practice that helped him secure the nomination this time around and could help him going toward the White House?

ALEXANDER: I think so. I was on the campaign trail with him in South Carolina, during the South Carolina primary in 2000 and it really was the dirtiest race […] I've seen. […] I think he learned that you have to respond to those attacks. […] That was his mistake last time. He should have answered and he didn't.

BREWER: […] McCain carries with him proudly his military experience […]. Has that experience influenced him so strongly that he is unable to accept any kind of limitations on what the military can accomplish overseas?

ALEXANDER: Well, he's a product of the American military. […] He's a product of the American military and he thinks in terms of, you know, being a product of the American military. So when they talk about who's gonna be best for national security, this is what the McCains do.

BREWER: It's in his blood.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

ALEXANDER: It's in his blood.

Highlight #5
Bush Legacy Bus and J. Funk on Britt Hume (FNC 06/25/08 06:31pm)
BRITT HUME: President George Bush's approval rating is at an all time low but one liberal activists group not only doesn't want to recover this year it doesn't want it to recover ever. American's United for Change has unveiled the Bush Legacy Bus. Which highlights what it calls the failed policies of the Bush administration on the outside. The bus features a photo of President Bush and phrases like: economy in crisis, endless war in Iraq, healthcare's a mess. On the inside there are various interactive exhibits and videos. AUC's communication director tells Cybercast News that the bus is:

[Visual of Quote]

"designed to drive a stake through the heart of the failed conservative ideology as a governing philosophy."
–Jeremy Funk

--
Jacob Roberts
Media Analyst
PMUSA
(c) 208.420.3470
--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Terry Gawryk" <gawrykt@att.net>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 11/12/2014 2:20:47 AM
Subject: Your recent Climate Change missive.

Dear Mr. Podesta,

I subscribe to the White House e-mails mainly for comic relief. They never seem to disappoint. I just read today's about the President's monumental agreements with the Chinese. So I am compelled to write to you.

How will the United States Government seek to enforce these agreements when the Chinese choose, as they invariably will, to disagree?

Will there be a line in the sand? Will it be a red line? Will we all have to cross our arms, pout, and jump up and down? I'm only asking because of the recent evidence of our great nation's foreign policy successes around the globe: In North Korea; Iran; Iraq; Ukraine; Russia, and countless other places.

A recent observation of Daniel Henninger of the Wall Street Journal which I'm paraphrasing badly, comes to mind:

"For the past six years foreign policy planners and national leaders in Moscow, Tehran and Beijing got up every day and did one thing: "Think how they can diminish or destabilize the United States. Our Leadership (that's you Mr. Podesta) got up every day for six years and thought about. . . .wind farms."

Huzzah! God bless you for all your effort! From now, every time that I read or hear something about you, it will be framed against this remark. A laudable and honorable legacy.

Best regards, Terry Gawryk

Terry Gawryk, Attorney at Law
7250 N. Cicero Ave., Suite 102
Lincolnwood, IL 60712
Telephone, 847-674-8124, fax, -8126
Mobile, 773-315-8411.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Robby Mook" <re47@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "Joel Benenson" <jbenenson@bsgco.com>
Date: 2/7/2016 3:00:31 AM
Subject: Re: Revised Message Frame

I think we should all get on the phone today to finalize this. Kate is going to send an invitation.

Mandy, Navin and I have also been talking about the potential need for another survey across march states that would do the following:
--Refine/finalize our response on Wall Street
--Test our refined message frame
--Explore "nuclear option", i.e. hard negatives from both sides (Anzo--this may already be accomplished in your surveys, so let's discuss)

On Sun, Feb 7, 2016 at 9:29 AM, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com > wrote:

> Dan,
>
> Other than what she has been doing over the last few days, do we have any sense from her what she believes or wants her core message to be?
>
> I pose this only because the opening graph here, which I assume is the core frame, is written in passive as opposed active voice and it is still not clear what her singular message is. The power of a strong message frame generally lies in a combination of simplicity and focus. In your graph below you have a diagnosis in the first sentence that is about "achieving their dreams." In the second sentence we're making it about "reaching your potential" - and then we are building a future "we can all share and succeed in" --- to me these are related for sure but not the same thing.
>
> Hillary Clinton wants to break down all the barriers holding Americans back from achieving their dreams. Because she believes that America can't reach its full potential when you're held back from reaching yours. That's how we'll build a future we can all share and succeed in.
>
> Sanders has simplicity and focus --- the corrupt political and economic systems are rigged to keep giving more to the billionaire class while the middle class has been hollowed out. We have break up the banks, take on wall street to rebuild the middle class reduce income inequality.
>
> Is there a simpler construct for our frame – and this may also be a little long but I'm trying to get a little more aspirational about where we're going:
>
> It's time to live up to the promise of America – and that means living up to our promise of opportunity, equality and justice for all Americans. That means breaking down the barriers of structural racism, sexism and LGBT discrimination that are holding too many people back and tackling once and for all the disgrace of corporate profits reaching record highs while wages and incomes are stagnant while Americans are working longer and harder than ever just to get by.
>
> From: Dan Schwerin [mailto:dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com]
> Sent: Sunday, February 07, 2016 2:44 AM
> To: Jim Margolis; Joel Benenson; Mandy Grunwald; Jennifer Palmieri; Jake Sullivan; Robby Mook; John Podesta; Huma Abedin; John Anzalone; David Binder; Oren Shur; Navin Nayak > Subject: Revised Message Frame
>
> Per a discussion some of us had on Thursday before the debate, and also drawing on what HRC has been doing over the past few days, here's a rough one page summary of a revised message frame. Oren has also added a note at the bottom about paid media strategy. I know Robby is keen to engage HRC on this as soon as possible, so we'd welcome feedback.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Thanks

Dan

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sara Du Bois" <sdubois@progressivemediausa.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 6/5/2008 8:59:42 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Tracking Update: McCain Speech in Lake Buena Vista, FL 06/05/08

Hello BigCampaign,
Just off the phone with our tracker Evan who was on the ground today in Orlando, FL. Below are the notes from our call.

Big Highlights

- Asked about how Vietnam applies to Iraq
  - Says he's "proud of America now" because we're divided about the war but not about the soldiers
  - He's surprised at Americans patience with Iraq given mismanagement
- Stumbles but says he voted against Everglades restoration bill because it was an omnibus bill
- Repeats "The fundamentals of the economy are very strong"
- Suggests town hall proposal will alleviate people's feeling we're on the wrong-track

Lake Buena Vista, FL: McCain Speech 06/05/08

Background Details

- There were teleprompters at the event, but McCain didn't use them. Unclear whether there was a malfunction or he decided off-the-cuff not to use them.
- Audience: Florida Society of Newspaper Editors and Florida Press Association. 150-300 people. White, middle-aged.
- Venue: Closed convention inside Walt Disney World Resort Hilton ballroom.
- Cindy was there. Didn't see any of the other McCain family members or notable staffers.
- Very very few McCain staffers: handful of traveling aides, didn't see any local/ground staffers.
- Our tracker had no trouble getting in. Local police took were more of a presence than Secret Service.
- Press: heavy on print news; also ABC, NBC, Fox and Univision cameras; and lots of local press.
- Introductory remarks by Executive VP of St. Petersburg Times, Marty Petty.

Speech Highlights

- In intro, Marty Petty notes that the event format will be town hall meeting, according to McCain's desire.

Opening Remarks

- McCain says he's just watched "Recount" "one of the more interesting times in America's history"
- Politicians claim allegiance everywhere they go, but I think I can make a legit claim for affection for this state. Florida has been important to MCCAIN in this election and in his personal life (Pensacola flight training; family in FL while he was a POW; Cecil Field)
- Reiterates that this will be long, hard and well-fought campaign, one of respect. That's why he proposed town halls to BHO. Hypes up benefits of this format: democracy, dialogue; he's learned so much. JFK-Goldwater model. Hopes that we can agree to this proposal. When 81% of people feel we're on the wrong track, it's even more important to include people in this process.
- Mentions his interview with Charlie Gibson: "Without thinking long" McCain told him that 3 major issues are reform, prosperity and peace.
  - (1) REFORM: Doesn't need to tell anyone in FL how hard housing crisis has been. We need to restore people's trust in government, that it can work. People have figured out that Washington is not working for them. But I have a record of reform, of bipartisanship - that's how you get things done in DC. After 9/11 there was some real bipartisanship.
    - § We need to eliminate earmarks. We haven't always done it. It has bred corruption. We have to reform this so we can have credibility with the American people for other reforms.
    - § We must reform Social Security, Medicare. Also Air Traffic Control system—hurts tourism. SS—"it's going to require some tough decisions." Because we can't hand off a broken system to the next generation.
    - § Cites examples of his bipartisanship: Gang of 14, campaign finance reform, immigration reform. Sometimes I've won, sometimes I've lost, but always I put the American people first.
  - (2) PROSPERITY: Americans are worried. "We have to give them a clear blueprint," e.g. reassure that people can stay in their homes by a 30-year guaranteed FHA loan. We're on the verge of a revolution, like the Industrial

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Revolution. Old jobs aren't coming back—when I go to MI and see people affected by auto industry, "it's heartbreaking." We have to take care of the displaced workers: education and training. A job is more than a job—it's self-respect.

- "The fundamentals of our economy are very strong."
- Energy independence is key. Green technologies are beneficial and profitable. 50% of Brazilians' cars are now powered by alternate energy and we just passed the farm bill, which I opposed; Sen. Obama supported it. We're giving tax breaks to thorough-bred horse owners, and asparagus owners.

- (3) PEACE-- We're in 2 wars.
  - "This is a global struggle, and it's not going to be over soon." But I will not give up.
  - And there's Afghanistan. Pakistan is affecting it. I've been to Waziristan. Straight-talk: there's corruption in Afghanistan. There are nations—not as many as we want, but there are many—committed to helping us in Afghanistan.
- And the central battleground, as Petraeus says, Iraq. I argued for the surge strategy, even though all the pundits and everyone was against it. We are winning in Iraq now.
  - Iraqi govt and military now in control of 3 largest cities in Iraq.
  - There are many enemies there: AQI, Shiite militias, former Baathists, etc.
  - Maliki has shown some very strong leadership. If we had done what my opponents wanted to do—a date for withdrawal—we would've been back, it would've been a victory for Iranian influence in the region. The benefits of success are enormous; e.g. a check on Iranian influence, Iraqis will never see return of another Hussein.
  - "I believe we will prevail in Afghanistan over time"
  - We have to be more multilateral, we have to be more reasoned.
  - Believes this century will be, like the 20th century, "an American century."

Question and Answer

- Q1 (Rosemary Goodrow, Tampa Tribune): Your relationship with the media. Early on, you were unique in giving easy access to the press. And "look what happened… you are where you are today." But AZ Republic reporter said you had no relationship with them. What did you learn about easy access to the media and how would that guide a MCCAIN presidency?

  MCCAIN: (1) I respectfully disagree with that characterization of my relationship with the AZ Republic; I had a very close relationship with the traveling reporter with me from there. I had a rocky relationship with AZ Republic for years, but then that improved. I love being on the back of the bus. Sometimes I make mistakes, and I understand that. the benefit to that in my view is that members of the media really know what I'm all about. I will continue to try to give the media access. Logistics are harder now that we're hopping from state to state. I've tried to have a good relationship with all the AZ press.

- Q2 (Tampa Tribune): Racism and sexism, subtle and not, were in Dem primary. What will you do to prevent this from being a problem in the general?

  MCCAIN: I believe American people will judge the candidates based on their merits. there were elements that entered into the race that threatened that. I'm proud of how Sen Clinton inspired a generation of women—I know as a father of 3 daughters. Obama inspired people too. I will do everything I can to keep anything that could be that kind of ugliness out of this campaign. You have to keep anything disrespectful out of the campaign, I have a record of that.

- Q3) What would you do to keep inflation in check?

  MCCAIN: (1) I would've vetoed the farm bill: it's distorted the market and artificially encouraged bad choices in the agriculture business. (2) I'm worried about the dollar- tied to costs of gas, for instance. Some of us remember the crisis in the 1970s. I was glad to see Bernanke making comments yesterday that we need to strengthen the dollar. (3) We need to get spending under control, which makes us borrow from China, then pay interest. The difference between 1982 and today is that then we restrained spending when we would cut taxes. (4) I don't know where price of oil is going to stop. That puts tremendous pressure on economy. So we need energy independence. Innovation makes costs go down.

  - Inflation is a great threat that looms on the horizon. I have a plan of action to address it.

- Q4) Paul Tash, St Petersburg Times. What are the historical lessons that you draw from Vietnam that may apply to the course ahead in Iraq?

  MCCAIN: (1) My experience in Nam made me hate war. And when the country was divided, that made it even harder for our vets to come home. "And I'm proud of America now. Because we are divided about the war" but not about the soldiers. And when we were defeated—but we never lost a battle—we had to fix the military. (2) On a broader level, you have to maintain the support of the people when sending young people to war. A lot of people are surprised at Americans' current impatience. I'm surprised at their patience, given that the war was so badly mishandled for 4 years. The American people and the Congress need to be informed, because if they're gonna be involved in the landing, they have to be involved in the takeoff. I would hold weekly town halls. (3) Remember the Powell Doctrine. One of the fundamental errors—see Fiasco or Cole—is we weren't prepared following the military success. I believe that since we're a special nation, we have special responsibilities. I'm worried about isolationism, since there's evil of radical Islamic extremism. (4) I learned a lot from reading about Vietnam War after I came back. War must always be the last resort.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- Q5 (Rick Hirsh, Miami Herald): Last year you opposed a $2B Everglades restoration bill—
  MCCAIN: Was it part of an omnibus bill?
  HIRSH: Yes.
  MCCAIN: There's your answer. … I'll let you finish. … I am committed to the preservation of the Everglades. If it were a stand-alone bill, it'd be different. I'll be glad to look at that vote, but I don't memorize the number on that vote. … I oppose out of control spending.

- Q6: Last year, your attempts at immigration reform failed. As Pres, what would be the first things you would do to put that effort back on track?
  MCCAIN: Ted Kennedy and I worked on that bill in bipartisan fashion. That bill was comprehensive, including a way to secure our borders. We failed because Americans didn't believe that, remembering 1986 amnesty law. We can secure our borders; then temporary worker program; then we can address the issue of the 12 million people who are here illegally—'administer justice' to the 2 million that have come here recently, and the other 10 million should not be privileged over people who came legally. This is a federal issue. I've failed a lot of times at getting legislation through, but I have shown I can make bipartisan efforts.

- Q7 (Carrie Eberly, Florida Daily): Are you comfortable not being able to send Americans into space for 7 (?) years? More NASA support?
  MCCAIN: I would be willing to spend taxpayer dollars on that. I am disturbed that we'd have to depend on Russia, and also now China. I think Americans would be very willing to do that, not to mention what space exploration contributes to American betterment.

- Q8: (Michael Lewis, Miami Today): How would you as President do earmark reform?
  MCCAIN: You'd know their names, I'd make them famous. Some of it already is, e.g. "bridge to nowhere"—they know it was $230million.

- Thanks audience for all they do. I am not for the Fairness Doctrine. You are going through a lot of challenges because of technology.

--
Sara DuBois
Deputy Director, Tracking/Media Monitoring
Progressive Media USA
sdubois@progressivemediausa.org
202-609-7681 (office)
410-967-7306 (cell)
--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "German Marshall Fund" <press@gmfus.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 2/17/2016 6:00:00 PM
Subject: Transatlantic Take: NATO Looks South

If you have problems viewing this email, you can view it as a web page. To view the mobile-friendly web page click here

G | M | F The German Marshall Fund of the United States
STRENGTHENING TRANSATLANTIC COOPERATION

Transatlantic Take

Our Organization | Our Work | Our Events | Our Experts | GMFUS.org

NATO Looks South

Ian O. Lesser — February 18, 2016

BRUSSELS—NATO's decision to deploy a multinational naval force to the Aegean to help control the flow of refugees from Turkey is a harbinger of things to come as the Alliance looks south. The limited naval force will not resolve a crisis that has imposed tremendous human costs and threatens the cohesion and security of Europe. But the use of NATO assets is an important symbolic step at a time when the European Union seems unable to act decisively. More significantly, it points to growing concern about Mediterranean security within the Alliance. Even as NATO moves to counter Russia on Europe's eastern borders, it will need to address a range of pressing security risks emanating from the south, including the Levant, North Africa, and Mediterranean...

FULL ARTICLE

Ian Lesser is executive director of the German Marshall Fund of the United States' Transatlantic Center in Brussels, and senior director for Foreign and Security Policy at GMF.

The views expressed in GMF publications and commentary are the views of the author alone.

Policy | Leadership | Civil Society

Follow

Strengthening Transatlantic Cooperation

Our Organization
About GMF
Career Opportunities
Press Room

Our Work
Leadership
Policy
Civil Society
Research & Analysis
Transatlantic Academy

Our Events
Major Conferences & Forums
Recent & Upcoming Events

Our Experts
Find an Expert

Manage preferences | Forward email | Unsubscribe | Subscribe

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Brian Fallon" <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 7/31/2015 5:39:29 AM
Subject: Re: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia

Like this (w the handle). Lets do it

On Fri, Jul 31, 2015 at 12:35 PM, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
I like including his handle.

.@marcorubio you've got it backwards: Engagement isn't a gift to the Castros -- it's a threat to the Castros. Embargo hasn't worked for 50+ years. Cuban people deserve better.

On Fri, Jul 31, 2015 at 12:26 PM, Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

Dan/Brian, would love your input on this.

From: Christina Reynolds [mailto:creynolds@hillaryclinton.com]
Sent: Friday, July 31, 2015 12:18 PM
To: Laura Rosenberger <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com >
Cc: Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >; John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >; Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >; Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: Re: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia

Love hitting him back. Will defer to the policy experts on which one, but I like mixing it up when we have the high ground.

On Jul 31, 2015, at 12:16 PM, Laura Rosenberger <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

I like that. Another option:

@marcorubio I'm for the Cuban people. Time to stop helping the Castros through failed policies. Going back to those would be the mistake.

From: Jake Sullivan [mailto:jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com]
Sent: Friday, July 31, 2015 12:14 PM
To: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >; Christina Reynolds <creynolds@hillaryclinton.com >
Cc: Laura Rosenberger <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com >; Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >; Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: RE: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia

Adding Reynolds.

Perhaps an HRC tweet along the lines of:

Those who seek to lead our country should focus on the future, not try to pull us back to the past. Embargo hasn't worked for 50+ years. Let's try something new.

From: John Podesta [mailto:john.podesta@gmail.com]
Sent: Friday, July 31, 2015 12:05 PM
To: Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >
Cc: Laura Rosenberger <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com >; Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >; Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: RE: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia

I'm good with either. Whatever is faster.

On Jul 31, 2015 8:00 AM, "Jake Sullivan" <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

Adding Laura and Fallon. John, did you have in mind having HRC hit back, or campaign?

From: Dan Schwerin [mailto:dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com]
Sent: Friday, July 31, 2015 10:57 AM
To: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >; Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: Fwd: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia

Here we go...

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: Jeremy Massey <jmassey@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: Fri, Jul 31, 2015 at 10:31 AM
Subject: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia
To: Clips <clips@hillaryclinton.com >

User Actions

Following

Marco RubioVerified account @marcorubio

After Clinton's failed 'reset' with Putin, now she wants to do a 'reset' with Castro. She is making another mistake.

Image removed by sender. Embedded image permalink

https://twitter.com/marcorubio/status/627124174495055872

--

Jeremy Massey

Research Department

847 736 9211

JMassey@HillaryClinton.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Kristina Schake" <kristinakschake@gmail.com>
To: "Robby Mook" <robbymook2015@gmail.com>
Date: 3/22/2015 11:33:45 AM
Subject: Re: DRAFT Questions for HRC Media Prepare

Yes, the foundation team heard that 60 minutes was looking into it. That's one of the reasons we desperately want to get the book ahead of time.

On Sun, Mar 22, 2015 at 6:27 PM, Robby Mook <robbymook2015@gmail.com > wrote:

> I heard the same. I think from nick or josh
>
> On Mar 22, 2015, at 6:24 PM, Margolis, Jim <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com > wrote:
>
> > +nick and john
> >
> > I'm hearing rumors 60 minutes may be working on a Clinton cash story.
> > Not sure how reliable info is.
> >
> > Jim Margolis
> > Sent from my iPhone.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 10/24/2014 5:40:58 AM
Subject: CTR TALKING POINTS: RAND PAUL'S FOREIGN POLICY

TALKING POINTS: RAND PAUL'S FOREIGN POLICY

BACKGROUND: In a lame attempt to clarify his contradictory foreign policy positions, Rand Paul gave a speech last night that only left more questions about what are the real views of Rand Paul and what are just political posturing.

TALKING POINTS:

Rand Paul's foreign policy is about as clear and predictable as rolling the dice.

After being criticized for his extreme isolationist views, Rand Paul is now trying to back track on those positions.

Rand Paul wants to have it both ways, claiming to be more of a hawk when it is politically convenient for him.

This isn't the first time Rand Paul has flip-flopped on important issues for political reasons.

- Rand Paul flip-flopped on Israel: After repeatedly claiming he would eliminate foreign aid, including to Israel, he now claims that he would not.
- Rand Paul flip-flopped on ISIS: Rand Paul expressed reluctance to intervene against ISIS, only to change his mind a few months later.
- Rand Paul flip-flopped Russia: Rand Paul was against standing up to Putin after the Russian leader sent troops into Georgia, but took a different stance after Russian troops entered Ukraine.

In his speech, Rand Paul criticized Secretary Clinton and cited former Secretary of Defense Robert Gates and Pakistani activist and recent Nobel Peace Prize winner Malala Yousafzai, both of whom have praised Secretary Clinton for her leadership around the world.

Rand Paul is quick to criticize the actions of our country's leaders after the fact, but he has never been in hot seat.

With such an unclear and contradictory foreign policy position, it is impossible to predict the actions Rand Paul would take if he were ever the one making the decisions.

Supporting Rand Paul's foreign policy would be the biggest, and most dangerous, gamble the American people could ever take.

BACKGROUND RESEARCH

Rand Paul flip-flopped on Israel. "Paul said, 'I haven't really proposed (phasing out aid to Israel) in the past.' That's rewriting history. Not only did Paul say he would eliminate all foreign aid during multiple media interviews in January and February of 2011, but as late as March of that year, his office released a budget proposal that included a zeroing-out of foreign assistance, with a section specifically inserted to defend the effect that policy would have on Israel. Paul is free to change his position, but saying he never held the position in the first place is flatly contradicted by his past statements and documents. We rate the claim Pants on Fire." ["Pants On Fire: I haven't really proposed (phasing out aid to Israel) in the past," PolitiFact, 8/7/14]

Rand Paul flip-flopped on ISIS. "After expressing reluctance to intervene against ISIS over the summer, Sen. Rand Paul abruptly shifted gears on Thursday and announced that he supports military action to eliminate the Islamist group. 'The military means to achieve these goals include airstrikes against ISIS targets in Iraq and Syria,' the Kentucky Republican and likely 2016 presidential hopeful wrote in an op-ed in TIME. 'Such airstrikes are the best way to suppress ISIS's operational strength and allow allies such as the Kurds to regain a military advantage.' […] When ISIS initially captured large swaths of Iraqi territory in June, Paul's response was mainly to criticize former President Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney for enabling ISIS's rise by launching the U.S. invasion of Iraq. In fact, Paul specifically argued that Obama didn't deserve scorn for failing to prevent the insurgent gains as a result. And while his new op-ed criticizes Obama for saying he still hasn't decided on a strategy to confront ISIS, Paul himself has made similar comments in arguing there might not be a viable strategy to defeat ISIS." ["Rand Paul's epic ISIS flip-flop," MSNBC, 9/4/14]

Rand Paul flip-flopped on Russia. According to Mother Jones, "So when Russia sent troops into Georgia (on George W. Bush's watch), Paul didn't want to provoke Russia by placing missiles in Poland. Yet today, when Russia moves into Ukraine (on Obama's watch), he's all for dispatching missiles to Poland to send a message to Putin. Does Paul care more about Crimea than Georgia? Or does he care more about keeping a foot on the GOP's anti-Obama bandwagon? Paul's office did not respond to a request for comment." ["Rand Paul's Big Flip-Flop on Russia," David Corn column, Mother Jones, 3/14/14]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Robert Gates: Sec. Clinton "made a singular contribution to strengthening this country's relationships with allies." Former Secretary of Defense Robert Gates: "In a world that is ever more complex, turbulent and dangerous, Secretary Clinton, 64, has made a singular contribution to strengthening this country's relationships with allies, partners and friends; rallying other countries to join us in dealing with challenges to the global order, from Libya and Iran to the South China Sea; and reaching out to people in scores of countries to demonstrate that America cares about them. She has developed, for the first time, long-range, comprehensive strategies for diplomacy and development that will strengthen the critical civilian contribution to America's national security abroad." [Robert Gates, Time Magazine, 4/18/12]

Malala: "A world with more women leaders will be a better world, and Hillary Clinton is helping make that possible." "Hillary Clinton is a symbol of strength for women across the world. It was she who famously said, 'Women's rights are human rights.' She not only spoke those words, but also dedicated her life to empowering women around the world through politics and philanthropy. She has been a source of strength for many women leaders, including myself, my family and those who stood by me after I was attacked. 'Continue your mission, be strong, we believe in you' is what she said to me, my father and the rest of the Malala Fund team when we met her last year at the Clinton Global Initiative awards. Her life and leadership show women what we can achieve if we believe in our own strength and if we channel our inner creativity, compassion and determination. A world with more women leaders will be a better world, and Hillary Clinton is helping make that possible." [Malala Yousafzai op-ed, 4/23/14]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "S. Daniel Abraham Center for Middle East Peace" <info@centerpeace.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 10/27/2015 7:18:13 AM
Subject: News Update - October 27

S. DANIEL ABRAHAM
CENTER FOR MIDDLE EAST PEACE

Israel and the Middle East News Update

Tuesday, October 27

Click here for a printer-friendly version.

Headlines:

- Netanyahu Reprimands Hotovely's Vision to Alter Status Quo
- UK Academics Boycott Israel to Fight for Palestinians' Rights
- US Warns Against Bibi's Idea to Revoke Jerusalem Arabs' Residency
- Dispute Erupts Over Al-Aqsa Mosque Security Cameras
- Palestinian Leader Seeks EU Help to Ease Crisis with Israel
- Senior IDF Official to 'Jerusalem Post': Terrorism Won't End Soon
- Netanyahu Announced Development of Terror Wave App
- Israel Strikes Hamas Targets in Response to Gaza Rocket Fire

Commentary:

- Ha'aretz: "Israel Mustn't Accept Anti-Democratic, Jewish Jerusalem"
  - By Editorial Board
- Al-Monitor: "Why Kerry's Prioritizing Syria Over Israeli-Palestinian Peace"
  - By Laura Rozen, Foreign Policy Reporter, Al-Monitor

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ma'ariv

Netanyahu Reprimands Hotovely's Vision to Alter Status Quo

Netanyahu's bureau reprimanded Deputy Foreign Minister Tzippi Hotovely for saying that her dream was to see the Israeli flag flying over the Temple Mount and that Jews should be allowed to pray there. The bureau clarified last night that government policy vis-à-vis the Temple Mount had been expressed in the statement made by the prime minister on Saturday night and that there had been no change. Prime Minister Netanyahu asked Tzippi Hotovely to issue a clarification and she said that her statements reflected her personal opinion and not government policy.

See also, "Israeli Deputy Foreign Minister: I Dream of an Israeli Flag Over Temple Mount" (Ha'aretz)

The Guardian

UK Academics Boycott Israel to Fight for Palestinians' Rights

More than 300 academics from dozens of British universities have pledged to boycott Israeli academic institutions in protest at what they call intolerable human rights violations against the Palestinians. The declaration, by 343 professors and lecturers, is printed in a full-page advertisement carried in Tuesday's Guardian: "A Commitment by UK Scholars to the Rights of Palestinians." The pledge says the signatories, from a variety of universities in England and Wales, will not accept invitations to visit Israeli academic institutions, act as referees for them, or take part in events organized or funded by them. They will, however, still work with individual Israeli academics, it adds.

See also, "Over 300 British Academics Pledge Boycott of Israel" (Times of Israel)

Times of Israel

US Warns Against Bibi's Idea to Revoke Jerusalem Arabs' Residency

The Obama administration on Monday hurried to express its opposition to Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's tentative talk of revoking the permanent residency status of tens of thousands of Arabs living in East Jerusalem. White House spokesman Josh Earnest said that, as far as the US government knows, Israel is not actively considering such a move. But if it were, he said, "it would obviously be of some concern to us." The US, Earnest went on, reiterates the "importance of all sides avoiding provocative actions and rhetoric."

See also, "US Opposes Netanyahu's Idea of Revoking Residency of East Jerusalem Palestinians" (i24 News)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Al Jazeera

Dispute Erupts Over Al-Aqsa Mosque Security Cameras

Muslim religious officials in occupied East Jerusalem say Israeli police have blocked them from installing security cameras at Al-Aqsa Mosque compound, despite a new agreement to place the surveillance equipment there. US Secretary of State John Kerry announced over the weekend a deal between Israel and Jordan, which administers the site, to install security cameras at the hilltop compound that has been at the center of weeks of unrest.

See also, "Jordan's King Welcomes Netanyahu's Status Quo Pledge 'As Long As It's Implemented" (Ha'aretz)

See also, "Israeli Police Remove Cameras Installed by Muslim Officials at Temple Mount" (Ha'aretz)

U.S. News

Palestinian Leader Seeks EU Help to Ease Crisis with Israel

Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas came to European Union headquarters Monday to seek the bloc's help to de-escalate the crisis with Israel, which he blamed on policies and actions of the Israeli government. Before opening the talks with EU foreign policy chief Federica Mogherini in Brussels, Abbas told reporters the situation was "extremely serious and grave," adding that "it may even deteriorate, and that is my fear." There have been almost daily Palestinian attacks against Israeli civilians and security forces. In the past five weeks, 10 Israelis have been killed in Palestinian attacks, mostly stabbings, while 51 Palestinians have been killed by Israeli fire, including 30 attackers and the rest in clashes.

Jerusalem Post

Senior IDF Official to 'Jerusalem Post': Terrorism Won't End Soon

Palestinian attacks are set to continue for a "lengthy period," and the IDF is preparing itself accordingly, a senior army source told The Jerusalem Post on Monday. "We are preparing for this to continue. It won't pass in two days. This can escalate and decrease in strength. We have to be prepared. It can go in any number of directions. We have to be ready for all scenarios." Three of the Home Front Command's four standing battalions are deployed in the West Bank, and the fourth in the Arava region of southern Israel, securing the Jordanian border. Recently, the Home Front Command sent a third battalion to the West Bank as part of the IDF's move to inject four back-up battalions.

See also, "Multiple Terrorist Attacks Thwarted in Hevron, Jerusalem" (Arutz Sheva)

See also, "Jerusalem Bus Attack Claims Third Life: Richard Lakin" (Ha'aretz)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ynet News

Netanyahu Announced Development of Terror Wave App

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu presented the Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee Monday with one of his answers to the continuing wave of terrorism - an application that alerts security forces. "We are currently working on the development of an application that will allow every citizen, with a push of a button, to alert security forces, so that they get to the scene faster and are able to neutralize the terrorist," Netanyahu said. He stressed that action will be taken against those who abuse the app. At the moment the app is in the initial stages of development. The announcement is a part of a series of actions taken to calm the public's fear in the wake of the current wave of attacks.

Ha'aretz

Israel Strikes Hamas Targets in Response to Gaza Rocket Fire

The Israeli Air Force struck Hamas targets in Gaza Monday night in response to the day's earlier rocket fire. A rocket fired from Gaza exploded in an open area in southern Israel Monday evening after sirens sounded in the Sha'ar Hanegev Regional Council. There were no injuries, and Israeli forces are searching the area for damages. Meanwhile, Palestinians report that a 19-year-old Palestinian was killed during clashes with Israelis in the West Bank and a Palestinian was shot during clashes near the Gaza border. Dozens of Palestinians are currently throwing stones and burning tires near Gaza's Bureij refugee camp.
See also, "Israel Strikes Gaza Sites After Rocket Attacks" (Washington Post)

Ha'aretz – October 26, 2015

Israel Mustn't Accept Anti-Democratic, Purely Jewish Jerusalem

Netanyahu has made clear again and again that he has no intention of adding any substance to his declared readiness for a two-state solution.

By Editorial Board

The prime minister's latest idea is to set up a separation wall in the heart of Jerusalem. Benjamin Netanyahu's aspiration, as reported Monday, is to rescind the residency rights of tens of thousands of Palestinians living in neighborhoods beyond the separation wall yet within the area annexed to Jerusalem.

At first glance, Netanyahu would seem to deserve praise for recognizing the fact that Jerusalem can no longer pretend to be a unified city, and that it must be divided. This was meant to be a historic decision, full of far-reaching repercussions for the political process. However, Netanyahu has made clear again and again that he has no intention of adding any substance to his declared readiness for a two-state solution.

The tactic of revoking Palestinian residency, if it happens at all as opposed to being just media spin, is meant to forge a reality that the right dreams about: a unified Jerusalem without Palestinian residents; annexed territory without an Arab population.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The argument for the idea is that while residents of these neighborhoods enjoy all the rights of a resident, they do not fulfill their obligations. By "rights" it is probably meant the lack of municipal services, an unsupervised education system and frightful neglect of infrastructure in exchange for the right to receive payments from the National Insurance Institute, which have become the essence of Israeli generosity toward the state's residents. By unfulfilled "obligations" Netanyahu means that many of the knife-wielding assailants have come from these neighborhoods, necessitating retaliatory action, lacking any legal basis, against a civilian population.

But even if Netanyahu finds, or invents, the legal lacuna permitting him to revoke the collective residency rights of Palestinians in Jerusalem, the city will continue to be "stuck with" tens of thousands of Palestinians without rights. These residents won't go anywhere. They will stay in their homes, or they will need work permits like residents of the territories.

In the first years of the occupation and the annexation, Israel made an effort to convince East Jerusalem's Palestinian residents to accept Israeli citizenship, and not just residency. The state understood back then that anyone seeking to annex East Jerusalem cannot give up on trying to win legitimacy from the world as well as the Palestinians. Legitimization would bring along with it, so the leadership hoped, international recognition of the city's unification. Now, Netanyahu makes it clear, there is no such need.

Jerusalem will not be a unified city, rather a purely Jewish city. Indeed, there will be Arabs in it, but they will lack basic human and civil rights. We must not agree to this dangerous and anti-democratic vision.

Al-Monitor – October 26, 2015

Why Kerry Is Prioritizing Syria Over Israeli-Palestinian Peace

By Laura Rozen

US Secretary of State John Kerry returned Oct. 25 from a five-day trip to Europe and the Middle East focused on advancing a diplomatic process for Syria that is seen as an increasingly urgent priority for some of the United States' closest allies in Europe and the region. While Kerry also met with Israeli, Palestinian and Jordanian leaders on the trip and proposed measures to try to restore calm, diplomats and current and former officials saw little chance of the United States embarking on a new Israel-Palestine peace push because chances for progress are seen to be so limited and because the urgency of ending the 4½-year-old Syrian war, countering the threat posed by the Islamic State and stemming the Syrian refugee influx have become top national security priorities, especially for Europe.

"Syria, for the US, for Europe … is the next priority," Ghaith al-Omari, an expert on Palestinian issues at the Washington Institute for Near East Policy, told Al-Monitor on Oct. 26. "Syria has become such a central point [especially] for the Europeans, I don't see any oxygen for dealing with anything else."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"On the Israel-Palestinian front, I don't see any potential for any progress between [Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin] Netanyahu on the one hand and [Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud] Abbas on the other," Omari said. "There is no sense if you start anything that these two leaders will play ball."

On Syria, "We feel a sense of urgency," Kerry told reporters after a meeting with the Russian, Saudi and Turkish foreign ministers in Vienna on Oct. 23. He said there will likely be a bigger follow-up meeting as early as Oct. 30 in Paris, which will include more parties.

Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov proposed that Egypt and Iran, among others, be included in follow-up talks.

"Our position first of all is to get the Syrians to sit down at the negotiating table and, second, to establish a reliable and representative support group in which many more countries would take part than have done so today," Lavrov told reporters after the Vienna meeting Oct. 23. "We have singled out Iran and Egypt as they can have an impact on the situation. Their absence does not promote this process."

Iranian officials did not yet respond to queries whether they expected to attend the Paris meeting. Lavrov spoke with Iran Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif about the Syria consultations on Oct. 24 and Oct. 26, the Russian Foreign Ministry said. Oman's foreign minister also held a rare meeting with Sryia's Bashar al-Assad in Damascus on Oct. 26 on how to advance a political process for ending the conflict.

A likely consideration would be if Saudi Arabia accepts being in multilateral talks on Syria that would include Iran, or if there are alternative ideas for working around the impasse — for instance, holding talks with some of the parties in different rooms.

Saudi Foreign Minister Adel al-Jubeir, speaking in Cairo on Oct. 25, said there had been some progress in narrowing positions between the parties on their visions for a Syria process.

"I believe that there has been some progress, and positions have moved closer on finding a solution to the Syrian crisis, but I cannot say that we have reached an agreement," Jubeir said at a press conference with the Egyptian foreign minister in Cairo on Oct. 25. "We still need more consultations … to reach this point."

While there seems to be growing momentum for a Syria political track, the Israeli-Palestinian issue has largely been relegated to the back burner.

Kerry, speaking in Jordan on Oct. 24, announced that Israel had accepted Jordanian King Abdullah's proposal to install cameras on Jerusalem's Temple Mount as one measure to try to reduce tensions. Netanyahu, in a statement that evening, reiterated that Israel was not seeking to change the status quo at the site, under which Muslims could pray there but non-Muslims could visit.

Whether such measures will be sufficient to reduce the violence remains to be seen.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ilan Goldenberg, a former aide to former State Department Middle East peace envoy Martin Indyk, said the US administration does not see opportunities for a major Israel-Palestine peace push, but would need to take steps even for the more limited goal of trying to prevent a new major outbreak of violence.

There is "not a grand plan right now for a big move to a new [Israel-Palestine peace] process," Goldenberg, now with the Center for New American Security, told Al-Monitor on Oct. 26.

There is a sense "on all sides … right now, there is no opening for serious [Israeli-Palestinian] negotiations, but American policy should be to try to take effective steps to preserve [a two-state] solution for later on," he said.

Even that more limited policy goal would likely require "a series of steps to deter and prevent the worst outcomes and another major cycle of violence, the collapse of the Palestinian Authority and the types of settlement activity that would make it impossible later on to pursue a two-state solution."

Regarding some reports alleging that Kerry may have discouraged a meeting between Netanyahu and Abbas, Goldenberg said he wasn't aware if that was the case, but noted the two men don't like or trust each other, and nothing good was likely to come out of such a meeting. "They have only met a few times, and they don't like each other," he said. "From past experience … the US has been hesitant about putting them together."

"I doubt there is such a thing," Omari said, referring to a proposed Netanyahu-Abbas meeting. While "Netanyahu always talks [about how] he is willing to meet Abbas 'anytime, anywhere,' [Abbas] is not too keen on a meeting [that would be] used by Netanyahu to say things are fine, when they are not. It would be politically costly, if there are no deliverables. Lose, lose."

Laura Rozen reports on foreign policy from Washington, DC, for Al-Monitor's Back Channel. She has written for Yahoo! News, Politico, and Foreign Policy.

S. Daniel Abraham Center for Middle East Peace
633 Pennsylvania Ave. NW, 5th Floor, Washington, DC 20004
www.centerpeace.org

2015 S. Daniel Abraham Center for Middle East Peace, All rights reserved.
YOU ARE RECEIVING THIS EMAIL BECAUSE YOU SIGNED UP FOR OUR NEWS UPDATES.

unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Suzy George" <sgeorge@albrightstonebridge.com>
To: "Bill Antholis" <wantholis@brookings.edu>
"Bill Perry" <wjperry@aol.com>
"Bill Woodward \(blackwoodward@gmail.com\)" <blackwoodward@gmail.com>
bill.danvers@gmail.com
"Brian Katulis" <bkatulis@americanprogress.org>
"Bruce Riedel" <briedel@brookings.edu>
"Caitlin McDonnell" <cmcdonnell@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Carol Browner" <cmbrowner@me.com>
"Carole Hall" <chall@brookings.edu>
"Catherine Whitney" <Catherine.Whitney@skadden.com>
"Chris Roberts" <croberts@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Dan Benjamin" <dbenjam61@hotmail.com>
"Daniel Silverberg" <danielsilverberg@yahoo.com>
"Deborah Gordon" <DCgordon@stanford.edu>
"Denis McDonough" <denis.mcdonough@gmail.com>
"Derek?? Chollet" <dhchollet@gmail.com>
"Don Baer" <donbaer@ps-b.com>
"Don Gips?? \(don.gips@gmail.com\)" <don.gips@gmail.com>
donkerrick <donkerrick@comcast.net>
"Eryn M. Sepp \(eryn.sepp@gmail.com\)" <eryn.sepp@gmail.com>
"Frank Lowenstein" <frankl03@yahoo.com>
"Greg Craig" <gcraig@skadden.com>
"Jake Sullivan" <jake.sullivan@gmail.com>
"Jamie Rubin" <JamesPRubin1960@gmail.com>
"Jan Vulevich Stewart" <jstewart@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Jeff Smith" <jeffrey_smith@aporter.com>
"Jeremy Bash" <jeremybash@gmail.com>
"Jessica Lewis" <lewisje03@yahoo.com>
"Jim Miller - Department of Defense \(james.n.miller.jr@gmail.com\)" <james.n.miller.jr@gmail.com>
"Jim O'Brien" <jobrien@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Joanna Nicoletti \(info@forwardengagement.org\)" <info@forwardengagement.org>
"Joe Cirincione" <jcirincione@ploughshares.org>
"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
"Julianne Smith" <julsmi@gmail.com>
"Ken Lieberthal" <klieberthal@brookings.edu>
"Kurt Campbell" <kurtmcampbell@yahoo.com>
"Laura?? Huber" <lhuber@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Leon Fuerth" <hdpf@msn.com>
"Maida?? Stadtler" <mstadtler@apcoworldwide.com>
"Marcel Lettre" <mlettre@verizon.net>
"Marisa DeAngelis" <MDeAngelis@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Martin Indyk" <mindyk@brookings.edu>
"Michele Flournoy" <micheleflournoy3@gmail.com>
"Nadia Nowytski" <nadia.nowytski@aporter.com>
"Pat Griffin" <pgriffin@pmj-dc.com>
"Rand Beers" <rand1142@verizon.net>
"Rich Verma" <rverma@steptoe.com>
"Rick Kessler" <rjkessler@verizon.net>
"Rob Malley" <rmalley555@gmail.com>
"Samuel Berger" <sberger@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Steve Ricchetti" <sricchetti@cox.net>
"Strobe Talbott" <stalbott@brookings.edu>
"Susan Rice" <ricesusane@aol.com>
"Tara Sonenshine" <tsonenshine@earthlink.net>
"Theodore Waddelow" <twaddelow@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Tim Roemer" <tjroemer@gmail.com>
"Tom Daschle" <tom.daschle@dlapiper.com>
"Tom Donilon" <tdonilon@gmail.com>
"Tom Downey" <tdowney@dmggroup.com>
"Tommy Ross" <tommy_ross@reid.senate.gov>
"Toni Verstandig" <tonigverstandig@gmail.com>
"Tony Blinken" <ablinken@aol.com>
"Veronica Pollack" <Veronica.Pollock@dlapiper.com>
"Wendy Sherman" <wendyrsherman@gmail.com>
"Wyndee Parker" <wyndee.parker@mail.house.gov>
Date: 3/18/2014 6:04:00 PM
Subject: Article by Brian Katulis

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Attachments: against_disengagement.pdf

http://www.democracyjournal.org/32/against-disengagement.php

Issue #32, Spring 2014

Against Disengagement

Today's progressives are often as muddled in their thinking about U.S. involvement in the world as conservatives are divided.

Brian Katulis

The Syria debate last fall offered the latest indication that U.S. foreign policy has entered uncharted political territory. The partisan lines in Congress were scrambled when lawmakers responded to President Obama's request to authorize military force against Syria for using chemical weapons—a request that was withdrawn after Syria agreed to dismantle its arsenal. Strong public opposition to the proposed military action resonated in a polarized Congress that has become increasingly disengaged from national security, especially compared to the decade after 9/11.

Had the Syria vote happened, President Obama probably would have lost it. But the vote's likely outcome was less interesting than the varied responses his request provoked. The arguments that the Syria debate produced within Republican and Democratic camps indicated that the old battle lines in the politics of U.S. foreign policy are being redrawn. Labels like "neoconservative" and "liberal interventionist" have less political relevance as their camps have decreased in size and political clout.

A big reason for this: The American public has grown more skeptical about U.S. engagement in the world. A recent Pew poll found 52 percent of Americans say the United States "should mind its own business internationally and let other countries get along the best that they can on their own," with only 38 percent disagreeing. By contrast, at the height of the Cold War in 1964, only 20 percent agreed that the United States should mind its own business; 30 percent said the same in 2002 at the beginning of the war on terrorism. But progressives must resist the lure of simply focusing inward; instead we should lead the American public toward embracing the current wave of geopolitical change underway in order to guide and shape that transformation. We need to put forth a compelling moral and strategic argument for U.S. engagement in the world. America has an interest in advancing a rules-based international system that strengthens the global common good and supports basic human freedoms and rights. Doing so won't be easy given the need to focus on our problems at home. But without stronger American leadership, the challenges percolating around the world—whether it's Syria's civil war, global economic instability, or the looming threat of climate change—might one day affect us as well.

The current public mood is the continuation of a decades-long breakdown of bipartisan support for international engagement. After World War II, such consensus led to the creation of programs and institutions that defined the postwar era: the Marshall Plan, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. This vital center started to collapse in the 1970s due to sharp conflicts over the Vietnam War and economic downturns at home, and the breakdown accelerated with the end of the Cold War.

After a brief moment of national unity following the 9/11 attacks, polarization on national security rose to new levels over the Iraq War. Beyond just deepening the division between progressives and conservatives, the foreign policy mistakes of the Bush era produced major fissures among conservatives on national security. Republicans are now split into three camps: neoconservative defense hawks like Lindsey Graham, Tea Party libertarian budget cutters like Rand Paul, and endangered traditional Republican internationalists like James Baker and Colin Powell. The divisions among conservatives on key foreign policy questions leave progressives with an opening to redefine America's leadership role in the world for the coming years—but progressives must want to seize this opportunity and articulate their worldview more clearly. If conservatives are divided, today's progressives are too often muddled in their thinking about U.S. engagement in the world.

The impulse to circle the wagons is strong and understandable with so many pressing issues facing us at home. Fixing these domestic problems will take money and attention, but it would be a tragic mistake to turn away from the challenges and opportunities of the world. The liberal order that America helped construct over 70 years faces new threats as governments around the world are under increasing pressure from citizens to fulfill basic needs, and more countries go their own way on issues like energy, food supply, and climate change. Progressives should renew the call to advance the common good at home and abroad that we supported during and after World War II.

We're witnessing a global transformation similar to that period. The world needs our vision and ideals. But some on the broad left believe America can do little good in the world. Many have wrongly concluded that the failure of overwhelming military force in Iraq and Afghanistan has proved the futility of deploying America's diplomatic, economic, and military assets. This is a reflexive, wrong, and even dangerous outlook. Yes, the Bush Administration made grievous, costly errors—and the Obama Administration's attempts to correct those mistakes are incomplete—but the Bush Administration's overreach certainly doesn't mean that we should retreat overseas. Progressives need to remember that our military plays an essential role in deterring wars with North Korea and Iran and providing a security umbrella for the global commons that keeps Americans safe and prosperous. It's all the more reason to engage with the world in the right way.

The country is on more solid footing than it was five years ago. Our economy is stronger, we're producing more energy at home and using less of it, and we're now out of unnecessary ground wars of choice. Considering how much we need to get done, leading from behind will no longer suffice. It's time to renew our purpose and lay out a vision of America as a force for good in the twenty-first century.

The Obama Era: A Mixed Record

Certainly one factor complicating America's public attitudes toward U.S. global engagement has been the Obama Administration's mixed foreign policy record, which does not fit easily into the usual frameworks—it's neither "hawkish" nor "dovish." President Obama ended America's involvement in the Iraq War but escalated the Afghanistan War. He has prosecuted a deadly and effective campaign against Al Qaeda and used controversial measures such as drone strikes and kill lists; he also continued the massive surveillance program run by the National Security Agency (NSA). Obama's reactive crisis management and sometimes erratic response to events abroad has often left the public confused, which was evident in his handling of Syria last fall. It's no surprise that the American public was skeptical about his request for authorization to conduct targeted and limited strikes on Syria's Assad regime—the President's public case for the strike was puzzling and bore the Administration's own skepticism about the venture.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

After five years in office, President Obama can point to several major accomplishments overseas, like ending the Iraq War and killing Osama Bin Laden. But many goals remain unmet—among them closing the Guantánamo Bay prison, bringing stability to Afghanistan, achieving a two-state solution in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and negotiating a nuclear deal with Iran. Furthermore, the ongoing turmoil and uncertainty in many parts of the Middle East show that the President is far from instituting the "new beginning" in that region he envisioned in his 2009 speech in Cairo.

The Obama Administration's mixed record is due in part to the significant challenges it inherited from its predecessor. The damage done by the Iraq War was considerable. But part of the problem has been the Obama Administration's own lack of clarity about the values it stands for globally, revealed most explicitly in its unsure response to political change in the Middle East and its heavy reliance on targeted drone strikes. The North Star of the Obama Administration's foreign policy has been pragmatism—doing what works (and what is politically salable at home) to achieve results in the world at any given moment. This approach has helped address the aftermath of the disastrous Bush years, but it has not provided much clarity on what America stands for, or what our strategy should be.

More than halfway through Obama's tenure, America finds itself in an uncertain geopolitical moment. America is safer from conventional military threats, and the risk of a major, 9/11-style terrorist attack on the homeland is lower than it was a decade ago. The war in Iraq is over, and our combat role in Afghanistan is coming to an end this year. But possible security threats from regional conflicts and instability in Syria, the Central African Republic, Libya, and Afghanistan remain. Terrorist groups like Al Qaeda have mutated into ever more splintered networks and continue to pose a challenge. These threats could harm our peace and prosperity, and we should be prepared to meet them. The global unemployment crisis, austerity measures, and the lack of basic freedoms have produced chronic social unrest in countries like Brazil, Turkey, and China. New cybersecurity threats loom and could weaken the digital infrastructure and technology essential for the global economy.

A New Four Freedoms Moment

At this moment of global transformation and uncertainty, progressives are better equipped than conservatives to articulate a new vision for global engagement that advances American interests and values. It's not simply that conservatives are divided over what they stand for on national security, and are mired in post-Iraq War malaise in the way that many Democrats were for years after the Vietnam War. It's that the conservative worldview—a lack of faith in the idea that effective government can promote the common good, a disdain for international institutions and treaties—is inadequate and unsuitable for today's global challenges.

Progressives have long been champions of the common good and the idea of promoting it through collaboration with allies. That moral imperative has not been as clear and consistent as it could have been in Obama's first five years. We need to revive it today.

At the start of 1941, Franklin D. Roosevelt used his State of the Union address to propose his famous Four Freedoms: freedom of speech, freedom of worship, freedom from want, and freedom from fear. Roosevelt delivered this speech at a time when non-interventionism was ascendant at home while threats loomed abroad. Today, we don't see threats on the order of Nazi Germany, but we do see challenges to basic freedoms in places like Egypt and problems like climate change and nuclear proliferation. Today, we need to shape our own "Four Freedoms" moment and articulate a new vision of progressive global engagement.

To do so, progressives need to illuminate their positions on four issues that will define U.S. leadership in the world: taking a clearer stance on global political change and the possibilities for democratic transitions around the world; defining a pragmatic and flexible form of multilateral collaboration; reforming the U.S. national security architecture at a time of budget cuts; and outlining a progressive economic agenda that preserves our leadership in global commerce and finance.

A Progressive Global Values Agenda

Around the world, the struggle to advance the freedoms FDR championed continues in a wide range of contexts. The waves of democratic change that started in the 1970s and continued for 30 years throughout Latin America, Asia, and Central and Eastern Europe face multiple challenges. The reassertion of authoritarianism in reaction to social and political protests in many countries across the globe is worrisome, and the alternative models of authoritarian state capitalism represented by countries like China compete with America's model. Democracy's appeal is still dominant. But the push for democratic progress is under considerable strain, especially in the unfinished upheavals in the Middle East.

More than three years into the Arab uprisings, the chaotic results from the first waves of political change call into question whether the United States, or anyone else for that matter, can influence these struggles for power and legitimacy in the Middle East. Tunisia and Yemen have staggered toward political change while Syria continues to disintegrate and Egypt backslides into authoritarianism. Extremist Islamist ideologies remain a key part of the landscape, and repressive forces are trying to squelch dissent in countries that have seen political openings (like Egypt) and countries that have not (like Saudi Arabia). Progressives need to revive a national conversation about the battle of ideas and how to defeat the lure of extremist Islamist ideologies with nonmilitary means. This discussion about the battle of ideas loomed large in the immediate aftermath of the 9/11 attacks, but it was quickly forgotten in the wake of Iraq and the global war on terror. Unfortunately, as the Arab uprisings went through their "terrible twos" and passed their third anniversary, the United States was viewed as indifferent, disengaged, and inconsistent in its voice and role in the Middle East.

A progressive values agenda entails four fundamental ideas. First, it requires pushing back against the Obama Administration's tendency to shy away from the tough issues of political change in the Middle East. For example, the Administration's reticence in calling out the repressive and anti-pluralistic moves by both the Muslim Brotherhood-led government of former President Mohamed Morsi and the military-ruled governments has left America with few friends in Egypt.

Second, we must articulate a form of engagement with the region that uses the full range of our powers. This means eschewing simplistic calls from some neoconservatives either to use military force or to threaten cuts in security collaboration with partners in the region as a tool to force democratic change. It also requires substantial reform in America's democracy promotion infrastructure. After more than a decade working on the ground in multiple Middle East countries, government agencies and nongovernmental organizations have not been able to enrich civil society and economic life in the ways we saw in previous waves of democratic change in Central and Eastern Europe and Latin America. The U.S. approach to democratic development in the Middle East needs to do more to take into account the importance of economic change and the need for comprehensive political and economic reforms to help societies alter basic power structures. It needs to wrestle with challenges associated with the rise of religious political forces and these groups' stances on pluralism, religious freedom, and inclusion. One issue that deserves more attention from progressives is the status of Christians in the Middle East; the oldest Christian communities in the world are disappearing from the lands where their faith was born and first took root. If Christian communities with deep roots in the region are not respected, then there is little hope for other religious minorities and nonbelievers, and respect for pluralism, a core progressive value, will continue to erode. Along these lines, the U.S. approach also needs to encourage actors in the region to develop stronger political ideologies that go beyond elite personality politics, Islamism, and vague ideas of

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Arab nationalism, and instead offer concrete ideas for solving social and economic problems in a richer political paradigm.

Third, it means enhancing partnerships with key regional powers. For example, Gulf countries like Saudi Arabia have been instrumental in providing economic and diplomatic support to Yemen's ongoing democratic transition. The United States needs to continue backing such efforts. While it is tougher to apply such a model to a case like Egypt—the Muslim Brotherhood is simply too polarizing a force—it is nonetheless essential for the United States to have a candid dialogue with such countries.

Finally, it requires the United States to assume the risks of broad engagement in today's Middle East. Such risks are sadly all too familiar to us: Think of Ambassador Christopher Stevens and his sacrifice in service to his country in Libya in 2012, an example now obscured by a highly politicized debate over conspiracy theories surrounding the Benghazi attacks. Stevens and his colleagues were on the front lines and trying to help shape a positive outcome in postwar Libya. Their loss has had the unfortunate consequence of making America less inclined to engage in the toughest battles.

The most difficult challenge facing America in the Middle East right now is Syria's civil war. The Obama Administration's often confused and confusing approach has not advanced U.S. interests and values in the region, and the lack of a clear strategy from 2011 to 2013 was alarming. The Administration has taken a step in the right direction in pushing a diplomatic effort to end the conflict, but it must go further. The United States must come up with a coherent plan to support the moderate elements of the Syrian opposition. Because we currently lack one, retrograde extremist elements have come to dominate the opposition. The United States also needs to work with close regional partners to prepare security and military options that may at some point become necessary to support diplomatic efforts to end the conflict, in the way that the Clinton Administration used targeted force with political objectives in Bosnia and Kosovo to attain a sustainable peace agreement.

Progressives should shun the magical thinking that U.S. military force might be the panacea for this conflict. But we should also remember that the threat of force in 2013 produced a tangible result: a process for eliminating Syria's deadly chemical weapons arsenal. When force and the threat of force are part of a strategy with clear political ends, it can achieve results. It's true that the process of turning over the weapons isn't going as quickly as expected, but the process is still alive and it has boosted the confidence of key allies in the region. When I was in Israel and Jordan in January, the leaders of both countries were praising the agreement, with Israelis saying that the chemical weapons deal led them to stop a program for distributing gas masks to the public.

Pragmatic Multilateralism and the Global Common Good

In this period of budget cuts, America's bilateral military relations with reliable partners and cooperation in international organizations will loom larger. Getting other countries to pull their weight and contribute to resolving shared security challenges is not just desirable but necessary. A multipolar world means that American leadership is more important, not less. In a world where other powers are stronger, America's leadership style must now privilege genuine listening and consensus building.

We need to listen—but we also need to lead. At times during the Obama years, it has seemed as if America had overlearned the lessons from the Iraq War and leaned away from telling the world where we stand and what we want to get done. Leading from behind hasn't worked. We have an unmatched ability to form global coalitions and mobilize resources—but to do this, we need to ground our strategy in a clear purpose, telling partners what's at stake and what values we are trying to advance.

In many corners of the world, regional powers are rising. India continues to see impressive economic growth, but it will face internal political challenges and a need to implement a wide range of economic reforms. China is now established as an economic powerhouse, but its global role is untested, and the dramatic rise of a middle class there will test the new government. In the Western hemisphere, Mexico is playing an important role in the regional economy. The United States needs to broaden its engagement with these societies. America will also have to better signal how it will deal more effectively with the rise of the rest than we have to date—and do it in a way that doesn't send a message of America in decline.

A new approach would pursue multiple avenues for international cooperation. One key avenue is bilateral strategic relationships with rising powers such as China and India. The United States has already opened dialogues with these countries on how to work toward common goals, but it needs to deepen those discussions. A second avenue is cooperation with regional organizations such as the Association of Southeast Asian Nations and the African Union. The recent announcement by Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel that the United States intends to work more closely on security issues with the Gulf Cooperation Council is an example of how the United States might seek to demand more out of existing multilateral organizations.

Security Institutions in a Time of Budget Cuts

Progressives need to continue making the case for an overhaul of U.S. national security institutions, with a focus on three areas: defense transformation, intelligence reform, and continued efforts to strengthen diplomatic and development institutions.

Defense transformation. After years of military overreach, many progressives are naturally skeptical about the use of force abroad. But to advance freedom from fear and to keep Americans safe, we need to maintain a strong military that can develop the capacities of partners so they can do more.

After the defense budget grew at an unprecedented rate for a decade, we are starting to see that trend slow. Initial defense budget-cutting efforts have focused on waste, duplication, and unneeded weapons programs. But the Pentagon still needs to make structural reforms in several key areas where substantial cost savings are possible: the weapons-system acquisition process; compensation for service members and retirees, especially in health care; and operations and maintenance costs. Progressives can continue to play an important role in reducing the defense budget, working with libertarian conservatives who support smaller government.

Intelligence and special operations reform. Reform in our intelligence and counterterrorism institutions should focus on intelligence collection, targeted military strikes, and terrorist detainees. On collection, there are two urgent matters. First, the United States must address the privacy and civil liberties issues at stake in NSA surveillance activities. The revelations about the NSA's activities have raised important questions about the very nature of our democracy and have dimmed America's image around the world. Second, the U.S. intelligence community has been overly focused on counterterrorism over the past decade, and this was part of the reason the Arab uprisings took us by surprise. We need to build the capability to understand and interpret changes underway—including rising Islamist militancy, which presents a threat to security and to core progressive values.

Progressives should continue the debate over the use of force against terrorist targets, especially drone strikes. With the end of combat operations in Afghanistan set for later this year, the 2001 Authorization for Use of Military Force will likely require amendments to ensure a legal framework for strikes against terrorist groups in Afghanistan, Pakistan, Yemen, and elsewhere. [See "Battlefield Earth," Issue #31.] The coming end of the Afghanistan War presents an opportunity for us to partner with some conservatives in establishing a stronger oversight framework on executive branch activities to target terrorist networks with a global reach. We must also push to close the Guantánamo Bay prison and other detention facilities and establish new bilateral arrangements and international means to deal with terrorism suspects under the rule of law.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Strengthening Development and Diplomatic Institutions. Between 2006 and 2013, the United States moved from the "shock and awe" militarism phase of the Bush era with the surge in Iraq and started talking more about "smart power"—an effort that has led to mixed and incomplete results.

In Afghanistan, the much-touted civilian surge of 2010-11 that accompanied the troop increases did not leave an enduring imprint. Counterinsurgency efforts failed to keep Afghan civilians safe and did not produce lasting institutions. In Pakistan, the Biden-Lugar bill (later named the Kerry-Lugar bill) tripled nonmilitary assistance to that country, but the creaky structures of the State Department and the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) lacked the capacity to disburse large portions of this additional aid in a timely fashion. After trillions were spent in the past decade in military and civilian development efforts to stabilize Iraq, Afghanistan, and other countries, many of these countries do not appear more stable. Unless we intend to leave a trail of failed states behind us, we must rebuild the capacities of USAID and other institutions and ensure that they're having impact on the ground for the long haul.

Rebuilding America's Economy

A top priority in advancing a progressive national security agenda is rebuilding a key source of American power—its economy. Progressives should make the case that freedom from want at home is linked to freedom from want abroad.

The traditional tools of fiscal and monetary policy have less impact than they did three decades ago due to the increasingly interlinked nature of the global economy. With America's economy on more solid footing than when President Obama entered office in 2009, progressives should make the case that policies shaping health care, education, infrastructure, and social safety nets affect America's global standing and leadership in the world.

It also means reckoning with the thorny issue of free trade. In his three remaining years in office, President Obama hopes to reach a trade agreement with Europe that would create the largest trading bloc in the world, as well as a 12-country Trans-Pacific Partnership treaty that would cover 40 percent of world economic output, from Chile to Japan. This global economic agenda has the potential to create economic growth and jobs in America, but the Administration must take great care in negotiating these deals to ensure that they benefit the common good and help American workers and consumers.

Many progressives see the turn toward globalization in the 1990s as a grim development that led to outsourced jobs and benefited only a small group of multinational corporations. There are similar worries about the Obama Administration's approach on the proposed European and Asian trade deals; consequently, learning the lessons from previous expansions in global trade will be critical. There should be enforceable rules that prevent trading partners from manipulating the value of their currencies to obtain unfair competitive advantage. In advancing an agenda that helps strengthen America's position in the next phase of globalization, progressive leaders can mediate between large multinational corporations and key constituency groups such as labor unions, and in doing so build tactical alliances with Republicans who favor free trade. Expanding U.S. access to emerging markets at a time when the middle class is growing in those countries presents great opportunities for win-win economic growth—but it must be done with agreements that avoid a race to the bottom on wages and standards.

The End of Strategic Drift

After more than a decade of unnecessary wars, economic problems, and persistent talk of America's decline, it's easy to forget that America remains a great power and that we've done a lot of good things—that is, when we've been true to our values and clear about what costs we're willing to bear to keep the country safe and prosperous.

The United States is in the midst of a major transformation in the politics of national security, and progressives are well positioned to construct a new style of international engagement that appeals to the American public and advances a new type of leadership in the world. Conservatives will likely face stronger internal forces requiring them to focus inward and make fewer arguments for American engagement overseas. Rand Paul and the Tea Party are tugging the party toward retrenchment and away from the neoconservatism of the George W. Bush years and the internationalism of Brent Scowcroft and Colin Powell. What we may see is a Republican Party in which the conservative foreign policy elites and commentators become increasingly disconnected from the base of the party. Progressives will need to build a series of tactical alliances with the competing conservative foreign policy camps—making common cause with Republican internationalists on supporting international organizations like the United Nations and expanding free trade, and working with libertarian voices to institute sensible defense budget and intelligence community reforms.

Among Democrats, there is an internal debate emerging about Obama's legacy and what he has achieved in the world. There will be voices that are more critical of Obama's record on Afghanistan and the changes in the Middle East as well as those expressing serious concerns about the NSA's massive surveillance program. With so much uncertainty across the Middle East, how the current policies on Iran, Syria, Egypt, and the Arab-Israeli peace process develop in 2014 and 2015 are bound to have a major impact on this internal debate.

For progressives, this period of global transformation offers opportunities to make the case for a more pragmatic, measured engagement in the world while America continues to deal with problems at home. Some progressives seem to want to avoid the world's most pressing problems and shun the opportunities that could benefit America's security and economy through a new vision of global engagement.

For example, a number of Democrats in Congress joined Republicans and came out in favor of more sanctions on Iran at a delicate phase in the diplomacy that's attempting to put an end to that country's nuclear program. This was a mistake—because it would close off the possibilities created by the Bush and Obama Administrations' painstaking efforts to engage Iran.

Another missed opportunity over the past three years was the Middle East uprisings. Democrats joined Republicans in Congress in not backing a proposal for funding a Middle East and North Africa Incentive Fund, a pot of money that would have created incentives for countries in the region to implement economic, political, and trade reforms. Earlier this year, the Obama Administration announced it was cutting back on its plans in this area of democracy promotion in the Middle East, another missed opportunity. Now, it is understandable why many progressives were skeptical about Obama's proposed use of military force in Syria last year—the risks were high, and the arguments coming from the Administration weren't as clear as they could have been. But deciding to unilaterally disarm in the battle of ideas is a mistake that will undermine our security in the long run.

The concept of national security is broader and more challenging in a globalized, interdependent world than it was during the Cold War. For decades, our vision and engagement have helped advance freedom and dignity. We've seen bastions of brutal authoritarianism like South America and Central and Eastern Europe become home to flourishing democracies. And though it doesn't feel like it, the world has gotten a lot safer, with the end of major-power wars in places like Europe and East Asia, the spread of vaccines, the advances against polio and AIDS, and improved access to health care globally.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Finally, progressives should stand with oppressed people everywhere—whether it's democratic opponents of Assad in Syria, women and girls in Afghanistan and Pakistan, Christians in the Middle East, and both Palestinians and Israelis who want to end their historical divisions. Some argue that it's not worth it and don't believe America can be a force for good in these complicated situations. That view sells America short and abandons these people to their fate. Freedom of speech; freedom of religion; freedom from want; and freedom from fear: These are lofty ambitions and there are many forces worldwide trying to blunt them. We must take wise steps to keep them alive.

Brian Katulis is a senior fellow for national security at the Center for American Progress.

From: Suzy George <sgeorge@albrightstonebridge.com >
Sent: Monday, March 17, 2014 9:41 PM
To: Brian Katulis
Subject: RE: 'Committed to Democracy and Unity: Public Opinion Survey in Libya'

We were working on a Ukraine topic but not sure it will come together.

Would love any ideas you have.

From: Brian Katulis [mailto:bkatulis@americanprogress.org]
Sent: Monday, March 17, 2014 4:32 PM
To: Suzy George
Subject: RE: 'Committed to Democracy and Unity: Public Opinion Survey in Libya'

what's the next dinner topic? I have an idea

From: Suzy George <sgeorge@albrightstonebridge.com >
Sent: Friday, March 14, 2014 2:38 PM
To: Brian Katulis
Subject: RE: 'Committed to Democracy and Unity: Public Opinion Survey in Libya'

Sorry missed this earlier this week. Call me at the office this afternoon if you are around. 202-370-3578 or anytime on my cell 202-309-1204.

Thanks.
Suzy

From: Brian Katulis [mailto:bkatulis@americanprogress.org]
Sent: Wednesday, March 12, 2014 4:09 PM
To: Suzy George
Subject: RE: 'Committed to Democracy and Unity: Public Opinion Survey in Libya'

Thanks

I'm back from Jordan - let me know if you want to catch up.

Brian

From: Suzy George <sgeorge@albrightstonebridge.com >
Sent: Wednesday, March 12, 2014 3:52 PM
To: Brian Katulis
Subject: FW: 'Committed to Democracy and Unity: Public Opinion Survey in Libya'

From: me_ndi@ndi.org [mailto:me_ndi@ndi.org] On Behalf Of Ken Wollack
Sent: Wednesday, March 12, 2014 3:32 PM
To: Me_ndi@ndi.org
Subject: Fwd: 'Committed to Democracy and Unity: Public Opinion Survey in Libya'

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Attached is the third in a series of nationwide public opinion surveys launched in May 2013 to evaluate changes in Libyan public opinion as the political transition proceeds. This study focuses on citizens' views on the upcoming constitution-drafting process, the General National Congress (GNC), and regional autonomy.

Findings from the study reveal that most Libyans view elected institutions, leaders, and political parties with increasing negativity. Despite frustration and profound security concerns, however, Libyans remain optimistic about the country's future and continue to believe that democracy constitutes the best form of government. The findings also show widespread disapproval of moves towards regional autonomy by non-state groups, and outline citizens' views on international organizations and their engagement with Libya.

The survey, which was carried out from November 10 to December 8, was conducted in partnership with Copenhagen-based JMW Consulting and the Libyan firm Diwan for Market Research. Funded by the Danish Ministry of Foreign Affairs as part of a broader political development program led by NDI, it gathered opinions from 1,200 randomly selected Libyan nationals from across the country, ages 18 and older.

The attached report will soon be available on NDI's website , which also features the first two surveys in the series and reports from NDI's on-going focus group research.

With best regards,

Ken

Kenneth Wollack
President
National Democratic Institute
455 Massachusetts Ave., NW, 8th Floor
Washington, DC 20001
202-728-5500 (Tel)
888-875-2887 (Fax)
email: ken@ndi.org
website: www.ndi.org

To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to me_ndi+unsubscribe@ndi.org .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: ThinkProgress <progress@americanprogressaction.org>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 1/7/2016 5:17:43 AM
Subject: One weird solution to football's concussion problem

THINKPROGRESS

Head trauma is a huge problem in football -- and thought it seems like the opposite of a solution, getting rid of helmets could actually help. Militant ranchers in Oregon are still trying to "take back their land" -- which this 6,000 year old tribe, forced off the land less 200 years ago, has a big problem with. And, the Obama administration recently authorized large-scale deportation raids: Here's what a raid actually looks like.

Why James Hansen Is Wrong About Nuclear Power

Climatologist James Hansen argued last month, “Nuclear power paves the only viable path forward on climate change.” He is wrong....(read more)

Could Getting Rid Of Helmets Actually Make Football Safer?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Oregon Tribal Leaders Say Militant Group Needs To 'Get The Hell Out'

The Oregon tribe that once inhabited the Malheur National Wildlife Refuge has made its stance clear on the militant group now occupying refuge headquarters: They're not welcome. ...(read more)

How A Racist Troll Pretended To Be Ammon Bundy On Twitter And Punked Most Of The Media

This Is What A Deportation Raid Is Like

ThinkProgress | Center for American Progress Action Fund
1333 H ST NW | Washington, DC 20005

Contributions to Center for American Progress Action Fund are not tax deductible

Donate | Manage Email Options | Privacy Policy | Unsubscribe

This email was sent to john.podesta@gmail.com.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Oren Shur" <oshur@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "John Anzalone" <john@algpolling.com>
Date: 1/23/2016 11:40:24 AM
Subject: Re: BREAKING: DMR: Endorsement: Hillary Clinton has needed knowledge, experience

You're such a nice guy Anzo .... But yeah probably right

Sent from my iPhone

On Jan 23, 2016, at 6:23 PM, John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com > wrote:

> I would let that part go. I think it is more insulting than helpful for our message contrast.
>
> John Anzalone
> Anzalone Liszt Grove Research
> 334-387-3121. Office
> @AnzaloneLiszt
>
> On Jan 23, 2016, at 5:14 PM, Oren Shur <oshur@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
>
> > This is great, half of it reads like one of our ads.
> > Jim and I just discussed and we should deff cut a script from this.
> > Dixon Davis, are you guys available to take first crack?
> > My only question - whether we lean into "the presidency is not an entry level position" - and push off from it, or just let that part go.
> >
> > Sent from my iPhone
> >
> > Begin forwarded message:
> >
> > From: Zachary Petkanas <zpetkanas@hillaryclinton.com >
> > Date: January 23, 2016 at 6:00:48 PM EST
> > To: Clips <clips@hillaryclinton.com >
> > Subject: BREAKING: DMR: Endorsement: Hillary Clinton has needed knowledge, experience
> >
> > # DMR : Endorsement: Hillary Clinton has needed knowledge, experience
> >
> > If there's one thing Democrats and Republicans agree on this year, it's the fact that the next president will face enormous challenges.
> >
> > Domestically, this president must work with Congress in confronting the issues of immigration, health care, increased threats to national security, the disappearing middle class, the growing deficit, Social Security solvency, gun control, renewable energy, sentencing reform and more.
> >
> > On the world stage, this president will have to work with foreign leaders in dealing with ISIS and other terrorists, climate change, the containment of nuclear threats posed in North Korea and Iran, the Russian incursions in Ukraine and foreign trade.
> >
> > The presidency is not an entry-level position. Whoever is sworn into office next January must demonstrate not only a deep understanding of the issues facing America, but also possess the diplomatic skills that enable presidents to forge alliances to get things done.
> >
> > By that measure, Democrats have one outstanding candidate deserving of their support: Hillary

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton. No other candidate can match the depth or breadth of her knowledge and experience.

As first lady, she worked tirelessly on health care reform and, with bipartisan support, created the Children's Health Insurance Program that provides coverage for 8 million children.

As a senator, she reached across party lines and joined forces with conservatives, including Sen. Lindsey Graham and former House Speaker Newt Gingrich, to fight for job creation and universal health care.

ENDORSEMENT: Marco Rubio can chart new direction for GOP

NASH: Register faced tough decision in endorsements

RELATED:A history of Register caucus endorsements

As secretary of state, she helped secure international sanctions against Iran and redefined her job by expanding America's diplomatic agenda to include poverty, women's rights, the environment and other issues.

She is not a perfect candidate, as evidenced the way she has handled the furor over her private email server. In our endorsement of her 2008 campaign for president, we wrote that "when she makes a mistake, she should just say so." That appears to be a lesson she has yet to fully embrace.

Her changing stance on gay marriage, immigration and other issues has invited accusations that she is guided less by personal conviction than by political calculations. She refutes that, and argues persuasively that a willingness to change one's thinking on specific issues, while remaining true to what she calls "the same values and principles," is a virtue, one lacking in most politicians.

Over the course of two meetings, Clinton spent more than three hours with the editorial board, answering questions in a direct and forthright manner. She exhibited an impressive command of the issues, though we'd have liked to hear more from her on the debt and the future of Social Security. She was somewhat prickly and defensive when discussing her emails, but overall she was gracious, engaging and personable.

Her chief opponent for the nomination, Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont, has proven to be an honorable and formidable campaigner, and it's very likely that without him in the race, candidates in both parties wouldn't be discussing America's growing inequality in wealth and income.

Sanders has tapped into the public's anger and frustration with Washington, without demonizing government and resorting to the cheap demagoguery favored by Donald Trump and others. He has shown himself to be a man of courage and principle who has the ability to rally others to his cause.

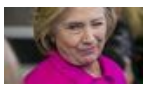
This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

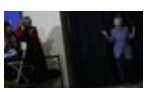
Buy Photo

Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton meets with the Des Moines Register editorial board Monday Jan 11, 2015, in Des Moines, Iowa. Rodney White/The Register

Buy Photo

Fullscr





This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

-
-

-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-

-
-
-
-

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
- -
-
-
-

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-

Next Slide

But Sanders admits that virtually all of his plans for reform have no chance of being approved by a Congress that bears any resemblance to the current crop of federal lawmakers. This is why, he says, voters can't simply elect him president, but must instead spark a "political revolution."

Easier said than done. Congress has the largest Republican majority since the 71st Congress of 1929-31.

A successful Sanders presidency would hinge on his ability to remake Washington in his own image. It's almost inconceivable that such a transformation could take place, even with Democrats controlling both chambers of Congress.

As for Martin O'Malley, the data-driven, wonkish former Maryland governor who has gained little traction in the campaign so far, he seems better suited to a Cabinet-level job in a Clinton White House.

In the final analysis, Iowa Democrats will have to choose between the lofty idealism of Bernie Sanders and the down-to-earth pragmatism of Hillary Clinton. For some, this will be a choice of whether to vote with their hearts or their heads.

Clinton has demonstrated that she is a thoughtful, hardworking public servant who has earned the respect of leaders at home and abroad. She stands ready to take on the most demanding job in the world.

This endorsement is the opinion of The Des Moines Register's editorial board:

David Chivers, president and publisher

Amalie Nash*, executive editor and vice president for news and engagement*

Lynn Hicks, opinion editor

Clark Kauffman, editorial writer

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Andie Dominick, editorial writer

Brian Smith, engagement editor

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jacob Roberts" <jacob@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 7/1/2008 3:33:23 PM
Subject: [big campaign] Media Monitoring Report - Evening 07/01/08

Main Topics: Surrogates respond to Clark's remarks and predictions on future terror attacks, McCain's free trade campaign, McSame on Social Security

Summary of Shift: Obama's faith-based program initiative was the centerpiece for tonight's political coverage. Several programs report that tomatoes may not be the source of a recent salmonella outbreak. Reports on the commander of the SS Cole, the Christian left and shock hazards the US soldiers face in their showers in Iraq were also featured stories. Bobby Jindal faces an angry constituency and state legislature in the face of a controversy over legislative pay raises. In lieu of increased likelihood that Israel will strike Iran imminently an Iranian foreign minister declares Iran will make no distinction between an attack from Israel or the US.

Highlights
1) McCain surrogates on the airwaves
   a. CNN: Rudy Giuliani raises the specter of future terror attack on US soil
   b. MSNBC: Pfotenhauer claims Bush's Iraq policy was unpopular with himself
2) McCain's free-trade campaigning
   a. CNN: Panel finds McCain's strategy utterly laughable
   b. MSNBC: Maddow makes the Black-Colombia connection
   c. MSNBC: McCain's travels are likely a way to court the Latino vote
3) MSNBC: Panelists expect McCain to distance himself from Bush on Social Security
4) CNN: Independent contractors will no longer be under immunity in Iraq [no clip]
5) FNC: Shepard Smith covers McCain's claim that Obama will pack the Supreme Court with liberals
6) CNN: John McCain plans to hold a softball tournament in lieu of a ban on fireworks in Arizona [no clip]
7) CNN: McCain campaign pulls web ad on site that links Obama followers to followers of Adolph Hitler [no clip]
8) CNN: Iraq goes through near-catastrophic gas shortages [no clip]
9) FNC: Comparison of Obama's and McCain's platform on nuclear power [no clip]
10) CNN: Comparison of Obama's and McCain's energy, economic and tax platform [no clip]
11) MSNBC: Olbermann reports: McCain doesn't know the price of gas [no clip]
12) MSNBC: Hardball reports on Roberta McCain being "muzzled" [no clip]
13) MSNBC: During segment on Gen Clark's comments, lower-third of screen bar reads, "2003: McCain Says War Service Doesn't Qualify You For Pres." [no clip]

Clips
Highlight #1
Rudy Giuliani: 'The Safe Thing is to Assume They're Gonna Attack Us Again' (CNN 07/01/08 5:30pm)
[Clip opens with summary of John McCain's appearance at the Sherriff's Association, moves to excerpt of Clark's statement and then to interview.]
RUDY GIULIANI: [laughing] John McCain's not running as a fighter pilot. John McCain has also been a United States Senator, United States Congressman; he's probably been one of the most active—maybe even, in some ways, a controversial—member of the United States Senate by taking on a leadership role, which he even stood up against his own party.

JOHN ROBERTS: But he is using his military service as a centerpiece to burnish his credentials on national security.

GIULIANI: I think he's using his many, many years of experience in the United States Senate, going all over the world, being involved in negotiations and discussions on almost every single world issue. To try to say that John McCain is running as a fighter pilot is kinda—I mean, it's laughable.

ROBERTS: Is Senator McCain—

GIULIANI: The difference is—and I think this is why Wesley Clark is doing this—Senator Obama has no experience. Senator Obama has a very short career in the United States Senate, where he's accomplished nothing compared to John McCain who's past landmark legislation and, before that, he was in the state legislature. So, when you put the two resumes against each other, one has the background and experience to take on the most difficult job in the world. The other there's a real question mark about.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

ROBERTS: Is Senator McCain any more qualified on national security than you are?

GIULIANI: Is Senator McCain more qualified? He certainly has more experience than I have. I think I know quite a bit about national security because I've been in the Justice Department. I've negotiated with foreign governments. I've traveled to 35 countries. I just got back from Kazakhstan, but I consider John McCain one of the premiere experts on national security in our country right now.

ROBERTS: Because I remember back in September of 2007 he said this about your experience. He said, 'I think the nation respects the mayor's leadership after 9/11 and I do too. I don't think it translates necessarily, into foreign policy or national security expertise. I know of nothing in his background that indicates he has any experience in it, with him or Romney.'

GIULIANI: I think that John—we were running against each other then and we say things about each other I think if John—

ROBERTS: You say things that aren't true?

GIULIANI: Well I think John maybe wasn't focusing on the fact that I was the third-ranking official in the Justice Department, that I had a lot of contact with Interpol, that I negotiated with two or three foreign governments, that I've been in—I've been on 90 foreign trips in the last six years alone, that I've lead delegations. I've had a good deal of foreign policy experience, but, if you're asking me, 'Has John?' John has had just about the most of anyone that has ever run for president.

ROBERTS: But do you think he's more qualified to be president than you are?

GIULIANI: I thought I was the best qualified to be president and I once announced in a debate […], if I wasn't running, John McCain would be my candidate. So, for personal reasons, […] I though I was the best qualified, but I thought John was number two.

ROBERTS: Doesn't that mean […] you're better able to handle national security?

GIULIANI: It isn't just about foreign policy. It isn't just about domestic policy. It's about a whole array of things.

I'm not a candidate. I'm not a choice. John was my number two choice after me and I got out of the race when I did because I was so convinced it was important for the country that John McCain get nominated. I didn't want to stand in the way of him.

ROBERTS: Senator Joe Lieberman said something the other day that took some people by surprise. He predicted that America will be the subject of another terrorist attack on the homeland, in early 2009 […]. Many people out there—democrats mostly—are saying, 'Hey! He's playing into the politics of fear here.'

GIULIANI: I don't think the Senator's doing that. I think that what the Senator's trying to do is deal with something that's almost inscrutable, which is, how to interpret what these terrorists were gonna do. Here's the safe thing for us to do: the safe thing for us to do is to assume they're gonna attack us again and to be prepared for it.

ROBERTS: Do you believe there will be an attack? Are you as convinced as he is?

GIULIANI: Do I believe that they are attempting to attack us again? Absolutely. Do I know if they'll be successful at it? I hope not.

They have attempted to attack us again

ROBERTS: But [Lieberman] was pretty definitive about this, saying that there will be a terror attack in early 2009.

GIULIANI: But excess of caution—you're better off assuming there's gonna be an attack.

ROBERTS: So would you make that prediction? I would not predict a time and what I would say is, 'We should be on guard that there will be an attack. They are attempting to attack us. We are attempting to stop them. You cannot always be 100% perfect.'

I was in London for the attacks in London a few years ago and it was a very eerie experience, having been in New York, sort of at the center of that group of attacks and then in London, a half-block away from the Liverpool station where the first bomb went off. So I'm the last one that's ever gonna discount the possibility of an attack.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

ROBERTS: […] There appears to be a direct connection between camps in Pakistan and what happened there in London on July 7th. Do you believe the Unite States should be more active in chasing down terrorists in Pakistan?

GIULIANI: […] I've been saying that for quite some time. […] Pakistan is an independent government with nuclear weapons. That's gotta be worked about but it's gotta be worked out in a way that we achieve our objective.

ROBERTS: […] do you believe there is any place for Osama Bin Laden in the American judicial system?

GIULIANI: This is a military matter. It's not a judicial—but this is part of the problem with the whole Barack Obama campaign and the whole democratic approach to this. They want to treat this as a criminal justice matter and it isn't. This is the thing we failed to see in 1993 when they attacked us at the World Trade Center. It was treated purely as a criminal justice matter. We gotta get beyond that.

This is a war. This is a situation in which they have attacked us. They've attacked us over and over again. We've been very fortunate since September 11, 2001—since we've been on offense under President Bush—not to have a domestic attack. If we go back into this, 'let's treat this as a criminal justice matter solely,' I believe we're gonna put our country in much more jeopardy. At least, that's my opinion.

ROBERTS: […] You were quite happy to have them prosecuted in the justice system [in 1993]. Why not now?

GIULIANI: That's because I didn't know then what I know now. I don't criticize the people for doing that back then.

ROBERTS: So are you saying you were wrong for saying that back then?

GIULIANI: I didn't know the facts that I know now. What I have said since September 11 is, 'If we knew back in 1993 what we found out on September 11, we should have treated this as a long-term terrorist issue.' Now, knowing those facts, why would you want to go back to treating it purely as a criminal justice matter?

ROBERTS: So you were premature in those comments? I didn't have the facts at that time. When I got the facts, I changed my mind.

Pfotenhauer: McCain's Surge Policy "Was Particularly Unpopular With President Bush," Defends McCain Against Fear-Mongering Charges (MSNBC 07/01/08 10:54am)
MONICA NOVOTNY: Are Republicans flaying the fear card in arguing John McCain's foreign policy experience? Last week McCain's chief strategist came under fire for saying an attack in the United States would benefit his candidate. This week it is Joe Lieberman's turn. McCain supporters saying that his candidate would be the one that would be best prepared if there were a terror attack in 2009.

[clip of Lieberman]

NOVOTNY: […] So Nancy, two men both tied to the McCain campaign talking about terrorist attacks alongside the candidate's credentials. Is this playing into the vote fears?

NANCY PFOTENHAUER: I don't think so. I think it's discussing what's obviously on the minds of many American voters and on the front page of most newspapers […] My own poll of one, if you will, is that we've been spending as much or more time talking about the economy and particularly the energy crisis as we have been the concerns […] and the challenges we face in the national security arena.

[…]

PFOTENHAUER: As you recall, when Senator McCain challenged the surge, […] or challenged the current strategy in Iraq and was pushing the surge, alongside General Petraeus, this was incredibly unpopular here in Washington. It was particularly unpopular with President Bush. And he did it because that's when he felt was right on the ground. And he put the interests of the country first. History has shown that he was right on that call.

NOVOTNY: Let's get back to Lieberman's comments. White House spokesman Dana Perino said that she agreed was Senator Lieberman. Is this part now of some October Surprise strategy at play?

PFOTENHAUER: Not at all. That I can attest to. […] Senator Lieberman, is, of course, known as one of the most analytical and thoughtful members of the U.S. Senate. I think he was doing an historical analysis, which is really how show approaches almost any issue.[…]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Highlight #2
Panel Finds McCain's Free Trade Campaigning Decision Questionable (CNN 07/01/08 8:24pm)
KITTY PILGRIM: Senator McCain [is] traveling to Colombia, then going to Mexico. Just fill me on what you think this strategy—how this makes sense, Steve.

STEVE COCHRAN: Well, I'm not sure that it does, from a political standpoint because swing states being crucial and swing states being in the economic position they're in—it's tough. You can argue all you want about this being a new economy and a world-wide economy, until the rest of the world plays by the same rules and standards that we hold America to the imbalance is just gonna get bigger and bigger and people are gonna lose jobs. So we can make the rules and we can keep our end of the bargain, but the people we're dealing with aren't doing their share. China's a fine example of that on the other end of the world.

[…]

WILMER LEON: […] when Senator McCain's primary solutions seem to be improving programs for unemployed workers and increasing unemployment benefits or continuing unemployment benefits instead of really trying to find tangible and workable solutions, in terms of how we're gonna stop this country from hemorrhaging jobs.

[Airs a segment from McCain's free trade commercial with Spanish subtitles.]

PILGRIM: [attempting to contain laughter] It really is hard to see how this is going to sell….

[Panel laughs collectively]

[…]

MARK SIMONE: [also attempting to contain laughter] Basically some people wonder: Does McCain even really want to win this and why [Pilgrim chuckles] even bring this up? It's like campaigning with a Halliburton jacket on.

COCHRAN: And an Enron hat.

[laughter]

SIMONE: This would be like Obama taking Wesley Clark to dinner tonight. I mean, why would you even do this? It's like the third rail of the subway—stay away from it!

LEON: [McCain] also wants to equate people who want to even negotiate or discuss this issue—he equates them to be isolationists and protectionists and these are a lot of people who just want to keep their jobs. They just want to feed their families. There's nothing—well, you're protecting your job—but there's nothing isolationist about wanting to feed your family.

[Pilgrim introduces new CNN/Opinion research poll from June 26-29:

Foreign trade is a threat to economy – 51%
Opportunity for economic growth – 41%]

PILGRIM: […] if you look at it over time that 51% […] has come up from 35% in the year 2000. So increasingly Americans are starting to see these lopsided trade policies as a threat to their economy.

SIMONE: That's why you gotta wonder about McCain's judgment. It wasn't necessary to even do this. Why did he even bother?

COCHRAN: Well because you know, he doesn't want to be accused of flip-flopping on it, but he is literally at a tipping point here and he needs to go very quiet on this issue and not deal with it and move forward on other things because the damage done by flip-flopping is nothing compared to the damage he's gonna do if he sticks to this line.

PILGRIM: By taking the wrong subject to the American public […].

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

[The panel moves to a discussion of Obama's evangelical outreach.]

SIMONE: […] McCain is weak there. McCain doesn't speak their language. If he is a very religious guy, he's kept it very private. […]

McCain's Colombia Trip Puts Black "Back Under the Microscope" (MSNBC 07/01/08 6:30pm)
RACHAEL MADDOW: Because of this Colombia trip, back under the microscope now is McCain's campaign advisor, Charlie Black, whose lobbying firm has represented Colombian oil interests. Black isn't going with McCain to Colombia but McCain choosing this trip, this country, ensures more headlines about Charlie Black and about the lobbyists and ex-lobbyists who are in McCain's inner circle. Michelle, do you think McCain thinks the lobbyist controversy has blown over? That it's too complicated an issue to do him any real political harm?

MICHELLE BERNARD: I think he probably would've thought that until this program aired tonight . . . otherwise he would not be taking this trip right now. This is the issue that will not go away . . . it is very difficult to get away from people who have not been lobbyists in some capacity whatsoever . . . I think the McCain campaign is going to just stop talking about the problem with lobbyists as much as possible and hope that that's an issue that will go away.

[. . .]

MADDOW: . . . is this a liability for McCain at this point or is it something that he's put past him?

McCain has Little Support for his Immigration Platform but Colombia Trip Lets Him Campaign Across the US (MSNBC 07/01/08 5:10pm)
ANDREA MITCHELL: . . . John McCain really got killed among the conservative base, the Republican base, for the position that he took on immigration, where he aligned himself with George Bush. So he's not getting credit from the Hispanic community at the same time as he's getting killed among the base.

CHUCK TODD: And well part of it, he's changed his rhetoric too . . . but look, this trip to Colombia and then to Mexico, he's going to visit some very important religious symbols to . . . Catholic Hispanics. He's going to get saturation coverage with the Hispanic media here in the United States. This is . . . as if he's courting New Mexico voters and Florida voters and Arizona voters and Colorado voters by going to Colombia.

Highlight #3
McCain Expected to Push McDifferent on Social Security (MSNBC 07/01/08 6:25pm)
RACHAEL MADDOW: . . . a new Gallup poll shows . . . 68% who say they are worried, to a certain extent, that McCain is too close to Bush. Smelling blood, the DNC is now running another ad linking McCain and Bush . . .

[DNC ad comparing Bush and McCain on Social Security runs]

MADDOW: Is Social Security another issue on which we should expect McCain to try to put some distance between himself and Bush? Does McCain need a few more issues where he can say, "Look, I disagree with the president"? . . .

GENE ROBINSON: Well, I don't see how he can do it on Social Security . . . he's taken the position that private accounts would be necessary to save the system. You know, that's really one of the traditional electric third rails of politics and I can't imagine that stance is really going to do McCain a lot of good, either in trying to distance himself from George Bush or simply in trying to get elected president.

JOHN HARWOOD: . . . he could renounce privatization. There's been some ambiguity between McCain and his advisors on exactly what he supported, whether he was going to go back Bush's route and look, even if you support privatization, it is plain . . . that's not going anywhere. So what John McCain could do in a bold stroke was renounce it . . .

MADDOW: I think that we're beginning to see a little bit of that in the way that he has distanced himself from the word "privatization" even though he is still saying he is in favor of private accounts . . .

--
Jacob Roberts

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

PAO
208.420.3470 (c)
--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Hudson Institute" <info@hudson.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 8/17/2015 11:00:04 AM
Subject: News from Hudson: Iran Deal, Modi's India, Seapower, and more

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Pam Vergun" <vergun@alumni.stanford.edu>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 5/7/2015 7:40:30 AM
Subject: Re: Our President's Visit to Our Hometown of Beaverton \and My Children's Request

Thank you so much!!
Best wishes and thank you for all your work.

Sent from my iPhone

On May 7, 2015, at 2:14 PM, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com > wrote:

> Did my best to get to the President's team. Good luck
>
> On May 7, 2015 3:29 PM, "Pam and Rob and Miko and Isaac Vergun" <vergun@alumni.stanford.edu > wrote:
>
> > Dear Mr. Podesta,
> >
> > I am contacting you with a somewhat unusual request and the hope that you might be able to convey this wish by my children to an appropriate staff person for President Obama in spite of the short notice.
> >
> > Thank you. And thank you so much for the work you have been doing. I hope you are able to encourage Hillary Clinton to come out strongly to address dangers from Climate Change.
> >
> > Sincerely,
> > Pam Vergun, Ph.D., M.P.A.
> >
> >
> > Dear Mr. President,
> >
> > I hear that you are coming to our hometown of Beaverton tomorrow down the street from where my children were in a two-way Spanish immersion public school. I know this is a long shot, but I would like to tell you about the work my children and I are doing to help you stop Climate Change in case you would like to meet them.
> >
> > Also, months ago, my son, who is also one of your fans, asked me to invite you to his Bar Mitzvah. Although we just learned that you will only be in Beaverton during the morning, I'm sure you would like Isaac's D'Var teaching will be on taking even more serious action on Climate Change.
> >
> > My son is African-American, my daughter was born in the Marshall Islands, and my husband and I are European-American, and together we are doing all we can to impact policies especially the ones most needed to protect our planet. My son has been talking with the City of Beaverton about his petition to Mayor Doyle regarding fossil fuels and nuclear power. The links below are to the little websites I made for their Mitzvah projects, so Miko and Isaac can speak for themselves. Please glance at them to see if you could use them to inspire or highlight your own work as you have inspired us.
> > Miko's: https://shalvahalizah.wordpress.com
> > Isaac: https://yitzchakadin.wordpress.com
> >
> > Thank you so much.
> > With Love and Blessings to you and Michelle and your daughters,
> > Pam Vergun
> >
> > Sent from my iPhone
> >
> > Dr. Pamela Bea Wilson Vergun, M.P.A.
> >
> > Pam and Rob and Miko and Isaac Vergun
> > vergun@alumni.stanford.edu
> > 3545 NW Ashland Place
> > Beaverton, Oregon 97006

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hm: 503-645-6642
Mo: 503-332-7633

Wherever you live, sign Isaac's petition to the City of Beaverton's Mayor Doyle and the City Council:
https://campaigns.gofossilfree.org/petitions/divest-the-city-of-beaverton-from-fossil-fuels-and-nuclear-power
Thanks!
And, for more on Miko and Isaac's work to help protect our planet, please visit their websites:
Miko: https://shalvahalizah.wordpress.com
Isaac: https://yitzchakadin.wordpress.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Nick Merrill" <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com>
To:	"Nick Merrill" <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com>
Date:	4/5/2015 8:37:08 AM
Subject:	4.5.15 HRC Clips
Attachments:	20150405 HRC Clips.docx

HRC Clips
April 5, 2015

High Political Stakes For Hillary Clinton On Iran Nuclear Agreement (Associated Press)..... 2
How will Hillary announce? (The Hill)..... 4
You talkin' to Hillary? De Niro backs Clinton for 2016 nomination (The Guardian)..... 7
Clinton hopes to tap small-donor network that beat her in 2008 (MSNBC)..... 8
Carly Fiorina comes out swinging against Hillary Clinton and the 'woman card' (Examiner)..... 11
Don't Be Fooled: Hillary Is Way to Bill's Left (Daily Beast)..... 12
Sarah Brady Death: Bill And Hillary Clinton Release Statement On Death Of Gun-Control Advocate (International Business Times) 14
Sarah Brady, widow of James Brady, dies (CNN)..... 15
Former USA president Bill Clinton endorses Robin Hood's book about his daughter (Daily Record) 17

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

High Political Stakes For Hillary Clinton On Iran Nuclear Agreement (Associated Press)
By Ken Thomas and Julie Pace
April 4, 2015
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hillary Rodham Clinton can claim a piece of the victory if the U.S. and other world powers ultimately complete a final nuclear deal with Iran.

She will own a piece of the failure if the negotiations collapse or produce a weak deal.

Her statement after Thursday's tentative agreement suggests the soon-to-be Democratic candidate for president knows those are her stakes.

She called the framework "an important step," while cautioning that "the devil is always in the details."

"The onus is on Iran and the bar must be set high," said Clinton, who helped lay the groundwork for the diplomacy with Iran as President Barack Obama's first secretary of state. "There is much to do and much more to say in the months ahead, but for now diplomacy deserves a chance to succeed."

The issue will figure prominently in the foreign policy debate of the 2016 presidential campaign. Nearly all the expected GOP candidates said the outline agreement was dangerous to U.S. interests.

"This attempt to spin diplomatic failure as a success is just the latest example of this administration's farcical approach to Iran," said Florida Sen. Marco Rubio. He is likely to make foreign policy a centerpiece of his candidacy.

But Clinton occupies a unique space on the nuclear issue because of her role in Obama's Cabinet. She sent a close adviser, Jake Sullivan, to participate in the secret talks with Iran that led to the start of the international negotiations over the country's nuclear ambitions.

Clinton is also navigating delicate ties with Israel and the American Jewish community, an influential group of voters and donors. Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, a fierce critic of the Obama administration's outreach to Iran, described the framework deal as a threat to "the very survival" of his nation.

"I don't know how you can maneuver all aspects of this politically," said Ray Takeyh, a senior fellow for Middle Eastern studies at the Council on Foreign Relations. "You can be supportive and skeptical. I suspect that's the direction."

The tentative agreement announced Thursday by the U.S. and its negotiating partners — Britain, France, Germany, China and Russia — is aimed at keeping Iran from developing a nuclear weapon. Negotiators have until June 30 to settle the technical details.

The deal would remove economic penalties against Iran once the U.N. nuclear agency verifies Tehran's compliance.

At times, Clinton has tried to play up her connection to the historic diplomacy. The U.S. and Iran severed diplomatic relations in 1979 after the Islamic revolution and the storming of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, where 52 Americans were held hostage for more than a year.

When Obama was getting credit for the clandestine negotiations, Clinton's aides made sure reporters knew that the approach had started during her tenure at the State Department.

Clinton wrote in her memoir of how she set the negotiations in motion by facilitating back-channel discussions with Iran through the sultan of Oman, who suggested the talks after he helped free an American hiker held by Iran. Clinton tapped Sullivan to establish contact with the Iranians in 2012, an important step in the path to Thursday's preliminary agreement.

Sullivan has closely consulted with Clinton on policy as she prepares to announce her presidential campaign this month. The 38-year-old Sullivan is seen as her likely pick, if she wins the presidency, as national security adviser.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Yet Clinton also expressed doubt as the talks dragged on and she neared a return to politics.

Last year, Clinton told an American Jewish organization that while Obama had given 50-50 odds of an agreement, she was "skeptical the Iranians will follow through and deliver." She said she had "seen many false hopes dashed through the years."

Brian Katulis, a senior fellow at the left-leaning Center for American Progress who focuses on national security policy in the Middle East and South Asia, said if a full deal is reached by the summer, Clinton would be "part of something historic" because of her initial role.

If it failed, he predicted she still would be "in a strong position at the center of the debate, because Iran would be widely viewed as the spoiler."

With public polling showing a majority of Americans favor a diplomatic resolution to Iran's nuclear ambitions, Katulis said, "any effort by Republicans to criticize Clinton's support for diplomacy might ultimately push them to the margins of today's national security debate and away from the center."

Clinton appears set to go on offense against the Republicans in the race on Iran. After dozens of Republican senators sent a letter to Iran's leaders warning that Congress could upend a deal, Clinton said the lawmakers were "out of step with the best traditions of American leadership."

"Either these senators were trying to be helpful to the Iranians or harmful to the commander in chief in the midst of high-stakes international diplomacy," she said. "Either answer does discredit" to the letter-signers.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

How will Hillary announce? (The Hill)
By Ben Kamisar
April 4, 2015
The Hill

It's no longer a question of will Hillary Clinton run for president. It's a question of how she'll do it.

Clinton is widely expected to announce her second bid for the White House in the next two weeks, which overnight will thrust her nascent political operation into the spotlight.

The former New York senator has been battered with bad press over the last several weeks, with questions raised about donations her family foundation took from foreign nations as well as her decision to not have a government email account while serving as secretary of State.
The 2016 launch gives Clinton a chance to take control of the narrative on her candidacy, and to reintroduce her political brand to the public.

It's a critically important moment for both Clinton and the Democratic Party, which at this point doesn't have a strong option in 2016 aside from the former first lady.

Here are a series of key decisions that Clinton needs to make before she jumps in.

Will she announce in a video or will there be an event?

In January 2007, Clinton used a message on her website to announce her 2008 run for the White House.

"I'm in, and I'm in to win," Clinton told the world.

But outside of a few webcasts in the following days, that Clinton campaign staged a very slow rollout. She gave no political speeches until March, when she marked the anniversary of the Selma civil rights marches in Alabama.

Many strategists expect her to release another video in April, but follow it up with a swing through key primary and general election states. Without the obligations in the Senate that tied her up in 2008, she can build off that momentum and work to define her candidacy from the start.

"I think you do multiple speeches in key states and showcase that she is going to be a candidate that will go to every corner of the country, even go to some red states and take the message there," one Democratic strategist said, adding that a multi-state rollout could show that Clinton won't take anything for granted this time.

Where will the announcement be made?

Hillary Clinton has been the first lady, a New York senator and a secretary of State. She has family roots in Illinois, a history in Arkansas and homes in New York and Washington. She is expected to run her campaign from Brooklyn.

The lack of an obvious choice frees her up to launch anywhere, including in key primary or general election states.

One Democratic strategist floated the idea of a kick-off in upstate New York for this campaign. That would serve a dual role of highlighting her service in the Senate and as well as her ability to win approval in GOP-leaning areas.

"People forget that she was a very successful senator that did very well even in Republican parts of New York," he said.

Peter Fenn, a Democratic consultant who is also a pundit for The Hill, said that her best bet would be a social media push coupled with an announcement tour in the early primary states of Iowa and New Hampshire. Clinton's upset loss in Iowa in 2008 represented the first major crack in her armor of inevitability, so many strategists predict she'll spend substantial energy on the Hawkeye state.

Who will be with Hillary?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Will former President Bill Clinton, Chelsea Clinton or Hillary Clinton's new granddaughter make an appearance?

It's a difficult question for Clinton, given her unique political family.

Candidates typically jump into the field alongside their smiling spouses and children, in part to show voters that the candidate is just like us. But some question whether inviting President Clinton to stand alongside her during her first big event might force Hillary Clinton to share the spotlight.

Democratic strategists who spoke to The Hill agreed that inviting her family would help Clinton.

"Her family absolutely should be there, her husband and her daughter and her grandchild," one strategist said.

"Bill should be there. He's very popular within the party, he's her husband and he was probably her biggest supporter [in the 2008 campaign]."

Will she embrace her campaign as a historic moment?

Clinton shied away from the narrative of becoming the first female president at times in 2008, as close advisors feared an emphasis on her gender could push some voters away.

But she cemented the metaphor of the "18 million cracks" in the glass ceiling during her concession speech in 2008, and that theme has been consistent in her public remarks since she left the State Department.

Many Democrats see that as a plus. One Democratic strategist said that Clinton would speak "from the heart," which will resonate with voters.

"She is really comfortable talking about her gender because she's comfortable talking about herself," she said.

"This is an important part of who Hillary is and what she stands for, and especially key considering her enormous and successful body of work throughout the decades to promote opportunity and equality for women and all Americans."

But after years of voters deciding whether they're ready for "Madame President," Fenn and others questioned whether that message would resonate as strongly.

"In 2008, that was a good deal more novel," he said.

"I don't think she has to talk that much about it."

How will she connect with voters?

"You're likable enough, Hillary," then-Sen. Obama told her on the campaign trail in 2008.

The dig characterized the biggest knock against Clinton: that more than two decades as American political royalty has left her out of touch with regular people.

That perception plagued her on the campaign trail. Many observers said Clinton was at her best when she let her guard down, as she famously did during a teary eyed moment at a New Hampshire diner in 2008.

For Fenn, one key emphasis of the impending 2016 campaign should be a robust schedule that allows Clinton to spend meaningful time with voters.

"People want to know their candidate for president, they want to feel them, see what makes them tick, that's what she did when she ran for Senate in New York," he said.

"I'd treat Iowa like it was New York that first time."

A Democratic strategist added that the quest to paint Clinton as relatable starts as early as the announcement video. He called her 2008 announcement video, which had her sitting alone in a living room, "tone deaf."

"The knock against Hillary in the last campaign was: Can she convey some humanity and feeling and concern for other folks?"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

You talkin' to Hillary? De Niro backs Clinton for 2016 nomination (The Guardian)
By Lauren Gambino
April 4, 2015
The Guardian

Robert De Niro is ready for Hillary. The formidable actor and long-time Democrat has come out swinging in favor of the likely Democratic nominee for president in 2016, Hillary Rodham Clinton.

In an interview with the Daily Beast, De Niro said he intended to endorse Clinton in her all-but declared bid for the White House, adding that a woman leader might be exactly what the US needs.

"Hopefully it will be her, yes," De Niro said. "I think that she's paid her dues. There are going to be no surprises, and she has earned the right to be president and the head of the country at this point. It's that simple.

"And she's a woman, which is very important because her take on things may be what we need right now."

De Niro, who has won two Oscars and starred in classics such as Taxi Driver, Raging Bull, The Godfather and The Untouchables, has a long track record of supporting Democratic presidential candidates.

He threw his weight behind Al Gore in 2000 and John Kerry in 2004, and famously predicted the 2008 Democratic presidential contenders during a 2006 appearance on MSNBC's Hardball with Chris Matthews at George Mason University. Asked who he would like to see become the next US president, De Niro responded: "Well, I think of two people: Hillary Clinton and Obama."

De Niro and Clinton appeared together last December at the Robert F Kennedy Center for Justice & Human Rights annual gala, where they were among those being honored. De Niro was recognized for his philanthropy and the former first lady, senator and secretary of state was celebrated as the evening's chief honoree for her "long career in public service" and "deep commitment to human rights".

Clinton is expected to formally launch her presidential campaign in the coming weeks, despite a spiralling controversy over her use of a private email account while serving as secretary of state. This week, the news that her incipient campaign had rented office space in Brooklyn caused national comment.

Such an early celebrity endorsement may provide the Clinton campaign with a much welcome distraction.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton hopes to tap small-donor network that beat her in 2008 (MSNBC)
By Alex Seitz-Wald
April 4, 2015
MSNBC

In another break from her 2008 presidential campaign, Hillary Clinton plans to focus far greater attention on energizing the grassroots base and raising money for her anticipated 2016 presidential run through small contributions.

Clinton's campaign-in-waiting absorbed much of the staff of Ready for Hillary, the pro-Clinton super PAC that has organized supporters across the country for two years, and is investing in the kind of digital outreach pioneered by Barack Obama when he beat Clinton in 2008.

The additions include the group's co-founder, Adam Parkhomenko, who is expected to hold the title of director of grassroots engagement. Grassroots fundraising director Neisha Blandin and deputy finance director Alex Smith will also join Clinton's official fundraising operation, The New York Times first reported this week.

"Hires like that are critical because there is a recognition of how critical grassroots fundraising is — more than ever," said source familiar with discussions inside Clinton's nascent operation.

Ready for Hillary has held dozens of low-dollar fundraisers, often asking for its trademark $20.16 contributions, and has identified organizers in more 100 cities across the country who have helped the super PAC and would be eager to help Clinton. It's a well-oiled low-dollar machine that could prove invaluable to Clinton's campaign.

At the same time, Clinton has hired former Obama 2012 digital director Teddy Goff as her top digital strategist, along with a slew of other operatives who have expertise in targeting and online fundraising.

Clinton's last presidential campaign was marked by a centralized campaign structure that turned off some activists and did not prioritize grassroots donations. The dependence on large donors became a serious problem when the Democratic primary dragged on longer than expected and Clinton ran out of money as her donors hit federal contribution limits.

"There was a mentality that we could count on double-max donors and be fine," said one former campaign aide, who requested anonymity to speak candidly. "But the thing about max-out donors is that they max out. You need low-dollar donors to sustain, and you need to communicate that need to your grassroots and empower regular people who believe in your candidate but only have $10 to spare."

As a relatively inexperienced candidate, Obama was able to topple the vaunted Clinton machine by mobilizing an army of small-dollar donors, who chipped in just $5 or $10 at a time. In the first six months of the campaign in 2007, Obama had raised more than four times as much as Clinton from donations of $200 or less, and they made up nearly three times the share of his total haul.

When the candidates needed more money, many of Clinton's donors were already tapped out, while Obama had millions of small-dollar contributors he could turn to again and again.

Eventually, as her coffers ran dry, Clinton began emphasizing her campaign's website during stump speeches and asking grassroots supporters to contribute — but it was too little too late.

Clinton was reportedly furious with her advisers for missing the importance of small-time donors in 2008. After a ritzy fundraiser in the Hamptons, Clinton chewed out her fundraising chief in front of one of her biggest donors, demanding to know why she didn't have merchandise like Obama or his grassroots fundraising organization, according to the book "Game Change," by journalist Mark Halperin and John Heilemann

If Clinton ran a campaign in 2008, Obama ran a movement — something she seems to be trying to do this time around.

This time around, Clinton is planning to do things differently, said Nick Merrill, Clinton's spokesperson. "Make no mistake, she will take nothing for granted, and she will fight for every vote," he said.

In an age of super PACs and billion-dollar-campaigns, Clinton will still need to depend on larger donations for the majority of her fundraising.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

During his 2012 reelection campaign, Obama raised more money from small donors than any candidate in history, but they still accounted for only 43% of his total haul. Mitt Romney raised only 23% of his money from small donors.

Ready for Hillary capped their donations at $25,000 to avoid sucking up money from other Democratic super PACs, but sought to appeal to both large and small donors with low- and high-dollar events on the same night in the same city, featuring the same big name surrogates.

But in addition to a valuable financial source, small donors are an important messaging tool and a way to give supporters a sense of ownership over a campaign, say Kim Alfred, who lead grassroots fundraising efforts for Obama's 2008 campaign. "It was a huge way for us to show the groundswell of support" for Obama, she said. "It was about really, truly about creating a sense of a movement."

If Clinton ran a campaign in 2008, Obama ran a movement — something she seems to be trying to do this time around. "You feel there is a movement stirring across this county, you can see it from coast to coast," she said on the campaign trail in Philadelphia in October. She would return to that cryptic "movement" several more times on the trail.

Candidates often tout their small contributions in speeches and marketing materials to show they're representing average people. "While the other side leans on corporate donors and million-dollar checks, we're doing this the right way," Obama told supporters in the final month of the 2012 in a plea for a $5 donation.

Online fundraising has become both an art and a science, with reams of data and A/B message testing coupled with the creativity of successful email solicitation writers, some of whom became famous in digital political circles for their ability to churn out high-performing emails.

Despite her pick of talent, Clinton will start at somewhat of a disadvantage here, since she does not have an up-to-date email fundraising list, like Obama did in 2012. She will likely absorb Ready for Hillary's list of about 4 million names, but will have to start from scratch on Facebook and and other social media platforms outside Twitter.

But the early hiring of the super PAC's grassroots staff suggests Clinton wants to send a message to Democrats that she's eager for donations — even if it's $5 at a time.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Carly Fiorina comes out swinging against Hillary Clinton and the ‘woman card’ (Examiner)
By Dwight Schwab Jr.
April 4, 2015
The Examiner

Republican Carly Fiorina is ready to do battle with Hillary Clinton and makes no bones about it. She told Newsmax on Thursday that America needs a “squeaky-clean fighter" in the White House, intimating Clinton is mired in one scandal after another.

Her best line was referring to Hillary raising the “woman card.” She vowed that her candidacy would have nothing to do with that gender-bending set of political rules. As the former Hewlett-Packard CEO put it, "This battle with Hillary Clinton needs to be about track record, accomplishment, leadership, capability, character," Fiorina said on "The Steve Malzberg Show."

But she wasn’t done there. She added, "And Benghazi goes to the heart of her character because she peddled a fiction for four weeks about what really happened there. And it goes to the heart of her capability as well, because she did nothing to protect that embassy when she was asked to do so and she did nothing to respond to the terrorist attack that occurred." Strong words for a still undeclared candidate looking more like one every speech she makes.

She was of course referring to Clinton's original explanation that the attack on the U.S. consulate in Benghazi on Sept. 11, 2012, was triggered by an anti-Muslim video posted on YouTube. Two weeks later it was revealed that the bloodbath, in which Ambassador Christopher Stevens and three other Americans were killed, was a planned terror attack. This even though then U.N. Ambassador Susan Rice said the tragedy was due to an anti-Muslim video.

Fiorina said, "We need a fighter because this is a fight about what we believe in this nation, what values and principles and policies work better to lift people up. It's a fight about the direction we take in the world as well as the direction we take in this nation. It is going to be a fight and so we do need a fighter, and I'm not afraid to fight and anyone who looks at my life knows that."

The former CEO didn’t stop there. She also called Clinton out on her use of a personal email account and private server to conduct government business while she headed the State Department. It is now known she deleted thousands of emails sometime between October and last week. Clinton's actions before and after the Benghazi attack are now being probed by a House select committee.

The former CEO explained her candidacy as "My gender is different from everyone else running on the Republican side and it is the same as Hillary Clinton's gender. That will not allow her to play the war on women card or to play the gender card, and she won't be able to say 'I'll be the first woman president."

Fiorina faces a formidable battle against other Republican hopefuls that include GOP names like former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, Sen. Ted Cruz of Texas, and Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky. Bush and Paul are still weighing a 2016 run; Cruz declared his candidacy last week.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Don't Be Fooled: Hillary Is Way to Bill's Left (Daily Beast)
By Liz Mair
April 4, 2015
The Daily Beast

One of these Clintons is not like the other.

As the Hillary Clinton presidential campaign behemoth gets seemingly closer to raising itself and beginning its plod toward its great Philadelphia coronation, Republicans are giddy at the prospect of being able to remind Americans about the return of Clintonism. They should stop it, now, for three reasons.

First, while many Republicans never liked Bill Clinton and do not have universally positive memories of the mid- to late-90's, many Americans—including conservatives and libertarians— look back on that period with fondness and nostalgia.

Second, too few Americans are or were then sufficiently politically engaged or news-addicted to remember the Clinton drama (aside from the Lewinsky scandal) that so many Republicans and media figures warn is already returning, much less treat it as a top priority.

But third, and most importantly, tying Hillary Clinton to her husband is an act of political malpractice that ignores the fact that on economic issues, she was—during his presidency, during her 2008 campaign, and still today—significantly to the left of him.

For whatever else one may say about him, Bill Clinton was and is a centrist. His presidency is remembered for the taming of the deficit, his advocacy for free trade, his signature of welfare reform, his legislation cutting the long-term capital gains tax rate, and perhaps most famously, his declaration that "the era of big government is over."

That would not have been true if Hillary had had it her way. And if she has her way now—and if she makes it to the White House—a very un-Bill-like big government will remain in the cards for some time. Leon Panetta, who served as the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and then Chief of Staff during the earlier Clinton years, writes in his 2014 book that Hillary Clinton "picked at [the Clinton administration's] economic program" of deficit reduction, "asking why there wasn't more room for health care reform or other initiatives." Panetta apparently felt that such "initiatives" would have proved too expensive, and would have undermined efforts to slash the deficit.

Moreover, after Bill Clinton passed his first budget, Hillary apparently opposed treating welfare reform as the next priority, again pushing for health care reform. Panetta also details this in his book, and it is significant given what we know about Hillary Clinton's views on health care.

Her Hillarycare proposal, as it was dubbed in the 90's, was a textbook example of government overreach that proved politically unviable. Obamacare, which remains loathed by so many across America, much more closely resembles the version of health care reform that Hillary Clinton advocated during her 2008 presidential run than that pushed by then-candidate Obama.

It may surprise those who have recently joined the political game to know that candidate Obama's plan was decidedly smaller-government and less interventionist than Clinton's, and that his was swapped for hers once Obama entered the White House. But that is a fact that cannot be avoided, though Hillaryland may in due course try to convince voters otherwise.

During Hillary's failed 2008 presidential run, she explicitly pledged to increase the federal government's role in the economy, presenting a contrast against her husband's record and approach. In a late January 2008 interview with The New York Times, she talked up an "effective, vigorous government." She also appeared dismissive of opposition to confiscatory taxation, speaking of the "nostalgia and pride" with which Americans look back on the period just after World War II, when the highest marginal tax rates ran above 90 percent.

As of 2007, Hillary Clinton was on record opposing future free trade agreements and calling for an overhaul of NAFTA, one of Bill Clinton's signature accomplishments. In a November 2007 CNN debate in Las Vegas, she called NAFTA a "mistake."

This was interesting, given that even as Hillary had begun trashing the agreement and was set to continue to do so, Bill confirmed that he still supported it, and said in a September 2007 interview with ABC's George Stephanopoulos that knowing everything he knew then, he would still have tried to pass it. Contrary to Hillary's claims, Bill said, NAFTA had not hurt American workers.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

More recently, Hillary and Bill have appeared to disagree over the Keystone XL pipeline. In 2012, the State Department, then headed by Hillary, "recommended to President Obama that the presidential permit for the proposed Keystone XL Pipeline be denied and that at this time, the TransCanada Keystone XL Pipeline be determined not to serve the national interest." Shortly thereafter, Bill Clinton went on record saying of Keystone XL that "I think we should embrace it."

As the Hillary machine revs up and begins its trundle towards Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina, Nevada, and beyond, expect to read more about the differences between the two Clintons. Hillary may benefit politically from leveraging her husband's record, reputation and rhetorical skills, all of which remain more an asset to her than a liability. But on all of these counts, one of these Clintons is not like the other. Republicans would be smart to ensure the country comes to understand that, sooner rather than later.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Sarah Brady Death: Bill And Hillary Clinton Release Statement On Death Of Gun-Control Advocate (International Business Times)
By Dion Rabouin
April 04 2015
International Business Times

Former U.S. President Bill Clinton and former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton paid tribute to the late Sarah Brady, a longtime gun-control advocate and wife of the now-deceased White House Press Secretary James Brady, in a joint statement Saturday.

Sarah Brady, who died of pneumonia at the age of 73 Friday night, lobbied for the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act, aka the Brady Act, which required background checks and five-day waiting periods for firearms purchases. The bill was signed into law by Bill Clinton in 1993.

“Sarah and her late husband Jim were fierce champions of sensible gun legislation, for which few could make as passionate or as personal a case,” the Clintons said in their statement. “She transformed tragedy into a courageous campaign, and because of her work and her remarkable life, American families are safer today.”

Sarah Brady became a prominent voice for stricter gun legislation after her husband was critically injured in an assassination attempt on President Ronald Reagan in 1981. Reagan made a full recovery from the attack, but James Brady, who was press secretary at the time, was left partially paralyzed. A bullet struck him in the head, and the resulting injuries kept him in a wheelchair for the remainder of his life. He died last August.

Sarah Brady was the chair of the Brady Campaign and Center to Prevent Gun Violence, which released a statement about her Friday. “Our nation has lost a great hero, and I have lost a dear friend,” Dan Gross, president of the center, said in the statement. “I am certain that she would want nothing more than to know we are carrying on her and Jim’s legacy with the same fiery compassion and dedication that made her so remarkable.”

Both lifelong Republicans, the Bradys attended the 1996 Democratic National Convention in support of Bill Clinton’s re-election effort. Sarah Brady even singled out Clinton for praise during the convention, noting his role in the adoption of the Brady Act. “Thank you, Mr. President,” she said in a speech at the convention. “That moment was the proudest moment of our lives.”

U.S. Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., who introduced the Brady Act as a member of the House of Representatives in 1993, also recognized and lamented Brady’s death. “Sarah Brady took the tragedy of her husband’s shooting and turned it into a movement that saved tens of thousands of lives,” he said in a statement. “She was strong and forceful, sweet and kind, and someone I considered a friend and patriot for decades. She was a true hero and will be missed by America.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Sarah Brady, widow of James Brady, dies (CNN)
April 4, 2015
CNN

(CNN) —Sarah Brady, who with her husband, James Brady, pushed for stricter gun control laws, including the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act, died Friday, her family said.

"Sarah courageously stepped up after Jim was shot to prevent others from enduring what our family has gone through, and her work has saved countless lives," their statement said.

James Brady, President Ronald Reagan's press secretary, was shot in the head by John Hinckley Jr. during his attempt to assassinate Reagan in 1981. Brady spent the rest of his life in a wheelchair, advocating against gun violence.

He died in August.

Sarah Brady was also involved in gun violence prevention for the past 30 years. She was the chairwoman of the Brady Campaign to Prevent Gun Violence and the Brady Center to Prevent Gun Violence from 2000 until she died.

The National Rifle Association said its thoughts and prayers were with the Brady family.

"Although we disagreed on public policy, Sarah Brady was an honorable American who we always respected," the gun rights organization said.

On the Brady Campaign's website, she said she got involved in gun control after her young son picked up what she thought was a toy gun on the seat of a friend's pickup. Her son started to wave it around and she took it from him. It was not a toy, she said, and she fumed over what she imagined could have happened. The loaded gun was much like the one used to shoot her husband.

"It just hit me like a ton of bricks," she told CNN in 2013. "So I asked Jim if he felt comfortable with me speaking out, and he said, 'Of course.'"

After that, the Bradys made it their business to be gun control activists.

Despite budgets that were just a fraction of the gun lobby's, the Bradys and their colleagues helped pass federal and state laws, including Maryland's 1988 ban on cheap handguns known as Saturday night specials, 1993's Brady law requiring background checks on certain kinds of gun purchases and a ban on manufacturing and future sales of some military-style firearms, which lasted from 1994 to 2004.

Former President Bill Clinton, who signed the Brady bill in 1993, and former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton said in a joint statement Saturday that the Bradys "were fierce champions of sensible gun legislation."

Sarah Brady "transformed tragedy into a courageous campaign, and because of her work and her remarkable life, American families are safer today," the Clintons said.

Brady Campaign and Center President Dan Gross said in a written statement that few people are responsible for saving as many lives as Sarah and James Brady.

"Our nation has lost a great hero, and I have lost a dear friend," he said. "I am certain that she would want nothing more than to know we are carrying on her and Jim's legacy with the same fiery compassion and dedication that made her so remarkable."

Sen Charles Schumer, a New York Democrat who helped write the Brady bill, concurred.

"She was strong and forceful, sweet and kind, and someone I considered a friend and patriot for decades," he said. "She was a true hero and will be missed by America."

James Brady was one of four people wounded in Reagan's shooting outside a Washington hotel.

Suffering a head wound, it was erroneously reported at one point that Brady had died. He was, however, left partially paralyzed.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Reagan, severely wounded as well, also survived the attack and served two terms as President. Hinckley was found not guilty by reason of insanity in the shooting and has spent the ensuing years in a psychiatric hospital.

The Brady bill was fiercely fought over for seven years before Congress approved it and President Bill Clinton signed it into law in 1993.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Former USA president Bill Clinton endorses Robin Hood's book about his daughter (Daily Record)
By Leona Greenan
April 4, 2015
Daily Record (UK)

A former president of the United States has endorsed an emotional book written by the chairman of the Hamilton-based charity DEBRA.

Robin Hood penned the memoir in tribute to his daughter Alex, who tragically died aged just 19 from Epidermolysis Bullosa (EB) – a genetic condition which causes the skin to blister and tear at the slightest touch.

The appalling condition leaves its' little victims with skin as tender to the touch as that of a butterfly.

The book – entitled Smile Daddy, I'm Dying – went on sale last month on what would have been Alex's 26th birthday and has already gained acclaim from Bill Clinton and former Prime Minister Gordon Brown.

Robin, who lives in Dumfries, spends a lot of his time in Hamilton at the Scottish headquarters for DEBRA.

The charity provide practical and emotional support, financial help and advice, respite breaks, and information on lots of different aspects of living with EB.

He explained: "It has taken me three years to put into words the story behind my wonderful and inspirational daughter Alex.

"The book charts my journey to raise money to find a cure for the condition, but it also describes the journey we went through as a family, including the break-up of my marriage to her mother, as well as Alex's pain and eventually her passing in 2008.

"It has been really well received and, in fact, has been endorsed by Bill Clinton, who encouraged me to keep up the good work Debra is doing, and Gordon Brown who very touchingly said I was Alex's greatest champion and said he had deepest admiration for my efforts."

Robin, who has been breeding labradors for over 30 years, gifted the former president a chocolate labrador puppy back in 2001 as a companion for his dog Buddy.

The pair have remained in contact since with Mr Clinton sending Robin a touching letter after the death of Alex.

The title for Robin's book came from words said by Alex to her father when they had been told by the consultant all hope was lost.

Having started out by running a marathon in Scotland in 1994 while pushing five-year-old Alex in a pushchair for the whole route, Robin has since taken part in hundreds of events - including the London Marathon in 2001, pulling his daughter along in a supermarket trolley, and a 50-mile event in Ireland, pulling along another little boy with EB in the same unusual fashion.

He is now the chairman of DEBRA and has had support from the likes of Prince Charles, David Cameron and Boris Johnson during his fundraising campaign.

Surrey-born Robin has raised millions of pounds whilst working tirelessly for the charity for over 20 years.

He hopes to add to that total from his book sales.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Robert Wendelgass - Clean Water Fund" <activist@cleanwater.org>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 12/22/2010 12:43:16 AM
Subject: Let's Keep Moving Forward

Clean Water Fund logo with wave background

Help Us Continue to Build Momentum for Water Protections in 2011

Dear Mary,

It's been a year of impressive victories for Clean Water Fund - victories that will help improve our water, protect our health, and create jobs in a green energy economy. But we need your help to continue this momentum into 2011 and to escalate the fight for a clean, healthy environment in the New Year.

It's not too late to make a tax deductible contribution for 2010! Your gift today of $50, $100 - or even more - will support our work to protect our water, our health and our future.

Your gift will also be matched by an anonymous donor through the end of this year.

We have made enormous progress this year in protecting our water, promoting clean energy and safeguarding the health of our families.

Get your gift matched dollar for dollar!

PHOTO: woodland stream

Help Clean Water Fund keep our rivers clean in 2011 by making a tax deductible gift today!

GRAPHIC: Take Action button

- Clean Water Fund is working to protect water and health with innovative "upstream solutions" that prevent pollution before it can enter our water. We have won new protection that will keep pollution from natural gas drilling out of streams in Pennsylvania. We have fought to keep trash out of our waterways and the ocean, winning adoption of alternatives to disposable bags and packaging in California, the District of Columbia and Texas. And we have helped lead the fight to protect national treasures like the Everglades, Chesapeake Bay, the Great Lakes and our coasts.

- Clean Water Fund is advancing clean energy alternatives that will move the country away from the dirty technologies of the past, create new jobs, and protect our water. Just this year, Clean Water Fund helped stop two new proposed coal power plants in Michigan; defended Minnesota's moratorium on new nuclear power plants; won a commitment to shut down the nation's oldest nuclear power plant in New Jersey; and helped protect our coasts from the dangers of offshore oil drilling.

- Clean Water Fund is working help guarantee a healthier future for our families and our communities. In Massachusetts, Connecticut, Michigan, Minnesota and California, we are working to get toxic chemicals out of the every day products we use. We've helped get BPA out of children's products in several states, and we're getting cadmium out of children's jewelry in Connecticut. And we've led the fight to protect the public from unhealthy diesel pollution in Rhode Island, Michigan, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

These are just a few of the victories that we are celebrating this year...victories that will help make our water cleaner, our families healthier and our economy stronger.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

There are still plenty of challenges facing us in the New Year. Too many of our rivers and streams are still unsafe for fishing and swimming, and we are still all too often exposed to dangerous chemicals in cosmetics or in the consumer products we use. And our economy is still too dependent on dirty sources of energy that are warming our planet and polluting our water.

But with your support, Mary, we can face these problems and win! With your generous gift of $50 or more Clean Water Fund will continue our work to ensure strong drinking water protections and to make sure that our pollution rules protect all streams, large and small. These are just two of the areas where we are already actively working in leadership roles with key decision makers.

Mary, we need your help to continue our momentum as we head into 2011. I hope we can once again count on your support for a cleaner, safer environment!

Now and for the Future,
Robert Wendelgass
CEO

P.S. - Please don't delay in making your most generous gift - to be matched by a generous donor - today!

Contact Us

National Office
1010 Vermont Ave NW, Suite 400 | Washington, DC 20005-4918 | 202.895.0420

You are receiving this message because you or someone using your e-mail address, john.podesta@gmail.com, gave us permission to send it. Not interested anymore? unsubscribe now.

empowered by Salsa

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "The Washington Post" <email@e.washingtonpost.com>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 11/12/2015 1:04:46 AM
Subject: The Daily 202: This is not the year of the governor

View The Daily 202 on the Web

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share on Twitter Share on Facebook

This is not the year of the governor

Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker watches the Republican debate at the Milwaukee Theatre on Tuesday night. (AP Photo/Jeffrey Phelps)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BY JAMES HOHMANN

THE BIG IDEA:

John Kasich made a remarkable observation at the start of Tuesday's Republican debate. Of the eight candidates on stage for the main event, he pointed out that he was the only sitting governor.

The Ohioan proceeded to have the worst night of anyone, and conservatives widely panned his performance.

Kasich's struggle is emblematic of something bigger: 2015 has been a terrible time to be a current or former governor running for president.

Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, who led in some polls this spring, and ex-Texas Gov. Rick Perry, who briefly led in the polls during his first run four years ago, were the first two candidates to drop out of the 2016 contest.

On the Democratic side, ex-Rhode Island Gov. Lincoln Chafee quit after the first debate and Martin O'Malley remains an afterthought. Two years ago, if you'd done a survey of insiders, few would have predicted that the democratic socialist from Vermont, Bernie Sanders, would be faring so much better than the two-term Maryland governor against Hillary Rodham Clinton. O'Malley's campaign never got off the ground after his lieutenant governor was defeated in last year's election to succeed him, and then the Baltimore riots case his record as mayor of that city in a dark light.

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie and ex-Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee, who were both relegated to the kid's table on Tuesday because of their drop in the polls, found themselves defending their records in Trenton and Little Rock against attacks from Bobby Jindal. The outgoing Louisiana governor, at the kid's table in all four debates, has struggled to raise cash and his unpopularity back home has become a drag on David Vitter, the Republican nominee in next week's runoff to determine who will succeed him in Baton Rouge.

In many ways, governors are better equipped to become president than legislators. They've balanced budgets. They've led in moments of crisis, from hurricanes to terrorist attacks. They've forged coalitions. They've faced far more press scrutiny. They've commanded a national guard.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Jeb Bush, who left Tallahassee nine years ago after two terms as Florida's chief executive, started the year as a presumptive frontrunner. But he's found many voters uninterested in the long list of accomplishments he rattles off during his stump speech. He played the governor card in Iowa yesterday when he was asked about Marco Rubio, who is 18 years younger than him and has no executive experience.

"I'm a better bet," he said. "I've got a proven record … I've been vetted. I've been tested."

But, so far, that argument doesn't resonate with the restive and angry Republican base. The two leaders in the polls, Ben Carson and Donald Trump, have never even run for office. At least Rubio, Ted Cruz and Rand Paul have cast votes in the Senate, though none of the trio has even served a full six-year term.

Former Virginia Gov. Jim Gilmore and New York Gov. George Pataki didn't even make the cut for the undercard debate, despite leading two of the country's biggest states. They're not even trying to run serious campaigns. Neither filed to appear on the primary ballots in Arkansas and Alabama before deadlines this week.

This is historically unusual: Barack Obama was the first sitting senator elected president since 1960. George W. Bush, Bill Clinton, Ronald Reagan and Jimmy Carter all came to the White House from governor's mansions. Each ran against Washington and the status quo.

Mitt Romney foreshadowed this trend four years ago when he downplayed his record as governor of Massachusetts in favor of emphasizing his experience as a businessman who could create jobs. He did that to contrast himself with Obama but also because his signature achievement in office was Romneycare, which included an individual mandate and helped inspire Obamacare.

— Why is this happening? So far, this campaign has not really been about policy. It's been all about personalities.

The bigger issue is that governors are also no longer seen as outsiders. They've made compromises, and it is very difficult to stay ideologically pure when you're leading a state. For example: From a conservative perspective, Walker had a very impressive record of achievements, aided by GOP majorities in both chambers of his state legislature. But many big donors, including the Koch brothers, zeroed in on his support for offering taxpayer help to build a new sports stadium, which Walker did to keep the Milwaukee Bucks from leaving town. That's part of a governor's job. But, in this climate, it is apostasy.

Of course, it is still possible that a governor will emerge to claim the nomination. Dan

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Balz, explaining that no one is dropping out of the Republican contest because it remains so unsettled, argues in a column today that Kasich and Christie are "on a collision course." They are "two alpha personalities whose hopes are kept alive by their conviction that those above them are no more capable than they are of leading the party," he writes.

Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost 's morning newsletter. Sign up to receive the newsletter.

With contributions from Michael Smith .

WHILE YOU WERE SLEEPING:

Smoke from an airstrike billows over the northern Iraqi town of Sinjar today. (AP Photo/Bram Janssen)

— Kurdish forces, backed by U.S. airstrikes, have launched an offensive to retake control of a town in Iraq that ISIS seized in summer 2014. The Post's Loveday Morris reports that ISIS captured thousands of women in last year's raid and has been using them as sex slaves for the past 13 months. About 7,500 Kurdish forces on Thursday swooped in from three different fronts in the campaign delayed by several weeks because of poor weather and tactical disagreement among Kurdish fighters. Read Loveday's dispatch from the front lines here.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ben Carson, center, is flanked by Al Costa, right, and then Pittsburgh Steelers running back Jerome Bettis at a 2005 charity auction. (Andy Starnes/Pittsburgh Post-Gazette via AP)

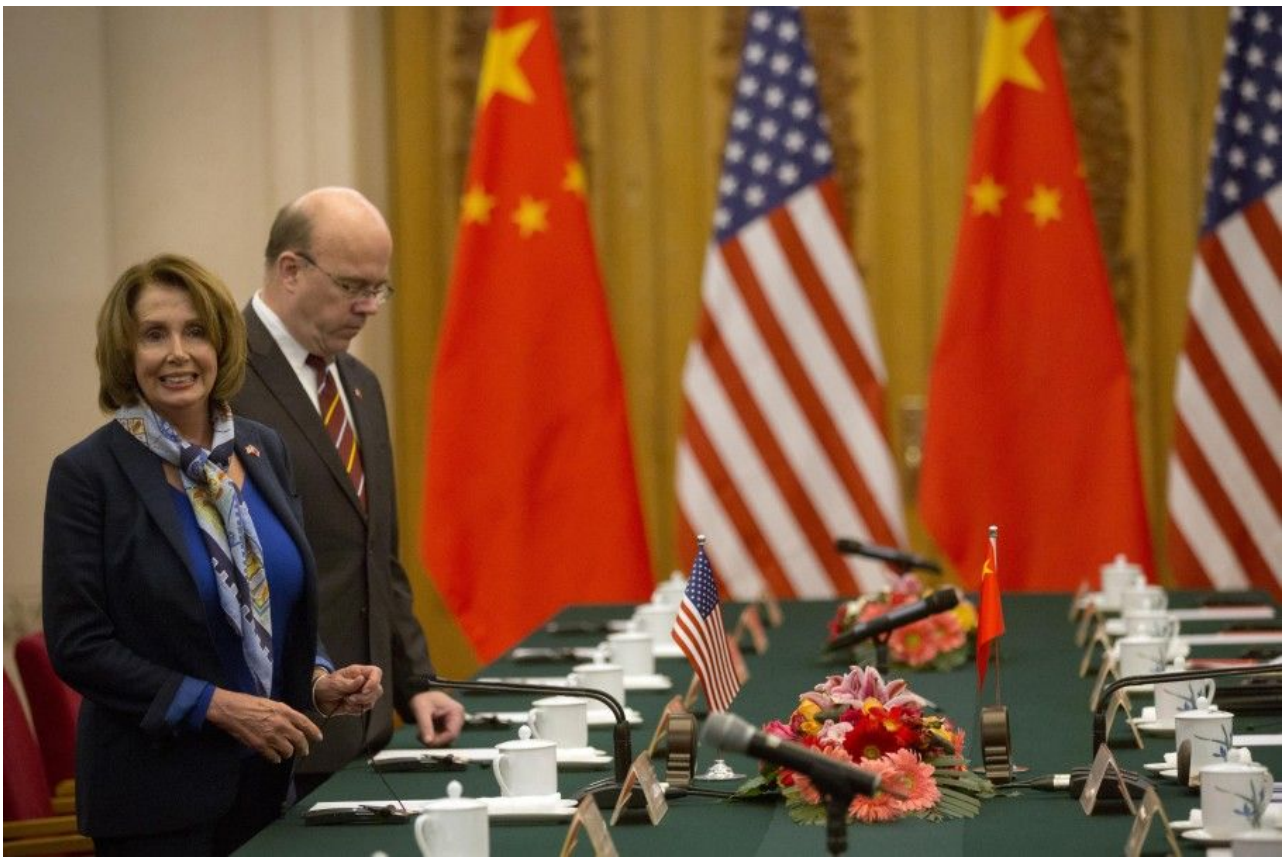
— Ben Carson profits from ties with convicted felon. Breaking from the Associated Press: "Carson has maintained a business relationship with a close friend convicted of defrauding insurance companies and testified on his behalf, even as the candidate has called for such crimes to be punished harshly. Pittsburgh dentist Alfonso A. Costa pleaded guilty to a felony count of health care fraud after an FBI probe into his oral surgery practice found he had charged for procedures he never performed, according to court records. Though the crime carries a potential sentence of up to 10 years in federal prison, Costa was able to avoid prison time after Carson helped petition a federal judge for leniency. That's different from the position Carson took in 2013 as he prepared to launch his presidential campaign, saying those convicted of health care fraud should go to prison for at least a decade and be forced to forfeit 'all of one's personal possessions.'"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(AP Photo/Paul Sancya)

— Smoking would be banned in all public housing, including common areas and administrative offices, under a new federal proposal to be unveiled today by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. It would impact nearly 1 million homes across the country, per the New York Times . If the rule were to be implemented, housing complexes would have a year-and-a-half to implement it.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.



Nancy Pelosi and Rep. Jim McGovern, D-Mass., wait for the start of a bilateral meeting with Zhang Ping, vice chairman of China's National People's Congress, at the Great Hall of the People in Beijing this morning. (AP Photo/Mark Schiefelbein, Pool)

— Nancy Pelosi made a surprise and unannounced trip to Tibet. The House Minority Leader led a delegation of congressional Democrats on a rare trip to the remote Himalayan region ahead of meetings in Beijing. Now she's meeting with top Chinese officials. Traveling with her are Jim McGovern of Massachusetts, Betty McCollum and Tim Walz of Minnesota, Joyce Beatty of Ohio and Alan Lowenthal and Ted Lieu of California.

GET SMART FAST:

1. The NTSB found no signs of distress calls by the pilots of the business jet that crashed into an apartment complex in Akron, Ohio, killing all nine people on board. (Cleveland Plain Dealer)
2. A Mississippi state flag, which includes the Confederate emblem, was removed from a hallway in the U.S. Capitol. (NYT)
3. The U.S. military didn't have its own intelligence on the Afghan Doctors Without Borders hospital it bombed last month, and instead relied almost exclusively on Afghan officials' assertion that the Taliban was inside the hospital. (AP)
4. A new planet with similar size and composition to Earth has been spotted 39 million light years away, though scientists doubt there is life on it. (Los Angeles Times)
5. Two nephews of the Venezuelan first lady were arrested in Haiti for trying to smuggle 800 kilos of cocaine into the United States. (AP)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

6. Germany's BND spy agency reportedly eavesdropped on the FBI and U.S. gun manufacturers from 2008 to 2011. Remember Germans' outrage over the Snowden revelations? (AP)
7. Slovenia started building a razor-wire fence along its border with Croatia to keep out immigrants. (AP)
8. The percentage of Americans who are obese increased from 35 to 38 percent. (NYT)
9. A nationwide shortage of the FluMist nasal spray means people who want protection will need to receive a flu shot. (Ariana Eunjung Cha)
10. The USDA in investigating an undercover video filmed at one of the nation's largest pork processing plants that shows pigs being beaten and dragged across the ground, and — apparently in violation of federal law — still conscious before being killed. (Roberto Ferdman)
11. A new Justice Department proposal recommends that companies not face charges if they voluntarily disclose instances of foreign bribery. (Ellen Nakashima)
12. Wal-Mart will scale back its Black Friday shopping promotions this year, still opening its doors at 6 p.m. on Thanksgiving but no longer having its door-buster deals spread out over a five-day period. (Wall Street Journal)
13. A man was arrested for using social media to threaten to shoot African-Americans at the University of Missouri, which has seen its president and chancellor resign amid allegations that administrators failed to address racially-charged incidents on campus. Meanwhile, the Mizzou professor who was caught on camera berating a student journalist for trying to cover campus protests apologized and resigned her appointment with the journalism school, though she will remain a professor in the communication department.
14. An Arkansas woman, 28, was charged with child endangerment after giving her 10-month-old son bourbon to relieve his teething pains. (KTHV-TV)

POWER PLAYERS IN THE NEWS:

1. The American Postal Workers Union endorsed Bernie Sanders, citing the senator's voting record and his opposition of the Trans-Pacific Partnership.
2. Hillary Clinton revived her story of trying to join the Marines when she was 26. Critics have questioned the tale's veracity, and her campaign declined to substantiate her claims. The Post's Glenn Kessler gives Clinton two Pinocchios , noting that friends have recalled her musing about testing the boundaries of what was available to women in the 1970s.
3. Bob Dole endorsed Jeb. (NBC)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

4. Ed Gillespie started a PAC for his Virginia gubernatorial candidacy in 2017. (Laura Vozzella)
5. Vladimir Putin launched an investigation into the accusations of doping by Russia's top athletes. (AP)

SECOND-DAY DEBATE COVERAGE:

Jeb and Columba Bush greet people on stage after Tuesday's debate (Photo by Scott Olson/ Getty Images)

The Fox Business debate had the lowest ratings of the cycle: 13 million tuned in, slightly lower than watched on CNBC. But that's only about half as many as the 24 million who watched the first debate in Cleveland and the 23 million who watched the second debate at the Reagan Library.

Charles Krauthammer predicted on Fox News last night that the "the final four" candidates for the nomination will be Trump, Carson, Cruz and Rubio.

Donald Trump indicated yesterday that he would use a "deportation force" to execute his plan of removing more than 11 million undocumented immigrants in the U.S. The Boston Globe looked into "Operation Wetback," that Dwight Eisenhower program that Trump invoked during the debate to argue that his deportation promise is feasible. Matt Viser points out that 88 people died, and Mexicans' heads were shaved so that they'd be recognized at the border. Far fewer people were also deported.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Post runs two stories on the front page following up on the debate—

— "As Rubio rises, GOP candidates are reluctant to take him on directly ," by Philip Rucker and Robert Costa: "Many Republican elites are once again celebrating him as the party's golden boy, if not its strongest general-election candidate, and fear seeing him bruised too badly during the primaries. The other candidates have not figured out how to deal with what some are calling 'the Marco moment,' hinting at critiques and possible anti-Rubio ads to come but hesitating to make Rubio their main target."

Yesterday, Jeb said his Right to Rise super PAC should not attack Rubio over his opposition to abortion in all instances, including in the cases of rape and incest. Bush, who supports exceptions, said: "I don't think anybody should attack someone who's pro-life." His super PAC has reportedly considered attacking on the issue to make the case that the Florida senator is unelectable in the general.

— "On foreign policy, the GOP candidates are 'all over the map ,'" by Sean Sullivan and Karen DeYoung: "Republican presidential contenders have long viewed foreign policy as a key area of strength in a potential general election matchup against Democratic front-runner Hillary Clinton. But first, the party must resolve its own identity crisis on the subject, which erupted into view in the fourth Republican debate Tuesday night and flowed quickly onto the campaign trail the next day. Many in the GOP had been relishing the opportunity to vigorously prosecute the former secretary of state's role in what they have disparagingly dubbed the 'Obama-Clinton foreign policy legacy.' The large GOP field's muddled positions have shown that it won't be easy. Unlike abortion and same-sex marriage, on which the Republican candidates mostly agree, there are deep divisions on foreign policy and national security, highlighting how President Obama's agenda abroad, and by extension Clinton's, have become difficult to assail from a consistent posture."

WAPO HIGHLIGHTS:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Allison Corona, in the bedroom of her family home in Glen Head, N.Y., was born legally blind. It was only after gene therapy that she was able to realize her bedroom wallpaper had detail in it. (Photo by Jesse Dittmar for The Washington Post)

— "Gene therapies offer d ramatic promise but shocking costs, " by Carolyn Y. Johnson and Brady Dennis: "First tested in patients a quarter-century ago, gene therapy — a risky approach aimed at fixing the malfunctioning genes at the root of some diseases — is finally emerging from its own darkness after weathering high-profile tragedies, including the death of a teenage patient. As it evolves from experimental to applied medicine, gene therapy might soon find itself steeped in a new controversy: soaring drug prices. No therapy is approved yet in the United States, so discussions about price — as well as crucial questions about how much patients will pay directly — are hypothetical. But industry leaders are already talking about ways to get ahead of potentially massive one-time price tags that could make insurers and patients balk. A gene therapy approved in Europe in 2012 costs close to $1 million, and prices are expected to follow suit in the United States."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Monsignor Krzysztof Charamsa and his partner Eduard leave a restaurant in Rome. The Vatican fired Charamsa for coming out as gay on the eve of a big meeting of the world's bishops to discuss church outreach to gays, divorcees and more traditional Catholic families. (AP Photo/Alessandra Tarantino) — "Not all gay Catholics are pleased with how Vatican priest came out of the closet," by Anthony Faiola: "Krzysztof Charamsa was still employed at one of the Holy See's most powerful offices, the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith. But after decades of hiding, the 43-year-old gay Polish priest wanted to come out with a flourish. He was no longer afraid to confront a church he saw as intrinsically 'homophobic' and proposed a symbolic news conference outside the headquarters of the Congregation — the very institution charged with defending and disseminating Catholic teachings around the globe. But Emilio Sturla, a public relations consultant who worked closely with gay Catholic groups and was helping Charamsa, strongly suggested he reconsider, both men recalled. The public and the church, Sturla insisted, would see such a move as too incendiary. 'But that's what he wanted,' Sturla said. 'To be provocative.' And that's what he did."

In related news, a juvenile court judge in Utah ordered a child to be taken from his lesbian foster parents and placed with a heterosexual couple for the child's "well-being." And a group of Mormons will quit the church this Saturday out of frustration with the new ban on baptizing the children of same-sex couples, per Michelle Boorstein .

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Curated by Elise Viebeck (@eliseviebeck)

— ZIGNAL VISUAL: Trump back on top with media mentions, if only for a day. The Donald doubling down on immigration generated a surge of mentions across social and traditional media. It was as if the old order had returned, if for only a day, with Trump receiving more than twice as many mentions (more than 162,000) than Carson, his nearest GOP rival. As for what they were saying about Trump, the word cloud from our analytics partners at Zignal Labs makes it pretty clear: “Deportation Force.”

–Pictures of the day:

Ben Carson, delivering the convocation at Liberty University, asked students to pray for him to have “courage” and “stamina.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(realbencarson)

Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) visited the Air Force Memorial:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(lisamurkowski)

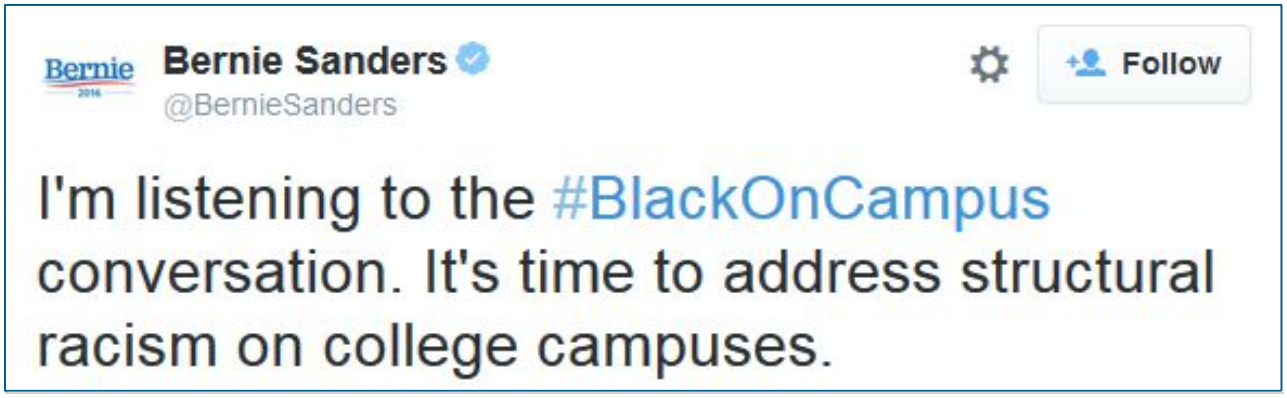
Marco Rubio did a round of early TV hits:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(marcorubiofla)

–Tweets of the day:

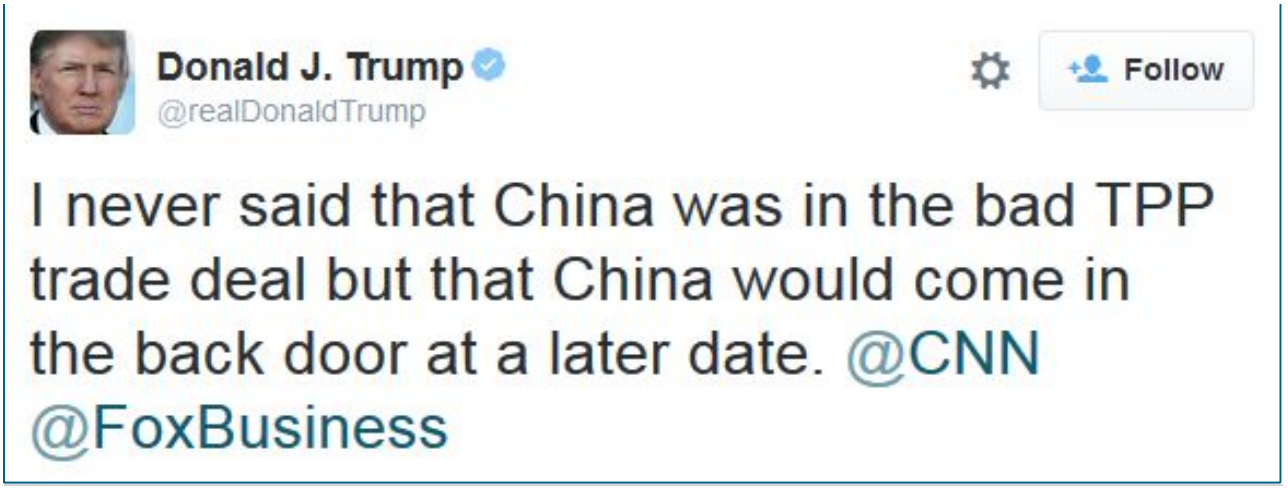
Bernie Sanders continues his efforts to get on the right side of the #BlackLivesMatter movement:



(@BernieSanders)

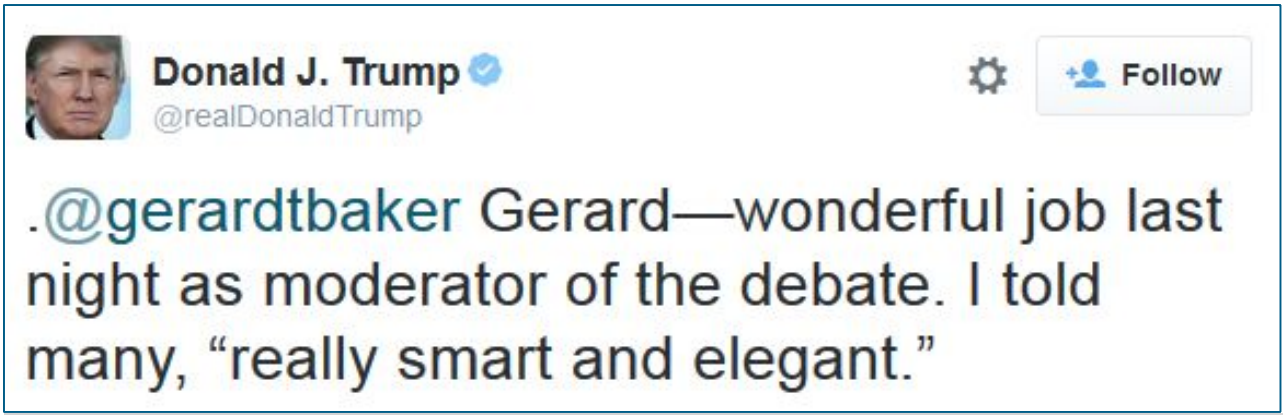
Donald Trump defended his debate comments about China and trade:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.



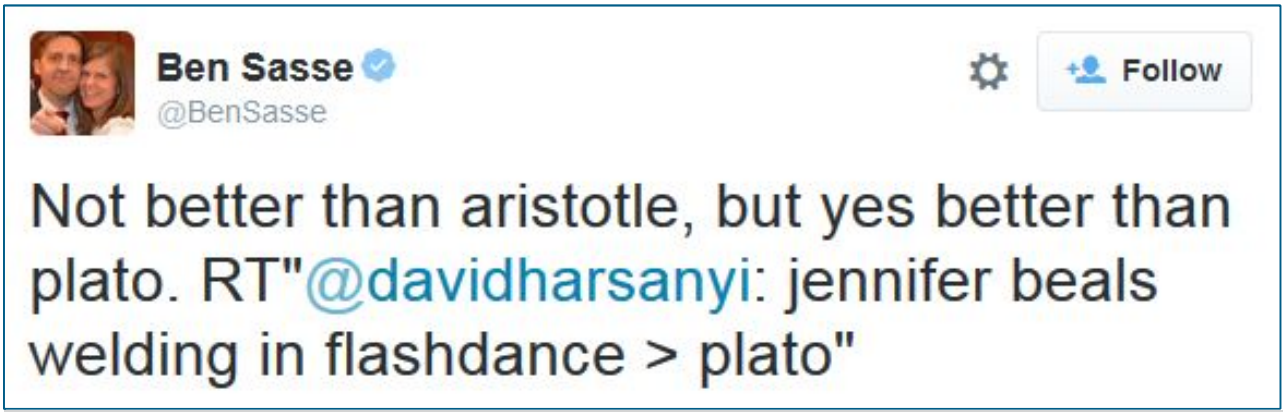
(@realDonaldTrump)

And complimented host Gerard Baker on his performance ("elegant"!):



(@realDonaldTrump)

Sen. Ben Sasse (R-Neb.), who earned his history Ph.D from Yale, made a philosophy joke:



(@BenSasse)

And Rand Paul answered what he does for fun:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(@RandPaul)

–Instagrams of the day:

With John in cycle, the McCain family rode in the Veterans Day parade in Phoenix (Cindy is second from the left):

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(cindymccain)

Martin O'Malley posted the final photo taken of him and his dad, from Veterans Day 10 years ago:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(martinomalley)

The RNC's Sean Spicer found ping pong at the Milwaukee airport:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(seanmspicer)

GOOD READS FROM ELSEWHERE:

— USA Today, "Justice officials fear nation's biggest wiretap operation may not be legal," by Brad Heath and Bret Kelman: "Federal drug agents have built a massive wiretapping operation in the Los Angeles suburbs, secretly intercepting tens of thousands of Americans' phone calls and text messages to monitor drug traffickers across the United States despite objections from Justice Department lawyers who fear the practice may not be legal. Nearly all of that surveillance was authorized by a single state court judge in Riverside County, who last year signed off on almost five times as many wiretaps as any other judge in the United States. The judge's orders allowed investigators — usually from the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration — to intercept more than 2 million conversations involving 44,000 people, federal court records show."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

HOT ON THE LEFT

'Daily Show' launches petition to free Jeb Bush from 'cruel' campaign. From TPM : "'The Daily Show' started a petition on Tuesday night to free the former Florida governor from his 'cruel presidential campaign.' 'Jeb's been bred and trained for life,' host Trevor Noah explained, not unlike the orcas at Sea World. 'Every night, no matter how bad he feels, he has to go out there and perform …. Jeb Bush wants to be, no, he deserves to be set free. We know this because unlike an orca trapped in Sea World, Jeb Bush can voice his misery in a language we can understand.'"

HOT ON THE RIGHT

Charles Koch has no plans to back a candidate in Republican primary. From USA Today : "I have no plans to support anybody in the primary now," the billionaire industrialist said yesterday. Asked what he wants to hear from Republican contenders vying for his support, Koch said, "It's not only what they say. If they start saying things we think are beneficial overall and will change the trajectory of the country, then that would be good, but we have to believe also they'll follow through on it, and by and large, candidates don't do that."

DAYBOOK:

–What's happening today on the campaign trail: Donald Trump rallies supporters in Fort Dodge, Iowa. Jeb Bush attends a town hall in Grand Rapids, Mich., and a house party in Center Tuftonboro, N.H. Also in N.H., Ted Cruz campaigns in Concord and John Kasich greets voters in Exeter. Lindsey Graham stops in Concord, Bedford, Litchfield and Nashua. In Iowa, Rand Paul holds events in Ames and Altoona, Chris Christie is in Cedar Rapids, Anamosa and Robins, and Carly Fiorina stops in Onawa and Harlan. Marco Rubio speaks at the South Carolina Chamber of Commerce Summit in Hilton Head.

–On the Hill: The Senate and House are in recess.

–At the White House: President Obama awards retired Army Capt. Florent A. Groberg the

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Medal of Honor. Vice President Biden speaks at an "It's On Us" event at Syracuse University.

QUOTE OF THE DAY: Trump called for a 25 percent or greater tax on profits from the Keystone XL pipeline: "I want a piece of the profits," he said in New Hampshire. "Let's make a good deal." (WSJ)

NEWS YOU CAN USE IF YOU LIVE IN D.C.:

— Breezy showers streak across the area this morning and are mostly gone by early afternoon. "Winds build to a crescendo of leaf-stripping, hair-disrupting intensity tomorrow," the Capital Weather Gang forecasts. "The weekend is clear sailing, literally, and turns much calmer. While Saturday is downright nippy, temps recover nicely to start the new week."

— Virginia is the first state to meet the Housing and Urban Development Department's definition of ending homelessness among military veterans. (Jenna Portnoy and Laura Vozzella)

— A fatal beating of a homeless man in Northeast Washington was captured on video. (Joe Heim)

— Environmentalists want an ethics investigation into D.C. Mayor Muriel Bowser over her reversal on Exelon's takeover of Pepco. She was against the deal and then came out for it. (Aaron C. Davis)

— Washington is the snobbiest city on the East Coast, according to a new ranking from a site called RoadSnacks.net. San Francisco is #1. (Dana Hedgpeth)

— D.C. also has the nation's fourth-highest concentration of students in charter schools. (Emma Brown)

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Bravo posted a 2-minute trailer for its new reality TV show: "The Real Housewives of Potomac," as in Maryland. The show will follow socialite and single mom Gizelle Bryant, model Katie Rost, grand dame Karen Huger, social butterfly Charrisse Jackson-Jordan, publicist Robyn Dixon and restaurateur Ashley Darby. Watch the trailer here .

Saturday Night Live posted an unaired, five-minute sketch that envisioned the Pentagon treating Trump's hair as a national treasure if he was president ("Scalp Team 6").

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Jeb Bush chest bumped a new supporter:

(@KilloughCNN)

President Obama laid a wreath at Arlington National Cemetery in honor of Veterans Day. His message focused on the troops being able to find good careers when they arrive home from overseas.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(The White House)

You are receiving this e-mail because you signed up for the The Daily 202 newsletter or were registered on washingtonpost.com or were invited as a VIP. For additional free newsletters or to manage your newsletters, click here .

We respect your privacy . If you believe that this e-mail has been sent to you in error, or you no longer wish to receive e-mail from The Washington Post, click here . Contact us for help.

©2015 The Washington Post | 1150 15th St NW, Washington, DC 20071

The Washington Post

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Laurel Ruza" <lruza@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"HRC Rapid" <HRCRapid@hillaryclinton.com>
Date:	7/27/2015 4:49:56 AM
Subject:	July 27 Morning Cable News Roundup
Attachments:	July27MorningCableRoundup.docx

Document attached, 2016 highlights below:

Fox News' Fox and Friends: Reported Trump is leading right now in New Hampshire 21-14 percent against Bush, and is second only to Walker in Iowa, 19-17 percent; Ed Henry said Trump has dialed back some of his attacks; Doocy reported Trump attacked Scott Walker for the first time; Doocy reported that in national polls, Trump is leading at 18 percent; Hasselbeck said Trump's remarks against McCain has not affected his standing in the polls; Doocy reported that the Black Lives Matter movement might try to shut down the Republican convention next summer; Hasselbeck said if Black Lives Matter wants to shut down any convention, they should shut down the DNC because they are the party keeping the black community in the position they are in. Discussed the possibility of Trump running as a third-party; Ed Henry interviewed public affairs consultant Craig Shirley about how Trump running as a third-party could change the dynamics of the race; Shirley talked about Reagan-Rockefeller-Ford dynamic; Ed Henry asked if the nightmare scenario was a repeat of the WJC-Bush-Perot campaign, to which Shirley said he wasn't sure; Shirley said if Trump were to run, the Democrats would stand an even better chance of winning the election; Shirley said there's no doubt Trump is bringing in new issues to the Republican party, and compared Trump to Reagan when he took a large proportion of Democrats.

MSNBC's Morning Joe: On front of Boston Globe, headline about Biden running for president; Mika said she thinks he's going to jump in for sure; Mark Halperin said if HRC looks weak before the filing deadline, Biden will jump in, but for now HRC is crushing with fundraising and grassroots support. New NBC News/Marist poll says Walker (19%) leads Trump (17%) in Iowa by only 2 points, Bush is trailing at 12%. Talked about Walker-Trump feud. In NH poll, Rubio is at 5% (and not even in the top tier in Iowa), Trump is ahead at 21%; Mark Halperin said Rubio needs to focus on one state, not sure which one, but Trump has sucked the oxygen out of the room; Mike Huckabee is getting desperate after losing a lot of votes to Trump and compared Obama's Iran deal to the Holocaust to get attention; Ted Cruz is also trying to get attention, accusing McConnell of being a liar on the floor of the Senate. On the Dem side, the Iowa poll shows HRC with solid lead at 55%, Sanders trailing at 26%, but in NH, HRC only leads Sanders by 13 points. For favorability, all 2016 candidates except Sanders polled more unfavorable. In NH, the outlook appears to be dim as well. People are fed up with their options. Michael Warren from The Weekly Standard said HRC's unfavorable numbers show how weak she is. Mika said she thinks Trump will run as an independent if he doesn't win the Republican nomination. On HRC and emails, Joe Scarborough said HRC should apologize and put herself at the mercy of the American people.

CNN's New Day: While Donald Trump is leading the Republican polls, he has the highest unfavorable rating of any of the presidential candidates at 59%; Donald Trump's central issue to his agenda is illegal immigration however, Republicans and Democrats alike feel that the economy is the most important issue for voters;Trump states that people "are tired of incompetent politicians in Washington that can't get anything done;" Trump EVP states that everything Trump has touched has been great and now he wants to make the country great again like he has done with his company; Trump wants to show Americans how great of a deal maker he is and show everyone that America is just "one big business;" Chris Cuomo points out that HRC and Bernie Sanders both are doing better than Trump across the national spectrum; Cohen states that means nothing because there's another part of the poll that shows 52% of people who, if their first choice candidate is not in the general election, Trump would be their second choice; Michael Cohen states that "Iran is a disaster;" He claims that Trump would not be offended by Mike Huckabee's claim that "The Iran Nuclear Deal is marching the Israelis to the door of the oven."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs" <info@belfercenter.hks.harvard.edu>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 1/20/2016 1:10:15 PM
Subject: Belfer Center Newsletter: Fall/Winter

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "t r u t h o u t" <messenger@truthout.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 8/28/2014 9:28:28 AM
Subject: William Rivers Pitt | The Iraq War Was a Smashing Success

View Recent Newsletters

Tell a friend about Truthout!

Thursday, 28 August 2014

truthout

Donate Today!

Truthout is a 501(c)3 nonprofit organization; donations are tax deductible.

Wow! It was extremely close and came down to the last few donations - but we hit our fundraising goal for this campaign! A heartfelt thank you to everyone who donated. One by one, you came together to make Truthout's work possible and expand the impact of independent media.

William Rivers Pitt | The Iraq War Was a Smashing Success

William Rivers Pitt, Truthout: By any vaguely human measure, the situation in Iraq is a US-made disaster of historic proportions. But for those in the "defense" industry, the specter of ongoing war and fear and death and weaponized mayhem is a fantastic return on their investment.

Read the Article

From Freedom Summer to Black August

Dan Berger, Dissent: Thirty-five years ago, California prisoners founded Black August, a holiday to pay tribute to African-American history in the context of an ever-expanding carceral state. Through Black August, prisoners sought to demonstrate the personal power they maintained despite incarceration.

Read the Article

Israeli Company Targeted by Oakland Blockade Imports Ammunition Into US

Darwin BondGraham, Truthout: Israeli-owned shipping company Zim, the target of recent port blockades organized by Palestinian solidarity activists in California, is importing millions of rounds of small arms ammunition into the United States each year.

Read the Article

Caught on Tape: What Mitch McConnell Complained About to a Roomful of Billionaires

Lauren Windsor, The Nation: At a secret meeting of elite donors convened by the Koch brothers, McConnell laid out his plan for shrinking the federal

BuzzFlash

Romney May Run for President Again: Invasion of the Plutocrats, the Sequel

Mark Karlin, BuzzFlash at Truthout: What this portends, given that the 2016 Democratic candidate for president is, at this time, likely to be a neoliberal on economics, is that the next presidential election is currently destined to be another horse race spectacle, rather than a serious discussion of potential structural changes in our economic system.

Read the BuzzFlash Commentary

Everything Is Already Broken, So Let's Bomb

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

government and whined about having to vote on minimum wage bills.

Read the Article and Listen to the Audio

Street Sweepers, Part I: The Battle for the Cecil

Aaron Cantú, Beacon Reader: Downtown Los Angeles is home to two extreme phenomena: hyper-gentrification and a homeless population rising more rapidly than in any other city in the nation. No story embodies this more than the battle between activists and developers for the Cecil Hotel.

Read the Article and Watch the Videos

You Don't Know What "Libertarian" Means

The Daily Take Team, The Thom Hartmann Program: Libertarianism is not what most Americans think it is. From wanting to privatize health care, to doing away with federal agencies and eliminating minimum wage laws, libertarianism put the interests of billionaires and the wealthy elite first, and the interests of everyone else dead last.

Read the Article

Why Wall Street and Consulting Firms Win at the Elite College Brain Drain Game

Yves Smith, Naked Capitalism: From the perspective of elite college administrators, steering more students to get big-ticket jobs creates a virtuous circle for the school: More well-heeled graduates makes for a bigger pool of income from which to solicit donations.

Read the Article

Laura Flanders | Surplus Military

Laura Flanders, GRITtv: Obama says the review of surplus military equipment will be done by White House staff and "relevant" agencies, including Homeland Security and the Departments of Defense. But how about the residents in towns with all this firepower review the program? Especially those who have had police point assault rifles at their heads.

Listen to the Audio and Read the Transcript

Paul Krugman | The "Libertarian Moment" Will Have to Wait

Paul Krugman, Krugman & Co.: The libertarian vision of the society we actually have bears little resemblance to reality. Libertarianism is a crusade against problems we don't have, or at least not to the extent that libertarians want to imagine.

Read the Article

Ferguson: Living Through the Replay

Dr. Mercedes Lynn de Uriarte, The Rag Blog: As a society, we seem repeatedly surprised by the anger generated by educational inequity, vanished jobs, ever more income disparities, lost affordable housing and racial and ethnic profiling of those targeted. We seem not to hear our fellow Americans until these events replay and coverage lets protestors speak for themselves.

Read the Article

Let's Bomb Some More Stuff
Read the Article at BuzzFlash

Russians Invading, Says Ukraine Leader; Tanks Reported Crossing Border
Read the Article at the Los Angeles Times

Chevron: Global Bandit, Local Bully
Read the Article at BuzzFlash

A 9-Year-Old at a Shooting Range, an Uzi and Outrage
Read the Article at The New York Times

Elizabeth Warren Faces Angry Questions About Gaza at Town Hall
Read the Article at the Cape Cod Times

Charles P. Pierce | It Is Never About Race: A Continuing Series
Read the Article at Esquire

Your Cellphone Company Says Your Location Info Is Private. Think Again.
Read the Article at Mother Jones

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Climate Crisis Connects Us, Climate Justice Requires Unity

Margaret Flowers and Kevin Zeese, Popular Resistance: There are solutions to the climate crisis, but like all other real solutions, they will have to come from organized and mobilized people at the grassroots level.

Read the Article

Economic Update: Corporate Economics

Richard D. Wolff, Economic Update / Truthout: This episode covers Burger King, French socialism, cellphone overcharging and Bank of America's fine. We also address the advertising industry and the lack of an economic recovery. Plus, we respond to listeners' queries about Michigan teachers' union fight, the poor still being kept out of top US colleges and corporate stock buybacks.

Listen to the Radio Program

Support Truthout with a tax-deductible donation

Please add messenger@truthout.org to ensure you receive our messages

Truthout is a proud member of the New spaper Guild/CWA, Local 36047

Subscribe | Unsubscribe

Privacy Policy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sara DuBois" <sara@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: "Sara Du Bois" <sara@progressiveaccountability.org>
Date: 9/16/2008 1:52:10 AM
Subject: [big campaign] '08 Daily News Clips - 9/16

08 Election Daily News Clips
September 16th, 2008

Candidate Tracking:

All times in Eastern Standard Time

10:05am BUSH: Briefing on Hurricane Ike damage in Houston, TX

10:35am BUSH: Aerial tour of Texas hurricane damage

11:15am BUSH: Briefing at Emergency Operations Center in Galveston, TX

11:30am Palin: Fund Raiser in Cincinnati, OH

12pm McCain: Rally in Tampa, FL
- Tracking scheduled for this event

3pm Palin: Interview on 55 WKRC-AM - "Sean Hannity Radio Show"

3:30pm BUSH: ,Meets with the President's Working Group on financial markets at the White House

4pm McCain and Palin: Rally in Vienna, OH

10pm Todd Palin: Part 2 of interview airs on Fox News' "On the Record with Greta van Susteren"

News Clips:

MCCAIN NEWS

Candidates, 2 Approaches to Wall Street (NYT 9/16/08)
By JACKIE CALMES
The crisis on Wall Street will leave the next president facing tough choices about how best to regulate the financial system, and although neither Senator Barack Obama nor Senator John McCain has yet offered a detailed plan, their records and the principles they have set out so far suggest they could come at the issue in very different ways.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/09/16/us/politics/16record.html?_r=1&hp=&oref=slogin&pagewanted=print

Wall Street's Woes Challenge Both Candidates (WSJ 9/16/08)
By GERALD F. SEIB
In his reaction to the Wall Street meltdown, John McCain is playing the part of Teddy Roosevelt, man of the people: Don't use taxpayer money to bail out greedy financial titans, he says, and don't be afraid to regulate Wall Street.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122149887584837137.html?mod=todays_us_page_one

Economy Becomes New Proving Ground For McCain, Obama (WaPo 9/16/08)
By Dan Balz and Robert Barnes; A01
Yesterday's meltdown on Wall Street brought the economy roaring back to the center of the presidential campaign, and the question for the final seven weeks of the general-election campaign is whether Barack Obama or John McCain can convince voters that he is capable of leading the country out of the morass.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/09/15/AR2008091503356_pf.html

Did McCain economy gaffe prompt a correction? (MarketWatch 9/16/08)
By Russ Britt
On a day when Wall Street was melting down, Republican Sen. John McCain insisted Monday that the nation's economy was "fundamentally strong," drawing criticism from Democratic leaders and his opponent for the presidency, Sen. Barack Obama.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://www.marketwatch.com/news/story/did-mccain-economy-gaffe-prompt/story.aspx?guid=AB97BD36-9F9C-4239-ABC9-6B9E89D5C194&dist=SecMostCommented

McCain TV Ad Puts Focus on Economic "Crisis" (The Page 9/15/08)
The issue-based ad focuses on the woes on Wall Street, doesn't mention Obama by name once. "Our economy in crisis. Only proven reformers John McCain and Sarah Palin can fix it."
http://feeds.feedburner.com/~r/time/thepage/ ~3/393166018/
Link to video of ad: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=pd-pMhboEX4

Obama TV Ad Smacks McCain for "Fundamentals" Remark (The Page 9/16/08)
Ominous 30-second spot asks how can McCain fix the economy if he believes, as he said Monday, "that the fundamentals of our economy are strong." Amount and length of buy TBD. Spot airing in battleground states.
http://thepage.time.com/2008/09/16/obama-tv-ad-smacks-mccain-for-fundamentals-remark/
Link to video of ad ("Fundamentals"): http://my.barackobama.com/page/content/fundamentals_ad/

New Obama ad hits McCain on pay for women (Politico blog 9/15/08)
By Ben Smith
A new, and unreleased, Obama ad, airing (at least) in Virginia, attacks McCain for his opposition to legislation requiring women receive equal pay for equal work.
http://www.politico.com/blogs/bensmith/0908/New_Obama_ad_hits_McCain_on_pay_for_women.html?showall
Link to video of ad: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=O2G7ZDgVSvM

Wall Street Political Donations Set to Slow (WSJ 9/16/08)
By BRODY MULLINS and MARY JACOBY
Barack Obama and John McCain blamed executive greed Monday for the turmoil in financial markets. But both men, and their parties, have relied heavily on Wall Street cash to fuel their campaigns, and the slowdown threatens to dry up that lucrative source of donations.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122152311313139643.html?mod=todays_us_page_one

McCain pulls in big donations, smaller crowds (CNN blog 9/15/08)
By Chris Welch
Republican presidential candidate John McCain told a private audience Monday night that "no matter what you see in the polls," he and Sarah Palin are underdogs. ...The GOP candidate was addressing a crowd of donors at a Miami hotel. In his introduction, Florida Gov. Charlie Crist said McCain has brought in $26.2 million to date from Floridians, $5.1 million Monday night alone.
http://politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com/2008/09/15/mccain-pulls-in-big-donations-smaller-crowds/

Studies Detail Contrasts in Rivals' Health-Care Plans (WSJ 9/16/08)
By LAURA MECKLER
Republican presidential candidate John McCain's health-care plan would make only a small dent in the ranks of the uninsured, at best covering about five million more people, two new reports conclude.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122153768171141665.html

Economists take critical view of health plans (AP 9/16/08)
By KEVIN FREKING
John McCain's health plan won't lower the ranks of the uninsured. Barack Obama's fails to curb the soaring cost of health care, meaning initial gains in helping more people buy health insurance would eventually be undermined.
http://ap.google.com/article/ALeqM5j3QFmojE8Ft12Stb5Eru_cHBwqxgD937J6600

McCain is practically bubble-wrapped these days (AP 9/16/08)
By GLEN JOHNSON
John McCain isn't mixing it up with the people much these days. His strong suit and distinguishing characteristic _ accessibility _ is rarely on display in these buttoned-up weeks of the presidential election campaign, when worries about missteps or getting off the topic of the moment trump the freewheeling nature of the Arizona senator. That made his town-hall meeting Monday, first in nearly a month, all the more striking.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/09/16/AR2008091600229_pf.html

McCain's stump speech more about Palin than self (AP 9/16/08)
By JENNIFER LOVEN
Two things jump out from John McCain's standard campaign speech: Sarah Palin and change. Mostly Sarah

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Palin bringing change.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/09/16/AR2008091600221_pf.html

McCain says Obama didn't call Palin a pig (AP 9/15/08)
By BRENDAN FARRINGTON
Did Barack Obama really call Sarah Palin a pig, as a John McCain ad leads people to believe? "No," McCain said Monday.
http://ap.google.com/article/ALeqM5jqSrvKD0cyqbefXbnUu0sZbSv8qAD937C7SO2

Ad Calls McCain's Campaign 'Dishonorable' (WaPo 9/16/08)
By Anne E. Kornblut and Shailagh Murray; A03
Sen. Barack Obama's campaign accused Sen. John McCain of running a "disgraceful, dishonorable campaign" in an advertisement launched Monday as the Democratic nominee vowed to leave no attack unanswered in the final weeks of the race for the White House.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/09/15/AR2008091503000.html

Obama, McCain diverge on Wall Street cures (Politico 9/15/08)
By: Ben Smith and Avi Zenilman
As Wall Street closed more than 500 points down and seemed on the verge of sliding into the New York Harbor Monday afternoon, the campaigns of Sens. Barack Obama and John McCain sought to draw voters into two very different conversations about the financial crisis.
http://dyn.politico.com/printstory.cfm?uuid=67EC64F1-18FE-70B2-A8884C7B13B5AFDF

McCain: Once a victim of push polls, now a perpetrator? (National Post blog 9/16/08)
by Shane Dingman
What is a push poll? Irony of ironies, most people might not have been familiar with this tactic of political campaigns until it was made famous in the 2000 primary campaign when John McCain was the victim of some singularly ugly push-polling. McCain's campaign manager at the time wrote a fabulous piece all about what it was like for McCain in the Boston Globe in 2004. One of the opening graphs says it all:
http://network.nationalpost.com/np/blogs/posted/archive/2008/09/16/mccain-once-a-victim-of-push-polls-now-a-perpetrator.aspx

Obama, McCain to Speak to Clinton Global Initiative (The Page 9/15/08)
The two presidential candidates will participate with the likes of Queen Rania, Gordon Brown, Hamid Karzai, Al Gore, Michael Bloomberg, Lance Armstrong, Bono and more in addressing the fourth annual meeting. Obama by satellite. The conference takes place in New York City from September 23-26
http://feeds.feedburner.com/~r/time/thepage/ ~3/393625662/

PALIN NEWS

Creamery Case Has Palin Critics Taking Aim at Fiscal-Conservative Claim (WSJ 9/16/08)
By JIM CARLTON
Republican vice-presidential nominee Sarah Palin promotes herself as a small-government conservative. But when Alaska government officials wanted to shut down a money-losing creamery, the governor overturned the decision after dairy farmers near her hometown complained the loss of subsidies would cripple them.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122152654971140245.html?mod=todays_us_page_one

Palin supports $600 million 'other' bridge project (AP 9/16/08)
By GARANCE BURKE
Gov. Sarah Palin may eventually have said "no thanks" to a federally funded Bridge to Nowhere. But a bridge to her hometown of Wasilla, that's a different story. A $600 million bridge and highway project to link Alaska's largest city to Palin's town of 7,000 residents is moving full speed ahead, despite concerns the bridge could worsen some commuting and threaten a population of beluga whales.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/09/16/AR2008091600245_pf.html

John McCain campaign tries to quell 'Troopergate' (AP 9/16/08)
By GENE JOHNSON
The presidential campaign of Sen. John McCain is trying to put to rest the ethical controversy that's come to be known as "Troopergate," releasing e-mails supporting Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin's contention that she dismissed her public safety commissioner over budget disagreements, not because he wouldn't fire her ex-brother-in-law.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/09/16/AR2008091600265_pf.html

Palin for Energy Czar! (WaPo blog 9/15/08)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The woman touted by John McCain as the most knowledgable person in America on energy issues has been having a lot of trouble getting her basic energy statistics straight. Last week, Sarah Palin told Charlie Gibson of ABC News that her state, Alaska, produced "nearly 20 percent of the U.S. domestic supply of energy." Yesterday, she told a campaign rally in Golden, Colorado, that she had been responsible for overseeing "nearly 20 percent of the U.S. domestic supply of oil and gas." Both claims are way off.
http://voices.washingtonpost.com/fact-checker/2008/09/palin_on_energy.html

Fired Official: Governor Sarah Palin Did Not Tell the Truth to ABC (ABC 9/15/08)
By RHONDA SCHWARTZ and JUSTIN ROOD
Walt Monegan Says He Was Called to Gov.'s Office Over a "Private Family Matter" http://www.abcnews.go.com/Blotter/story?id=5804703&page=1

Palin makes first foray into fundraising for McCain (CNN blog 9/15/08)
By Peter Hamby
In her first fundraising effort on behalf of the McCain campaign, Sarah Palin raised just under $1 million, according to the host of the event.
http://politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com/2008/09/15/palin-makes-first-foray-into-fundraising-for-mccain/

OPINIONS AND EDITORIALS

The Ugly New McCain (WaPo 9/17/08)
Richard Cohen
He has become the sort of politician he once despised.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/09/15/AR2008091502406.html

McCain's Radical Agenda (NYT 9/16/08)
By BOB HERBERT
Talk about a shock to the system. Has anyone bothered to notice the radical changes that John McCain and Sarah Palin are planning for the nation's health insurance system?
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/09/16/opinion/16herbert.html?pagewanted=print

Running on a Lie (WaPo 9/16/08)
By Eugene Robinson
Palin believes that truth is nothing more than what she says it is.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/09/15/AR2008091502471.html

What It Takes (WaPo 9/16/08)
Anne Applebaum
Are we willing to pay the high cost of victory in Afghanistan?
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/09/15/AR2008091502470.html

Palin the outsider (Washington Times 9/16/08)
Jeremy Lott
When John McCain chose Alaska Governor Sarah Palin for his running mate, the decision caught everyone completely off guard. That shock and embarrassment, even, extended to America's major book publishing houses. So instead of the normal quickie campaign clip job put out by one of the larger imprints, for now we have the surprise small press publishing the success story of the year.
http://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2008/sep/16/palin-the-outsider/

BUSH NEWS

Bush: Economy Strong Enough to Handle Turmoil (WaPo 9/16/08)
By William Branigin
President Bush today lamented what he described as "painful" adjustments in U.S. financial markets following the collapse of the Lehman Brothers investment firm, but he gave no indication of any further federal bailouts and said the markets are resilient enough to handle the disruptions.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/09/15/AR2008091501283.html

Cheney Linked Hussein to Al-Qaeda, Ex-GOP House Leader Says in Book (WaPo 9/16/08)
By Jeff Leen; A19
A GOP congressional leader who was wavering on giving President Bush the authority to wage war in late 2002 said Vice President Cheney misled him by saying that Iraqi President Saddam Hussein had direct personal ties to al-Qaeda terrorists and was making rapid progress toward a suitcase nuclear weapon, according to a new book by Washington Post investigative reporter Barton Gellman.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/09/15/AR2008091503064.html

Bush heads to Texas as Galvestonians urged to leave (CNN 9/16/08)
President Bush heads to hurricane-ravaged south Texas on Tuesday with a message that the federal government will be there with aid and support.
http://www.cnn.com/2008/US/weather/09/16/hurricane.ike/

OTHER TOP NEWS

Dow sheds 500 points in worst skid since 2001 terror attacks (AP 9/16/08)
A stunning makeover of the Wall Street landscape sent stocks falling precipitously Monday, with the Dow Jones industrials losing 500 points in their worst slide since the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. Investors recoiled after a shakeup of the financial industry that took out two storied names: Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc. and Merrill Lynch & Co.
http://www.azcentral.com/arizonarepublic/business/articles/2008/09/16/20080916biz-mktwallstreet0916.html

Economic-Stimulus Plan Lacks Bipartisan Backing (WSJ 9/16/08)
By GREG HITT and SARAH LUECK
House Democratic leaders plan to push for action on a $50 billion economic-stimulus package, betting that financial-market turmoil will overcome Republican reluctance to spend more on highways and bridges.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122152277104639601.html?mod=todays_us_page_one

Interest Groups Step Up Efforts in a Tight Race (NYT 9/16/08)
By JIM RUTENBERG and MICHAEL LUO
After largely staying on the sidelines, the types of independent groups that so affected the 2004 presidential campaign are flooding back as players in the final sprint to the election this fall, financing provocative messages on television, in mailboxes and through the Internet.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/09/16/us/politics/16group.html?_r=1&ref=todayspaper&oref=slogin

Kissinger Backs Direct Talks 'Without Conditions' with Iran (ABC blog 9/15/08)
By Rachel Martin
Former U.S.Secretary of State Henry Kissinger today told an audience in Washington, DC that the U.S. should negotiate with Iran "without conditions" and that the next President should begin such negotiations at a high level.
http://blogs.abcnews.com/politicalradar/2008/09/kissinger-backs.html level.

Powell still undecided, says Obama win would be 'electrifying' (CNN blog 9/15/08)
Former Bush Secretary of State Colin Powell said Monday that he has not yet decided which candidate to back in this year's presidential race.
http://politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com/2008/09/15/powell-still-undecided-says-obama-win-would-be-electrifying/

Top Democrats Privately Urging Major Donors To Fund Outside Groups To Attack McCain (TPM 9/16/08)
By Greg Sargent
In a sign of just how nervous senior Democrats are about Barack Obama's situation, top Democratic Party operatives are privately urging the party's major donors to get serious about putting big money into outside groups looking to attack John McCain in key battleground states.http:// tpmelectioncentral.talkingpointsmemo.com/2008/09/top_democrats_privately_urging.php

Fannie, Freddie's Former CEOs to Lose $12.6 Million in Severance Pay (WaPo 9/16/08)
By Zachary A. Goldfarb; D02
Former Fannie Mae chief executive Daniel H. Mudd and former Freddie Mac chief executive Richard F. Syron will lose $12.59 million in salary, stock and bonuses but keep $9.43 million in retirement and pension benefits under a Federal Housing Finance Agency plan to block their severance payments.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/09/15/AR2008091502853_pf.html

POLLS

Latest Ohio Numbers (The Page 9/15/08)
From Suffolk University poll:
McCain 46, Obama 42
Dates conducted: Sept. 10-13. Error margin: 4 points.
http://thepage.time.com/2008/09/15/latest-ohio-numbers/

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

--
Sara DuBois
Tracking / Communications Manager
ProgressiveAccountability.org
sara@progressiveaccountability.org
202-609-7681 (office)
410-967-7306 (cell)

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Eryn Sepp" <eryn.sepp@gmail.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 7/6/2015 8:54:55 AM
Subject: Vivek Lall

Dr. Vivek Lall, a renowned aerospace and defence expert, has held various key positions with his last stint being as CEO and President, Reliance New Ventures Ltd. Reliance Industries Limited .[2] Dr. Lall was heading the Boeing (Defence and Space) operations in India from 2007 till April 2011. Dr. Lall has now joined the US-based global defense and nuclear giant General Atomics as the global Chief Executive for international Commercial Strategic Development for General Atomics Electromagnetic Systems.[3] He has been also recognized as one of the world's top scientists of the twentieth century by Cambridge. [4] [5] In his new role at General Atomics, Dr. Lall will based out of San Diego California and will be frequently travelling to India. General Atomics is best known for manufacturing one of the most important tools in modern warfare: the Predator, an unmanned spy plane used by the US in many global engagements. As Chief Executive he will have US and international responsibilities of strategic development of systems like EMALS. Electromagnetic Aircraft Launch System (EMALS) is a complete launch system designed to replace the existing steam catapult currently being used on U.S. Navy aircraft carriers. EMALS is being considered by the Indian Navy for its forthcoming aircraft carrier.[6] [7]

He is also affiliated with the United Nations in New York to advise on Broadband and Cyber Security issues for unique challenges within the global community and provide services that will help address them.[8] [9]

Associations

- Vivek was appointed as Chairman of the Indo-US Strategic Dialogue by the Indo-American Chamber of Commerce. In August 2011[20] [21]
- Vivek was appointed as Distinguished Fellow at India's think tank Observer Research Foundation.[22]
- He also served as Chairman of the Defense Committee of The Association of Chambers of Commerce and Industry of India (ASSOCHAM)[23]

Dr Vivek Lall joins General Atomics (Aug 2014)

Dr Vivek Lall, the noted Indian-origin American aerospace expert, has joined General Atomics as Chief Executive for global strategic development.

Dr Lall had joined the Reliance Industries Limited (RIL) group in May 2011 and set up its aerospace arm, Reliance Aerospace Technologies Limited (RATL) to chart a roadmap for the company’s incursion into aircraft and space systems manufacture. Although his departure comes as a surprise, his movement may actually help bring newer technologies to India.

The San Diego-based General Atomics (GA) is into futuristic fusion nuclear power and electromagnetic propulsion which can launch aircraft, artillery shells and even spacecraft into orbit. GA is a privately-held company, and a pearl of technology in the United States.

GA is already in talks with the Indian Navy to offer its patented Electromagnetic Aircraft Launch System (EMALS) for India’s second indigenous aircraft carrier which is at design stage. No decision has been announced but indications are that the Navy is seriously looking at the EMALS, but under Transfer of Technology (ToT). If an agreement goes through, this could perhaps be the most sophisticated ToT venture under India’s current Defence Procurement Procedure (DPP).

The EMALS technology was on the table among the offers during US Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel’s recent visit to New Delhi.

General Atomics has also offered the unarmed version of its unmanned aerial vehicle (UAV) Predator which has extensively been used in Afghanistan for reconnaissance purposes. It is not known if the Indian Air Force (IAF), which is looking for UAV and UCAV (Unmanned Combat Aerial Vehicle) technology, is considering the Predators.

As for the soft-spoken Dr Lall, who signed into the company Aug 25 in this Californian city on the Pacific coast, he will be visiting New Delhi soon to say Hullo and Bye to those in the establishment there and also meet his friends in the Indian capital's strategic community. He told India Strategic he would be a periodic visitor as New Delhi is more or less a hometown for him.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Dr Lall is a former US National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) hand. He was Boeing's Vice President in India with high credits for winning major orders for the company's civil and military aircraft before joining RIL.

He had also worked with Raytheon, a leading US manufacturer of highly sophisticated airport and aircraft radars and onboard weapon systems for air, land, sea and space usage.

Notably, Dr Lall is on a global list of the world's top scientists prepared by the University of Cambridge. He was also the President of the Mathematical Association of America.

© India Strategic

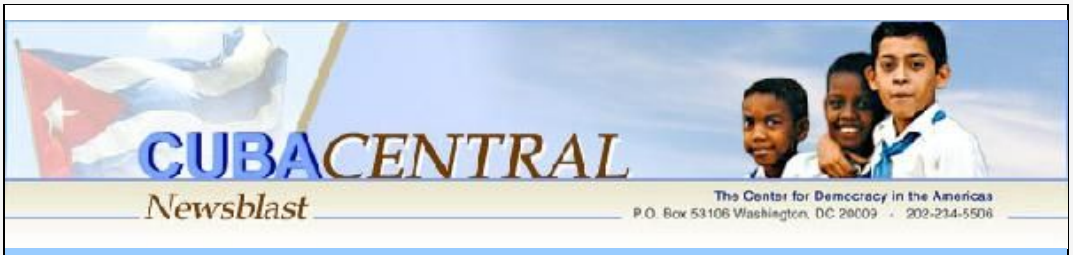
--
Eryn M. Sepp
Cell: 818-456-2881

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sarah Stephens" <sarah@democracyinamericas.org>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 2/5/2016 11:01:20 AM
Subject: Peace and the Parallel Universe



February 5, 2016

Dear Friends:

Blessed are the peacemakers, it says in Matthew 5:9 - and the peacemakers seem to converging in Havana.

One week from today, the leaders of Roman Catholicism and the Russian Orthodox Church will meet in Cuba to try and advance the healing process between Eastern and Western Christianity, churches which have been in schism since 1054.

In coming to Cuba to seek peace, Pope Francis and Patriarch Kirill I are not alone.

For two years, a tightly held negotiation between the United States and Cuba ended six decades of hostilities between our two countries. The diplomatic effort to normalize relations continues to roll forward in both capitals.

Since 2014, Cuba and the European Union have been negotiating a new Political Dialogue and Cooperation Agreement to replace the tired, confrontational framework that has existed for nearly twenty years. The talks, which are alternating between Brussels and Havana, will resume in Cuba later this year.

Most of all, talks to end the fifty-year civil war between the Government of Colombia and the FARC guerrilla movement, a conflict that has claimed more than a quarter-million dead, are "Heading toward the Finish Line in Cuba," according to Ginny Bouvier's most recent post.

While the Colombian and FARC peace delegations deserve the lion's share of the credit - they've been nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize - Cuba's role in hosting the negotiations continues to win praise.

As President Obama said at a White House ceremony with Colombia's Juan Manuel Santos at his side, "I want to think all of the parties for their efforts, including the government of Cuba for hosting the talks. We all know that it's easier to start wars than to end them."

President Santos replied in part by saying, "I also believe that I speak for all the people in Latin America and the Caribbean, all the people who live south of the Rio Grande, when I say to you, thank you. Thank you, Mr. President, for your audacity in reestablishing diplomatic relations with Cuba."

The President was audacious, indeed, for ushering in a period of diplomacy that has produced resumed relations, reopened embassies, prisoner releases, policy reforms and more. In a world beset by tragic struggles and disorder, it's hard not to enjoy the emergence of Cuba, once the epicenter of the Cold War conflict, as a 21st Century staging point for reconciliation.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Somehow, the editorial writers at the Washington Post have figured out a way not to feel the love.

The Post didn't allow a day to go by before it unloaded on President Obama's decision to normalize relations with Cuba. On December 17th, 2014 they called his diplomatic breakthrough "an undeserved bailout" of the Castro regime. They also called the administration "naïve" for believing it would help transform U.S. relations with Latin America.

After just six months, the Post denounced the deal as "one-sided," and actually took pleasure in the fact that Congress was stopping the appointment of a U.S. Ambassador to Cuba. In September, it accused Pope Francis of appeasement for his role in bringing America and Cuba together. In October, they slammed the overhaul of U.S. policy again for being "one-sided." And on Sunday, they roared again.

Their editorial, Failure in Cuba, topped by a dated photograph of President Raúl Castro sitting with Fidel Castro taken in 2011, declares that President Obama's opening to Cuba "seems to be failing to live up to its declared goals." After concluding that nothing positive has materialized, "the president's only response," they say, "has been more unilateral concessions."

In the Post's parallel universe, in one year's time, nothing has been accomplished. Cuba has not unilaterally dismantled its system in the last year, just as it didn't for more than fifty years under the old policy. But that's the wrong metric.

In his well-argued piece, Inconsistent Impatience on Cuba, Paul Pillar pillages the Post for its way-stale argument giving the administration a single year to reverse decades of failed policy in Cuba.

"Evidently half a century," Pillar writes, "through ten different U.S. administrations, is deemed insufficient time to judge whether the policy of isolation can ever achieve any useful results. But the editorial criticizes President Obama's opening for not bringing about a 'sea change in Cuba' during the brief time it has been in effect."

Short of a sea-change, as a critic of U.S. policy, Carlos Lopez wrote this week, "Opening telecommunications, increasing tourism, and embracing foreign culture into the island are all signs that Obama's policy of engagement has resulted in a Cuba with less restrictions and barriers."

Engage Cuba made a similar point this week. "Before December 17, 2014...there were zero Wi-Fi hotspots outside of hotels and zero in the homes of Cubans. At the end of 2015, there were 65 Wi-Fi hotspots, and the Cuban government has announced it will add 80 more during 2016.

These Wi-Fi hotspots, a priority for President Obama's new policy, are gateways for Cubans to expand their borders. "We are seeing a whole new quality of public space," Miguel Antonio Padrón Lotti, a Cuban professor of urban planning, told The Guardian. "Cubans have always socialized on the streets, but now we can interact with the wider world at the same time."

It's not just hotspots, but also progress propelled by painstaking diplomacy - on commerce, criminal justice and fugitives, migration and fraud - with more left to be done.

Rather than rolling the policy back, as several prominent candidates for the U.S. presidency would have us do, or stand and wait until a new Congress is elected capable of dealing with Cuba policy legislation (talk about a parallel universe), we enjoy the elan of President Francois Hollande, who called this week on President Obama to "go all the way (how French)," and end the embargo himself.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Now, the President's authority probably doesn't really extend that far. In fact, Congress and the Supreme Court have taken steps in recent days to call into doubt the powers of his office that he has used to reform Cuba policy since 2009.

But, as Bill LeoGrande explained in Foreign Policy this week, there's much that he can do with the power he's got within the time left in his term to use it. LeoGrande proposed presidential actions to lift bans on U.S. investments, allow a range of Cuban imports into the U.S., free individuals to make people-to-people trips to Cuba, and make significant changes in the regulatory regime and its enforcement so that U.S. banks embrace the idea of commerce with Cuba, rather than thwarting it in fear of being fined.

The choice seems pretty clear; rather than returning the policy to the Post's parallel universe, take the more promising path with the Pope, the Patriarch, President Santos and the FARC toward progress and peace.

Our Recommendations

Cuba says it will launch broadband home Internet project , Michael Weissenstein, Miami Herald
On Sunday January 31, Cuba's government announced that it would launch broadband Internet service in two Havana neighborhoods. ETECSA, the state telecommunications company intends to use fiber optic connections from Chinese telecom operator, Huawei, to provide Internet service to homes in the historic Old Havana neighborhood. This development comes a year after Cuba set up dozens of public Wi-Fi hotspots, and will serve as a pilot program for future wireless telecom projects.

Obama Needs to Stop Playing Small Ball With Cuba or a Republican in the White House, backed by a fearful, anti-Cuba Congress, could undo -- in an instant -- all his good work. William M. LeoGrande, Foreign Policy
Given reluctance by Congress to take up legislation to repeal the embargo, the Obama administration's actions in Cuba have relied on the use of executive authority. Should a Republican win the White House in 2016, Professor LeoGrande warns that President Obama's unilateral executive actions can easily be revoked. In the year remaining, however, he lists a series of actions the administration could take to make Cuba policy reform progress harder to roll back.

Inconsistent Impatience on Cuba , Paul Pillar, National interest
Paul Pillar responds to a Washington Post editorial that labels President Obama's Cuba opening as a "failure" that is "not leading to positive change." Pillar compares this criticism to similar backlash against the administration's nuclear agreement with Iran. He suggests that critics of Obama's diplomatic initiatives fail to assess - or even propose - alternative policies, have unrealistic, anachronistic, and inconsistent expectations for potential changes, and tend to be "impatient" in their views of diplomacy.

NASA explores cooperation with Cuba on science projects , Fox News Latino
NASA researcher Brent Holben's recent trip to Cuba underscores potential research collaboration between the US and Cuba. Holben urged Cuba to join the recently created Caribbean Aerosol Network, a component of Aeronet, which is a network of robotic instruments basically used to study aerosols, tiny particles suspended in the air whose high concentration has a negative impact on human health.

U.S. and Cuban researchers begin neuroscience collaborations , Becky Hamm, Science
U.S. and Cuban scientists have identified areas of neuroscience for research collaboration. The areas include magnetic resonance imaging technology, neuroinformatics, neurodevelopment, and a plan to establish an international nonhuman primate research center in Cuba. Mark Rasenick, a professor of physiology and psychiatry at the University of Illinois at Chicago and a fellow of both AAAS and the

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Cuban Academy, noted the positives of this academic relationship with Cuba but added, "We still have a number of impediments to research, and in order to fix them, we need to end the embargo."

Port of Miami preparing for daily ferry service to Cuba , Douglas Hanks, Miami Herald
The Miami Herald recently uncovered documents showing that Port of Miami has been in negotiations to open ferry service to Havana for a year. However, delays from the Cuban side have stalled progress, as Cuba prioritizes other construction projects.

Constitutional Reform in Cuba: Why, how, and with whom? , Eileen Sosin Martínez, Progreso Semanal
Progreso Semanal offers an updated look into proposed constitutional changes in Cuba. On February 24, 2013, President Raul Castro announced that he was introducing changes to the constitution. The first proposal outlined was the need to introduce term limits on politicians. At most, they would be able to serve two five-year terms in office. Three years later, we still do not have many additional details on the reforms. Professor and investigator at the Center for the Study of Public Administration, Julio Antonio Fernandez, imagines that we will see a clearer proposal at the upcoming April 2016 Party Congress, following the same logic of reform put forth in 1992.

Cuba, through rose-colored glasses , Yoani Sánchez, Miami Herald
Sánchez describes the stark contrast between the prosperous and thriving Cuba envisioned by the Cuban government, journalists, and media, and the reality in which sickness, censorship, and poverty affect citizens on a daily basis.

Cuba for sale: "Havana is now the big cake - and everyone is trying to get a slice," Oliver Wainwright, Guardian
Tourism from the U.S. to Cuba has surged by 40% since president Obama announced a thaw in diplomatic relations between the two countries in December 2014. According to the IMF, an end to the U.S. economic embargo on the island could see the number of American tourists to Cuba skyrocket to 10 million per year.

Until next time,

The Cuba Central Team

Like our work? Consider a monthly donation!

The Cuba Central Newsblast is produced by the Center for Democracy in the Americas (CDA). CDA is devoted to changing U.S. policy toward Cuba and the other countries of the Americas by basing our relations on mutual respect, fostering dialogue with those governments and movements with which U.S. policy is at odds, and recognizing positive trends in democracy and governance. For more information, check out the CDA website. You can also like us on Facebook or follow us on Twitter .

See what's happening on our social sites

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Center for Democracy in the Americas, PO Box 53106, Washington, DC 20009

SafeUnsubscribe™ john.podesta@gmail.com

Forward this email | Update Profile | About our service provider

Sent by sarah@democracyinamericas.org in collaboration with

Try it free today

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 11/23/2014 7:20:03 AM
Subject: Correct The Record Sunday November 23, 2014 Roundup

Correct The Record Sunday November 23, 2014 Roundup:

Headlines:

New York Times: "G.O.P.-Led Benghazi Panel Bolsters Administration"

"'The effort to turn the Benghazi tragedy into a political scandal never had a factual basis,' said David Brock, founder of Correct the Record, a group that defends Mrs. Clinton in the news media, and author of the e-book 'The Benghazi Hoax.' ... 'The Republican committee report should close the case,' he added. 'If the scandal persists into 2016, it will only be for partisan reasons.'"

ABC News: "Top Hillary Clinton Supporters Gather to Plot, Strategize"

"The attendees at the event included Correct the Record's David Brock and Burns Strider, who were invited guests to last weekend's 10th anniversary event for the Clinton Presidential Library in Little Rock, Arkansas, as well as political strategists Harold Ickes, James Carville and Paul Begala."

Newsday: "Hillary Clinton eulogizes lawyer Thomas A. Twomey Jr. in East Hampton"

"Hillary Rodham Clinton eulogized prominent environmental lawyer Thomas A. Twomey Jr. at his funeral in East Hampton on Saturday, recalling how he helped her connect with everyday Long Islanders and win her Senate seat from New York in 2000."

Associated Press: "Obama: Americans want 'new car smell' in 2016"

"He said a number of possible Democratic candidates would make 'terrific presidents,' but Hillary Clinton is the only one he mentioned by name. He said she would be a 'formidable candidate' and make 'a great president' if she decides to run a second time."

CNN: "Sen. Lindsey Graham: GOP-led Benghazi report is 'full of crap'"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-South Carolina, has some harsh words for the recently released Benghazi report, led by his own party. 'I think the report is full of crap,' Graham told Gloria Borger on CNN's 'State of the Union' on Sunday."

The Hill blog: Briefing Room: "GOP-led Benghazi report purposely buried in news cycle, Democrat says"

"A GOP-led investigation that debunked theories about the 2012 Benghazi attack was purposely released on the Friday before Thanksgiving to evade exposure, Rep. Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) said Sunday."

New York Times: "A Deep 2016 Republican Presidential Field Reflects Party Divisions"

"As Democrats signal that they are ready to rally behind Hillary Rodham Clinton before their primary season even begins, allowing them to focus their fund-raising and firepower mostly on the general election, the Republicans appear destined for a free-for-all."

Articles:

New York Times: "G.O.P.-Led Benghazi Panel Bolsters Administration"

By Michael S. Schmidt

November 22, 2014

WASHINGTON — A report released late Friday about the fatal 2012 attacks in Benghazi, Libya, left Republicans in the same position they have been in for two years: with little evidence to support their most damning critiques of how the Obama administration, and then-Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, responded to the attacks.

Similar to five other government reports, the one released by the House Intelligence Committee on Friday said that the administration had not intentionally misled the public about what occurred during the attacks in talking points it created for officials to use in television appearances that turned out to be inaccurate.

It also said that no order was given by the military to "stand down" in responding to try to save the four Americans killed in the attacks, a claim that Republicans have made based on the account of a member of the security team in Benghazi that day.

Coming six months after Speaker John A. Boehner created a separate special committee to investigate the Benghazi attacks, the report raised questions about what that panel might uncover that the Intelligence Committee — whose chairman, Representative Mike Rogers, Republican of Michigan, is leaving Congress — and the other investigations missed.

The special committee that Mr. Boehner created is led by Representative Trey Gowdy, Republican of South Carolina, who has a budget of $3.3 million for the investigation.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Mr. Gowdy, in a written statement, said that his committee had reviewed the latest findings along with the other reports. “It will aid the select committee’s comprehensive investigation to determine the full facts of what happened in Benghazi, Libya, before, during and after the attack and contribute toward our final, definitive accounting of the attack on behalf of Congress,” he said.

Democrats have asserted that the special committee was created by Republicans only to try to discredit Mrs. Clinton, who is expected to seek the Democratic nomination for president in 2016.

“The effort to turn the Benghazi tragedy into a political scandal never had a factual basis,” said David Brock, founder of Correct the Record, a group that defends Mrs. Clinton in the news media, and author of the e-book “The Benghazi Hoax.”

“The Republican committee report should close the case,” he added. “If the scandal persists into 2016, it will only be for partisan reasons.”

While the report backed up many of the administration’s longstanding claims that its response was proper, it agreed with the other reports that criticized the State Department for having inadequate security at the compound where the ambassador to Libya, J. Christopher Stevens, was killed.

“The State Department security personnel, resources and equipment were unable to counter the terrorist threat that day and required C.I.A. assistance,” it said.

The panel’s findings reflected well on the intelligence apparatus, particularly the Central Intelligence Agency. The agency “ensured sufficient security” for its facilities in Benghazi and “without a requirement to do so, ably and bravely assisted the State Department on the night of the attacks,” according to the report.

“Their actions saved lives,” the report said.

The report said the C.I.A. did not have an “intelligence failure” in the months before the attacks. In fact, the report said, the agency had increased its security because of intelligence reports showing that attacks had intensified in the area.

In the course of the investigation, the committee reviewed thousands of pages of intelligence assessments, cables, emails and other documents, and it interviewed many senior intelligence officials and people who were on the ground during the attacks — including eight security personnel who responded to them, it said.

Republican lawmakers have said that the administration, fearing political fallout from the attacks — which occurred on Sept. 11, 2012, less than two months before the presidential elections — tried to mislead the public.

In particular, the Republicans have said that Susan E. Rice, who was the ambassador to the United Nations at the time, lied on several Sunday television talk shows when she said the attacks were set off by a protest over an anti-Muslim video. They claimed that she glossed over whether the fatalities were the result of “terrorist” attacks by Al Qaeda because that would have undermined the administration’s narrative that it had all but defeated the group.

The panel found that in the days after the attacks, there was contradictory intelligence about what precipitated them and who was behind them. Ultimately, Ms. Rice’s assertions were wrong, the committee said, but there was no evidence that the administration was attempting to misconstrue the facts.

Even today, the report said, the government is still uncertain about much of what happened that day.

“Much of the early intelligence was conflicting, and two years later, intelligence gaps remain,” the report said. A mix of individuals, “including those affiliated” with Al Qaeda, participated in the attacks, it said, adding, however, that “the intelligence was and remains conflicting about the identities, affiliations and motivations of the attackers."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

A man accused of being the ringleader of the attackers was apprehended in a raid by American commandos in Benghazi in June, and will likely go on trial in Washington next year on murder charges.

The report also debunked a few accusations against the C.I.A. It said that the agency had not intimidated or prevented "any officer from speaking to Congress or otherwise telling their story." It also said that the agency had not administered "any unusual polygraph exams" to officers about their assignment in Benghazi. And it said that the C.I.A. was not collecting arms in Libya and sending them to rebel groups in Syria.

ABC News: "Top Hillary Clinton Supporters Gather to Plot, Strategize"

By Liz Kreutz

November 21, 2014, 8:01 p.m. EST

NEW YORK – Two-hundred prominent Democratic strategists, former Clinton aides and donors, joined forces today for a day-long strategy meeting hosted by the pro-Hillary Clinton super PAC Ready for Hillary to coalesce their efforts, plot and plan for when and if Hillary Clinton runs for president.

The meeting, held at the Sheraton Hotel in Midtown Manhattan, where the Clintons hold their annual Clinton Global Initiative summit, was made up of a series of closed-to-the-media strategizing panels and marked the beginning of the end of Ready for Hillary, which plans to shut down its operations once Clinton announces a run.

It also marked a turning point for Clinton's potential 2016 campaign.

Although nobody today would flat out say it (hypotheticals like "if" and "hope" preceded all statements about her candidacy), the general sentiment among the panelists and attendees was: She's running. And when she does, her supporters said, they will be ready.

"Hopes run high," Marty Chavez, the former Albuquerque mayor and a senior adviser for Ready for Hillary, told reporters. "The biggest takeaway I have is … there are a lot of people who have her back if she says yes."

The attendees at the event included Correct the Record's David Brock and Burns Strider, who were invited guests to last weekend's 10th anniversary event for the Clinton Presidential Library in Little Rock, Arkansas, as well as political strategists Harold Ickes, James Carville and Paul Begala. Two people who have been mentioned as possible campaign managers for Clinton, Stephanie Shriock, the head of EMILY's List, and Guy Cecil, executive director of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, also were there.

Hillary Clinton herself was not at the event. Super PAC rules would not allow her to go.

Very little was said about other possible Democratic presidential candidates, such as former Sen. Jim Webb of Virginia, who just this week became the first candidate to throw his hat in to the ring. The panelists said they saw Hillary Clinton as the most "formidable" candidate and that any concerns were not about a "Hillary Clinton problem," but rather a problem for the Democratic Party, as a whole.

"We have yet to figure out a message on the economy that resonates with working-class voters," Mitch Stewart, a former Obama adviser and founding partner of 270 Strategies, which partnered with Ready for Hillary, told reporters. "We have not been able to persuade them that your values align with ours. And that, for me, is the biggest concern out there."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The meeting also focused on acknowledging what Ready for Hillary has accomplished since it launched nearly two years ago. In that time, the group has raised $11 million and gained 3 million supporters. Once it shuts down, the group plans to transfer its vast email list of supporters to Clinton's campaign. It was unclear, however, what would happen to the group's now-famous bus.

Ready for Hillary's meeting came a day after Hillary Clinton came out in support of President Obama's executive action on immigration and blamed Congress for inaction on the issue. It was a rare move for Clinton, prompting speculation she might be starting to position herself as a candidate, because she has remained relatively mute on policy matters since she stepped down as Obama's secretary of state in 2013.

Ready for Hillary also hosted a grassroots fundraising event Thursday night at a noisy, haram-themed lounge downtown.

The event, with roughly 150 people, cost $20.16 to attend and offered up cocktails thematically linked to Clinton, who might run to become America's 45th president.

"I'll have one 'Ceiling Breaker' and one '45,'" a young 20-something guy, donning a small Ready for Hillary sticker on his button-down shirt, was heard yelling out to the bartender.

Two minutes later, he was handed two ambiguously colored drinks.

"No idea," he shouted out when asked what was in them. But, he said with a smile, "They're named after her."

Hillary Clinton, who has a lighter-than-usual schedule in the coming month, has said she will likely make a decision on 2016 sometime early next year.

Newsday: "Hillary Clinton eulogizes lawyer Thomas A. Twomey Jr. in East Hampton"

By Debbie Tuma

November 22, 2014, 8:29 p.m. EST

Hillary Rodham Clinton eulogized prominent environmental lawyer Thomas A. Twomey Jr. at his funeral in East Hampton on Saturday, recalling how he helped her connect with everyday Long Islanders and win her Senate seat from New York in 2000.

"He said to me, 'You need to meet real people, those who built this state and also East Hampton,' " Clinton, who attended the afternoon service with her husband, former President Bill Clinton, told a crowd of more than 600 mourners at St. Luke's Episcopal Church.

The former first lady and secretary of state, who is weighing a second try for the White House in 2016, said she met Twomey in the mid-1990s. He took her to spend time with the North Fork farmers who helped him in a successful 1977 bid to stop nuclear power plants from being built in Jamesport, she said.

"What really impressed me was these people had families going back 10 to 12 generations, and I learned how their grandparents and great-grandparents had loved and cherished this place," Hillary Clinton said. "It made a great impression on me."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Clintons are longtime friends of Twomey and his wife, Judith Hope, the former state Democratic chairwoman, former appointments secretary to Gov. Hugh Carey, the first female East Hampton town supervisor and a native of Arkansas.

"The first thing Tom Twomey said to me [when they met] was, 'We have something in common, we both married someone from Arkansas,' " Clinton said.

Together, Twomey and Hope -- like the Clintons -- were a longtime political power couple, and also fundraisers with statewide and national connections.

During his legal career over more than four decades, Twomey built the East End's largest law firm -- Twomey, Latham, Shea, Kelley, Dubin, Quartararo -- with 28 lawyers based in Riverhead. He also served as legal counsel to numerous local municipal boards and worked as a lawyer for the Long Island Farm Bureau.

Twomey's efforts to help farmers and stop nuclear plant construction, Clinton said, "made me think about how Tom took on responsibility in his own community, which is something purely American.

"He understood that we are individuals but we are also members of communities," she added.

Before her eulogy, Clinton sat in the front row between her husband and Hope. When the service was over, the Clintons chatted with mourners for about a half-hour about topics such as President Barack Obama, immigration and Hillary Clinton's potential presidential run.

Throughout their long friendship, Clinton said in her eulogy, Twomey taught her valuable political lessons.

"He knew how to find common ground," Clinton said. "But he also knew how to stand his ground."

Associated Press: "Obama: Americans want 'new car smell' in 2016"

By Darlene Superville

November 23, 2014, 1:04 p.m. EST

HENDERSON, Nev. (AP) — President Barack Obama says voters want a "new car smell" in the 2016 White House race and that Hillary Rodham Clinton would be "a great president."

But would Clinton pass that particular smell test?

In a nationally televised interview broadcast Sunday, Obama seemed to suggest that any Democrat other than him would provide the turn of the page that he says voters are interested in. He acknowledged the "dings" to his own political standing during nearly six years of sometimes bruising battles with Congress and said Americans will want something new.

"They want to drive something off the lot that doesn't have as much mileage as me," Obama said in the interview with ABC's "This Week," which was taped Friday in Las Vegas following a public appearance there by the president.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

He said a number of possible Democratic candidates would make "terrific presidents," but Hillary Clinton is the only one he mentioned by name. He said she would be a "formidable candidate" and make "a great president" if she decides to run a second time.

But if she does run — which she is considering, with a decision expected to be announced early next year — would she have that "new car" scent for voters?

Hillary Clinton has been a powerful force in Democratic politics for many years, beginning as Arkansas' first lady before she became America's first lady after her husband, Bill Clinton, was elected president in 1992. When his two terms were up, she ran for and won a U.S. Senate seat from New York.

She later sought and lost the 2008 Democratic presidential nomination to Obama, then cemented her worldwide profile by serving Obama as secretary of state in his first term. The Democratic political establishment is now awaiting word on whether she will take on the challenge of another national political campaign.

New car smell or not, Democratic voters hold her in such high regard that she outdistances anyone else in polling of possible Democratic candidates for 2016. One of them is Vice President Joe Biden, who has not ruled out a third run for the White House.

Eight in 10 Democrats held positive views of Clinton in an Associated Press-GfK poll conducted in late July. Biden had a 71 percent favorable rating in the survey.

Obama acknowledged that Hillary Clinton won't agree with him on everything, suggesting that such a stance would be a welcome break for voters after eight years of Obama. A benefit of running for president, he said, "is you can stake out your own positions."

The 2016 presidential race could feature a repeat face-off between a Clinton and a member of another leading American political family: former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, who is considering entering the 2016 race. His father and brother both were elected president.

Three of the past four presidents dating to the 1988 election have been named Bush or Clinton.

Jeb Bush's father, George H. W. Bush, was elected president in 1988. He lost re-election in 1992 to Bill Clinton, who served two terms. Jeb Bush's brother, George W., then defeated Clinton's vice president, Al Gore, in 2000 and was re-elected in 2004. The elder Bush also served two terms as vice president to Ronald Reagan.

In the AP-GfK survey, Jeb Bush was most popular among potential 2016 GOP presidential candidates, with 56 percent of Republicans viewing him favorably. Majorities also held positive views of outgoing Texas Gov. Rick Perry and Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul.

CNN: "Sen. Lindsey Graham: GOP-led Benghazi report is 'full of crap'"

By Sara Fischer

November 23, 2014

Washington (CNN) -- Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-South Carolina, has some harsh words for the recently released Benghazi report, led by his own party.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"I think the report is full of crap," Graham told Gloria Borger on CNN's "State of the Union" on Sunday.

"I don't believe that the report is accurate, given the role that Mike Morell (deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency at the time) played in misleading the Congress on two different occasions. Why didn't the report say that?"

The investigative report Graham is referring to was released Friday by House Intelligence Committee Chairman Mike Rogers, R-Michigan, and Ranking Member Rep. Dutch Ruppersberger, D-Maryland.

The report finds little to support the questions that have been raised about CIA actions on the ground in Benghazi the night of the deadly attack on September 11, 2012.

Graham, who has maintained a critical voice in the Benghazi controversy over the past two years, says it's "garbage" that the report finds no members of the Obama administration lied to cover up what happened in Benghazi.

"That's a bunch of garbage," Graham said. "That's a complete bunch of garbage."

The investigation also found the security at the diplomatic outpost was weak and also described a "flawed" process used to create talking points for House members and for then-U.N. Ambassador Susan Rice, whose public statements after the attack incensed critics who said the administration was trying to avoid calling the attack terrorism.

"When Susan Rice was on television after the attack, she said on three different occasions the consulate was strongly, and significantly secure," Graham said. "Nothing could be further than that from the truth, and there's nothing in the talking points about the level of security."

To conclude, Graham says the findings of the report prove the House Intelligence Committee "is doing a lousy job policing their own."

"Anybody who has followed Benghazi at all knows that the CIA deputy director did not come forward to tell Congress what role he played in changing the talking points and the only way we knew he was involved is when he told a representative at the White House," Graham said.

Asked why the Republican chairman of the Intelligence Committee would be "buying a bunch of garbage," Graham simply replied, "good question."

Graham said he is going to take another look at the findings of the report.

"I'm going to do a hard review of this."

The Hill blog: Briefing Room: "GOP-led Benghazi report purposely buried in news cycle, Democrat says"

By Rebecca Shabad

November 23, 2014, 11:03 a.m. EST

A GOP-led investigation that debunked theories about the 2012 Benghazi attack was purposely released on the Friday before Thanksgiving to evade exposure, Rep. Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) said Sunday.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On CNN's "State of the Union," Schiff questioned the decision behind the timing of the release of the House Intelligence Committee's report.

"Why is this report being released on the Friday before Thanksgiving?" Schiff asked.

Schiff said if a panel spends two years compiling an important report, it wouldn't make much sense to conceal it.

"You want to trumpet it to the high heavens, you don't want to bury it on the Friday before Thanksgiving," he said.

The House Intelligence panel released the report Friday evening, and it found there was no intelligence failure surrounding the attack, no delay in the rescue of U.S. personnel and no political cover-up by Obama administration officials.

Schiff, a member of the committee, said he wouldn't be surprised if Republicans employed a similar tactic when the House Select Committee on Benghazi releases its own report on the attack.

"If the select committee comes up with a similar conclusion, it'll release a similar report on Christmas Eve," he said.

Schiff rejected Sen. Lindsey Graham's (R-S.C.) earlier claims that the report is "full of crap" and a "bunch of garbage."

Republicans and Democrats on the Intelligence committee supported the report's findings, Schiff said, adding that it exonerates the Obama administration.

Schiff said talk about Benghazi would have died down by now if it weren't for the former secretary of State possibly running for president.

"If Hillary Clinton weren't a likely candidate for president," he said, "I think this investigation would have been over with a long time ago."

New York Times: "A Deep 2016 Republican Presidential Field Reflects Party Divisions"

By Michael Barbaro and Jonathan Martin

November 22, 2014

BOCA RATON, Fla. — Republican presidential primaries have for decades been orderly affairs, with any momentary drama mitigated by the expectation that the party would inevitably nominate its tested, often graying front-runner.

But as the 2016 White House campaign effectively began in the last week, it became apparent that this race might be different: a fluid contest, verging on chaotic, that will showcase the party's deep bench of talent but also highlight its ideological and generational divisions.

As Democrats signal that they are ready to rally behind Hillary Rodham Clinton before their primary season even begins, allowing them to focus their fund-raising and firepower mostly on the general election, the Republicans appear destined for a free-for-all.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"I can think of about 16 potential candidates," said Haley Barbour, the former governor of Mississippi and a veteran of Republican presidential politics dating to 1968. "Almost every one of them have a starting point. But there is no true front-runner."

The sprawling nature of the race was on display Thursday as an array of would-be candidates took steps to position themselves.

At a gathering of Republican governors here, Gov. Chris Christie of New Jersey sought to capitalize on the party's victories this year in Democratic-leaning states while at least six fellow governors tested their messages and met with potential donors.

On the same day in Washington, Jeb Bush, the former Florida governor, addressed an education conference and tried to tamp down differences with the right on the Common Core standards. On Capitol Hill, Senator Rand Paul of Kentucky continued his outreach to African-Americans by having breakfast with the Rev. Al Sharpton, while Senator Ted Cruz of Texas appealed to conservatives by citing Cicero on the Senate floor in a speech castigating President Obama's executive action on immigration.

And in California, Mike Huckabee, the former governor of Arkansas, just back from taking a group of evangelicals from early primary states on a trip to Europe honoring Ronald Reagan's Cold War leadership, venerated Mr. Reagan in a speech at his presidential library.

If the dizzying activity on a single day captured the depth of the Republican field, it also underlined its factions, split among pragmatists, hard-liners and those trying to bridge the blocs.

Foster Friess, a major Republican donor whose contributions to Rick Santorum's "super PAC" helped keep alive the former Pennsylvania senator's presidential campaign two years ago, acknowledged that the coalescence around Mrs. Clinton was a "huge advantage" for Democrats.

"That's why the Democrats run the government and the Republicans run the museums," Mr. Friess said.

But the eventual choice for the nomination will not merely speak to philosophical direction. Republicans also confront a generational decision: They have several energetic governors and senators in their 40s and early 50s lining up to run. Yet there is also an older group of potential candidates, such as Mr. Bush and Mitt Romney, who could arrest the ambitions of the next generation of Republicans but whose experience could be appealing.

To date, Mrs. Clinton, 67, has been the target of the age-oriented attacks by the younger Republicans. But some of that fire is now from within, albeit subtly. After Gov. John Kasich of Ohio, 62, mentioned 1980s-era congressional doings, when he was in the House, at a news conference here, Gov. Scott Walker of Wisconsin, 47, shot back: "John talked about '86? That's when I was in high school."

Democrats have had their share of intergenerational battles, but this is relatively new terrain for Republicans. With the exception of George W. Bush, every Republican nominee since 1976 has been over 60. Now, the wide range of age, experience and viewpoints could lead to an unusually turbulent contest.

"It is unpredictable as I can recall, but I worry less about it because we've changed the calendar and we'll have a de facto nominee by late April and a convention by late June," said Charles R. Black Jr., a longtime Republican strategist, referring to the changes made by the Republican National Committee to compress the primary schedule and nominating convention.

While the would-be candidates are taking public steps to assert themselves, the action has been just as intense behind the scenes as they build political operations.

Jeb Bush has started reaching out to Republicans in early primary states, including Senator Lindsey Graham of South Carolina, whom he called on election night. And he met with Spencer Zwick, Mr. Romney's finance director, this year. Yet Mr. Bush has not decided on a bid, and those familiar with his thinking say he will give no indication until next year. Some of his private comments in recent months — musing about the need for a "pain threshold" to run and complaining about a video tracker that the liberal group American Bridge assigned to him — raise doubts about his intentions.

Still, some of Mr. Bush's confidants have had informal conversations with potential aides. Sally Bradshaw and Mike Murphy, his two closest advisers, have quietly met with campaign lawyers, data specialists and donors. While Mr. Bush was in Washington to attend his education foundation's conference, Ms. Bradshaw spent days in the capital visiting with a number of Republicans. They included two of the party's most in-demand strategists after its success this month: Rob Collins, executive director of the National Republican Senatorial Committee, and Liesl Hickey, executive director of the National Republican Congressional Committee.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Mr. Christie's supporters have been just as aggressive. They envision him establishing a political organization in the coming months to raise money. They also foresee a top role for Phil Cox, who is stepping down as executive director of the Republican Governors Association.

"The governor has really come to appreciate Phil's talents and counsel," said William J. Palatucci, one of Mr. Christie's closest advisers. Mr. Christie may also look to Rick Wiley, a former Republican National Committee political director who is close to Mike DuHaime, Mr. Christie's chief strategist.

Mr. Paul has been perhaps the most open about his presidential intentions, and last week he hired away a strategist from Mr. Cruz. But Mr. Paul has not found a campaign manager, having been turned down by Ward Baker, who accepted a job running the Republicans' senatorial committee.

There is also some uncertainty about who will run Mr. Walker's expected campaign. Mr. Wiley, if he does not work for Mr. Christie, would be a possibility. Another prospect is Mr. Walker's strategist, Keith Gilkes, but he is said to be in the running for the top staff job at the Republican Governors Association.

Senator Marco Rubio of Florida has a seasoned group of advisers in place, and his team has begun considering aides for early primary states. Gov. Rick Perry of Texas also has a team ready and is inviting donors to Austin.

Gov. Mike Pence of Indiana said in an interview that he would not decide on his future until after his state's legislative session. "After that concludes in the spring, we will sit down and make decisions about our future," he said. The nomination season is likely to be effectively underway at that point, which gives pause to some in the party who fear a replay of the long and contentious battle in 2012.

"You might argue it was more divisive than it needed to be," Mr. Friess said, adding that this time, "the donors are not going to let that happen."

Calendar:

Sec. Clinton's upcoming appearances as reported online. Not an official schedule.

· December 1 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton keynotes a League of Conservation Voters dinner (Politico)

· December 4 – Boston, MA: Sec. Clinton speaks at the Massachusetts Conference for Women (MCFW)

· December 16 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton honored by Robert F. Kennedy Center for Justice and Human Rights (Politico)

· February 24 – Santa Clara, CA: Sec. Clinton to Keynote Address at Inaugural Watermark Conference for Women (PR Newswire)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jeff Harris" <jeff@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: "Jeff Harris" <jeff@progressiveaccountability.org>
Date: 10/22/2008 12:32:30 AM
Subject: [big campaign] '08 Daily News Clips - 10/22

08 Election Daily News Clips
October 22nd, 2008

Candidate Tracking:

All times in Eastern Standard Time

Morning Palin: is a guest on James Dobson's "Focus on Family" radio show

7:30am McCain: is a guest on "Imus in the Morning"

9:30am McCain: holds a "Road to Victory" rally in Goffstown, New Hampshire

10:00am Palin: holds a "Road to Victory" rally in Findlay, Ohio

10:20am BUSH: meets with the President of Liberia at the White House

1:05pm BUSH: participates in a photo opportunity with recipients of the public safety officer Medal of Valor at the White House

3:30pm McCain and Palin: hold a joint "Road to Victory" rally in Green, Ohio

4:00pm McCain: interview airs on CNN's "The Situation Room"

6:30pm McCain and Palin: hold a joint "Road to Victory" airport rally in Cincinnati, Ohio

6:30pm McCain and Palin: interview airs on NBC's "Nightly News"

News Clips:

MCCAIN NEWS

Al-Qaida-linked Web site backs McCain as president (AP 10/21/08)
By PAMELA HESS
WASHINGTON (AP) -- Al-Qaida supporters suggested in a Web site message this week they would welcome a pre-election terror attack on the U.S. as a way to usher in a McCain presidency.
The message, posted Monday on the password-protected al-Hesbah Web site, said if al-Qaida wants to exhaust the United States militarily and economically, "impetuous" Republican presidential candidate Sen. John McCain is the better choice because he is more likely to continue the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/A/AL_QAIDA_US_ELECTION?SITE=OKTUL&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

On Al-Qaeda Web Sites, Joy Over U.S. Crisis, Support for McCain (WaPo 10/22/08)
By Joby Warrick and Karen DeYoung
Al-Qaeda is watching the U.S. stock market's downward slide with something akin to jubilation, with its leaders hailing the financial crisis as a vindication of its strategy of crippling America's economy through endless, costly foreign wars against Islamist insurgents.
And at least some of its supporters think Sen. John McCain is the presidential candidate best suited to continue that trend.
"Al-Qaeda will have to support McCain in the coming election," said a commentary posted Monday on the extremist Web site al-Hesbah, which is closely linked to the terrorist group. It said the Arizona Republican would continue the "failing march of his predecessor," President Bush.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/10/21/AR2008102102477.html?nav=rss_politics

McCain hits Obama again on experience, tax policies (Pittsburgh Post-Gazette 10/22/08)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By James O'Toole
Sen. John McCain derided Sen. Barack Obama's foreign policy experience yesterday while continuing to invoke his new best friend, Joe the Plumber, as an argument for the ills of the Democrat's tax policies.
http://www.post-gazette.com/pg/08296/921782-470.stm

For McCain, father's error holds lesson (Boston Globe 10/22/08)
By Michael Kranish
Now, as Senator John McCain seeks the presidency, he often says that the lessons from the Vietnam War helped shape his views on the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. But what is little-noted is that one of his key lessons came from what he perceived as a failure by his father. Senator McCain has excoriated the way his father failed to make public his misgivings about Nixon's Vietnamization strategy. If the older McCain and other commanders had spoken up, his son believes, it might have changed the course of the war.
http://www.boston.com/news/politics/2008/articles/2008/10/22/for_mccain_fathers_error_holds_lesson/?rss_id=Boston.com+--+Top+political+stories

McCain, Palin pound away at Biden's crisis remark (Boston Globe 10/22/08)
By Globe Staff
John McCain and Sarah Palin sharpened their attack yesterday on Barack Obama's readiness to be commander-in-chief, using his running mate's prediction that Obama would be tested by an international crisis early in his presidency.
McCain noted that Democratic vice presidential nominee Joe Biden had compared Obama to John F. Kennedy, who presided over the failed Bay of Pigs invasion, then the Cuban missile crisis early in his term.
http://www.boston.com/news/politics/2008/articles/2008/10/22/mccain_palin_pound_away_at_bidens_crisis_remark/?rss_id=Boston.com+--+Top+political+stories

McCain "fighting to win" Colorado (Denver Post 10/22/08)
By Karen E. Crummy
If John McCain and the GOP are planning to cede Colorado to Democrat Barack Obama, they sure have a funny way of showing it.
Not only is the Republican National Committee's independent expenditure arm targeting the state with big ad buys, but McCain — who will be flooding the airwaves here through Election Day, his campaign said — is slated to make three campaign stops in Colorado Friday.
McCain's visit comes on the heels of three appearances in the state earlier this week by his running mate, Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin. Her husband, Todd, visited Colorado on Tuesday.
http://www.denverpost.com/breakingnews/ci_10779139

McCain returns to NH trying to stave off Nov. loss (AP 10/22/08)
By Glen Johnson
MANCHESTER, N.H.—New Hampshire launched John McCain's two presidential campaigns, and now he's hoping it doesn't end his bid for the White House.
The Republican nominee was returning Wednesday to the state whose primary he won in 2000 and again earlier this year. But there were signs it was tilting toward Democrat Barack Obama in the Nov. 4 general election.
http://www.boston.com/news/politics/2008/articles/2008/10/22/mccain_reminds_biden_hes_been_tested_in_crisis/?rss_id=Boston.com+--+Top+political+stories

McCain Curtails Ads in NH and WI (Time blog 10/21/08)
By Jay Newton-Small
A Democratic source tells TIME that John McCain is stretching his media buys in New Hampshire and Wisconsin, spacing out ads they've already bought to last through the rest of the election. The move would mean they would not spend any more ad money in the states, effectively pulling out without taking the hit in the press the way they did in Michigan.
http://www.time-blog.com/swampland/2008/10/mccain_curtails_ads_in_nh_and.html

McCain Stretches Ad Dollars in Colorado And Maine, Too (The Atlantic blog 10/21/08)
By Marc Ambinder
What this means is that the campaign is scaling back on the volume of their current buys and will stretch those savings for another week.
What this means is that the campaign is making tough decisions about where to spend.
What this means that is that if they thought that they could move the numbers in Colorado, they would spend there.
What this pretense of a strategy means, in essence, is that the campaign has no real electoral strategy -- they are simply trying to cover as much ground as possible in the hope that one of these states breaks for McCain.
http://marcambinder.theatlantic.com/archives/2008/10/mccain_stretches_ad_dollars_in.php

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

McCain Fights to Keep Crucial Blue State in Play (NYT 10/22/08)
By ELISABETH BUMILLER and JEFF ZELENY
MOON TOWNSHIP, Pa. — People are scratching their heads: Why is Senator John McCain here?
Senator Barack Obama has a double-digit lead in recent Pennsylvania polls. Senator John Kerry beat President Bush here in 2004. The previous three Democratic presidential candidates won, too. And this year there are 1.2 million more registered Democrats than Republicans in the state.
But in these frantic last weeks of the 2008 campaign, Mr. McCain has lavished time and money on this now deep-blue state — he made three stops here on Tuesday — as if his political life depended on it. And, from his campaign's point of view, it does.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/10/22/us/politics/22pennsylvania.html?hp=&pagewanted=print

McCain Campaign Hopes to Exploit Obama's Weakness in Keystone Primary (WSJ 10/22/08)
By ELIZABETH HOLMES
BENSALEM, Pa. -- Sen. John McCain is banking on support from former supporters of Sen. Hillary Clinton to turn Pennsylvania red in November, a task that looks increasingly daunting.
The Republican presidential candidate made three stops Tuesday in Pennsylvania, home to 21 electoral votes and a large number of so-called Reagan Democrats, or working-class white voters who tend to be conservative on social issues.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122460131054854321.html?mod=rss_Politics_And_Policy

McCain's push may not budge Pennsylvania (LA Times10/22/08)
By Peter Nicholas and Bob Drogin
McCain is targeting Pennsylvania in hopes of winning at least one state that voted for Democrat John F. Kerry in 2004. With 21 electoral votes, a victory in Pennsylvania could offset possible losses in smaller states captured by President Bush in the last contest.
Yet by any number of measures, McCain's prospects are dimming. An aggregate of public polls shows Barack Obama with a double-digit lead in Pennsylvania. Registered Democrats outnumber Republicans by more than 1.1 million, about twice the gap in 2004, state figures show.
http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-campaign22-2008oct22,0,5359086.story

Certain parts of country first (Boston Globe blog 10/21/08)
By Sasha Issenberg
MOON TOWNSHIP, Pa. -- Sorry, "real Virginia" and the "pro-America" parts of North Carolina: John McCain doesn't think you love your god or country enough.
Apparently referring to Congressman John Murtha's comment that Western Pennsylvania is a "racist" region, McCain declared it the "most patriotic, most god-loving, most patriotic part of America" upon his arrival in this Pittsburgh suburb.
http://www.boston.com/news/politics/politicalintelligence/2008/10/certain_parts_o.html

McCain, Obama go rural in final fight for Virginia (AP 10/22/08)
By BOB LEWIS
WARSAW, Va. (AP) -- The quest by Republican John McCain and Democrat Barack Obama for toss-up Virginia has gone country.
McCain is looking to run up enormous margins in rural Republican strongholds. Obama is fighting just as hard to stay in play.
How country has it gone?
At the same moment on Tuesday, current and former Mississippi governors toured opposite ends of the Virginia countryside for the campaigns, neither conceding a single city, town or crossroads.
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/V/VIRGINIA_RURAL_VOTERS?SITE=ORBEN&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

McCain's Struggles Leave a G.O.P. Incumbent to Fight a Democratic Tide (NYT 10/22/08)
By DAVID M. HERSZENHORN
If there was a swing state in America where a ticket headed by Mr. McCain was supposed to have long coattails it was New Hampshire, where he defied the odds to win presidential primaries in 2000 and 2008. But with Mr. McCain skidding in the polls amid a rising tide of Democrats here, Mr. Sununu, who is battling to keep his job in one of this year's most bitterly contested Senate races, is hardly hitching a ride to easy re-election.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/10/22/us/politics/22sununu.html?pagewanted=print

Candidates' Cash Hoards Are Similar, but Ad-Spending Patterns Differ (WSJ 10/22/08)
By T.W. FARNAM
WASHINGTON -- Both presidential candidates, together with their parties, had similar amounts of cash on hand at the end of September, despite Barack Obama's record-breaking fund raising that month.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Sens. Obama and John McCain have been raising money for their national and state parties through so-called joint fund-raising accounts. Once all that money is taken into account, Democrats had $164.4 million available to them on Sept. 30, while Republicans had $171.7 million. The Democrats brought in $209.5 million in September, compared with $171.6 million for the Republicans.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122459794763054031.html?mod=rss_Politics_And_Policy

McCain Weighs In - Cautiously - on New Stimulus (WSJ blog 10/21/08)
By Elizabeth Holmes
After nearly two days of discussion over a new economic stimulus package, John McCain finally weighed in on the proposal.
The Republican presidential candidate has been silent on Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke's suggestion that Congress consider a second package to help the country handle more tough times ahead….
McCain's silence suggests a new caution after his intervention more than a month ago. When the market turmoil began in the middle of September, McCain suspended his campaign and returned to Washington. His involvement in the federal bailout package was largely criticized and damaged him in the polls.
http://blogs.wsj.com/washwire/2008/10/21/mccain-weighs-in-cautiously-on-new-stimulus/

MCCAIN'S TAX EVOLUTION (MSNBC blog 10/21/08)
By Carrie Dann and Mark Murray
But archived MSNBC videotape from 2000 further demonstrates how McCain's tone has shifted on taxes and what constitutes socialism since the end of his last presidential race. Answering questions during a Hardball College Tour show in October 2000, McCain defended the progressive tax system when questioned by a town hall participant who warned that the high tax bracket of her father – a doctor – smacked of an inching towards "socialism and stuff." McCain said that progressive tax systems are based on the fact that "we feel, obviously, that wealthy people can afford more." He spelled out this response: "Here's what I really believe, that when you are -- reach a certain level of comfort, there's nothing wrong with paying somewhat more."
McCain then added a caveat, saying that benefits that are too high can certainly hurt productivity.
http://firstread.msnbc.msn.com/archive/2008/10/21/1577609.aspx

Fact check: Was McCain once against Bush tax cuts? (CNN blog 10/21/08)
The Verdict: True. As Obama states, McCain did say he could not support President Bush's tax cuts in 2001, saying it was because they went to the wealthy at the expense of the middle class. He later supported extending them, saying the economy made them feasible at that later time.
http://politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com/2008/10/21/fact-check-was-mccain-once-against-bush-tax-cuts/

Spreading the wealth? US already does it (AP 10/21/08)
By CHARLES BABINGTON
WASHINGTON (AP) -- John McCain is pouncing on Barack Obama's call for shifting more wealth from richer Americans to poorer ones, likening it to socialism. His remarks win applause at campaign events. But they ignore the nation's long tradition of redistributing huge amounts of wealth through tax-and-spending policies.
Placing a heavier burden on the wealthy has been a cornerstone of the federal income tax since its inception in 1913. Under its "progressive" formula, in which the wealthy pay higher tax rates, the richest 5 percent of Americans now pay well over half of all federal income taxes.
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/S/SPREADING_THE_WEALTH?SITE=NYMID&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

You may not like Obama's tax plan, but it's not socialism (McClatchy 10/21/08)
By David Lightman and William Douglas
Favoring higher tax rates for the wealthy than for the less fortunate isn't socialism, and if it is, then the U.S. has been a socialist country for nearly a century, under both Democrats and Republicans.
Socialism involves state ownership of the means of economic production and state-directed sharing of the wealth. America's democratic capitalist system is neither socialist nor pure free market; rather, it mixes the two, and it has at least since the progressive income tax was introduced 95 years ago. Under it, the wealthy pay higher income tax rates than those who are less fortunate do. It's a form of sharing the wealth.
http://www.mcclatchydc.com/309/story/54546.html

McCain aide's firm whacked by SEC (Chicago Tribune blog 10/21/08)
By Andrew Zajac
Sen. John McCain has complained long and loud about inadequate regulation of the financial markets by the Securities and Exchange Commission and recently even called for the dismissal of SEC Chairman Christopher Cox.
If the Arizona Republican needs an illustration of how the regulatory apparatus is supposed to work, he now has an example close at hand. Last Friday, the SEC suspended trading in shares of e-Smart Technologies Inc., a troubled penny stock that counts one of McCain's closest advisers, Charles Black, as a consultant and director.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://www.swamppolitics.com/news/politics/blog/2008/10/mccain_aides_firm_whacked_by_s.html

PALIN NEWS

RNC appears to shell out $150K for Palin fashion (Politico 10/21/08)

By JEANNE CUMMINGS

The Republican National Committee appears to have spent more than $150,000 to clothe and accessorize vice presidential candidate Sarah Palin and her family since her surprise pick by John McCain in late August.

According to financial disclosure records, the accessorizing began in early September and included bills from Saks Fifth Avenue in St. Louis and New York for a combined $49,425.74.

The records also document a couple of big-time shopping trips to Neiman Marcus in Minneapolis, including one $75,062.63 spree in early September.

The RNC also spent $4,716.49 on hair and makeup through September after reporting no such costs in August.
http://www.politico.com/news/stories/1008/14805.html

If You Don't Look Good, We Don't Look Good (NYT blog 10/21/08)

By Julie Bosman

In one heavyweight shopping trip in early September, $75,062.63 was spent at Neiman Marcus in Minneapolis, a host city of the Republican National Convention.

The expenditures were listed on the R.N.C.'s monthly financial disclosure forms.

Those forms also documented $4,716.49 on hair and makeup in September, expenses that were not incurred in August.

On the campaign trail, Ms. Palin is always impeccably turned out, sometime changing jackets, high heels and hairstyles twice or three times a day.
http://thecaucus.blogs.nytimes.com/2008/10/21/if-you-dont-look-good-we-dont-look-good/

Why Palin softened her rhetoric (Las Vegas Sun 10/22/08)

By J. Patrick Coolican

Palin offered a range of women- and family-friendly policy proposals not usually heard from Republican candidates.

She called for equal-pay-for-equal-work and more family-friendly policies such as flexible workweeks. She offered an homage to the federal law requiring that women's collegiate sports have the same resources as men's.

She castigated the subjugation of women abroad. Meet Sarah Palin, feminist extraordinaire.

The calculation in deploying this softer, gauzier speech was savvy, if transparent.
http://www.lasvegassun.com/news/2008/oct/22/why-palin-softened-her-rhetoric/

Palin's Hand Seen in Battle Over Mine in Alaska (NYT 10/22/08)

By MICHAEL POWELL and JO BECKER

EKWOK, Alaska — Two years ago, Sarah Palin landed near this tiny native village and spoke of her love for the vast and starkly beautiful delta that drains into Bristol Bay…. Many here took her words to heart. But as governor, Ms. Palin has helped ease the way for a proposed copper and gold mine of near-mythic proportions at the headwaters of Bristol Bay, the world's greatest spawning ground for wild salmon.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/10/22/us/politics/22mining.html

Palin says Obama's policies could lead to crises (AP 10/21/08)

By Sandra Chereb

RENO, Nev.—Republican vice presidential candidate Sarah Palin said Tuesday that Democrat Barack Obama's own foreign policy proposals could create crises that would test him as president.

The Alaska governor raised the idea of a "looming crisis" in response to Democratic rival Joe Biden's remark at weekend fundraisers that Obama would face a "generated crisis" within six months of becoming president because he would be tested by adversaries of the United States.
http://www.boston.com/news/politics/2008/articles/2008/10/21/palin_says_obamas_policies_could_lead_to_crises/?rss_id=Boston.com+--+Top+political+stories

Clinton backers by her side, Palin makes pitch to women voters (CNN blog 10/21/08)

By Peter Hamby

HENDERSON, Nevada (CNN) — Flanked by a quintet of former Hillary Clinton supporters, Sarah Palin on Tuesday made her most direct appeal to female voters since kicking off her vice presidential campaign in August.

"Our opponents think that they have the women's vote all locked up, which is a little presumptuous," Palin said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Little presumptuous, since only our side has a woman on the ticket…
"You've got to ask yourself, why was Senator Hillary Clinton not even vetted by the Obama campaign? Why did it take 24 years, an entire generation from the time Geraldine Ferraro made her pioneering bid, until the next time that a woman was asked to join a national ticket?"
http://politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com/2008/10/21/clinton-backers-by-her-side-palin-makes-pitch-to-women-voters/

Palin Apologizes for 'Real America' Comments (WaPo 10/22/08)
By Lyndsey Layton
Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin apologized yesterday for implying that some parts of the country are more American than others, even as similar comments by two Republican congressmen were causing a backlash that threatened their chances for reelection.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/10/21/AR2008102102449.html?nav=rss_politics

Palin apologizes for patriot 'pro-America areas' comment (CNN blog 10/21/08)
(CNN) – Republican vice presidential nominee Gov. Sarah Palin apologized Tuesday for any misunderstanding that resulted when she referred last week to the patriotic values of "the real America" and the "pro-America areas of this great nation."… "I don't want that misunderstood," Palin said. "If that's the way it came across, I apologize."
http://politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com/2008/10/21/palin-apologizes-for-patriot-pro-america-areas-comment/

New McCain Robocall Stars ... Sarah Palin! (Talking Points Memo 10/21/08)
By Greg Sargent
Palin's call would seem to be at odds with her own public statements about the tactic. In a Q and A with reporters late yesterday, she said she'd prefer that the campaign not resort to such calls at all, describing them as "kind of draining in terms of Americans' attention span."
"They get a bit irritated with just being inundated," Palin added.
http://tpmelectioncentral.talkingpointsmemo.com/2008/10/new_mccain_robocall_stars_sara.php

Sarah Palin In Charge... (Time blog 10/21/08)
By Karen Tumulty
Sarah Palin truly is not a Washington insider. Per Think Progress, she told a local television station in Colorado (in response to a question from a third grader), that the Vice President is "in charge of the U.S. Senate, so if they want to they, can really get in there with the senators and make a lot of good policy changes."… The fact of the matter: No one is "in charge" of the Senate, a place where every single member has the ability to gum up the works. Which reminds me of the time that Adam Clymer of the New York Times asked then-Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell why he aspired to be major league baseball commissioner, a job that would put him at the mercy of 32* rich, egotistical maniacs.
http://www.time-blog.com/swampland/2008/10/sarah_palin_in_charge.html

Gov. Palin to give Troopergate deposition Friday (AP 10/21/08)
By RACHEL D'ORO
ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) -- Gov. Sarah Palin, already found by one investigation to have abused her power, will take time from her vice presidential campaign Friday to give a deposition in a second inquiry into her firing of the state's top public safety official.
It will be the first deposition in the affair by the Republican vice presidential candidate. Palin wasn't subpoenaed to answer questions in an investigation by the state Legislature, though her husband, Todd, gave an affidavit in that probe.
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/P/PALIN_TROOPERGATE?SITE=MOJOP&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

AP INVESTIGATION: Alaska funded Palin kids' travel (AP 10/21/08)
By BRETT J. BLACKLEDGE, ADAM GOLDMAN and MATT APUZZO
ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) -- Gov. Sarah Palin charged the state for her children to travel with her, including to events where they were not invited, and later amended expense reports to specify that they were on official business.
The charges included costs for hotel and commercial flights for three daughters to join Palin to watch their father in a snowmobile race, and a trip to New York, where the governor attended a five-hour conference and stayed with 17-year-old Bristol for five days and four nights in a luxury hotel.
In all, Palin has charged the state $21,012 for her three daughters' 64 one-way and 12 round-trip commercial flights since she took office in December 2006. In some other cases, she has charged the state for hotel rooms for the girls.
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/P/PALIN_FAMILY_TRAVEL?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SITE=IACED&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

OPINIONS AND EDITORIALS

Sorry, but 'fake Americans' aren't the real threat (Miami Herald 10/22/08)
BY LEONARD PITTS JR.
Excuse me while I say a few words on behalf of us Fake Americans.
Not that I really think of myself as such. I mean, here in Fake America, life proceeds much as it does in Real America. We are raising our kids and paying our taxes, trying to keep up with the dishes in the sink, going to the movies now and then. In fact, if you didn't know better, you'd never realize our America was Fake.
http://www.miamiherald.com/851/story/735892.html

The 'Socialist' Scare (WaPo 10/22/08)
By Ruth Marcus
There is an ugliness to the McCain campaign's closing days. Sarah Palin talks about "pro-America areas of this great nation." Minnesota Republican Rep. Michele Bachmann pronounces herself "very concerned that [Obama] may have anti-American views." Ohio Republican Sen. George Voinovich, ordinarily much more sensible, says, "With all due respect, the man is a socialist."
And McCain is the stoker in chief of the argument that Obama is Eugene V. Debs revisited
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/10/21/AR2008102102254.html?nav=rss_opinion/columns

The Power of Two Myths (WaPo 10/22/08)
By Harold Meyerson
As its days dwindle down to a precious few, the McCain campaign is giving new life to old myths. In an attempt to suppress minority voting, it has conjured up the specter of voter fraud, though there is no evidence that voter fraud exists. Even more impressive is its attempt to resurrect the welfare queens against whom Ronald Reagan used to fulminate, though the stories Reagan told about them had no basis in fact, either. Welfare was pretty much abolished in the mid-1990s, of course, but an increasingly desperate John McCain is transporting us back to the wedge issues of yesteryear.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/10/21/AR2008102102253.html?nav=rss_opinion/columns

McCain's desperate tactics (Boston Globe 10/22/08)
By Scot Lehigh
AS THE presidential campaign enters its final weeks, John McCain resembles a journeyman boxer, behind on every scorecard and struggling desperately to land a knockout punch.
His lurching pursuit of a nimble rival has led to some jarring shifts between McCain's dueling personas, Johnny Be Good and Mack the Knife.
http://www.boston.com/news/politics/2008/articles/2008/10/22/mccains_desperate_tactics/?rss_id=Boston.com+--+Top+political+stories

Young Voters, Get Mad (WaPo 10/22/08)
By Robert J. Samuelson
You're being played for chumps. Barack Obama and John McCain want your votes, but they're ignoring your interests. You face a heavily mortgaged future. You'll pay Social Security and Medicare for aging baby boomers. The needed federal tax increase might total 50 percent over the next 25 years. Pension and health costs for state and local workers have doubtlessly been underestimated. There's the expense of decaying infrastructure -- roads, bridges, water pipes. All this will squeeze other crucial government services: education, defense, police.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/10/21/AR2008102102252.html?nav=rss_opinion/columns

Moved by a Crescent (NYT 10/22/08)
By MAUREEN DOWD
In a gratifying "have you no sense of decency, Sir and Madam?" moment, Colin Powell went on "Meet the Press" on Sunday and talked about Khan, and the unseemly ways John McCain and Palin have been polarizing the country to try to get elected. It was a tonic to hear someone push back so clearly on ugly innuendo.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/10/22/opinion/22dowd.html?_r=1&oref=slogin

Vice president: a split-ticket vote? (LA Times 10/22/08)
By Vikram David Amar
The question of Gov. Sarah Palin's presidential qualifications just won't go away. With the denunciations mounting, it seems likely that in a head-to-head election against the Democrats' vice presidential choice, Sen. Joe Biden, Palin would lose.
And yet, because we vote for tickets, not individuals, when it comes to the vice presidency, Palin still stands a good chance of ending up first in succession to lead the free world.
That brings up an important question: Why are voters denied the chance to vote for a president of one party and a vice president of the other?
http://www.latimes.com/news/opinion/la-oe-amar22-2008oct22,0,3911393.story

BUSH NEWS

Bush Winds Up Last Fund-Raising Appeal (NYT blog 10/21/08)
By Sheryl Gay Stolberg
WASHINGTON – President Bush has wrapped up the 2008 election cycle with a perfect record: not a single traditional political rally.
Election Day is not for another two weeks, but for Mr. Bush, the campaign season officially ended Tuesday night here in Washington, when the president attended his final political event, a $1 million fundraiser for the National Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee. Like nearly all of Mr. Bush's political events this year, it was closed to the press.
http://thecaucus.blogs.nytimes.com/2008/10/21/bush-winds-up-last-fund-raising-appeal/

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

OTHER NEWS

Early voting suggests 2008 may see record turnout, expert says (CNN 10/21/08)
Michael McDonald, an associate professor of politics and government at George Mason University, said at least 2.2 million people already have voted using absentee or other types of ballots that allow them to vote before the polls open on November 4.
http://www.cnn.com/2008/POLITICS/10/21/early.voting/index.html?eref=rss_politics

More Democrats Casting Early Ballots, Data Show (NYT 10/22/08)
By MICHAEL LUO and RON NIXON
Significantly more Democrats than Republicans have cast ballots at this early stage in Iowa, North Carolina, New Mexico and Ohio, according to data analyzed by The New York Times.
Information from counties representing more than 90 percent of Nevada's population show Democrats also holding a commanding advantage in early voter turnout.
In Florida, however, Republicans appear to hold the upper hand, while in Colorado, early voting is about evenly split among Republicans and Democrats. Mr. Bush won all those states in 2004.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/10/22/us/politics/22early.html?ref=politics

Early Voting Attracts Outsize Portion of Blacks (WSJ 10/22/08)
By ALEX ROTH
Americans are voting early in large numbers this year -- and African-Americans in several states are turning out in disproportionate numbers. Some fear that polling places in predominantly black neighborhoods will be overwhelmed by a record turnout on Election Day. Others are voting early to be certain the chance to elect the first black U.S. president doesn't slip away.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122463439049156841.html?mod=rss_Politics_And_Policy

Minority Voters to Make Major Impact in Swing States (ABC News 10/21/08)
By RUSSELL GOLDMAN
Obama has made no secret that his strategy to become president involves winning the Western states of Colorado, Nevada and New Mexico. All are swing states with large Hispanic populations, and all voted for President Bush in 2004….Minority voting blocs are also being fought over in other states that could be decisive on Nov. 4. http://abcnews.go.com/Politics/Vote2008/story?id=6073343&page=1

GOP boss to SOS: Don't let certain voters cast ballots! (Las Vegas Sun blog 10/21/08)
By Jon Ralston
Republican Party Chairwoman Sue Lowden this week sent a letter to Secretary of State Ross Miller, asking him to bar certain voters from casting ballots because their registrations are incomplete. Issue is whether they should be allowed to correct the forms and be allowed to vote. I understand that 2,300 forms have been identified in urban counties, which may not sound like a lot but could have an impact in down-ticket races.
http://www.lasvegassun.com/blogs/ralstons-flash/2008/oct/21/gop-boss-sos-dont-let-certain-voters-cast-ballots/

Ohio Voting Disputes Take on New Intensity (WSJ 10/22/08)
By AMY MERRICK
With alleged death threats, suspicious mail and a surfeit of lawyers, the battle over Ohio voting procedures has reached a new level of ugliness.
Ohio Secretary of State Jennifer Brunner said her office has been barraged with phone calls and e-mails that contain "menacing messages and even threats of harm or death." Authorities are investigating those incidents, as well as a suspicious package mailed to her office last week that contained an unidentified powder and was covered with threatening messages, she said.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122463327244056681.html?mod=rss_Politics_And_Policy

North Carolina GOP tries to link Obama, Ayers (AP 10/21/08)
By Mike Baker
RALEIGH, N.C.—North Carolina's Republican Party is circulating a mailer that tries to link Democratic presidential nominee Barack Obama to 1960s radical William Ayers.
The advertisement includes several photos of Ayers, including his mug shot. It provides a boilerplate of Ayers' past radical activities and declares that he and Obama are friends. The mailer says Obama is "not who you think he is."
"This is the story of William Ayers... Terrorist. Radical. Friend of Obama," the ad says. It also says Obama is "not who you think he is."
http://www.boston.com/news/politics/2008/articles/2008/10/21/north_carolina_gop_tries_to_link_obama_ayers/?rss_id=Boston.com+--+Top+political+stories

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

North Carolina's New Blues (WaPo 10/22/08)
By Kevin Merida
The gale forces of the economy are blowing people in different directions, driving them to their presidential choices with an intensity that this state has not seen in some time. Many North Carolinians are either running toward a candidate or running away from one, the candidates now surrogates for folks' fears and aspirations. Even with his consuming worries, Vaughn found himself drawn to Barack Obama's quest as a symbol of the change Vaughn envisioned for his own life.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/10/21/AR2008102103002.html?nav=rss_politics

NRSC, Freedom's Watch preparing to play defense in Kentucky, Georgia (Politicker 10/21/08)
By Alex Isenstadt
On Tuesday, the National Republican Senatorial Committee went up with a web advertisement saying that Georgia "can't afford" Chambliss' Democratic opponent, former state Rep. Jim Martin.
And on Wednesday, the conservative advocacy organization Freedom's Watch is going on the air in the Georgia Senate race with a television advertisement that praises Chambliss for "leading the fight against higher taxes in the Senate."
http://www.politicker.com/nrsc-freedom-s-watch-preparing-play-defense-kentucky-georgia

"I'm Joe The Plumber" (Time blog 10/22/08)
By Mark Halperin
New McCain camp ad features small business owners sharing the same concerns about Obama's tax agenda as the now famous Ohioan.
"I'm supposed to work harder... Just to pay more taxes. Obama wants my sweat to pay for his trillion dollars in new spending?"
Campaign says ad "will be televised in key states." Amount and length of buy TBD.
http://thepage.time.com/2008/10/22/im-joe-the-plumber/

Iraqi Cabinet says US security pact needs changes (AP 10/21/08)
By ROBERT H. REID and QASSIM ABDUL-ZAHRA
BAGHDAD (AP) -- Iraq's Cabinet decided Tuesday to ask the U.S. for changes to the draft agreement that would keep American troops here three more years, as key Shiite lawmakers warned the deal stands little chance of approval as it stands.
The decision, reached in a closed-door meeting that lasted nearly six hours, raised doubt that the agreement can be ratified before a new American president is elected next month.
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/M/ML_IRAQ?SITE=NCKIN&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

US, Russia hold fence-mending military talks (AP 10/21/08)
By MATTI HUUHTANEN
HELSINKI, Finland (AP) -- The top U.S. military officer held "businesslike" talks on Georgia, Afghanistan and missile defense with his Russian counterpart Tuesday, a signal of thawing relations between the two powers. Held at an isolated manor house in Finland, it was the highest-level military meeting between the two countries since Russia's war with U.S. ally Georgia in August.
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/E/EU_FINLAND_US_RUSSIA?SITE=INEVA&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

US drops charges against 5 Guantanamo prisoners (AP 10/21/08)
By ANDREW O. SELSKY
SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) -- The U.S. military abruptly dropped charges against five Guantanamo Bay detainees, including one who allegedly plotted to detonate a "dirty bomb" in the U.S., after a prosecutor accused the military of suppressing evidence that could have helped clear them.
But despite the decision, announced Tuesday, there are no plans to free the men. New trial teams are taking another look at the evidence, the military said, and after consulting with intelligence agencies will recommend whether to reinstate charges.
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/C/CB_GUANTANAMO_CHARGES_DROPPED?SITE=TNMEM&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

Senate Democrats Subpoena Mukasey over Detainees (AP 10/21/08)
WASHINGTON — Senate Democrats on Tuesday subpoenaed Attorney General Michael Mukasey for testimony and documents about the Justice Department's legal advice to the White House on detention and interrogation policies since the 9/11 terrorist attacks.
Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., complained to Mukasey that after five years of efforts to glean the information, the committee still has seen only a fraction of the documents it is seeking.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://www.foxnews.com/story/0,2933,442603,00.html

Closing Arguments in Stevens Trial (NYT 10/22/08)
By NEIL A. LEWIS
Joseph Bottini, a federal prosecutor, told the jurors that Mr. Stevens, Republican of Alaska, was well aware that he received an array of gifts, including a sled dog, a sculpture and a massage chair, as well as the more valuable services of a longtime friend, Bill Allen, who used his company, Veco, to oversee a vast remodeling of the Stevens home… Mr. Bottini methodically tried to demolish Mr. Stevens's explanations for not disclosing the gifts and services. He asserted that Mr. Stevens had engaged in a classic cover-up with close and trusted friends to prevent the public from learning about what he was being given and to ensure that he would continue to be given free benefits.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/10/22/washington/22stevens.html?_r=1&oref=slogin

Fate of Sen. Stevens In the Jury's Hands (WaPo 10/22/08)
By Del Quentin Wilber
A federal jury today will begin deliberating two conflicting views of Sen. Ted Stevens, the powerful Alaska Republican charged with lying on financial disclosure forms to hide more than $250,000 in gifts and renovations to the Alaska house he affectionately calls his "chalet."
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/10/21/AR2008102101624.html?nav=rss_politics

POLLS

Poll: Obama opens biggest lead over McCain (MSNBC 10/21/08)
By Mark Murray
With two weeks to go until Election Day, Obama now leads his Republican rival by 10 points among registered voters, 52 to 42 percent, up from 49 to 43 percent two weeks ago.
Obama's current lead is also fueled by his strength among independent voters (topping McCain 49 to 37 percent), suburban voters (53 to 41), Catholics (50 to 44) and white women (49 to 45).
http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/27297013/

CNN Poll of Polls: Obama leads by nine points (CNN blog 10/21/08)
By Martina Stewart
(CNN) — Sen. Barack Obama has his largest lead so far over rival Sen. John McCain, according to CNN's latest national poll of polls.
Obama leads McCain by nine points in the poll of polls released Tuesday – 51 percent to 42 percent. Seven percent of those surveyed are unsure about their choice for president.
In Monday's CNN's poll of polls, Obama's lead over McCain was seven points – 51 percent to 44 percent.
http://politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com/2008/10/21/cnn-poll-of-polls-obama-leads-by-nine-points/

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail lori@progressiveaccountability.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: NYTimes.com <nytdirect@nytimes.com>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 11/24/2015 12:14:29 AM
Subject: First Draft on Politics: Hollande Heads to Washington for Meeting With Obama

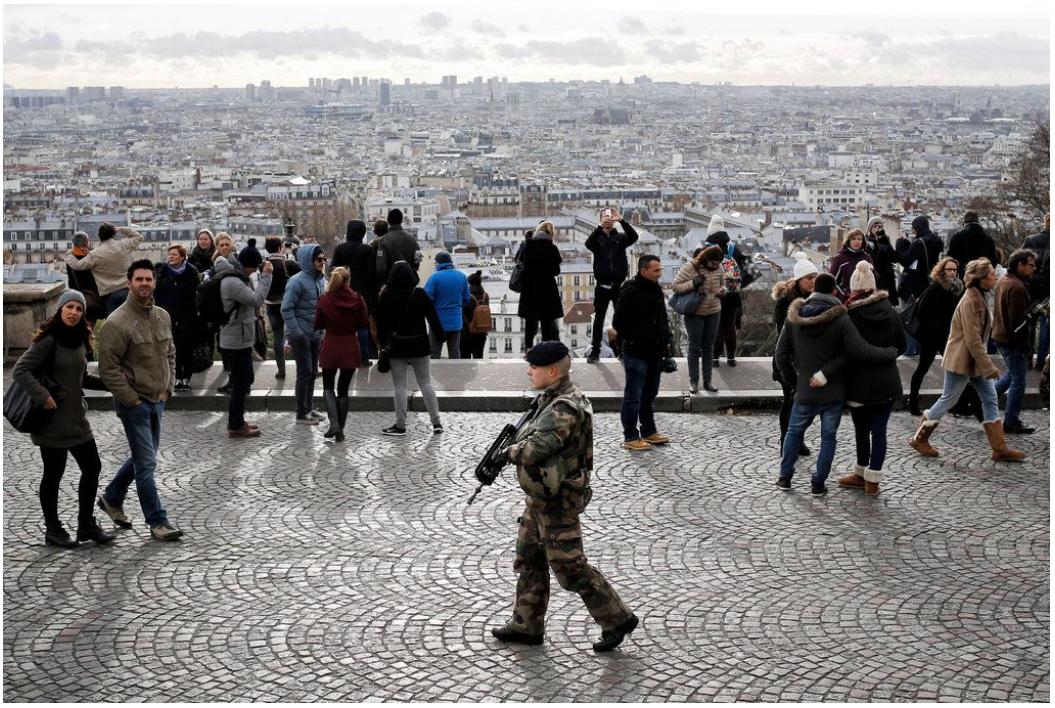
View in Browser | Add nytdirect@nytimes.com to your address book.

Tuesday, November 24, 2015

The New York Times NYTimes.com/FirstDraft »

FirstDraft

What You Need to Know Today in Politics



A soldier patrolled outside the Sacré- Coeur Basilica in Montmartre on Saturday, just over a week after the Paris attacks. Laurent Cipriani/Associated Press

Hollande Heads to Washington for Meeting With Obama

By PETER BAKER

Good Tuesday morning. The Paris attacks forced terrorism to the front of the campaign trail and spurred heated debates among the candidates. President Obama*, who has received the brunt of the criticism from the Republican nominees over his administration's policy to defeat the Islamic State, will meet with* President François Hollande of France to discuss the nations' response to the terrorist attacks.

Mr. Obama will host Mr. Hollande at the White House on Tuesday as the two seek to bolster the military campaign against the Islamic State, but it remained unlikely that they could forge a broader coalition with Russia.

The issue has taken on such urgency that Mr. Hollande could not wait even a few days for Mr. Obama, who already had plans to fly to Paris on Sunday for a climate-change conference. Vowing a merciless response to the terrorist attacks in Paris, Mr. Hollande is racing across the map trying to knit together a tighter alliance against the Islamic State, which claimed responsibility.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

After leaving Washington, Mr. Hollande will head to Moscow, where he will meet with President Vladimir V. Putin, who has also vowed to wage war against the Islamic State in retaliation for the downing of a Russian passenger jet over Egypt. But Mr. Obama and Mr. Hollande insist that any solution to the crisis in Syria has to include the eventual departure of President Bashar al-Assad, while Mr. Putin has been fortifying Mr. Assad's position by bombing his opposition.

What more Mr. Obama could offer Mr. Hollande was unclear. The United States has already provided France with intelligence to facilitate airstrikes against the Islamic State stronghold in Syria, but the White House argued that it was already carrying most of the load.

"The United States is certainly pulling more than our own weight when it would come to the contribution behind this coalition," said Josh Earnest, the White House press secretary.

Mr. Obama and Mr. Hollande will hold a joint news conference after their talks, and it is possible it would mainly consist of more expressions of support. "But I also wouldn't downplay the significance of additional expressions of solidarity and support," Mr. Earnest said.

What We're Watching Today

— While some candidates are beginning to ease their public appearances over the Thanksgiving holiday, Jeb Bush will hold several events, including a meet-and-greet and town-hall-style event, in South Carolina, while Donald J. Trump will hold his typical large rally in the state. Senator Marco Rubio of Florida will hold town-hall-style events in Iowa, where a new poll shows him slipping far behind Senator Ted Cruz of Texas, with whom he has recently had frequent public disputes.

— Hillary Rodham Clinton will be in Colorado, where she will be helping to sign up and organize caucusgoers.

— And Mr. Obama will award the Presidential Medal of Freedom to 17 honorees at the White House on Tuesday, in recognition of the "especially meritorious contributions to the security or national interests of the United States, to world peace, or to cultural or other significant public or private endeavors." Among the recipients will be the former Senator Barbara A. Mikulski of Maryland and William Ruckelshaus, the former Environmental Protection Agency director. Also to be honored are the artists Itzhak Perlman, Stephen Sondheim, Barbra Streisand, the director Steven Spielberg and the baseball player Willie Mays. Posthumous honorees include Yogi Berra and Shirley Chisholm.

First Draft

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Mark Kauzlarich/Reuters

Ted Cruz Makes a Big Leap in Iowa, Poll Says

By ALAN RAPPEPORT

Mr. Cruz's long-anticipated Iowa surge came a step closer on Tuesday with a new poll showing him just behind Donald J. Trump and leaping ahead of Ben Carson, as terrorism and foreign policy now drive the 2016 nominating race.

Sam Hodgson for The New York Times

Bernie Sanders's Rejection of 'Super PACs' Is Not Universal

By MAGGIE HABERMAN

Mr. Sanders has spent months denouncing the groups and faulting Hillary Rodham Clinton and other candidates for accepting money from them. But the National Nurses United For Patient Protection "super PAC" has spent more than $550,000 in support of Mr. Sanders's campaign.

Pfizer's Merger Proposal With Irish Company Rekindles Fight Over Tax 'Inversions'

By CARL HULSE

The drug company's $160 billion merger proposal with Dublin-based Allergan, which could help the new company escape billions of dollars in United States taxes, drew a cascade of harsh criticism from lawmakers and renewed a push to crack down on these so-called tax inversions.

Stay tuned throughout the day: Follow us on Twitter @NYTPolitics and on Facebook for First Draft updates .

ADVERTISEMENT

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Our Other Favorites From The Times

Hillary Clinton Looks Past Primaries, and to Republicans, in Strategy to Beat Sanders

By AMY CHOZICK

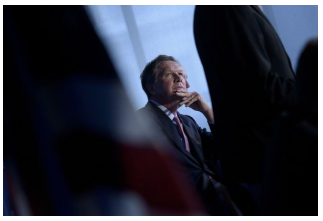
At campaign events, Mrs. Clinton focuses her criticism on the 14 Republicans running for president, and she does not mention her main Democratic riv al, Mr. Sanders.

After Paris, Voters Give Christie a Second Look

By MICHAEL BARBARO

The Paris attacks have brought a sudden intensity, attention and focus to the once-moribund candidacy of Gov. Chris Christie of New Jersey .

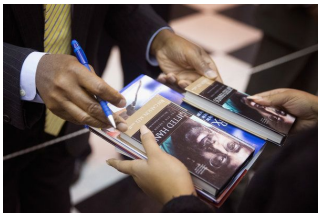
Kasich Tries to Spoil Trump's Ohio Welcome



By ALAN RAPPEPORT

Gov. John Kasich and other legislators in his state who support his campaign for the Republican presidential nomination have stepped up their criticism of Donald J. Trump as the billionaire businessman heads to Ohio to woo voters.

Carson Supporters Cite 'Vulgar' Attacks in Seeking Donations



By ALAN RAPPEPORT

Supporters of Ben Carson made a fund-raising plea that they hope will reinvigorate his campaign. A new media team is also trying to showcase a different side of the retired neurosurgeon through interviews with his former patients.

Trump's Hosting of 'S.N.L.' Means Equal Airtime for Rivals

By NICK CORASANITI

NBC viewers in Iowa, New Hampshire and South Carolina should be prepared to see a lot of four Republican candidates over the Thanksgiving weekend.

Carson Clarifies Remarks on Muslims Celebrating on 9/11

By ALAN RAPPEPORT

After saying that he, too, had seen American Muslims celebrating as the World Trade Center fell, Ben Carson said that he was mistaken, and that he was thinking of protests he had seen in the Middle East.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

ADVERTISEMENT

Travels That Excite the Curiosity and Challenge the Mind

- 27 departures
- Small group tours
- Specialty cruises

VIEW OUR ONLINE BROCHURE

Times JOURNEYS

What We're Reading Elsewhere

— The Washington Post isolates the "war for the evangelical vote" that is developing between Mr. Cruz and Mr. Carson.

— FiveThirtyEight argues that Mr. Trump's sustained success in the polls so far during the Republican primary says little about his chances of winning in a general election.

— And USA Today, just in case you might be "over" the 2016 elections already, or at least in the days before a potential break over the Thanksgiving holiday, offers a chance to "test your memory" of previous races including Bush vs. Dukakis, Bush vs. Gore and Obama vs. McCain.

First Draft is sent weekdays before 7 a.m. and is updated throughout the day at nytimes.com/firstdraft . Check back throughout the day for continuing updates.

And please, tell us how we're doing. Like it, hate it, or have some advice, email us at FirstDraft@nytimes.com .

Follow us on Twitter: @NYTPolitics

FOLLOW NYTimes FACEBOOK @NYTPolitics

Get more NYTimes.com newsletters »

Get unlimited access to NYTimes.com and our NYTimes apps for just $0.99. Subscribe »

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

ABOUT THIS EMAIL

You received this message because you signed up for NYTimes.com's First Draft newsletter.

Unsubscribe | Manage Subscriptions | Change Your Email | Privacy Policy | Contact | Advertise

Copyright 2015 The New York Times Company | 620 Eighth Avenue New York, NY 10018

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Kennan Institute" <kennan@wilsoncenter.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 8/7/2014 4:01:52 AM
Subject: Invitation: “They Can Live in the Desert but No where Else: A History of the Armenian Genocide"

To view this email as a web page, click here

Kennan Institute

Wilson Center

“They Can Live in the Desert but Nowhere Else: A History of the Armenian Genocide"

Starting in early 1915, the Ottoman Turks began deporting and killing hundreds of thousands of Armenians in the first major genocide of the twentieth century. By the end of the First World War, the number of Armenians in what would become Turkey had been reduced by ninety percent—more than a million people. A century later, the Armenian Genocide remains controversial but relatively unknown, overshadowed by later slaughters and the chasm separating Turkish and Armenian versions of events. In this definitive narrative history, Ronald Suny cuts through nationalist myths, propaganda, and denial to provide an unmatched account of when, how, and why the atrocities of 1915–1916 were committed.

Drawing on archival documents and eyewitness accounts, Professor Suny's book is a vivid and unforgettable chronicle of a cataclysm that set a tragic pattern for a century of genocide and crimes against humanity.

This event is cosponsored by the Global Europe Program

Speaker

Ronald Grigor Suny
Kennan Institute Title VIII-supported Short Term Scholar; Charles Tilly Collegiate Professor of History, University of Michigan

Moderator

Thomas de Waal
Senior Associate, Russia and Eurasia Program, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace

RSVP NOW »

Forward to a Friend

RSVP NOW

Thursday, August 14, 2014
3:00pm - 4:30pm

6th Floor Flom Auditorium

Directions

Wilson Center
Ronald Reagan Building and International Trade Center
One Woodrow Wilson Plaza
1300 Pennsylvania, Ave., NW
Washington, D.C. 20004

Phone: 202.691.4000

kennan@wilsoncenter.org

Privacy Policy

© Copyright 2014, The Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars , All Rights Reserved.
Subscriber: podesta@law.georgetown.edu | Manage your Subscriptions | Unsubscribe from All

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Debbie Stabenow" <dstabenow@stabenowforsenate.com>
To: "John D. Podesta" <podesta@law.georgetown.edu>
Date: 10/15/2015 7:13:14 AM
Subject: What's at stake

DEBBIE STABENOW
STANDING UP FOR MICHIGAN

John D. –

The Great Lakes are central to our Michigan way of life and contribute billions of dollars to our economy every year. But Canada wants to permanently bury 52 million gallons of nuclear waste less than a mile from Lake Huron.

That's why Senator Peters, Congressman Kildee and I are coming together to stand up for our Great Lakes and against this dangerous plan.

Click here to add your name and stand with us.

Canada is a huge country, but they admit they haven't explored any alternative sites to store their waste! We've seen too many accidents to take a risk like this with our Great Lakes.

John D., I'm not willing to take the chance with the fate of our Great Lakes. Add your name to stand with us against this dangerous and risky proposal.

Thank you for standing up for our Great Lakes!

Sincerely,

Debbie

Debbie Stabenow

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

United States Senator

Paid for by Stabenow for U.S. Senate

Stabenow for U.S. Senate
P.O. Box 4945
East Lansing MI 48826 United States

If you believe you received this message in error or wish to no longer receive email from us, please unsubscribe .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Cammie Croft" <cammie@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 7/15/2008 11:15:29 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Tracking Clip of the Day: McCain Says "Czechoslovakia" ... Again

Enjoy!

McCain Says "Czechoslovakia"... Again
JOHN MCCAIN: "I've suggested a long time ago a League of Democracies and it's very clear that Russia and China and especially Russia will veto significant measures, which would impact the behavior of the Iranians. And I regret that and I regret some of the recent behavior that Russia has exhibited [...] including reduction in oil supplies to Czechoslovakia after they agreed with us on missile defense system, et cetera."
(Town Hall Meeting; Albuquerque, NM 07/15/08)
To View: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=i0XQ6zlP518
To Download: http://issuealliance.box.net/shared/ozkz1fx44w

--
Cammie L. Croft
Tracking/Media Monitoring Director
Progressive Accountability Office
cammie@progressiveaccountability.org
202-609-7679 (office)
206-999-3064 (cell)

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Adam Jentleson \(CAPAF\)" <ajentleson@americanprogressaction.org>
To:	"big campaign" <bigcampaign@googlegroups.com>
Date:	7/28/2008 8:02:26 AM
Subject:	[big campaign] McCain Adviser Steve Forbes: Cap-And-Trade Wouldn't 'Get Very Far' Under McCain

McCain Adviser Steve Forbes: Cap-And-Trade Wouldn't 'Get Very Far' Under McCain

Speaking with CNN's Glenn Beck on Friday, former GOP presidential candidate and current McCain economic adviser Steve Forbes disparaged Sen. McCain's signature plan to put mandatory reductions on greenhouse gases with a cap-and-trade system. McCain has repeatedly pointed to his record on promoting global warming legislation as a key distinction between himself and the current president.

> I think cap and trade is going to go the way of some other things, as you may remember, when he came into office, Bill Clinton had a proposal of tax carbons and stuff like that. I don't think those things are going to get very far as people start to examine the details of them.

Watch it:

On July 9, conservative journalist Larry Kudlow reported that he was told "on deep background" by a "senior McCain official" that McCain was off cap-and-trade. The campaign publicly responded that "any notion that the senator is abandoning or minimizing his support for cap-and-trade is 'totally false.'"Forbes is signaling that Kudlow may be right, and McCain will follow in the footsteps of George W. Bush. As a candidate in 2000, Bush pledged to impose mandatory reductions of carbon dioxide, but immediately reversed that position once elected. Newly elected Vice President Dick Cheney said of Bush's pledge, "It was a mistake."

Contrary to right-wing talking points, a cap-and-trade system is not in fact a tax (or even a "stealth tax"). Critically, cap-and-trade provides "emissions certainty" — ensuring that pollution does not exceed a certain level, whereas a carbon tax would place no such limits. At WorldChanging, Alan Durning explains how the most flexible regulatory system for managing global warming pollution would be using both policy instruments: cap-and-trade and a carbon tax. With the stark need to arrest global climate change as fast as possible, we will need all the tools in the chest.

Transcript:

BECK: Then explain this to me, Steve, because I know you're a John McCain guy and I'm not a John McCain guy. I mean, I don't have any guy in the running right now.

FORBES: Why aren't you running?

BECK: I would vaporize too many cities. Here's the thing, John McCain may be good on income tax, and he says that he gets that and I've seen his plan, and it's good. But in the same plan, he talks about cap and trade. Gigantic tax programs, the biggest ever created. So you're taking, sure, I'm not giving income tax, but I'm getting it here and here.

FORBES: Yes. I think cap and trade is going to go the way of some other things, as you may remember, when he came into office, Bill Clinton had a proposal of tax carbons and stuff like that. I don't think those things are going to get very far as people start to examine the details of them.

BECK: But shouldn't he have examined those details, Steve? Shouldn't he have known that's a bad idea?

FORBES: Yes, well, he's moving in the right direction. You got to give him credit. He's now for really having active exploration offshore. Going full bore on nuclear power plants, 45 in the next 20 to 25 years and that's another thing that the Democrats are squirming about. People know we should do more offshore production and drilling and they wish that issue would go away and we're not going to let it go away.

http://thinkprogress.org/wonkroom/2008/07/28/forbes-no-cap-and-trade/

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Tony Podesta" <podesta@podesta.com>
To:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date:	4/27/2015 1:30:43 PM
Subject:	FW: INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS TIMES: Goldman Paid Bill Clinton $200,000 For Speech Before Bank Lobbied Hillary Clinton

Your friend David Sirota being helpful as always.

From: HPS Alerts [mailto:hpsalerts@hamiltonps.com]
Sent: Monday, April 27, 2015 12:25 PM
To: bankingalerts@hamiltonps.com
Subject: INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS TIMES: Goldman Paid Bill Clinton $200,000 For Speech Before Bank Lobbied Hillary Clinton

INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS TIMES: Goldman Paid Bill Clinton $200,000 For Speech Before Bank Lobbied Hillary Clinton
By: David Sirota And Andrew Perez
http://www.ibtimes.com/goldman-paid-bill-clinton-200000-speech-bank-lobbied-hillary-clinton-1898154

Goldman Sachs paid former President Bill Clinton $200,000 to deliver a speech in the spring of 2011, several months before the investment banking giant began lobbying the State Department, then headed by Hillary Clinton, according to federal records reviewed by International Business Times.

Goldman's objective in lobbying the State Department could not be immediately discerned. The lobbying disclosure filings note only that Goldman sought to "monitor deficit reduction issues" -- specifically, a bill known as the Budget Control Act -- and the bank declined to answer questions about the precise nature of its interests.

Three days after Bill Clinton accepted Goldman's money to make a speech in New York, Hillary Clinton delivered her own address at the State Department in Washington: She lauded the investment bank's participation in her department's campaign to boost the numbers of American students who study in China.

According to an ethics agreement governing Hillary Clinton's tenure as an Obama administration cabinet official, all of her husband's paid speeches while she was secretary of state required the prior approval of department officials. Bill Clinton's 2011 speech to a conference full of Goldman clients gathered in New York gained the blessing of State Department officials, according to documents obtained by Judicial Watch.

The discovery that Bill Clinton accepted a six-figure payday from Goldman Sachs just before the bank sought the ear of his wife's department seems certain to intensify scrutiny of the Clinton family's often overlapping personal, philanthropic and official business interests.

In the two weeks since she formally declared herself an aspirant for the presidency, gaining status as the presumptive Democratic nominee, Hillary Clinton has been dogged by allegations that foreign governments and well-connected investors have used generosity to her husband and their family's philanthropic empire, the Clinton Foundation, as a means of seeking to influence policy at her State Department.

Goldman confirmed that it paid President Clinton for his speech several months before the bank's Washington lobbying firm, the Duberstein Group, began focusing on State Department policy in addition to other federal agencies. But Goldman said there was no connection between the speech fee paid to Bill Clinton and the bank's interests at the State Department headed by Hillary Clinton.

"Any linkage between a speech for clients and the outcome of the Budget Control Act is preposterous," said a Goldman spokesman, Andrew Williams, who previously served as a deputy assistant secretary for public affairs at the Treasury Department in the Obama administration. Despite Goldman's lobbying records, Williams asserted: "We did not lobby the State Department on budget issues, nor did we ask anyone else to."

A spokesperson for Clinton's presidential campaign declined to answer questions about the propriety of Bill Clinton's Goldman-financed speaking engagement. The State Department declined to comment. Bill Clinton did not respond to requests for an interview.

This month, IBTimes reported that Hillary Clinton switched her position to support a trade agreement forged by the United States and Colombia just as a Colombian oil conglomerate and its founder contributed to the Clinton Foundation. Under her leadership, the State Department certified Colombia's human rights record, enabling American military aid to continue to flow to Colombia, despite complaints from organized labor that the military has been responsible for violent crackdowns on striking workers at the oil company's facilities. The founder, Frank Giustra, has since said his donations to the Clinton Foundation were made as a bid to promote positive change and were not aimed at influencing the State Department.

The New York Times and Wall Street Journal later detailed contributions that flowed into the Clinton Foundation from an executive at a uranium mining firm that was seeking the State Department's support for a series of transactions involving interests in Russia and Kazakhstan. The State Department occupies a seat on a powerful government panel that reviews deals involving foreign interests, probing potential threats to national security.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In recent days, attention to overlapping interests that have donated to the Clinton family's private interests while also allegedly seeking to influence State Department policy has reached a fever pitch amid leaks from a forthcoming book on the subject, "Clinton Cash," by Peter Schweizer.

The involvement of Goldman Sachs seems certain to amplify that scrutiny. The bank brings a reputation as uniquely well-connected in Washington given that many of its former executives have landed in the uppermost ranks of the Treasury Department. (One Goldman alumnus, Gary Gensler, was recently appointed the chief financial officer of Hillary Clinton's presidential campaign.) In a time in which many ordinary Americans have grown suspicious of Wall Street, accusing well-placed executives of profiting through unsavory enterprises such as subprime mortgage lending, Goldman has become an emblem of this view, -- an institution famously described by the journalist Matt Taibbi as a "a great vampire squid wrapped around the face of humanity, relentlessly jamming its blood funnel into anything that smells like money."

Bill Clinton installed former Goldman Chairman Robert Rubin as his Treasury secretary. Since leaving office, President Clinton has received $1.35 million from the bank for eight speeches, according to the Washington Post . Two years ago, Hillary Clinton, having left the Obama administration, gave two speeches at Goldman Sachs events in the span of a week, according to Mother Jones.

State Department records show that Bill Clinton's $200,000 Goldman Sachs speech was delivered on April 11, 2011, to "approximately 250 high level clients and investors" at a United Nations dining room in New York.

In federal disclosure documents , the Duberstein Group is listed as lobbying the Clinton State Department on behalf of Goldman Sachs between July and September 2011. Goldman Sachs paid the Duberstein Group $100,000 during that time.

Those records show that the firm was specifically lobbying the department on "proposed legislation" linked to a series of budget bills. One bill continued congressional authorization for the Export-Import Bank, a government-backed lender whose financing was critical for the prospects of a company in which Goldman owned a stake. The Duberstein Group did not respond to questions about its precise interests in the legislation at issue.

The original budget bill was introduced in July and did not include an extension of the Export-Import Bank, but the bank reauthorization was added in late September, during the same period Goldman was lobbying the State Department on the bill.

In August 2011, the bank authorized a $75 million loan enabling a Chinese firm to purchase aircraft from Beechcraft (known before emerging from bankruptcy in February 2013 as Hawker Beechcraft), a company that was part owned by Goldman . Beechcraft had lobbied the Clinton State Department on issues relating to foreign military sales in 2009 and 2010 , according to its lobbying disclosures.

The State Department is intimately involved in Export-Import Bank decisions. Bank documents say it performs a "human rights review" of countries where loans are made, and also "examine(s) human rights and other foreign policy considerations in their assessment of the risks associated with transactions in specific countries." In October 2011, Clinton touted the work of her undersecretary, former Goldman Vice Chairman Robert Hormats, saying he was "coordinating with the Export-Import Bank, OPIC, and others to support our investors and exporters in emerging economies."

The Export-Import Bank was a source of extraordinary controversy in the latter half of Obama's first term. Conservative Republican lawmakers charged that it had become a source of wasteful corporate welfare, echoing traditional criticism from liberal Democrats. Despite the controversy, Congress ultimately passed a bill reauthorizing funding and President Obama signed it into law.

The Export-Import bank appears to have made the loan to the Chinese firm, according to its ledgers, though Hawker Beechcraft filed for bankruptcy protection in 2012 .

The Export-Import Bank is again up for reauthorization and faces strong opposition from conservatives, including GOP financiers Charles and David Koch .

Federal documents show that at the same time the Duberstein Group was lobbying for Goldman on the budget bills, it was also lobbying for the bank on issues related to "executive branch action" on pending free trade agreements with South Korea, Colombia and Panama. Clinton was at the time publicly promoting those agreements.

To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to bankingalerts+unsubscribe@hamiltonps.com .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Alexandria Phillips" <aphillips@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"Alexandria Phillips" <aphillips@hillaryclinton.com>
Date:	7/19/2015 12:00:29 AM
Subject:	H4A News Clips 7.19.15
Attachments:	7.19.15 H4A News Clips.docx

H4A News Clips

July 19, 2015

TODAY'S KEY STORIES..... 4

In Iowa, it was a good night for Clinton — and her rivals // WaPo // Dan Balz – July 18, 2015..... 4

Hillary Clinton slams Trump over criticism of McCain // WaPo // Sean Sullivan – July 18, 2015 . 7

HRC NATIONAL COVERAGE..... 7

Clinton and Sanders Take Aim at Different Targets as Democrats Gather in Iowa // WSJ // Laura Meckler – July 18, 2015 7

Why Hillary Clinton is pushing to reignite Democrats in Arkansas // WaPo // Sean Sullivan – July 18, 2015 10

As Democrats face off, Clinton keeps focus on GOP // AP – July 18, 2015 12

Clinton Eulogizes Promoter of National Civil Rights Museum // AP – July 18, 2015..... 14

Hillary Clinton is ignoring Bernie Sanders — and it's a smart move // AP // Lisa Lerer – July 18, 2015 14

Hillary Clinton to hold private fundraiser near Pittsburgh // AP – July 18, 2015 16

Hillary finds new major fundraisers to boost campaign // Politico // Tarini Parti & Theodoric Meyer – July 18, 2015 16

Hillary Clinton slams Trump's 'shameful' comments on McCain's war record // Politico // Annie Karni – July 18, 2015 19

Hillary Clinton Calls Donald Trump Comments 'Shameful' // Bloomberg // Jennifer Epstein – July 18, 2015 21

Hillary Clinton Condemns Donald Trump's 'Insults' of 'Genuine War Hero' John McCain // ABC News // Liz Kreutz – July 18, 2015..... 22

At first cattle call, Democrats hone name-free Clinton attacks // CNN // Dan Merica – July 18, 2015 23

'Older,' 'Wiser,' 'Richer' Donald Trump Would Be Better President Than Hillary Clinton, Bill Kristol Says // ABC News // Ben Bell – July 18, 2015..... 25

Clinton, Sanders share the stage in Iowa // The Hill // Elliot Smilowitz – July 18, 2015..... 26

Hillary Clinton turns up the heat as Iowa takes on general election feel // The Guardian // Ben Jacobs – July 18, 2015 27

Hillary Clinton delivers fiery speech at Democratic party hall of fame dinner // The Guardian // Ben Jacobs – July 18, 2015..... 30

Elizabeth Warren Gives Hillary Clinton Economic Advice (Sort Of) In a Fiery Public Speech // Bustle // Lauren Barbato – July 18, 2015..... 30

Hillary Forbids Young Supporters from Talking to Press // The Weekly Standard // Daniel Halper – July 18, 2015 32

Together the First Time, Hillary Clinton and Her Rival 2016 Democrats Still Play Nice // The National Journal // Emily Schultheis – July 18, 2015..... 33

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The trap Hillary can't escape: Her Bernie Sanders problem is she doesn't understand Sanders' policies are popular, mainstream and the future // Salon // Bill Curry – July 19, 2015..... 35

National Security Expert Slams Hillary's 'Assault' On Free Speech // The Daily Caller // Rachel Stoltzfoos – July 18, 2015 40

Hillary Clinton defends Iran pact during Davenport, Iowa, campaign stop // Sioux City Journal // Ed Tibbetts – July 18, 2015..... 41

Clinton remembers D'Army Bailey at funeral // Commercial Appeal // Thomas Bailey – July 18, 2015 43

OTHER DEMOCRATS NATIONAL COVERAGE..... 45

DECLARED..... 45

SANDERS..... 45

Sanders vaults from fringe to the heart of the fray // The Boston Globe // Annie Linksey – July 18, 2015 45

UNDECLARED..... 49

BIDEN..... 49

Sources: Joe Biden Still Considering A Presidential Campaign // HuffPo // Ryan Grim – July 18, 2015 49

Biden still considering 2016 bid: report // The Hill // Keith Laing – July 18, 2015..... 50

OTHER..... 51

Activists disrupt forum featuring candidates O'Malley , Sanders // WaPo // John Wagner – July 18, 2015 51

Demonstrators disrupt presidential forum at Netroots event // AP // Ken Thomas – July 18, 2015 53

Iowa Democratic Party dinner: 5 takeaways // Politico // Gabriel Debenedetti – July 18, 2015. 55

Black Lives Matter' protesters flummox O'Malley, Sanders // Politico // Daniel Strauss – July 18, 2015 57

O'Malley apologizes for saying 'all liv es matter' at liberal conference // CNN // Chris Moody – July 18, 2015 59

Martin O'Malley And Bernie Sanders Interrupted By 'Black Lives Matter' Activists At Progressive Conference // HuffPo // Sam Levine – July 18, 2015..... 60

Democratic Presidential Candidates Face Off in Iowa // ABC News // Josh Haskell – July 18, 2015 61

Sanders, O'Malley face protesters at Netroots Nation conference // LA Times // Nigel Duara – July 18, 2015 62

'Black Lives Matter' protesters halt Sanders, O'Malley events // The Hill // Mark Hensch – July 18, 2015 64

Democratic candidates turn dinner into a GOP bashing party // NY Post // Bob Fredericks – July 18, 2015 65

'Black Lives Matter!': Sanders, O'Malley Heckled by Liberal Demonstrators at Blogger Convention; Clinton a No-Show // The Blaze // Dave Urbanski – July 18, 2015..... 66

O'Malley Apologizes For Saying 'All Lives Matter' // Daily Caller // Derek Hunter – July 18, 2015 67

O'Malley, Sanders Shouted Down at Netroots by 'Black Lives Matter' Protest // The National Journal // S.V. Dante – July 18, 2015..... 68

Martin O'Malley Was Booed For Saying "All Lives Matter," & Here's Why That Phrase Should Just Disappear // Bustle // Chris Togonotti – July 18, 2015..... 69

GOP..... 70

DECLARED..... 70

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BUSH..... 71

Raising money is a Jeb Bush family business, even for the next generation // WaPo // Ed O'Keefe – July 18, 2015 71

Jeb Bush consultant critiques Republican digital culture // Yahoo News // Jon Ward – July 18, 2015 73

How Jeb Tackled the Cocaine Cartels // The Daily Beast // Betsy Woodruff – July 18, 2015..... 75

Talk of rolling back Obama's Iran nuclear deal on day one is not 'mature' // The Washington Times // Kellan Howell – July 18, 2015..... 79

RUBIO..... 80

Rubio: 'The American people believe in immigration' // The Hill // Keith Laing – July 18, 2015 80

WALKER..... 81

Scott Walker Is Starting His Road to the White House in a Winnebago // ABC News // Jordyn Phelps – July 18, 2015 81

Iowa Republicans get some satisfaction as Scott Walker rolls up like a rock star // The Guardian // Ben Jacobs – July 18, 2015..... 82

Scott Walker promises forceful foreign policy in Sioux City stop // Sioux City Journal // Bret Hayworth – July 18, 2015 83

PAUL..... 85

Report: Rand Paul calls for scrutiny of Muslims // USA Today // Bill Theobald – July 18, 2015. 85

Ron Paul Not Listed As Donor To Rand Paul's Presidential Campaign // Daily Caller // Jamie Weinstein – July 18, 2015 86

CRUZ..... 86

Cruz: Planned Parenthood leaders should be prosecuted // The Hill // Keith Laing – July 18, 2015 86

Ted Cruz On Iran Deal: There Will Be Blood // Breitbart – July 18, 2015 87

Ted Cruz says he won't 'go into the gutter' to criticize Donald Trump // Business Insider // Bryan Logan – July 18, 2015 88

PERRY..... 89

Rick Perry redoubles attack on Donald Trump for John McCain remarks // The Guardian // Ben Jacobs – July 18, 2015 89

Perry calls on Trump to end his campaign: 'His comments have reached a new low' // Washington Times // Seth McLaughlin – July 18, 2015..... 90

Rick Perry: Trump Is Unfit to Lead the Military , 'Should Immediately Withdraw' from Race // MediaIte // Josh Feldman – July 18, 2015..... 91

Rick Perry calls on Donald Trump to withdraw from the presidential race // Business Insider // Maxwell Tani – July 18, 2015..... 92

GRAHAM..... 93

'I feel like I'm on Oprah': Lindsey Graham tears up in Iowa as he explains how the government helped him survive his parents' early death // Daily Mail // David Martosko – July 18, 2015..... 93

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SANTORUM..... 95

Rick Santorum wants curbs on legal immigration in effort to help boost wages in US // AP – July 18, 2015 96

HUCKABEE..... 96

Huckabee Responds to Trump: 'John McCain is a hero' // Alex Swoyer – July 18, 2015 96

CARSON..... 96

Carson: Black voters 'waking up' to GOP // The Hill // Keith Laing – July 18, 2015..... 97

Dr. Ben Carson on 'Trump's McCain Statement: 'We Need to Hear from Everybody' // Breitbart News // Alex Swoyer – July 18, 2015..... 97

JINDAL..... 98

Jindal focuses on his religion in Indianola // The Des Moines Register // Paige Godden – July 18, 2015 98

TRUMP..... 100

The Trump Campaign's Turning Point // NYT // Nate Cohn – July 18, 2015..... 100

Donald Trump disparaged John McCain's military service. Is this the end of his run? // WaPo // Philip Bump – July 18, 2015..... 103

Trump slams McCain for being 'captured' in Vietnam; other Republicans quickly condemn him // WaPo // Philip Rucker – July 18, 2015..... 104

Trump Surge Leaves All but Jeb Bush in Donald's Dust // WSJ // Dante Chinni – July 18, 2015 107

Trump's Criticism of McCain Overshadows Issues in Iowa // AP – July 18, 2015..... 108

Trump attacks McCain: 'I like people who weren't captured' // Politico // Ben Schreckinger – July 18, 2015 110

Trump on John McCain: 'I Like People That Weren't Captured, Okay?' // Bloomberg // Sahil Kapur – July 18, 2015 112

Trump questions McCain's bravery, says 'he is not a war hero' // CNN // Mark Preston & Eugene Scott – July 18, 2015 113

Republicans Condemn Donald Trump After He Belittles John McCain's War Record // TIME // Zeke Miller – July 18, 2015 117

Donald Trump Hits the Limits of Celebrity // TIME // Zeke Miller – July 18, 2015..... 118

After Donald Trump says John McCain 'not a war hero,' Republican rivals denounce him // LA Times // Noah Bierman – July 18, 2015..... 120

Trump clarifies attacks on McCain // The Hill // Keith Laing – July 18, 2015..... 122

Draft-Dodging Trump Says POW McCain 'Not A War Hero' // Daily Beast // Olivia Nuzzi – July 18, 2015 123

Trump comments on McCain war record spark outrage // USA Today // Jason Noble – July 18, 2015 129

After Attacking John McCain's War Record, Donald Trump's Dramatic Fall Is Predictable // Forbes – July 18, 2015 131

UNDECLARED..... 133

OTHER..... 133

Seeing Crowd, G.O.P. Donors Holding Back // NYT // Nicholas Confessore & Sarah Cohen – July 18, 2015 133

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On Republican Hopefuls' Checklist: A Super PAC and Lots of Money // WSJ // Patrick O'connor and Reid J. Epstein - July 19, 2015..... 136

GOP contenders court evangelical vote in Iowa // AP – July 18, 2015 138

GOP's 2016 ad war slowly heating up // CNN // Tom LoBianco – July 18, 2015..... 139

TOP NEWS..... 141

DOMESTIC..... 141

Ku Klux Klan and New Black Panther Party Protest at South Carolina Capitol // NYT // Alan Binder – July 18, 2015 141

INTERNATIONAL..... 143

ISIS Says It Carried Out Bombing That Killed 100 in Iraq // NYT // Anne Barnard – July 18, 2015 144

Iran's Ayatollah Ali Khamenei Says Nuclear Deal Won't Change U.S. Ties // WSJ // Aresu Eqbali – July 18, 2015 145

TODAY'S KEY STORIES

In Iowa, it was a good night for Clinton — and her rivals // WaPo // Dan Balz – July 18, 2015

The first gathering of the Democratic presidential candidates played almost according to script here Friday night. Hillary Rodham Clinton stood above the field but did not dominate. Bernie Sanders displayed the passion that has made him such a favorite of the left. And Martin O'Malley's speech got a reception that belied his anemic poll numbers.

The serial speeches by Clinton, Sanders and O'Malley — who were joined in the program by fellow contenders Lincoln Chafee and Jim Webb — also highlighted the leftward shift of the Democratic Party under President Obama and the degree to which that movement is continuing during the contest for the party's presidential nomination.

Clinton, who spoke with the aid of a teleprompter, was fiery, funny and sharply partisan. It was a red-meat speech delivered to an audience eager for her to deliver it. She took little notice of her Democratic opponents and concentrated her attacks on the opposition party.

She noted that Republicans have fresh faces running for president but denounced the GOP as a party mired in the past and wedded to policies that have not worked except for thewealthiest in society.

On economics, she warned that the GOP candidates want to return to the tax-cutting policies of previous Republican administrations. "Trickle-down economics has to be one of the worst ideas of the 1980s," she said. "It is right up there with New Coke, shoulder pads and big hair. I lived through it — and there are photographs. And we're not going back to that."

That wasn't her only hair reference. When she turned to Donald Trump, it went like this: "Finally, a candidate whose hair gets more attention than mine." Then the humor stopped, as she added that there is "nothing funny about the hate he's spewing" toward immigrants. She called it shameful and ridiculed the other GOP candidates for being slow to denounce Trump's words.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The former secretary of state and senator from New York attacked former Florida governor Jeb Bush for his comments on part-time work. She hit at Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker for restricting reproductive rights in his state, saying the voters should say no to politicians "who shame and blame" women. She even went after Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad for vetoing spending on mental health and got one of the biggest ovations of the night.

If once she seemed tentative about talking about herself and her family, she no longer is. She talked as she has done in this campaign about the abandonment her mother endured as a child. She said becoming a grandmother was "transformational," forcing one to consider the kind of future this generation will leave for others. "And that's why I'm never going to let the Republicans rip away the progress we have made," she said.

She said she would fight against efforts to go back to trickle-down economics and to a "wild West on Wall Street," to retrenchment on marriage rights or to efforts to repeal the Affordable Care Act.

She mocked Republicans who say they aren't scientists and therefore can't judge whether climate change is man-made. "Look, I'm not a scientist either," she said. "I'm just a grandmother with two eyes and a brain, and I'm not going to let them take us back."

She showed her willingness as well to embrace gender issues and the prospect of becoming the first female president. Ticking through a series of policies that would help women, she noted that some would say, "There she goes again" on women's issues. "Well, I'm not going to stop," she said, "so get ready for a long campaign."

Sanders's fire

Sanders again showed he is prepared to go where Clinton won't on economic issues. He called for a nationwide mass movement against the "billionaire class" that he has made the heart of his populist insurgency. No president, he said, can bring about the changes he says are needed "unless there is a political revolution."

Clinton attacks Wall Street but hardly with the vigor of Sanders. Calling wealth and income inequality the moral and political issues of the day, the senator from Vermont identified his enemy and called on Democrats to take up the fight. "The greed for the billionaire class has got to end, and we are going to end it for them," he said.

There is an old-fashioned passion that Sanders brings to the campaign, and it has clearly found an audience on the left. Clinton's policies are progressive but safely so; Sanders's go beyond. Without naming her, he drew contrasts with Clinton that many in the audience clearly understood.

Sanders would raise the minimum wage more than she. He opposes the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade agreement. He favors both a big infrastructure program to rebuild roads and bridges as well as a big public jobs program to reduce unemployment among young African Americans and Hispanics.

On health care, he would move beyond the Affordable Care Act and seek to enact a Medicare-style government-run single-payer system. On Social Security, he would expand benefits, not cut them.

The Sanders cheering section on Friday filled one end of the room, and the response he received was one more sign that he has found an audience within the party and, if he can keep building on it, could threaten Clinton here and in New Hampshire.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

O'Malley's eloquence

The surprise of the night might have been O'Malley, the former Maryland governor and ex-mayor of Baltimore, if only because he has largely been dealt out of the narrative of the current Democratic contest. He had hoped to become the alternative to Clinton only to see Sanders take up that space. Now he languishes far behind. But he showed he has a message, too.

His speech was a version of Sanders's message but with a different style and eloquence. Sanders's style is direct and blunt. O'Malley's rhetoric and cadence lift in other ways, and many times he brought the whole audience from their seats cheering.

"I'm not the only Democratic candidate for president who holds progressive values," he said. "But I am the only candidate for president with 15 years of executive experience." He said he offered the party "action not words."

He agrees with Sanders on minimum wage and trade and Social Security. He wants a major initiative to rebuild urban America. He attacks the "bullies of Wall Street" with just as much enthusiasm and edge.

"We must prosecute financial crimes, and if a bank is too big to fail, too big to jail and too big to manage, then it's too damn big and it needs to be broken up before it breaks us up," he said to cheers and applause.

Chafee and Webb

Chafee and Webb provided the evening's bookends, curiosities to many in the audience and so far barely registering in the consciousness of party activists.

Chafee, the former Rhode Island governor, spoke for less than seven minutes, denouncing Republican foreign policy as "failed, arrogant, unilateral, bellicose." He added: "We need to reject once and for all the belligerent advocates of conflict."

Webb was notable for declaring his differences with Obama on the newly negotiated nuclear agreement with Iran. And seeking to set himself apart from others, the former senator noted that he is the only candidate elected statewide in Virginia "with a union card, two purple hearts and three tattoos."

Republicans have had many such forums this year. For the Democrats, Friday was the first opportunity to see their candidates in the same room. Clinton delivered a rousing and polished speech, but Sanders and O'Malley showed there is appetite for an even harder-edge populist message among party activists. That will provide the tension as the Democratic contest evolves in the coming months.

Hillary Clinton slams Trump over criticism of McCain // WaPo // Sean Sullivan – July 18, 2015

At a state Democratic fundraising dinner here Saturday night, Hillary Rodham Clinton took sharp aim at Donald Trump and his Republican opponents, singling out the real estate mogul on his comments disparaging Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) over his military record.

"There's nothing funny about the hate he is spewing at immigrants and their families and now the insults he has directed at a genuine war hero, Sen. John McCain," she said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton said it was "shameful" that it took Trump's GOP opponents so long to "stand up to him," mostly referring to Trump's comments on immigrants.

Trump spoke at a Republican fundraising dinner about an hour's drive away in Hot Springs on Friday night.

"Last night the new Republican front-runner was here in Arkansas — yes Donald Trump. Finally, a candidate whose hair gets more attention than mine," quipped Clinton.

HRC NATIONAL COVERAGE

Clinton and Sanders Take Aim at Different Targets as Democrats Gather in Iowa // WSJ // Laura Meckler – July 18, 2015

Hillary Clinton and her chief rival for the Democratic presidential nomination, Sen. Bernie Sanders, each brought Iowa Democrats to their feet Friday night in a pair of fiery speeches, though their sharp tongues were aimed at different targets.

Speaking at an Iowa Democratic Party dinner, Mrs. Clinton trained her attacks on Republicans who she said would take the nation backward on the economy, health care and more. Mr. Sanders also took shots at the GOP, but he said the real problem is the nation's "billionaire class" who take home a disproportionate amount of the money and wield a disproportionate amount of the power in the nation's political system.

"This country belongs to all of us and not a handful of billionaires," he said. None of the needed changes would come about, he said, without a political revolution and a "mass movement coast to coast."

Mrs. Clinton's ambitions were less sweeping: a Democratic White House that would advance the interests of families and children and the idea that people who work hard should be able to get ahead. "I'm never going to let the Republicans rip away the progress we have made," she said.

In back-to-back speeches at the state party's annual Hall of Fame dinner, the two were joined by three others seeking the party's nomination, the first time all five candidates have appeared on the same stage. The ballroom was filled with some 1,300 Democrats.

Former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley also won a standing ovation as he embraced virtually every position that liberal Democrats are advocating. He said he would work to prosecute Wall Street wrongdoing, raise the minimum wage to $15 per hour, expand Social Security benefits, kill trade agreements, make college debt-free and reinstate rules that separated commercial and investment banking.

"If a bank is too big to fail, too big to jail and too big to manage, then it's too damn big and it needs to be broken up," he said.

He also tried to differentiate himself as the candidate with the most executive experience and a track record in Maryland of advancing gun control, same-sex marriage rights and other issues.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But his challenge was evident from the first words out of his mouth. Mired at the bottom of polls, he sought to introduce himself. “My name is Martin O’Malley. I’m running for president. And I need your help,” he said.

Two other long-shot candidates also shared the stage. Former Rhode Island Gov. Lincoln Chafee sounded his support for the nuclear agreement with Iran and for the opening of diplomatic relations with Cuba. “This is the right way to make the world safer,” he said of the Iran deal.

By the time former Virginia Sen. Jim Webb’s turn to speak arrived—he was last due to the alphabetical order of the speakers—dozens of people were streaming for the doors. He voiced concern about the Iran deal and highlighted his opposition to the Iraq war. “As a senator I would have never voted to authorize that invasion,” he said. That was a cloaked shot at Mrs. Clinton, who voted yes, and one of the few criticisms of any kind spoken about another candidate.

Going into the evening, most of the focus was on Mrs. Clinton, the former secretary of state who remains the front-runner, and Mr. Sanders, the Vermont senator who has gained ground in recent weeks.

Mrs. Clinton offered a withering attack on the GOP. She charged that Republicans would cut taxes for the rich, strip regulations for American corporations and promote “trickle-down economics,” which she called one of the worst ideas of the 1980s.

“It is right up there with New Coke, shoulder pads and big hair,” she said, mixing humor with policy. “I lived through it—there are photographs—and we’re not going back to that.”

Republicans argue that the economic policies under Democratic President Barack Obama have stifled growth, and are pushing for lower tax rates and fewer regulations on business, which they see as burdensome.

Mrs. Clinton also joked about Republicans who deflect questions about the impact of climate change by saying they aren’t scientists. “I’m not a scientist either,” she said. “I’m just a grandmother with two eyes and a brain.”

Some Republicans doubt the scientific consensus that human activity is warming the Earth, and say mostly Democratic proposals to combat it would hurt the economy.

Mr. Sanders was greeted with chants of “Bernie, Bernie” before he was even introduced. In his speech, he repeatedly denounced the concentration of wealth at the top of the income scale.

“Enough is enough. That has got to end and together we will end it,” he said. “This campaign is sending a profound message to the billionaire class. You can’t have it all. You can get huge tax breaks when children in America go hungry.”

He also vowed a single-payer health-care system, free tuition at public universities and to appoint Supreme Court justices who will overturn the Citizens United ruling, which allowed unlimited contributions to super PACs.

“There is nothing we can’t accomplish,” he said. “Please don’t think small. Think big.”

Friday also brought many Republican presidential candidates to the state. At a rally in eastern Iowa, Republican state party chair Jeff Kaufmann said, “Our message is clear to Democrats in Iowa and across the nation: The

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Republican Party is unified and ready to put a Republican back in the White House."

Why Hillary Clinton is pushing to reignite Democrats in Arkansas // WaPo // Sean Sullivan – July 18, 2015

The Hillary Rodham Clinton Children's Library and Learning Center, set on a six-acre campus here, is about a 15-minute drive away from the Bill and Hillary Clinton National Airport.

In between are the state capitol and the governor's mansion, now controlled by Republicans, who also hold all six of the state's seats in Congress.

In some ways, Clinton never left the state where she served as first lady for 12 years, as she has already etched her name in Arkansas history. In others, she's an outsider — the Democratic front-runner for president in a state that has moved sharply Republican in recent years.

Clinton returns Saturday evening to try to turn things around. She will be the feature speaker at a Democratic fundraising dinner some 2,000 people are expected to attend. The visit highlights Clinton's effort to fortify and revitalize state and local Democratic parties as she runs for president, including in areas where victories have been hard to come by in recent elections.

Arkansas is perhaps the best test of how well that strategy will work. Clinton and her husband Bill are practically political royalty here, giving them an advantage that President Obama and other Democratic leaders never had. But they face stiff headwinds months after Republicans dominated the midterm elections, despite them campaigning for Democratic candidates here.

Part of Clinton's plan to help state Democrats around the country is simply showing up and boosting ticket sales to dinners. Her speech at the Jefferson-Jackson dinner in North Little Rock comes after appearances at similar dinners in New Hampshire and Virginia in recent weeks.

Clinton aides say they are trying to build a broad national coalition that extends well beyond the states that vote early in the primary. Last month, the campaign said it had dispatched 51 organizers to build volunteer networks in the 46 non-early states and had held or scheduled 320 organizing meetings there.

Arkansas Democratic Party chairman Vincent Insalaco said the prospect of Clinton being at the top of the ticket in 2016 has made it easier to recruit Democrats to run for state and local offices.

Republicans confidently predict that Clinton, should she win the Democratic nomination, would not prevent them from winning Arkansas in the presidential election. And even the most optimistic Democrats acknowledge how difficult it would be to spring an upset. The last Democrat to carry the state was Bill Clinton in 1996. Obama lost twice by wide margins.

"She cannot revitalize the party in Arkansas because the party has no future at this time," said Arkansas Republican Party chairman Doyle Webb. "It's suffered great losses. If you look at our success over the past three election cycles, their infrastructure is down."

The Clinton campaign, which is trying to diminish the impression that she is the inevitable Democratic nominee, says it is focused on Arkansas as part of the primary process. The state is slated to be part of a full batch of "Super Tuesday" primaries on March 1.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“Hillary Clinton is committed to strengthening the Arkansas Democratic Party, and helping Democrats be successful up and down the ballot next year and beyond,” said Clinton spokesman Tyrone Gayle.

The massive electoral shift toward Republicans in Arkansas, once a Democratic stronghold, is part of a broader trend in Southern states in recent years. Clinton’s allies and friends hope her résumé of local accomplishments can help ease some of their suffering at the ballot box and bring more voters into the Democratic fold.

They point to her work on behalf of women, children, families and poor rural residents, citing her co-founding of Arkansas Advocates for Children and Families, a nonprofit advocacy group.

“If you look at many of Hillary’s domestic policy initiatives and interests, you can trace them back to her work in Arkansas,” said Skip Rutherford, a longtime Clinton adviser and friend who is the dean of the University of Arkansas’s Clinton School of Public Service.

Insalaco said Clinton left a defining political mark.

“She was a very different first lady,” he said. “I think she helped pave the way for women to run for office in Arkansas, for women to have success in politics in Arkansas.”

Republicans believe that Clinton’s accomplishments in the state will only carry her so far, since she has spent the past two decades outside of Arkansas — representing New York in the Senate from 2001 to 2009 and then serving as U.S. secretary of state for the next four years.

At a Republican fundraising dinner on Friday in Hot Springs, the crowd cheered when real-estate mogul and White House hopeful Donald Trump said Clinton “deserted” Arkansas.

Rutherford sees things differently. But he also sees a challenging landscape for Clinton in 2016.

“The base of support for Hillary Clinton has not shrunk in Arkansas,” Rutherford said. “But the demographics have changed.”

As Democrats face off, Clinton keeps focus on GOP // AP – July 18, 2015

Ignoring her primary challengers, Hillary Rodham Clinton focused instead on the expanding field of Republican contenders as she and her fellow Democrats tried to impress influential party activists in Iowa.

The fundraising face-off for the benefit of the state party came Friday night as the Democratic primary fight - long assumed to be just short of a coronation for Clinton - appeared to be heating up into a slightly more serious contest. In recent weeks, Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders has risen in the polls and packed arenas with voters eager to hear the message of the self-described socialist who's become Clinton's chief rival.

But rather than confront her most immediate political obstacle in a crucial primary state, Clinton took aim at the other party, vowing to never let Republicans "rip away the progress" made during the Obama administration.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Trickle-down economics has to be one of the worst ideas of the 1980s," Clinton said, evoking Republican policy from the Reagan era. "It is right up there with New Coke, shoulder pads and big hair."

Singling out former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, Clinton launched a familiar attack on his statement that Americans need to work longer hours.

"Americans don't need lectures -- they need raises," she said. "So if Republicans really want to help us, why don't they join us in breaking down barriers?"

Clinton additionally pledged an agenda of "small growth, fair growth, and long-term grown," because her campaign "has to be about how we unlock the potential of every American."

Sanders, too, refused to criticize his primary opponent directly. Earlier in the day he edged closer to an attack when he questioned whether Clinton would back the kinds of tough regulations for Wall Street that's become a rallying call for liberal Democrats.

"You'll have to ask Hillary Clinton her views on whether we should break up these large financial institutions," he said during an afternoon appearance in Cedar Rapids.

At the evening forum, Sanders called for a "political revolution" fueled by a "mass movement from coast to coast" that would end the influx of money into politics and take the country off "the path to oligarchy."

"The greed of the billionaire class has got to end and we are going to end it for them," he said. He added: "Please don't think small. Think big."

The Clinton campaign has signaled that it considers Sanders to be a legitimate challenger who will be running for the long haul, noting the $15.2 million he's raised - largely from small donors - in the first three months of the race.

They believe he will find a measure of support in Iowa, where the caucus system typically turns out the most passionate voters, and in New Hampshire, given Sanders' many decades representing neighboring Vermont in Congress. A recent Quinnipiac University poll showed that Sanders has even doubled his support in Iowa since May.

On Friday, Clinton's campaign said it bought $7.7 million worth of television advertising time in early voting states, its first ad buy for the 2016 contest. In Iowa, the campaign paid $3.6 million for time in all eight media markets that serve the state. An additional $4.1 million of airtime was purchased in New Hampshire, which holds the nation's first primary.

Unlike her rivals, Clinton has already built a vast campaign infrastructure, run from a multistory headquarters in New York City, with hundreds of staffers across the country. But so far the Clinton team has resisted any direct engagement with Sanders, fearing such an exchange might alienate the activists and small-dollar donors who will form the base of support in the general election if Clinton should win the nomination.

"You can see that Democrats are united, we are energized, and we are ready to win this election," Clinton said Friday night.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In a fiery address, she slammed the economic policy of former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, joked that businessman and TV star Donald Trump is "finally a candidate whose hair gets more attention than mine," and criticized Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker for targeting union power.

"That's why we can't let Republicans take us back," Clinton said. "We're not going back to the Wild West on Wall Street. We're not going back to denying climate change."

Besides Sanders and Clinton, the forum featured former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley, former Virginia Sen. Jim Webb and former Rhode Island Gov. Lincoln Chafee.

O'Malley introduced himself as a can-do former chief executive who tackled a series of problems in Maryland by promoting public education, freezing college tuition, passing a "Dream Act" for young immigrants and expanding family leave policies.

But like Sanders, he got some of his biggest applause when he talked about regulating and punishing Wall Street - underscoring the populist mood of the most active Democratic voters.

"Main Street struggles while Wall Street soars," he said. "If a bank is too big to fail, too big to jail and too big to manage, then it's too damn big."

In contrast to O'Malley and Sanders, Chafee and Webb both spoke of foreign policy issues at length.

Chaffee praised the contentious nuclear deal with Iran, exclaiming "What a change!"

"Avoiding war is worth every bit of our energy," the Rhode Island governor added. "This is the right way to make the world safer."

Clinton Eulogizes Promoter of National Civil Rights Museum // AP – July 18, 2015

Former President Bill Clinton led the eulogies Saturday for D'Army Bailey, a lawyer and judge who helped preserve the Memphis hotel where civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. was assassinated and turn it into the National Civil Rights Museum.

Bailey died last Sunday at age 73 after a long illness.

At his funeral attended by Memphis' mayor, other political leaders, lawyers and judges, Clinton heaped praise on Bailey for saving the Lorraine Motel, The Commercial Appeal (http://bit.ly/1MhNoOn) reported.

"The Lorraine Motel could be a parking lot for all you know today if it hadn't been for D'Army Bailey," the former president said.

"The man was moving all his life," Clinton added. "And he believed everything should have a moving purpose, including this museum. He left you and America a national treasure."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Bailey led the fight to preserve the crumbling Lorraine Motel, where King was slain while standing on a balcony on April 4, 1968. King had stayed at the hotel while marching and making speeches on behalf of striking sanitation workers who were protesting low wages and unsafe working conditions.

Bailey assembled donors to buy the hotel, which ultimately became the National Civil Rights Museum in 1991. The museum has since undergone an extensive renovation.

Bailey received his law degree from Yale and practiced civil rights law in New York before moving to California. He served on the Berkeley, California, city council from 1971 until 1973.

He later returned home to Memphis, where he practiced law and served as a judge.

Bailey also had small acting roles in several films, including "The People vs. Larry Flynt" and "How Stella Got Her Groove Back."

Hillary Clinton is ignoring Bernie Sanders — and it's a smart move // AP // Lisa Lerer – July 18, 2015

Ignoring her primary challengers, Hillary Rodham Clinton focused instead on the expanding field of Republican contenders as she and her fellow Democrats tried to impress influential party activists in Iowa.

The fundraising face-off for the benefit of the state party came Friday night as the Democratic primary fight — long assumed to be just short of a coronation for Clinton — appeared to be heating up into a slightly more serious contest.

In recent weeks, Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders has risen in the polls and packed arenas with voters eager to hear the message of the self-described socialist who's become Clinton's chief rival.

But rather than confront her most immediate political obstacle in a crucial primary state, Clinton took aim at the other party, vowing to never let Republicans "rip away the progress" made during the Obama administration.

"Trickle-down economics has to be one of the worst ideas of the 1980s," Clinton said, evoking Republican policy from the Reagan era. "It is right up there with New Coke, shoulder pads and big hair."

Sanders, too, refused to criticize his primary opponent directly. Earlier in the day he edged closer to an attack when he questioned whether Clinton would back the kinds of tough regulations for Wall Street that's become a rallying call for liberal Democrats.

"You'll have to ask Hillary Clinton her views on whether we should break up these large financial institutions," he said during an afternoon appearance in Cedar Rapids.

At the evening forum, Sanders called for a "political revolution" fueled by a "mass movement from coast to coast" that would end the influx of money into politics and take the country off "the path to oligarchy."

"The greed of the billionaire class has got to end and we are going to end it for them," he said. He added: "Please don't think small. Think big."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Clinton campaign has signaled that it considers Sanders to be a legitimate challenger who will be running for the long haul, noting the $15.2 million he's raised — largely from small donors — in the first three months of the race.

They believe he will find a measure of support in Iowa, where the caucus system typically turns out the most passionate voters, and in New Hampshire, given Sanders' many decades representing neighboring Vermont in Congress.

On Friday, Clinton's campaign said it bought $7.7 million worth of television advertising time in early voting states, its first ad buy for the 2016 contest.

In Iowa, the campaign paid $3.6 million for time in all eight media markets that serve the state. An additional $4.1 million of airtime was purchased in New Hampshire, which holds the nation's first primary.

Unlike her rivals, Clinton has already built a vast campaign infrastructure, run from a multistory headquarters in New York City, with hundreds of staffers across the country.

But so far the Clinton team has resisted any direct engagement with Sanders, fearing such an exchange might alienate the activists and small-dollar donors who will form the base of support in the general election if Clinton should win the nomination.

"You can see that Democrats are united, we are energized, and we are ready to win this election," Clinton said Friday night.

In a fiery address, she slammed the economic policy of former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, joked that businessman and TV star Donald Trump is "finally a candidate whose hair gets more attention than mine," and criticized Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker for targeting union power.

Besides Sanders and Clinton, the forum featured former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley, former Virginia Sen. Jim Webb and former Rhode Island Gov. Lincoln Chafee.

O'Malley introduced himself as a can-do former chief executive who tackled a series of problems in Maryland by promoting public education, freezing college tuition, passing a "Dream Act" for young immigrants and expanding family leave policies.

Hillary Clinton to hold private fundraiser near Pittsburgh // AP – July 18, 2015

Democratic presidential hopeful Hillary Clinton will attend a private fundraiser at a supporter’s home in the Pittsburgh suburbs next week.

The Pittsburgh Tribune-Review reported an email sent to Clinton supporters on Tuesday announced the fundraiser to be held at the home of community activist Cindy Shapira in Fox Chapel. The tony, wooded suburb is home to sprawling mansions and millionaires a few miles east of Pittsburgh.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The event called “Conversations with Hillary” lists contribution levels of $1,000 for a “friend” on up to $27,000, which qualifies one as an “event host.” That also includes getting to attend a reception with Clinton and membership in her Hillstarters program.

The newspaper reported the Wednesday fundraiser will be Clinton’s first western Pennsylvania stop since a brief Pittsburgh visit the day she announced her candidacy in April.

Hillary finds new major fundraisers to boost campaign // Politico // Tarini Parti & Theodoric Meyer – July 18, 2015

Hillary Clinton’s campaign has drawn in dozens of new bundlers who have raised $100,000 or more for her presidential campaign, though several big-name Democratic donors have not yet stepped up as major fundraisers.

Since launching her campaign three months ago, Clinton has attracted fundraising help from donors who did not bundle for either of President Barack Obama’s campaigns, according to a POLITICO analysis of a list of more than 100 “Hillblazers” — or top bundlers — voluntarily disclosed by the campaign this week. About 40 percent of her donors did not serve as bundlers for Clinton’s previous campaign or either of Obama’s presidential campaigns. And only about seven percent of those who bundled at least $100,000 for Obama in 2012 have raised that much for Clinton.

The absence from Clinton’s campaign bundler list, however, may mean that deep-pocketed donors have chosen another route of candidate support. In this presidential election, outside groups are already overshadowing official campaigns, and some major bundlers from previous elections may have opted to write big checks to Priorities USA Action, a super PAC supporting Clinton. Those details will not be made public until the end of July.

Bundlers pull together individual contributions capped at $2,700 — the federal limit for individuals in the primary — and their efforts can add up to big money. The fundraising is more time-consuming for wealthy donors than simply writing six- or seven-figure checks to super PACs, but inclusion on a campaign bundler list often comes with perks that give donors inside access. This week, for example, Hillblazers were treated to four hours of face time with top campaign officials at a Brooklyn Marriott hotel close to Clinton’s headquarters.

Overall, with money raised from the bundlers, Clinton’s campaign reported collecting roughly $47.5 million in the last three months.

Super PACs operate with no restrictions on fundraising, but they are not allowed to coordinate with campaigns. Super PAC reports to the Federal Election Commission will offer a more complete picture of Clinton’s big donor support.

“The sad reality of super PACs is that if the impact a bundler can make is waning, the influence of grassroots donors is exceedingly diminished,” said Bill Burton, who co-founded Priorities in the 2012 election cycle when it was supporting Obama. “But it’s important to note that bundlers are still critically important to the success of a campaign operation. Without them, no presidential campaign can raise the funds needed to be successful.”

The boldface names of Democratic donors missing from Clinton’s bundler list include billionaire environmentalist Tom Steyer; Hollywood moguls Steven Spielberg and Jeffrey Katzenberg; former Clinton adviser Vernon Jordan; Qualcomm founder Irwin Jacobs; Chicago Cubs co-owner Laura Ricketts; billionaire Warren Buffett; Salesforce founder Marc Benioff; and Vogue editor-in-chief Anna Wintour.

Most of them did show up as $2,700 contributors to Clinton, the maximum primary contribution. Some have even hosted Clinton fundraisers. But none have so far raised six-figures for Clinton, as they have done in past presidential elections.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Steyer hosted a fundraiser for Clinton at his San Francisco mansion in April. Ricketts co-hosted an event for the Democratic frontrunner in Chicago in May, and Jacobs is expected to host an August fundraiser.

Some new Clinton bundlers include lobbyists, who were barred from contributing to the Obama campaigns, and have been quick to return to Democratic presidential politics by raising cash for Clinton. They include Washington lobbyists Steve Elmendorf, David Jones, Jay Dunn, former Albuquerque Mayor Martin Chavez and former South Carolina Gov. James Hodges.

Other new bundlers are women like Allida Black, co-founder of the Ready for Hillary super PAC that laid the foundation for Clinton's White House bid, and former Clinton press secretary Lisa Caputo.

Black, a first-time bundler, said she's raised $117,000 so far for Clinton's bid and hopes to raise more.

"It's too important for me to stop. I think it's the most important election of my lifetime, and I think Hillary is someone I've watched since the early 70s, known since the 90s, and she is the candidate of my lifetime when it comes to issues I care about. So I have to put my money where my mouth is," Black said.

"The thing I'm enormously proud of is that a boat load of my money came from small-dollar donors," Black added. "My donors gave anywhere from $20 to $1,000, $500. Some even gave $5. I reached out to everyone I know because I wanted people to invest because its important to me and the country and important for Hillary. I find that men are receptive and women are eager."

Pamela Eakes, who has bundled for Obama and Clinton, told POLITICO in a recent interview that Clinton supporters tried to encourage women who lack money to write large super PAC checks to jump into fundraising.

"Strategically, we're doing what we've done for years," said Eakes, a major donor based in Seattle. "We've always reached out to women. This time the most qualified person to be president happens to be a woman and a mother. So it's not strategic, it's just natural."

Some of the Hillblazers are Clinton supporters who did not bundle for Obama. Now, they are making a comeback. They include Tracy Bernstein, who sits on the board of the nonprofit Sasha Bruce; Espirit co-founder Susie Tompkins Buell; longtime supporter and Clinton Foundation donor Lynn Forester de Rothschild; and Univision owner Haim Saban and his wife Cheryl.

Clinton is the only 2016 candidate so far to release bundler names. Disclosure is voluntary, and campaigns that name their bundlers typically don't provide exact amounts they've raised or their addresses and occupations, as campaigns are required to do for reports filed to the FEC.

GOP presidential contenders Jeb Bush and Scott Walker have said they will also voluntarily disclose their bundlers, but have not yet released the information.

Hillary Clinton slams Trump's 'shameful' comments on McCain's war record // Politico // Annie Karni – July 18, 2015

Hillary Clinton sharply rebuked Donald Trump on Saturday for his "shameful" comments that Sen. John McCain was not a war hero because he was captured in Vietnam.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton also moved quickly to erase any daylight between Trump and the rest of the GOP field, where the real-estate mogul and reality television personality has moved from sideshow to the current leader in the polls.

“Donald Trump, finally a candidate whose hair gets more attention than mine,” Clinton quipped at a Democratic dinner here. “But there’s nothing funny about the hate he is spewing at immigrants and families — and now the insults he has directed at a genuine war hero, Sen. John McCain.

“It’s shameful, and so is the fact that it took so long for his fellow Republican candidates to start standing up to him,” she said. “The sad truth is if you look at many of their policies, it can be hard to tell the difference.”

Clinton made her comments at the annual Jefferson-Jackson dinner in Little Rock, in front of a crowd of about 1,500 Democrats. It was a brief, half-day homecoming for Clinton, her first visit to her de facto home state since she announced her candidacy in April.

In her keynote address, she gave an impassioned version of her stump speech, talking about paid leave, childcare, equal pay for equal work, universal preschool, and refinancing student debt. She reiterated her promise to hold individuals on Wall Street accountable for actions that lead to economic crises.

And she criticized the Republican field as a generic whole. “They may have some fresh faces, but they are the party of the past,” she said. “Trickle-down economics has to be one of the worst ideas of the 1980s. It is right up there with New Coke, shoulder pads and big hair. I lived through that. There are photographs. And believe me we’re not going back.”

After arriving in town late Saturday afternoon, Clinton visited the house she and Bill Clinton lived in when they first moved to Little Rock from Fayetteville, after Bill Clinton was elected state attorney general in 1977. She also made a brief stop at the Clinton Presidential Center, and drove by their old 1992 campaign headquarters, before arriving at the Verizon Center to keynote the dinner. She was scheduled to fly out Saturday night after her speech, an aide said.

Arkansas has changed dramatically since the Clintons were the stars of the state’s Democratic Party more than three decades ago. Democrats have been trounced here in recent elections, where the GOP now holds a majority at all levels of government in a state that used to be a Democratic stronghold. In his 2012 reelection campaign, President Barack Obama lost Arkansas by 24 points. Former Democratic governor and close Clinton ally Mike Beebe, the one stalwart Democratic survivor, left office in January after he was term-limited out.

The changing politics of Arkansas were on display Friday night, where Trump was warmly received by a crowd of over 1,000 Republicans at a GOP dinner in Hot Springs, Bill Clinton’s boyhood home.

But inside the overly air-conditioned Verizon Center, state Democrats were trying to keep both the pounding heat and the bleak political map out.

“I’m here to tell you the Democratic party is alive and well in Arkansas!” said state Democratic Party chairman Vince Insalaco.

For her part, Clinton acknowledged that last year was “a hard one for Democrats” in Arkansas. But she put a positive spin on it. “Don’t forget, voters did come out and pass an increase in the minimum wage,” she said. “Arkansas voters know paychecks need to grow. We just have to offer a plan for more growth and more fairness they can believe in and vote for.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The arena was filled with longtime Clinton allies like Beebe; Mack McLarty, who served as White House chief of staff; former Sen. Blanche Lincoln; former Sen. David Pryor; Gen. Wesley Clark; and Lynda Dixon, Bill Clinton's former personal secretary during his years as Arkansas governor, among others. The crowd was thrilled to welcome Clinton home — a large portrait of the former Secretary of State was sold at a pre-dinner auction for $19,000.

Speaking to reporters before Clinton took the stage, Beebe said Democrats are suffering because Arkansans are "mad at the White House. They're mad at the president, in Arkansas."

But he said Clinton can distance herself from Obama without being disloyal to a president she served under. "She can row her own boat," he said. "She will be loyal, as she should be. She has her own plans, her own policies."

He also acknowledged that Trump's entry into the race is good for Clinton. "Good, I hope he wins," he said when asked about Trump's large and supportive crowd here Friday night.

As for whether Clinton could win here, he acknowledged in today's environment, "it will be difficult, but yes. If anyone on that side of the aisle right now [has a chance,] she does. but it will be an uphill battle because the state has gone significantly red."

Hillary Clinton Calls Donald Trump Comments 'Shameful' // Bloomberg // Jennifer Epstein – July 18, 2015

Donald Trump's dismissive comments about Senator John McCain's military service in the Vietnam War were "shameful," Hillary Clinton said Saturday, joining most of her would-be Republican presidential rivals in defending the former prisoner of war.

Hours after the real estate mogul-turned presidential candidate set off an uproar in the Republican party with his suggestion that McCain, who spent more than five years as a prisoner of war in Vietnam, was "not a war hero," Clinton lambasted Trump in a speech at the Arkansas Democratic Party's annual Jefferson-Jackson dinner.

Clinton, who served in the Senate with McCain, broadened her critique of Trump beyond his comments about the Arizona senator to include Trump's incendiary remarks about immigration — which set off his feud with McCain.

"There's nothing funny about the insults he's directed at a genuine war hero."

"There is nothing funny about" how Trump has talked about immigrants or "the insults he's directed at a genuine war hero, Senator John McCain," Clinton told her audience in North Little Rock. "It's shameful."

Noting the deference many Republicans have accorded the outspoken billionaire, whose take-no-prisoners speaking style has rocketed him towards the top of his party's presidential field, Clinton questioned why it "took so long for most of his fellow Republican candidates to stand up to him."

Some Republicans, including McCain, have publicly disagreed with Trump's comments on immigration, including a charge that Mexicans illegally crossing the border are "rapists." But it was not until Trump attacked McCain, the 2008 Republican presidential nominee, that condemnation became more vocal and widespread.

Almost every major Republican candidate running for president, with the notable exception of Texas Senator Ted

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Cruz, rounded on Trump Saturday after he pooh-poohed McCain's time in the infamous Hanoi Hilton, where the the Navy pilot was tortured to the point where he says he considered suicide. “He’s not a war hero," Trump told a gathering of evangelicals in Ames, Iowa. "He’s a war hero because he was captured. I like people who weren’t captured."

In her visit to North Little Rock, which brought her back to the state where she was once first lady, Clinton also commented on Thursday's shooting in Chattanooga, Tennessee. A Marine from Arkansas was among the five people killed by a gunman who opened fire at two military facilities there.

The incident "breaks our hearts but it also stiffens our resolve," she said. "We will not be intimidated by terrorists. We’ll be strong, we’ll be smart and we’ll defend our country and our values."

Hillary Clinton Condemns Donald Trump’s ‘Insults’ of ‘Genuine War Hero’ John McCain // ABC News // Liz Kreutz – July 18, 2015

Leave it to Donald Trump to help Republicans and Democrats find common ground.

Hillary Clinton joined the chorus of presidential candidates from both parties Saturday to condemn Trump for saying Sen. John McCain, a decorated Vietnam War veteran, was not a war hero.

During her headlining speech at a Democratic dinner in Little Rock, Ark. Clinton called Trump’s assertion “shameful” and described McCain as a “genuine war hero.”

“Donald Trump, finally a candidate whose hair gets more attention that mine,” Clinton quipped.

“But, there’s nothing funny about the hate he is spewing at immigrants and their families, and now the insults he’s directed at a genuine war hero, Senator John McCain,” she added. “It’s shameful, and so is the fact that it took so long for most of his fellow Republican candidates to start standing up to him.”

Earlier today, Trump came under fire for saying at a campaign event in Iowa that McCain is only a war hero “because he was captured.”

The comment has drawn criticism from a slew of his Republican presidential challengers, as well as Clinton and Secretary of State John Kerry.

“I have known John McCain for more than thirty years. We've had our share of disagreements and still do today. But one thing I know is beyond debate is that John McCain is a hero, a man of grit and guts and character personified,” Kerry said in a statement released tonight.

McCain spent five and a half years as a POW after he was captured in 1967 while flying his 23rd bombing mission over North Vietnam. His aircraft was shot down by a missile and he nearly drowned landing in a lake. He had his shoulder crushed by his captors, who refused to treat his injuries, which were exacerbated by beatings administered during interrogations. He survived a program of severe torture and his wartime injuries restrict him from lifting his arms above his head.

Clinton made her attack against Trump during her first trip back to Arkansas since becoming a presidential candidate.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In her speech, Clinton attacked the GOP for being the “party of the past.” She also reminisced fondly about her years spent in Little Rock.

Looking out at the many familiar faces she saw in the crowd, Clinton thanked her longtime friends: “I hope you know that you mean the world to me and my family,” she said.

At first cattle call, Democrats hone name-free Clinton attacks // CNN // Dan Merica – July 18, 2015

Hillary Clinton's opponents didn't have to use her name in order to launch attacks against the Democratic frontrunner at Friday night's Iowa Democratic Party Hall of Fame dinner.

The pluses and minuses of Clinton's frontrunner status were on full display at the dinner. The 1,300-person audience was largely dominated by Clinton supporters, who hooped and hollered throughout her speech. But the fact that she leads every national and state poll was also the reason her opponents honed all of their rhetorical fire against Clinton, not the four other Democrats in attendance.

Former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley was the most aggressive at targeting Clinton during the first event of the presidential campaign to include all five Democratic candidates -- O'Malley, Clinton, former Virginia Sen. Jim Webb, former Rhode Island Gov. Lincoln Chafee and Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders.

The former Maryland governor sprinkled his speech with subtle knocks against positions Clinton has taken and areas where the governor's team feels she is weak.

"We didn't just talk about it, we actually got it done," O'Malley said, casting himself as the only candidate with 15 years of executive experience. The line, while biographical, is also meant to knock Clinton, who O'Malley's campaign believes is all talk but no action when it comes to progressives issues.

O'Malley also subtly knocked Clinton on minimum wage, trade and energy. "I am the first candidate but I am not the last" to call for a 100% clean electric grid by 2050, he said, seemingly alluding to the fact Clinton would not commit to climate change demands at an event Thursday in New Hampshire.

On trade, O'Malley hit the North American Free Trade Agreement, a trade law that was approved under President Bill Clinton's administration but is deplored by unions.

"Many of you remember the return of NAFTA. It was nada," he said.

Asked by CNN afterward whether the lines were directed at Clinton, O'Malley said, "No, they're directed at our country's future."

He added later, "I'm offering my candidacy and I'm highlighting the things that I've done. And I hope each of the candidates will highlight the things that they have done. One of the things that I have done is accomplish many of the progressive goals and values that the rest of the field is committed to, and I don't doubt their sincerity ... but I actually have the experience in having gotten that done. That's a distinguishing characteristic that I offer, but it's up to the people to decide."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton, for her part, did not return the attacks, instead choosing to use her 15 minutes to describe the reason she was running, attack Republicans and stress the importance of building up the Democratic Party.

"We Democrats are in the future business. But from the Republican candidates for president, we see the opposite," Clinton said. "Now they may have some fresh faces, but they are the party of the past."

Clinton even reached back to Republicans of presidencies past, calling "trickle-down" economics "one of the worst ideas of the 1980s," one that is "right up there with New Coke, shoulder pads and big hair."

"I lived through it," she said, "and there are photographs, and we are not going back to that."

Clinton also looked to sum the entire 15-person Republican field into one candidate: Donald Trump, the businessman whose bombastic statements about Mexicans have revolted most Democrats and many Republicans. Calling him the "new Republican frontrunner" -- a nod to his standing in the polls -- Clinton said she was happy there is "finally a candidate whose hair gets more attention than mine."

Her only mention of her Democratic opponents was at the top of her speech when she said she was happy to be there with "my fellow candidates."

That was true for all candidates except for Webb, who notably complimented Sanders multiple times in his speech.

"Bernie, you always fire me up," Webb said of the blunt independent senator.

Webb told CNN after the speech that there was "no real strategy" to heralding Sanders.

"I think Bernie Sanders raises a lot of good issues to be discussed," he said. "I wouldn't necessarily agree with all of his solutions."

Webb noted in his speech that if he were president, he would have "never urged the invasion of Iraq." Clinton in 2002 voted to authorize military action in Iraq, a decision that hurt her mightily in her failed 2008 presidential bid.

Webb also said he wouldn't have used "military force in Libya during what was called the 'Arab Spring.'" Clinton advocated military force in Libya while she was secretary of state.

But O'Malley and Webb were not the only Democrats to knock Clinton.

Going into the event, Clinton's aides anticipated that their candidate would draw much of the fire. After the speech, all said that they were surprised O'Malley didn't hit Clinton harder.

And other Democrats knocked the frontrunner without naming her.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Sanders, the candidate surging in the polls both nationally and in Iowa, did not attack Clinton. Around 200 supporters at 20 tables backed Sanders, who delivered a stump speech that promised universal health care, tuition-free college and a breakup of the big banks.

Chafee opened the event, but only spoke for six minutes, less than half the 15 minutes allotted to each candidate.

He used his speech to introduce himself to the audience and outline his views on climate, war and raising the minimum wage.

He received a polite response, but nowhere near the excitement generated by Clinton, O'Malley and Sanders.

The sheer fact that all Democrats were at Friday night's event was notable. Republicans have had cattle calls -- events that bring a high number of candidates -- nearly every week, but this was the first of the Democratic nomination fight.

'Older,' 'Wiser,' 'Richer' Donald Trump Would Be Better President Than Hillary Clinton, Bill Kristol Says //
ABC News // Ben Bell – July 18, 2015

Real estate mogul Donald Trump would make a better president than Hillary Clinton, Bill Kristol, editor of the Weekly Standard, told ABC News.

Kristol, who joins the "This Week" roundtable Sunday and is also an ABC News contributor, shared his thoughts on the 2016 race for president, the Iran nuclear deal struck this week and more over email.

1. Is Donald Trump helping or hurting the Republican Party? Also, what are Trump's chances for capturing the Republican nomination for president?

Kristol: Trump's chances of being the GOP nominee are small but not nonexistent. And he's not hurting the GOP, and is probably helping by broadening the tent. Incidentally, if you look at match-ups of the various GOP possibilities with Hillary Clinton, they're doing no worse today than before Trump emerged. So what evidence is there -- as opposed to knee-jerk conventional wisdom -- that he's hurting the GOP?

2. Would Donald Trump make a better president than Hillary Clinton?

Kristol: Yes. After all, he's older, wiser, and richer!

3. You called the nuclear deal struck with Iran this week "a deal worse than even we imagined possible." So, what would have been your alternate plan? Do you see this development changing Israel's view on a potential military strike?

Kristol: The alternative would be to keep the sanctions in place (or perhaps ratchet them up), increase diplomatic and political pressure on the regime, keep on sabotaging the nuclear program, etc.

'This Week' Powerhouse Puzzlers: Test Your Knowledge

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Clintons: Then and Now

4. Looking outside those who are openly seeking the White House, who do you think will be closely looked at for the VP spot on the eventual Republican ticket for president?

Kristol: GOP VP's: Rubio (if not the nominee), Martinez, Ayotte, Kasich, Cotton.

5. How do you see the issue of gay marriage playing in this election? Should GOP candidates focus on it?

Kristol: Probably not a big issue, and probably not one GOP candidates will focus on. The Supreme Court and the Constitution ("judicial supremacy") could be a big issue, though.

Clinton, Sanders share the stage in Iowa // The Hill // Elliot Smilowitz – July 18, 2015

Democratic presidential candidates shared the stage at a party event in Iowa on Friday night, but rather than take aim at each other, they took turns attacking Republicans.

The Iowa Democratic Party Hall of Fame dinner was a shared platform for five 2016 contenders — Hillary Clinton, Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.), former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley, former Rhode Island Gov. Lincoln Chafee and former Sen. Jim Webb, according to the Associated Press.

Clinton, the primary's leader in the polls, also led the way in GOP attacks, accusing Republicans of trying to "rip away the progress we have made" and bring back Reagan-era policies.

"Trickle-down economics has to be one of the worst ideas of the 1980s," she said. "It is right up there with New Coke, shoulder pads and big hair."

Clinton took particular aim at businessman Donald Trump, who has rocketed to the top of many Republican presidential polls.

"Finally, a candidate whose hair gets more attention than mine," she joked.

"But there's nothing funny about the hate he is spewing about immigrants and their families," Clinton added. "It really is shameful."

She also called out by name Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker for his battles to declaw labor unions, as well as former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush for his economic policy.

Sanders used his speech to evoke populist messages, saying "the greed of the billionaire class has got to end — and we are going to end it for them."

He called for a "political revolution" to end big money in politics, and a renewed focus on helping the little guy.

"The issue of wealth and income inequality is the great moral issue of the time, the great economic issue of our timethe great political issue of our time," he said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

O'Malley touted his liberal record in Maryland on immigration, education, gay marriage and the minimum wage.

"We didn't just talk about it," he said. "We got it done."

He also joined the other candidates in attacking Wall Street.

"If a bank is too big to fail, too big to jail and too big to manage, then it's too damn big," O'Malley said.

Hillary Clinton turns up the heat as Iowa takes on general election feel // The Guardian // Ben Jacobs – July 18, 2015

With Hillary Clinton maintaining a strong lead in the polls in the first-in-the-nation caucus state, her campaign is increasingly looking like a "post-caucus" operation, focused on the general election.

At the Iowa Democratic party's Hall of Fame dinner in Cedar Rapids on Friday night, the first time all five declared Democratic candidates for the White House were together on one stage, Clinton gave a fiery speech which almost seemed more appropriate for a general election rally than an attempt to rally the base.

The former secretary of state seemed to ignore not just her Democratic opponents but the host of issues raising debate on the left, from student loans to a $15 minimum wage. Instead, Clinton attacked three Republican presidential candidates – Donald Trump, Scott Walker and Jeb Bush – by name while also criticizing unnamed people who dismissed her emphasis on women's issues.

In contrast, her chief Democratic rivals, former Maryland governor Martin O'Malley and Vermont senator Bernie Sanders, both hit a list of progressive hobby horses, including minimum wage and immigration reform.

Sanders got a rapturous reception from fans who started cheering before his name was mentioned, continued through his call for "a political revolution" in the US and all the way through the time he sat down. Both mentioned conservatives – Trump in O'Malley's case and the Koch Brothers for Sanders – but they presented them simply as symbols of what they found morally abhorrent, rather than as potential electoral opponents.

The "general election" approach was nothing new for Clinton. In a rally before the event, held in a steamy basement underneath the Veterans Memorial building, she delivered a fiery speech to a crowd of more than 300, attacking Republican economic plans by stating "we've trickled on enough" and warning of the dire consequences of a GOP president in 2016.

"It was awesome," said local state representative Art Staed. The room had a pep rally feel as a number of Clinton organizers took the stage to fire up the crowd and pass the time until the former secretary of state arrived. While the campaign provided free pizza, they charged for water, soda and even alcoholic beverages. In the rather warm room, water quickly sold out.

The crowd featured a mix of Clinton loyalists and those curious to see the Democratic candidate in the flesh on a relatively rare public appearance in Iowa. Vlora Ajeti came from Illinois. A Kosovan American, she said she would be forever grateful to the Clinton family for what Bill Clinton did for Kosovo.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In contrast, Linda Early of Cedar Rapids said of Clinton: “She’s as good as the others.”

Early seemed supportive but not exactly converted to the cause.

In Iowa, Clinton has mostly used roundtables or private gatherings with invited guests. With the exception of one fundraiser in the fall of 2014, she did not set foot in the state between her 2008 loss in the Iowa caucuses and the April announcement of her candidacy for 2016. She did not campaign on behalf of local Democrats or show up at party events. However, her campaign has been organizing in the state, putting together a massive footprint.

The room at the Hall of Fame dinner felt that Clinton influence. Reporters were penned off, either because mixing press and attendees presented security issues – according to the secret service – or to “allow the event to move along”, according to a spokesman for the Iowa Democratic Party. This represented a major shift, according to one Iowa Democratic insider, from past practice at party events.

This did not mean that there were no old-fashioned politics at the event. On the street outside, a sign war was waged between supporters of Clinton and O’Malley in the nearly 100F heat. Staffers from both campaigns waved signs and shouted cheers. Unsurprisingly, Clinton had more people – O’Malley supporters, divided between those affiliated with his campaign and his Super Pac, struggled mightily to stay competitive.

The Sanders campaign did not have any such presence. Instead, 37 supporters stayed in the air conditioning and got to meet the candidate.

Sanders has built a devoted fanbase, similar in some ways to that of the libertarian Ron Paul in 2008 and 2012. Sanders supporters showed up the dinner covered in paraphernalia. Clinton or O’Malley supporters might be happy with a sticker – Sanders fans were wearing T-shirts.

The Vermont senator, who held a veterans’ event earlier on Friday, has built a following so devoted that at least one attendee had flown halfway across the country to see him. Claire Harrison had flown in from California. She told the Guardian “I wanted to hear him” and said she had combined the trip with a visit with a friend in Omaha.

Sanders has built a robust state operation around Pete D’Alessandro, a veteran Iowa operative. While he has not quite run a traditional Democratic caucus campaign, Sanders has still been a frequent visitor who has been showing up in the state for more than a year. Like Barack Obama, he is building a passionate following composed of traditional lefties and first-time caucus goers.

Jay Lion of Spencer, Iowa, told the Guardian he had specifically changed his registration from Independent to Democratic in order to caucus for Sanders. A former factory worker currently on disability while getting dialysis treatment, he said he had been waiting to support Sanders for president since he first saw the Vermonter on C-Span in 2002.

O’Malley has long been running a traditional caucus effort in Iowa. He has repeatedly visited the state, dispatching staffers to work on various Democratic campaigns in 2014 there and doling out money to local Democrats.

At an event held on Thursday night in Ottumwa, the Marylander spoke to a crowd of about 40 who gathered in a hotel ballroom. He emphasized his progressive bona fides, telling attendees: “I think we should raise the minimum wage to $15 wherever we can – however we can.” The evening felt far more like a traditional Iowa caucus event, in which candidates go out of their way to court local Democrats. O’Malley walked into the room with a birthday cake for the local county chair – his campaign left with a signed supporter card from her.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

At the Ottumwa event, Joe Judge, the chair of the local Democratic party in rural Monroe County who was leaning towards O'Malley, told the Guardian he thought O'Malley was the only Democratic candidate who could win a general election in his area. A loyal Obama supporter who had met all three candidates, he said he simply thought after due consideration that Clinton and Sanders would lose the rural, heavily Irish area to a Republican in November 2016 – but that O'Malley could win.

At the Hall of Fame diner on Friday, the crowd cheered all three candidates – each of the three campaigns had purchased 200 tickets for supporters. The question, though, remained: which candidate will Iowa Democrats support in February?

Given changes in the way candidates are campaigning, the vote could determine not only the future of the nation, but the future of the Iowa caucus as well.

Hillary Clinton delivers fiery speech at Democratic party hall of fame dinner // The Guardian // Ben Jacobs – July 18, 2015

Hillary Clinton delivered a fiery barn burner to a gathering of more than 1,300 Iowa Democrats Friday night.

At a Democratic party hall of fame dinner in Cedar Rapids, Clinton attacked three Republican presidential candidates by name as well as railing against Iowa's Republican governor, Terry Branstad. The Democratic frontrunner did not mention any of her opponents in the Democratic primary by name.

The speech felt more like a general election address with Clinton going after both Jeb Bush and Scott Walker by name and arguing Democrats "are in the future business … but [the Republicans] are the party of the past". But perhaps the best applause came for her attack on the state's Republican governor who is currently in a showdown with the state legislature after vetoing education funding.

The former US secretary of state built on her typical stump speech by delivering a series of cable news ready zingers towards conservatives. Clinton mocked those Republicans who express skepticism about climate change by claiming "I'm not a scientist" by declaring: "I am not a scientist either. I'm just a grandmother with two eyes and a brain and I am not going to let them take us backwards."

The former secretary of state also took a jibe at the GOP's economical policy, saying "trickle down economics was one of worst ideas of 1980s along with New Coke, shoulder pads and big hair".

Clinton also took care to emphasize her work on women's issues, highlighting the struggles of her mother's impoverished childhood and her work as a young lawyer at the Children's Defense Fund.

Elizabeth Warren Gives Hillary Clinton Economic Advice (Sort Of) In a Fiery Public Speech // Bustle // Lauren Barbato – July 18, 2015

Days after Hillary Clinton delivered her first major campaign speech on economic issues, Sen. Elizabeth Warren took to the Netroots Nation stage on Friday to fulfill her role as America's progressive savior — but the Donald Trumps and Sarah Palins of the Republican Party weren't her only targets. In a passionate headlining address at the gathering of progressive activists, Warren seemingly gave Hillary Clinton some economic advice , including a stark ultimatum about Wall Street politics. The Massachusetts senator's pointed words will likely raise some eyebrows in the Democratic Party, especially as Clinton's biggest challenger, the progressive Sen. Bernie Sanders, continues to see his popularity surge.

We probably shouldn't be too surprised over Warren's speech. The senator, who has publicly supported both

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton and her friend Sanders in the past, hardly shies away from calling out those in her own party. But the timing, of course, is obvious: Was Warren not impressed with Clinton's recently revealed economic plan, which was hailed by many writers and news outlets as "fiery ," feminist," "pro-immigrant" and even "progressive "?

Here's a look at where Clinton and Warren may differ on economic reform — and what Warren wants Clinton to do about it if she wins the White House in 2016:

Wall Street In The White House

As we know, Warren isn't that popular on Wall Street, but Wall Street loves Clinton. Or they loved the old Clinton, anyway. On Monday, Clinton took a harsher stance on her former allies and backers, saying:

As a former senator from New York, I know firsthand the role that Wall Street can and should play in our economy, helping main street grow and prosper, and boosting new companies that make America more competitive globally. But as we all know in the years before the crash, financial firms piled risk upon risk, and regulators in Washington either could not or would not keep up. I was alarmed by this gathering storm and called for addressing the risks of derivatives, cracking down on subprime mortgages and improving financial oversight.

Under President Obama's leadership we have imposed tough new rules that deal with some of the challenges on Wall Street. Those rules have been under assault by Republicans in Congress and those running for president. I will fight back against these attacks and protect the reforms we have made. We can do that, and still ease burdens on community banks to encourage responsible loans to local people and businesses they know and trust.

But perhaps Warren wasn't convinced. The Massachusetts senator told the large crowd at Netroots Nation:

I think anyone running for that job — anyone who wants the power to make every key economic appointment and nomination across the federal government — should say loud and clear that they agree: We don't run this country for Wall Street and mega corporations. We run it for people.

Beyond Dodd-Frank

Both Warren and Clinton brought up Dodd-Frank, the Wall Street-consumer protection legislation passed in the wake of the financial collapse and recession. "Progressives believe that Wall Street needs stronger rules and tougher legal enforcement — and that, five years after Dodd-Frank — it's time to stop pretending and really end 'too big to fail' with rules like the Glass-Steagall Act," Warren said Friday, referring to the Great Depression-era legislation that she wants to revive.

Sanders recently said he would support Warren's new Glass-Steagall Act , but Clinton advisers said this week that she would not support the reform. Coincidentally, it was Clinton's husband, Bill, who repealed the Glass-Steagall Act in 1999, after nearly 60 years of economic reform.

Although she has wavered on Glass-Steagall, Clinton did address more Wall Street regulation in her sweeping economic address, though the promises were vague. Clinton said Monday:

We also have to go beyond Dodd-Frank. Too many of our major financial institutions are still too complex and too risky. And the problems are not limited to the big banks that get all the headlines. Serious risks are emerging from institutions in the so-called shadow banking system, including hedge funds, high-frequency traders, non- bank finance companies. So many new kinds of entities, which receive little oversight at all.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Boosting The Middle Class

Warren has made middle-class Americans the crux of her career, so it's no surprise she said on Friday that she wants a president who will "embrace the kind of ambitious economic policies that we need to rebuild opportunity and a strong middle class in this country." Will this person be Clinton?

Well, it seems the middle class is the focus of Clinton's campaign, and her recent speech drove at least one point home: Wages. Wages. And more wages.

"The defining economic challenge of our time clear. We must raise incomes for hard-working Americans, so they can afford a middle-class life," Clinton said in her speech Monday. "We must drive steady income growth that lifts up families, and lifts up our country. And that will be my mission, from the first day I am president to the last."

Hillary Forbids Young Supporters from Talking to Press // The Weekly Standard // Daniel Halper – July 18, 2015

"Here's what struck me," said Susan Page of USA Today, "when I read the coverage in the Des Moines Register this morning. Jennifer Jacobs, who's been on your show, was covering this last night. Big demonstrations outside of young people for O'Malley and Hillary Clinton. She went up to the Clinton supporters -- these are protesters for Clinton -- and they were told they were not allowed to [speak to] a reporter."

Page continued, "Now, why in the world would the campaign tell their own supporters who came out to campaign in favor Hillary Clinton ... these are the young people, college kids, for Hillary, and they've been told they can't talk to reporters. Why in the world would you do that?

"This raises some warning flags for Hillary Clinton campaign that is trying to control their supporters."

Together the First Time, Hillary Clinton and Her Rival 2016 Democrats Still Play Nice // The National Journal // Emily Schultheis – July 18, 2015

It had all the makings of a showdown: after months in each other's footsteps on the campaign trail, all five 2016 Democratic presidential contenders were gathered in the same room for the first time Friday night, ready to stand in front of each other and tell a 1,300-strong crowd why they,and not their rivals, should get the party's presidential nod.

But when the five—Hillary Clinton, Bernie Sanders, Martin O'Malley, Jim Webb and Lincoln Chafee—spoke here tonight, there was little rancor to be found. Instead, the candidates took turns touting their own credentials, occasionally praising each other, and ripping into the Republican 2016 field.

"You can see that Democrats are united, we are energized and we are ready to win this election," Clinton said.

Indeed, throughout the evening—the fundraiser for the state Democratic party—was remarkably free of intra-party fireworks. The five candidates refrained from criticizing each other in any explicit way. In fact, the only one of them who even uttered an opponent's name was Webb, whose speech directly followed followed Sanders and made several praising references to him.

Some of the others, including Sanders and Chafee, made general references to the other Democrats in attendance without naming any names. Sanders, for example, spoke of "great Democrats who have dedicated their entire lives to public service." "This is a great team and I thank them all," he said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Unlike the Republicans, who have gathered at a handful of cattle call-style events across the country this year—and will appear on stage in Ohio together at their first debate in just a few weeks—Democrats have not held similar events.

Instead, the gathering of presidential hopefuls focused their attention on the Republican Party, offering up criticisms of the 2016 GOP field and framing the party's philosophy as a whole as outdated.

The five candidates spoke alphabetically, which meant Chafee was first, followed by Clinton. When she came on stage, supporters began chanting, "Hil-lar-y! Hil-lar-y!" Clinton told some personal stories in her speech, touching on frequently-cited anecdotes about becoming a grandmother and her mother's struggles as a young girl. But she saved most of her comments for criticism of the Republican Party.

"I am running for everyone who's ever been knocked down but refused to be knocked out," she said. In closing, she hoped for a country "where a father can tell his daughter you can be anything you want to be, even President of the United States."

Sanders' vocal and enthusiastic supporters, who have been drawing him big crowds and are beginning to form the basis for his campaign's organization here in Iowa, The chants for Sanders—"Bernie! Bernie!"—started barely seconds after O'Malley, who spoke third, walked off stage. And throughout the Vermont senator's speech, in addition to loud cheers, supporters were vocal: some shouted "Preach!" or "That's right!" after each point he made.

"No president can bring about the changes that we need in this country unless there is a political revolution," Sanders said. He got perhaps his biggest applause line—from people across the room—when he called for the Supreme Court to overturn its now-infamous Citizens United decision.

Clinton took aim at the Republican economic philosophy: "Trickle-down economics has to be one of the worst ideas of the 1980s. It is right up there with new Coke, shoulder pads and big hair," Clinton quipped. "I lived through it and there are photographs—and we are not going back to that."

She went after Florida Gov. Jeb Bush by name, criticizing his remark that Americans want to work "longer hours."

"In the past week, Gov. Bush scrambled to explain his statement that Americans need to work longer hours. He now says he just wants part-time workers to be able to find full-time jobs," she said. "Well, so do I. There's just one problem: his policies and the policies of all these Republican candidates would make that harder, giving more tax cuts to those at the top won't do anything for part-time workers."

O'Malley lamented what he described as the decline of the Republican Party, including the rhetoric of business mogul Donald Trump.

"They once had leaders and visionaries: Lincoln, Eisenhower," O'Malley said. "Now they create traffic jams and dismiss science."

Of the other Democrats, O'Malley had a strong contingent of supporters in the room and got loud cheers and applause when he appeared on stage. His supporters—both the official campaign and the super PAC—cheered loudly, and for hours, outside the Cedar Rapids Convention Center before the event began.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The lesser-known Democratic candidates, who did not have nearly as many supporters in the room, had a hard time getting traction with the crowd. Chafee, the former Rhode Island governor, spoke for just 6 minutes of his allotted 15. "I'm the only presidential candidate who has been a mayor, a U.S. senator and a governor," he said. "And throughout these experiences I have tried to earn a reputation for courage and honesty."

And when Webb prepared to speak—he was fifth of the five candidates—some attendees began filing out of the room before he even made it on stage. "I'm going to turn the lights out tonight, folks," Webb joked.

If there was conflict to be found Friday, it was on Twitter, where spokespersons for Clinton and O'Malley disputed whose candidate was first to support President Obama.

Lis Smith, communications director for O'Malley's campaign, tweeted that O'Malley was the "first Dem tonight to give @BarackObama full-throated shout out." Nick Merrill, the traveling spokesman for Clinton's campaign, replied with a direct line from Clinton's speech: "With President Obama's leadership and the determination of the American people, we're standing again." Smith fired back by saying, "Oh sorry, I guess I fell asleep during that one."

After Merrill replied again ("Be nicer."), Smith Tweeted that "it was—to its credit—a nice speech/" Minutes later, Smith was engaged in a war of Twitter words with Republican National Committee spokesman Sean Spicer.

The trap Hillary can't escape: Her Bernie Sanders problem is she doesn't understand Sanders' policies are popular, mainstream and the future // Salon // Bill Curry – July 19, 2015

There's a reason Clinton's economic plan sounds wooden and unspecific. She's misreading public mood and her party

The Clinton Express wheezed its way into New York City this week, rolling into Greenwich Village to offload another "big speech," this time on the economy. Whoever is driving this train must have considered Cooper Union as a possible station stop; a speech Lincoln gave there in 1860 may have made him president. But this speech wasn't that big, not by a long shot. The campaign settled on a spot a few blocks away, a smallish auditorium over at The New School.

Even that venue was a bit of a reach. The New School has a history of innovative economic inquiry dating to its 1919 founding by such progressive lights as John Dewey and Thorstein Veblen, neither of whom, it's safe to say, would be backing Clinton today. When the school opened, the New York Times said its announced purpose was "to seek an unbiased understanding of the existing order, its genesis, growth and present working."

The country could use a fresh, unbiased analysis of the existing order. Clinton's speech provided nothing of the sort.

Still, it was well received in some quarters. At Vox, where much of what Clinton says is well received, Matthew Yglesias called her pledge to prosecute financial crimes "the most important words she has spoken thus far in the campaign." It's not saying much, as she hardly ever says anything substantive, let alone important. Yglesias likens her rhetoric to Elizabeth Warren's, but why Warren when so many other politicians now promise the same thing? He notes Clinton's "trust gap" with "activists focused on the issue" but says those activists can take "succor" knowing that bringing such cases is one of the few ways a "sharply constrained" President Clinton would have of "leaving a mark."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In other words, count on her doing it because she won't be able to do much else.

In a piece written before the event and based on campaign backgrounders, Yglesias claims the speech marks Clinton's passage from neoliberalism to "paleoliberalism," as in the Paleolithic Age of hunter gatherers. He says it "hints at a fundamental philosophical difference" Clinton now has with her husband, her old boss and her old self, and that it shows she is now "less inclined to favor a market-oriented approach than a left-wing approach" in which the financial sector is "deliberately regulated in a heavy handed way rather than allowed to lead the economy."

Yglesias says "left-wing interest group leaders" tell him they're skeptical but he says "history suggests that presidents generally try to implement the agendas they have promised." He also says Clinton was never "purely" a neoliberal—she backed a minimum wage hike and was willing to let government play a bigger role in health care—and that as president she'd extend financial regulation and help strengthen unions. He noted that Clinton would not be delivering a "laundry list" of specifics and that until she did no one could be quite sure what she was up to.

The Times' David Brooks also thinks Clinton is "best viewed… as a new paleoliberal." To Brooks it denotes a faith that "government is more competent at steering companies toward their own best interests than are the companies themselves." He says that many of her ideas have been proven wrong, that voters don't share her fondness for central planning and that she has "no plausible chance" of getting her agenda through Congress. Still, he says, she "hasn't gone crazy" or ruined herself by "wandering into the class warfare swamps." He thus concludes that politically she has "cleared the first hurdle of this campaign" by offering "a coherent response to today's economic conditions."

The Washington Post's E.J. Dionne said "Clinton is making a major bid to shape the conversation" that "could mark the beginning of a genuinely substantive debate between Democrats and Republicans over how to define the nation's economic problems." He quoted a "campaign official" accusing Republicans of peddling "the same old proposals every Republican presidential candidate has been offering since Reagan"; unlike Clinton, whose package of new benefits includes "family leave, child care and more affordable access to college." The official seemed not to know that, good as some of Clinton's ideas may be, they are mostly the same ones Democratic candidates have been offering since Reagan.

Yglesias, Brooks and Dionne are fine writers. But their somewhat overlapping analyses, like Clinton's speech, perpetuate some habits we need to break. Clinton is no "paleoliberal," a more than faintly pejorative label liberals would do well to challenge. She, Bill and Barack Obama practically invented neoliberalism and remain members in good standing until proven otherwise. If your speeches are long on weepy tales of "everyday Americans" you met on the campaign trail, but short on policy prescriptions, the credit goes to David Axelrod, not Paul Krugman. If you'd raise the minimum wage but won't say how much, you're Mitt Romney. If you back the Trans Pacific Trade Partnership–and despite recent evasions she's all for it–you're fighting for capital, not labor.

I.F. Stone once counseled young reporters not to develop inside sources. He said reporters do more for sources than sources do for them, and that anyway most of what we need to know lies right under our nose, hidden like Poe's purloined letter in a speech or a public record. It's sound advice, but especially if you're covering the Clinton campaign. Background interviews with insiders are catnip for reporters, few of whom would miss a chance to get out ahead of the pack. But if they'd wait for the transcript they might reap the full rewards of textural criticism. To wit:

Yglesias' notion that presidents try to deliver on campaign promises may be right, notwithstanding Obama's spotty record. (See ethics reform, whistleblowers, the surveillance state, the public option, the minimum wage, etc.) But if you parse Hillary's speech you find that despite talking for 55 minutes she didn't make any promises, or at least none specific enough to be politically actionable. Her handlers did a fine job of prepping the press for yet another dearth of detail. But at this point "instructions to follow" isn't a viable message for Clinton, nor should any reporter react to such assurances from any politician with anything but a long, loud groan.

Clinton's speech didn't spark a "substantive debate between Democrats and Republicans." If you've so much as glanced at the GOP field, you know they won't be having one this year. Nor did it move the needle on the Democrats' debate, which moves away from Clinton even as she runs to chase it down. It's true for reporters and campaigns alike: If you focus too much on tactics, you miss the meaning of the race. What drives this race is not what the left wants; it's what middle-class families want. Their economic anxiety and outrage at the condition of our democracy is transforming politics in ways Obama never imagined.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It's this mood that David Brooks mistakes for the "class warfare swamps." Voters prize civility and long for a populism without culprits or conspiracies–but sorely want to hear their righteous anger expressed. Clinton won't do it, in part because she can't offend the delicate sensibilities of her donors but also because, like Brooks, she mistakes the mood for a leftist insurrection. Many of us–see Paul Rosenberg's wonderful article right here in Salon–have long argued that the old categories are defunct and that much of what the old order calls radical has long since gone mainstream. Soon everyone will see it. For now, let me suggest a rule: any policy enjoying majority support in every poll must henceforth be called centrist, not "radical" or "left wing." If you aren't sure, look it up.

Clinton's speech was on balance another disappointment, but it must be said she packed it with more proposals than any candidate not named Bernie Sanders has offered all year. Her delivery remains a problem. She's improved, but can't shake that sing-songy cadence that makes her sound like Al Gore hosting a children's television show. Aides say she must seem more authentic, but it can't help that her policies are so vague or that her anecdotes seem so canned. Her full embrace of Axelrod's politics of biography isn't helping either. Telling so many personal stories, she gives off more than a whiff of self-involvement. On Monday she recalled a nurse in the hospital where her granddaughter was born thanking her for "fighting for paid leave." She'd be better served by a story in which she thanks the nurse. What she mainly needs is to tell fewer such stories.

Clinton's style is problematic but her real problem is policy. Her speech embodied the neoliberal struggle to adapt to changing times and especially to changing public opinion. The early tenets of neoliberalism were economic deregulation, fiscal austerity, modulated militarism, a faint environmentalism and a cultish faith in the potential for technology, economic growth and global trade to solve our problems. The deregulation boom fizzled out in 2008; Republicans don't even talk much about it in public except in the most abstract terms. Many neoliberals remain deficit hawks, as do most voters, but the Tea Party has tired everyone on the topic.

Clinton learned in 2008 that her less-modulated militarism is a nonstarter with the Democratic base. Its stock has since fallen with the general public. The Iraq War and our bloated military budget belong at the heart of any discussion of what sank our economy in the 2000s and what we must do now to fix it, but don't wait for Clinton to make the case. Neoliberals would extend the social contract but not in a slow economy, which nowadays means not at all. It's why Clinton, who does want to extend it, mostly namechecks cherished goals– universal pre-K, paid leave, lifelong learning–while steering clear of the fiscal weeds. A surprising amount of her economic agenda involved social services and educational opportunity and she was at her best making the case for their importance to the overall economy.

Clinton structured her speech as a plan for three types of growth: strong growth, fair growth and long-term growth. Strong growth got the lead mention, though unlike Jeb Bush she got no more specific than "getting close to full employment is crucial for raising incomes." It speaks volumes of all our fears for the future when the leading Democratic candidate for president lowers her sights to "getting closer to full employment" and no one even seems to notice.

Clinton revisited lots of familiar proposals, from immigration reform to enacting the Buffett Rule to investing in infrastructure, so many that such shape and purpose as the speech might once have had was lost. Its one intriguing passage pertained to a promise to promote profit sharing. By the standards of modern politics it was long, a whole paragraph, which suggests Clinton or her people are at least giving some thought to issues of economic structure, though what she offered up was the merest morsel of an idea that is in itself timid.

Clinton's speech had its isolated moments but if it sparks a debate it won't be because she made common cause with a category of unicorns called paleoliberals, but because Bernie Sanders seizes the chance it presents. Clinton still doesn't get it. It is the neoliberals who are paleo now. The ferment Sanders has tapped into is the future. But to get there coalitions must be broadened and policies rethought; when the old order collapses you don't seek the old center, you invent a new one.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In taking on Hillary, Sanders must not only propose policies, he must expose the false logic of the status quo. Some issues will be easier than others. Sanders is plainspoken about the radical environmental changes we must make to secure our prosperity and avoid an existential catastrophe. The transition to a sustainable economy based on conservation and clean, renewable energy is our most urgent economic task. Yet of the 5,113 words in Clinton's speech, exactly 60 were on energy and the environment. You can't run as a Democrat and name-check climate change. Clinton's a fine debater, but on this topic she's easy pickings.

In her speech, Clinton didn't abandon any neoliberal doctrine but she whistled past them all, even the core neoliberal faith in growth, technology and trade. Sanders has the skills to dissect these issues in ways we can grasp. Someone has to. Rising tides no longer lift most boats, let alone all. Even if things go well, we aren't apt to see the wage growth we once knew. Yet we could create even more disposable income by lowering the costs of basic necessities for average families. It will take big reductions in the costs of health care, education, energy, consumer credit, transportation–and yes, even taxes. We can do it, but only by reining in powerful institutions that now use the political system to mortgage us to the past.

Sanders has long recognized that "fair growth" demands not just a little profit sharing but economic democratization through employee ownership, consumer and producer cooperatives, cooperative banks and a host of other new and old economic forms that struggle to survive under present rules. Clinton says she wants to be the "small-business president." I think she means it, but I don't think she knows what it means. Again, Sanders is miles ahead of her.

In the '90s you couldn't tell Bill Clinton from Newt Gingrich on the topic of new technology. There's no shame in that. Everybody was a believer then. Not long ago you could be laughed out of politics for saying this technological wave might be the one that finally costs more jobs than it creates. But 20 years into the Age of Information, jobs are in short supply. As we restructure employment and all the many ways in which we provide for one another's needs, we are less tolerant of technology's intrusions on our privacy and personhood.

The issue of the day is "trade." I'm amazed when economists invoke the theories of David Ricardo as if nothing's changed in the 200 years since his passing. Ricardo's theory of comparative advantage asserted that free trade always results in a net benefit to the trading partners since each sells goods on which it enjoys a natural advantage: climate, raw materials, labor supply, etc. But when jobs cross borders in nanoseconds the advantages everyone seeks are low wages and weak governments. Somebody must tell the neoliberals this is no longer about who has the best weather to grow bananas in. In fact, it is no longer about trade. It is about whether democracy rules commerce–or commerce rules democracy. It's a subject Sanders knows well. Clinton appears clueless.

This is the debate we need: how best to turn back the impersonal tide of globalization and begin conscious creation of a new, intentional economy. This isn't the debate Clinton or the media is prepared to have. But it's the one the country urgently desires, and one progressives can win. Like the polls, the throngs flowing to Sanders' events and the small-dollar donations to his campaign attest to the ripeness of the moment. The real proof's in the power of ideas.

National Security Expert Slams Hillary's 'Assault' On Free Speech // The Daily Caller // Rachel Stoltzfoos – July 18, 2015

Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton put her willingness to defend the Constitution in serious doubt when she promised Islamic countries the United States government would intimidate Americans who violate their free speech code, national security expert Stephen Coughlin told The Daily Caller News Foundation.

As Secretary of State, Clinton promised an international Islamic organization in 2011 that the United States government would "use some old-fashioned techniques of peer pressure and shaming" to intimidate Americans who improperly criticize Islam or Muhammad.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“An official of the United States, in an official communiqué, went to a foreign land to commit to a foreign leader that the United States Government would engage in the extra-legal practice of intimidating American citizens in the exercise of what is otherwise their protected free speech rights under the First Amendment,” Coughlin told TheDCNF.

Coughlin discusses the move in his recently published book, “Catastrophic Failure: Blindfolding America in the Face of Jihad,” and told TheDCNF it casts a pall on her record as secretary of state.

“If her willingness to sell out Americans First Amendment rights to the Organization of Islamic Cooperation by categorizing as ‘hate speech’ anything that is deemed offensive to Islam is any indication, she may be the least qualified candidate to support and defend the Constitution,” he said.

Coughlin’s an attorney, decorated intelligence officer and expert on Islamic law and terrorism who consulted the military’s Joint Chiefs of Staff for about a decade following 9/11, before the Muslim Brotherhood allegedly convinced the White House to ban him and “outlaw” his briefings.

He cites Clinton’s 2011 visit to Turkey and her cooperation with the OIC in his book as one example of how muslim ideologists wield influence in the “highest reaches” of the U.S. government.

The Clinton campaign did not respond to requests for comment.

The OIC is the second-largest intergovernmental organization after the U.N., consisting of 57 states that identify as “the collective voice of the Muslim world.”

After she helped the OIC secure passage of U.N. resolution 16/18, “Combating intolerance, negative stereotyping and stigmatization of, and discrimination, incitement to violence, and violence against persons based on religion or belief,” Clinton promised the U.S. would take what steps it could to curb speech critical of Islam.

“And together we have begun to overcome the false divide that pits religious sensitivities against freedom of expression, and we are pursuing a new approach based on concrete steps to fight intolerance wherever it occurs,” she said in an address following the resolution’s passage.

“We also understand that, for 235 years, freedom of expression has been a universal right at the core of our democracy,” she added. “So we are focused on promoting interfaith education and collaboration, enforcing antidiscrimination laws, protecting the rights of all people to worship as they choose, and to use some old-fashioned techniques of peer pressure and shaming, so that people don’t feel they have the support to do what we abhor.”

The resolution condemns “any advocacy of religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence, whether it involves the use of print, audio-visual or electronic media.”

Coughlin argues in his book it’s part of a deliberate OIC-led effort to bring the U.S. and other countries in line with Muslim speech standards, first by condemning and eventually criminalizing unwanted speech such as depictions of Muhammad.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Over the last few years, major left wing and Islamists organizations have been working diligently to reframe free speech in an oppositional narrative that distinguishes sanctioned speech, designated free speech, from hate speech in a long term campaign to brand nonconforming speech as hate speech that is at first to be ridiculed and then criminalized," he told TheDCNF.

Hillary Clinton defends Iran pact during Davenport, Iowa, campaign stop // Sioux City Journal // Ed Tibbetts – July 18, 2015

Democratic presidential hopeful Hillary Clinton defended the nuclear agreement reached with Iran at a campaign stop in Davenport on Saturday, saying, "What we were doing before President Obama became president and I became secretary of state wasn't working."

The deal announced earlier in the week between Iran and a coalition of six countries, led by the United States, has been greeted with near unanimous scorn from Republicans in Congress and those who are running for president.

But in a visit to Davenport on Saturday, the former secretary of state said Iran had made advances in its nuclear program during the Bush administration and left the Obama team with a problem.

"When we came into office, that train had left the station," Clinton said. "Our challenge was, what were we going to do to back it up. And I think, given the circumstances, this agreement holds promise for stalling, preventing Iran from getting a nuclear weapon, and we have got to enforce it."

Republicans have been trying to tie the agreement to Clinton almost as much as they do to Obama. And critics have complained that the inspections parts of the pact are weak.

Clinton, though, said that if she is elected, enforcement would receive constant attention from her.

"I will just be on that day in and day out to make sure we catch them if they try to cheat," she said.

Clinton spoke for about a half-hour at the home of Ken Croken, an executive at Genesis Health System.

She covered a wide range of subjects over a half-hour, then met with the approximately 60 people who attended. Reporters and photographers were ushered out of the house after her remarks.

Clinton got a big cheer when she defended Obama's handling of the economy. She also praised the Supreme Court's same-sex marriage decision and spoke of the need to push for early education.

She also, for the second consecutive day, criticized Gov. Terry Branstad for recent mental health and education spending vetoes.

Clinton made the stop in Davenport on the heels of a big fundraiser for the state Democratic Party on Friday night in Cedar Rapids, where all the major contenders for the party's 2016 presidential nomination appeared.

Clinton has a wide lead in the polls, both nationally and in Iowa. But Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont has gained some ground in recent weeks. And the progressive wing of the party is pushing Clinton to take a harder line on

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Wall Street, among other things.

Nonetheless, some of those who attended Saturday, a number of whom were already Clinton supporters, said that she struck the right balance for them. And they said her years of experience appealed to them.

“I think she knows what you have to do to get things done,” Margie Schwaninger, a retired teacher from Bettendorf, said. Schwaninger said she supported Clinton eight years ago.

Sheri Carnahan, of Davenport, who also supported Clinton in 2008, echoed other supporters who say that in her years working in politics, Clinton has worked to advance progressive priorities.

“The issues that are important to me are the issues that she’s fought for long before she ran for president of the United States,” Carnahan said.

Clinton was headed to Arkansas on Saturday night for a party fundraising dinner there. But before she left she stopped to greet some people in the McClellan Heights neighborhood for a short time, posing for a picture with a Galesburg couple and their 10-month-old son who had been having lunch in the area and then went for a walk.

Clinton remembers D'Army Bailey at funeral // Commercial Appeal // Thomas Bailey – July 18, 2015

Former President Bill Clinton on Saturday eulogized Judge D’Army Bailey as a mover and “movement politician.”

“He was always moving us,” the 42nd president told a large crowd of mourners during a two hour and 20 minute funeral at Mississippi Boulevard Christian Church.

The Circuit Court judge, lifelong civil rights activist, author and even part-time actor died July 12 of cancer at age 73.

Judge Bailey’s civil rights activism, Clinton acknowledged with a smile, had “moved” Southern University to expel him and “moved” citizens of Berkeley, California, to remove him from their City Council in 1973.

“But that was part of who he was,” Clinton said in his 17-minute eulogy. “Here’s the first thing I want to say to the young people: You need to be moving.”

That same compulsion to act led Judge Bailey, Clinton said, to save the Lorraine Motel. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was assassinated there in 1968.

Judge Bailey and the late A.W. Willis raised $144,000 to buy the bankrupt motel, and continued working until the motel opened in 1991 as the National Civil Rights Museum.

About 250,000 people visited the museum on Mulberry over the past year.

“The Lorraine Motel could be a parking lot, for all you know, today if it hadn’t been for D’Army Bailey,” said

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton, who reminded the mourners that he attended the museum's dedication as governor of Arkansas.

" ... He left a monument that will have to be moved, not physically but internally," he said. "You can't imagine if you are not of a certain age what the civil rights museum means to those of us who were young when Martin Luther King was killed in Memphis."

Before the black-garbed church choir started the service with soothing strains, Judge Bailey's body lay at the front in an open, wood casket. Floral displays flanked the casket, which, when closed, was draped in a U.S. flag.

Judge Bailey's colleagues in the judiciary — about 40 strong — sat as a group at the front behind U.S. Rep. Steve Cohen and Memphis Mayor A C Wharton.

Wharton was one of six people who gave short eulogies before the former president took the pulpit. The others were U.S. Dist. Judge Bernice Donald, attorney Richard Glassman, family friend Aubrey Howard, Circuit Court Judge Jerry Stokes and Bailey's brother, Shelby County Commissioner Walter Bailey.

Wharton smiled as he described Judge Bailey as "the most sophisticated, cosmopolitan radical that most of us would ever meet."

Wharton drew laughter when he said, "Who but D'Army Bailey could pull off 'speaking truth to power' while remaining one of the individuals in power? But, hey, that was D'Army Bailey."

A city mayor receives lots of advice, Wharton told the mourners. Judge Bailey never sugarcoated his, Wharton said, again with a smile. "You got it pure and unadulterated. And the hard part about it was that it was always true."

Glassman recalled being both a courtroom adversary and close friend to Judge Bailey over the years. Bailey had a passion for Justice, he said, adding, "D'Army showed those around him how to turn passion into action through his own example.

"He always emphasized the importance of the law and the right of all persons coming into his courtroom — young, black, experienced, not experienced — he treated all parties fairly and equally," Glassman said.

Donald said one of the highlights of her life was when Judge Bailey asked her to administer to him the oath of office when he took the bench.

She described Judge Bailey as a bridge builder. "We in this community, in this state and nation are a better people because D'Army Bailey lived," she said.

Stokes, the Division 6 Circuit Court judge, described another way that Judge Bailey was a mover: He kept cases in his courtroom moving along. Judge Bailey was loathe to grant attorneys' requests for continuances — or delays — in his courtroom, Stokes said.

"You had to fish or cut bait," Stokes said. "He would not tolerate delays."

Walter Bailey brought applause when he told the mourners, "D'Army did everything in his mortal power to make this a better world for all of us."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton received a rousing ovation before and after his eulogy.

"This man was moving all his life," the former president said. "We're a long way from where we used to be. And he had a lot of fun doing it.

"All those movie roles he had (Judge Bailey acted in several movies including "The People vs. Larry Flynt"); I wish we had a movie of the founding of the civil rights museum and he could close out his career as a lead actor playing the starring role," he said.

" ... He left you and America a national treasure. He left his wife and children and brother and the family he loved so much a loving legacy.

"You have to decide what to do with it," Clinton said.

"He moved to the very end. To the very end he moved. May God rest his soul. He earned it."

OTHER DEMOCRATS NATIONAL COVERAGE

DECLARED

SANDERS

Sanders vaults from fringe to the heart of the fray // The Boston Globe // Annie Linksey – July 18, 2015

It's 7:20 a.m. and Bernie Sanders looks irritated. He's already buckled into his economy seat on Delta Flight 4516 and an attendant just announced that the flight would sit on the runway for 30 minutes before taking off.

"Planes," grumbled the Vermont senator. "Don't get me started about airplanes." Then he added, in a tone that sounded only half-joking, "This is when you want a private jet."

Sanders' insurgent campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination doesn't spring for charters like his top competitor — at least not yet. On this day he isn't even flying nonstop, as he heads from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, to Phoenix via Minneapolis. If all goes well, he'll just be a few minutes late to a forum at Netroots Nation, an annual gathering of liberals.

The weekend events — another rally is planned in Houston Sunday — is capping off Sanders' best week so far in his increasingly credible quest for the nomination. Federal reports made public last week show he has raised more than $15 million for his campaign, beating every other presidential candidate from either party save Hillary Rodham Clinton (she hauled in about $46 million). He has gathered the money from an army of small donors that is larger than that of any other presidential candidate.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

And, as he pulled his roller bag out of the air-conditioned terminal into the blast of Phoenix heat Saturday morning, he was preparing to speak that evening before his largest crowd yet.

Through some combination of political skill, fortuitous timing, well-tuned messaging, and sheer luck this has become the Summer of Sanders — in which an unkempt 73-year old man who isn't even a member of the Democratic Party is mounting the strongest challenge to the Democratic establishment. He's gone from being dismissed as a fringe candidate to having a huge early impact on the primary.

The self-described Democratic socialist flying coach is suddenly a star. Clinton aides have acknowledged concern about losing ground in Iowa and New Hampshire, or both, to Sanders. One poll has shown him within 19 percentage points of Clinton in the Hawkeye State and another has him within eight points of her in New Hampshire.

'This country belongs to all of us and not a handful of billionaires.'

But, will it last? Or, as one of his strategists put it, could the next few months bring the fall of Sanders?

Already the Sanders campaign infrastructure is creaking under the weight of the unexpected interest in his candidacy. Tens of thousands of bumper stickers were on back order. Venues for rallies need to be changed multiple times as the RSVPs pile high, and crowds swell. And most importantly, to survive, he'll need to expand his support beyond the liberal wing of the Democratic Party — and persuade the party that he should be the standard bearer.

Sanders contends that the national caricature of him as a hippy-dippy socialist from the People's Republic of Burlington, where he was mayor from 1981 to 1989, is largely inaccurate. He jokes about it — saying that he doesn't own a pair of Birkenstocks and never would "in a million years." He says that his message resonates most loudly with blue-collar workers, not the tie-dye set.

On Friday night in a vast hall in Cedar Rapids before 1,300 people, that appeal was on full display. Sanders shared the stage for the first time with the other four Democratic candidates who took turns speaking to the audience. He won multiple standing ovations for a thundering rant against the inordinate power of the super-rich. He called for a "political revolution" and predicted that without it, the country was heading toward an oligarchy.

"Nothing will get done unless millions of people stand up and roundly proclaim enough is enough," Sanders said, gripping the lectern with both hands. "This country belongs to all of us, and not a handful of billionaires."

It was a classic display of Sanders' freewheeling approach, the aura of blunt authenticity that makes him seem a refreshing change from Clinton's poll-tested messages and reluctance to offer detailed positions on issues of the day.

"He really connected," said Steve Hultman, a 65-year-old retired teacher from Council Bluffs, Iowa. "Hillary has to go to work. She has to get the facts and framing to excite the Democratic side of the party."

Some part of Sanders' popularity flows directly from the Elizabeth Warren wing of the Democratic Party. He only began to rise in polls of probable voters when the Massachusetts senator's name was dropped from their surveys after it became clear that she wouldn't run. For him as for her, not having to worry much about moderate support is liberating; Clinton has no such luxury. And it doesn't really tell against Sanders at this early stage that a liberal message like his may not play well, or at all, in some states a candidate must win to gain nomination or election.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But there's more to Sanders than the Warren echo. Unlike others in the current field, he has been quietly building a national grass-roots network for years. His 2012 Senate campaign finance report looks remarkably similar to his presidential one last week, with most contributions coming from small donors across the country. He raised $7.2 million for that election, swamping his Republican opponent, who took in about $135,000.

While he was being written off in 2014 by the news media and other candidates focused on Warren instead, Sanders road-tested his message. In Los Angeles, he recalled, there were standing-room-only crowds this year well before announcing his candidacy. In Texas, so many people came to hear him that a traffic jam of supporters headed for the venue made it difficult for him to get to the event himself.

Still, those around Sanders weren't sure he was going to run even weeks before his April 30 announcement. "As late as late April, if Bernie had called and said 'we're not doing this' I would not have been shocked," said Tad Devine, a longtime Sanders ally and a political consultant.

There's a limit to the revolution Sanders is pushing: The senator won't mount an independent bid for president. No matter how the crowds swell. "We're doing this within the party system," he said again Saturday on the Minneapolis leg of his trip.

Keeping it simple

Sanders' plane landed in Minneapolis with about 30 minutes to get his connecting flight. One passenger positioned himself near the end of the jet bridge to get a photo of him getting off the plane. He paused for selfies with several others as they all waited for luggage checked at the gate.

Lisa Fontana took a selfie with Vermont Senator Bernie Sanders at a Democratic Party event in Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Unlike Clinton's container-ship-sized campaign organization with more than 300 on staff, Sanders has a much smaller operation. On Saturday he traveled with only his campaign manager, his communications director, a videographer, and his wife. He figured out most of the logistics himself — securing boarding passes for the group and leading everyone through the Minneapolis airport from one terminal to the other.

The campaign pays 25 full-time staff members in Iowa and rents offices in 10 different towns. Sanders has just 10 full-time staffers in Vermont, 5 in Washington, and 4 in New Hampshire, plus 11 paid interns in Vermont and New Hampshire.

He revels in this relative lack of professional help. To make his point, he briefly commandeered an interview with a reporter last week in Washington.

"Ask me who my campaign finance director is," he said over coffee in a Senate cafeteria.

"We don't have one. Ask me who my pollster is," he said. "We don't have one." He said he writes his own direct mail.

That's not to say Sanders has a consultant-free campaign. He's soaked up some talent from President Obama's team. The names include Scott Goodstein, an online director for Obama's first presidential race, and Arun Chaudhary, another veteran of the 2008 Obama campaign team who was Obama's first videographer.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Teamwork pays off

Should this team's work pay off and Sanders becomes even more viable, the target on his candidacy will grow. On June 25 a super PAC linked to former Maryland governor Martin O'Malley, another declared Democratic candidate, spent about $10,000 on online ads critical of Sanders' record on gun control, which is, for a Democrat, notably friendly to gun owners.

Sanders' team fought back, using the same rhetoric that Warren so effectively employs against her many critics: Frame the attack as an assault on the progressive movement and raise buckets of cash off of it.

The day after the ads began, Sanders' campaign blasted an e-mail to supporters requesting help. Within 48 hours they'd raised more than $800,000, according to a source familiar with his fund-raising.

But by far the most talked about aspect of Sanders' candidacy is the size of the crowds — it comes as a shock even to the candidate.

"You walk into an arena and find 10,000 people looking at you . . . " he said in an interview, trailing off. Then he turned to Michael Briggs, his charmingly beleaguered press aide.

"How many RSVPs do we have now in Phoenix?" he asked. "10,000?"

The swell forced the campaign to move the event twice. The same thing happened in Portland, Maine, where he ended up speaking to more than 7,500. And in Madison, Wis., where he spoke to a crowd about 10,000. And in Denver, where he spoke to about 5,000.

Putting this many supporters in a room takes work. The campaign e-mails supporters who live near events, and they ask an enthusiastic Reddit community to spread the word.

There's a practical reason for holding these events. Sanders hasn't spent much time building the relationships within the Democratic Party leaders at the state level that can help propel a national candidacy.

"We need to build organization, particularly in relatively early states," Devine said.

On Saturday — when Sanders finally arrived at Netroots — the work that he needs to do to appeal to the broader Democratic coalition was clear. A group of mostly African-American demonstrators protesting police brutality had heckled O'Malley, disrupting his speech.

Sanders knew he was walking into a difficult situation. "It's this afternoon's talk I'm worried about," he said before walking on the stage — and faced some of the same angry chants, competing with the cheers.

UNDECLARED

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BIDEN

Sources: Joe Biden Still Considering A Presidential Campaign // HuffPo // Ryan Grim – July 18, 2015

Vice President Joe Biden is still very much considering a bid for the White House, people close to Biden say, and will make a final decision at the end of the summer, targeted for September.

The Iowa caucuses are scheduled for early February, meaning Biden would have roughly four months to barnstorm the first-in-the-nation state before the contest turned to New Hampshire.

Front-runner Hillary Clinton has faced a surprisingly tough challenge from democratic socialist Bernie Sanders, who is within striking distance in Iowa despite not being registered as a Democrat and trailing far behind in establishment support. Sanders' surge suggests Clinton could be once again beatable in a Democratic primary.

While Biden is seriously considering the bid, he has by no means decided to pull the trigger.

"He has said he would announce his decision at the end of the summer," said Ted Kaufman, a former Democratic senator from Delaware and longtime aide to Biden, when asked about Biden's plans. Kaufman recently went back to work for the vice president in the months preceding Beau Biden's death so that he could help his old boss and friend through the unspeakably difficult time.

The vice president's press secretary, Kendra A. Barkoff, denounced the speculation, but kept the door ajar. "The Biden family is going through a difficult time right now," said Barkoff. "Any speculation about the views of the vice president or his family about his political future is premature and inappropriate."

The Wall Street Journal reported last month that Biden's late son, Beau Biden, who the vice president has called "my soul," had urged him to run for president before he died. His son Hunter has also encouraged him to enter the race.

Though he is undeclared, Biden is polling at slightly above 10 percent nationally, trailing both Sanders and Clinton.

Biden still considering 2016 bid: report // The Hill // Keith Laing – July 18, 2015

Vice President Joe Biden is still mulling a challenge to Hillary Clinton for the 2016 Democratic presidential nomination, the Huffington Post reported.

Clinton is the dominant frontrunner for the Democratic nomination to succeed President Obama, but Biden expects to make a decision on entering the race by September, according to the report.

"He has said he would announce his decision at the end of the summer," former Biden aide and Sen. Ted Kaufman (D-Del.), said when he asked about the vice president's 2016 plans, according to the website.

Clinton has widely been seen as the likely 2016 Democratic nominee, even before she launched her presidential bid in April. But she has faced a surprising challenge from Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.), who has drawn large crowds and quickly risen in polls.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton campaign officials have insisted that they are not worried about Sanders or any of the other Democratic candidates in the presidential race, including former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley, former Sen. Jim Webb and former Rhode Island Gov. Lincoln Chafee.

Biden, who has run for the presidency twice before in 1988 and 2008, would be considered a longshot if he launches a bid.

A spokesperson for Biden dismissed the presidential speculation in the report.

"The Biden family is going through a difficult time right now," Vice Presidential Press Secretary Kendra Barkoff told the website, referencing the death of Biden's son, Beau, who had been Delaware's attorney general.

"Any speculation about the views of the vice president or his family about his political future is premature and inappropriate," Barkoff continued.

Biden has traveled extensively since the 2014 election to early-voting states in the 2016 primaries like Iowa, New Hampshire and South Carolina.

OTHER

Activists disrupt forum featuring candidates O'Malley, Sanders // WaPo // John Wagner – July 18, 2015

A forum featuring two of the most liberal candidates for the Democratic presidential nomination was disrupted and taken over Saturday by liberal activists seeking to showcase their concerns for the plight of African Americans.

Former Maryland governor Martin O'Malley and Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) made back-to-back appearances in a presidential town hall that was part of the four-day Netroots Nation conference here, an annual gathering of 3,000 progressive activists that Democratic front-runner Hillary Rodham Clinton elected to skip.

Shortly into O'Malley's allotted time, his discussion with a moderator was disrupted by more than 100 protesters that included members of Black Lives Matter, a group formed after teenager Trayvon Martin's shooting in Florida, and the Black Alliance for Just Immigration.

As chanting protesters streamed to the front of the room, O'Malley looked stunned at first and then started clapping along.

Close to 10 minutes later, leaders of the protest were handed microphones and rattled off a number of their concerns, including deaths of African Americans in police custody, and demanded specific solutions from O'Malley.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“It’s not like we like shutting s--- down, but we have to,” Patrisse Cullors, co-founder of Black Lives Matters, told the crowd, saying the group’s issues were an emergency.

The protest, however, did not appear aimed at O’Malley. The protesters remained as Sanders appeared on stage, and he took a less patient approach.

“Whoa, whoa, let me talk about what I came to talk about for a minute,” the senator said before launching into a riff on income inequality and steps to address it.

The Vermont senator faced chants and heckling as well, but Sanders continued talking. Asked what he had done in the Senate to benefit black Americans, he started to talk about the 2010 Affordable Care Act.

“We can’t afford that!” heckled Elle Hearns, a 28-year-old Ohio-based coordinator for the LGBT rights group GetEqual.

O’Malley made several starts at addressing the issues raised but was interrupted.

Democratic presidential candidate and former Maryland governor Martin O’Malley speaks to guests at the Iowa Democratic Party’s Hall of Fame Dinner on Friday.

“I think that all of us as Americans have a responsibility to recognize the pain and grief throughout our country from all of the lives that have been lost to violence, whether that’s violence at the hands of police, whether that’s violence at the hands of civilians,” he said.

“Stop trying to generalize this s---!” yelled Ashley Yates, a 30-year-old activist from Oakland, Calif.

Later, O’Malley drew boos as he said: “Black lives matter. White lives matter. All lives matter.”

After his appearance, O’Malley addressed those comments on a radio show being recorded at the convention hall.

“When I said those other two phrases, I meant no disrespect,” O’Malley told the online radio show “This Week in Blackness.” “I did not mean to be insensitive in any way.”

As Baltimore’s mayor, O’Malley faced criticism of the city’s aggressive policing policies, a topic that moderator Jose Antonio Vargas questioned him about at the outset of the forum. (Vargas, a journalist, filmmaker and activist who is an immigrant in the country illegally, previously worked as a reporter for The Washington Post.)

Sanders made several comments addressing the protesters’ concerns, including: “In my view, maybe, just maybe, it’s time to invest in jobs and education, not in jails and in incarceration.”

That generated applause from a crowd where hundreds carried Sanders’s campaign signs.

Vargas decided to cut the forum about 15 minutes short of its allotted time.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“Unfortunately, we have to wrap it up,” he said.

“Okay, good,” Sanders replied, before rising to exit.

Following the event, Mary Rickles, a spokeswoman for Netroots Nation, said: “We wish the candidates had more time to respond to the issues. What happened today is reflective of an urgent moment that America is facing today.”

The crowd was largely sympathetic to the protesters, but many said afterward that they wish they could have heard more from the candidates.

“I didn’t disagree with the message,” said Elizabeth Arledge, 50, of Alexandria, Va., an activist who focuses on civil justice. “I was very supportive of it, and I also wanted the program to go on.”

Lucas Hernon, 30, of Las Cruces, N.M., an undecided voter, said he thought O’Malley handled the situation well except for when he said white lives also matter. “As a white person, we don’t need to be reminded of that,” Hernon said.

Some in the audience suggested there could be fallout from the event for Sanders, whose challenges include expanding his appeal beyond liberal white voters.

Bethany Winkels, a 30-year-old activist from Minneapolis, said it was hypocritical for Sanders to call for more grass-roots organizing in one breath and then sound dismissive of the protesters in the next.

“It’s shameful, and he needs to do better,” Winkels said.

Demonstrators disrupt presidential forum at Netroots event // AP // Ken Thomas – July 18, 2015

Demonstrators protesting cases of police brutality and the treatment of black Americans by law enforcement disrupted a presidential forum on Saturday as Democratic candidate Martin O'Malley was interviewed on stage. The group later heckled Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders.

In a raucous scene at the annual Netroots Nation convention, a large group of protesters streamed into the convention hall chanting, "Black lives matter!" as O'Malley was interviewed by Jose Antonio Vargas. One of the group's leaders took over the stage and addressed the audience as the largely female group of demonstrators railed against police-involved shootings, the treatment of immigrants and Arizona's racial history.

The demonstrators were promoting the national "Black Lives Matter" movement, which seeks changes to law enforcement policies following several high profile deaths of black men at the hands of police.

Sanders and O'Malley are vying to become the Democratic alternative to front-runner Hillary Rodham Clinton, who was campaigning in Iowa and Arkansas on Saturday and did not attend Netroots.

Before the demonstrations, Vargas pressed O'Malley to defend his law enforcement record as Baltimore's mayor a decade ago. O'Malley faced scrutiny when unrest broke out in his home city after an African-American man,

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Freddie Gray, died while in police custody in April.

O'Malley discussed his work to deal with violence and drug addiction in Baltimore, telling the crowd, "there are very few issues in our country that are quite as painfully intertwined as the legacy of violence, race and law enforcement in America." He said his policies improved policing, reduced the number of police-involved shootings and increased drug treatment.

About 20 minutes into the interview, demonstrators walked into the cavernous ballroom, creating a confusing scene. Tia Oso, National Coordinator for the Black Alliance for Just Immigration in Phoenix, took the stage and addressed the crowd, noting two years had passed since the the Black Lives Matter movement started after Michael Brown, an unarmed black 18-year-old was fatally shot by a white police officer in Ferguson, Missouri. Days of protests that sometimes turned violent in the St. Louis suburb followed.

"We want to take a moment at Netroots to acknowledge the lives lost," Oso said. Organizers sought to restore order and at one point, Cheryl Contee, a Netroots Nation board member, took the stage and asked the audience to allow O'Malley to respond.

O'Malley said all Americans have a responsibility to "recognize the pain and the grief throughout our country, through all the lives that have been lost to violence." He reiterated that every police department should be required to report all police-involved shootings and create civilian review boards.

"Black lives matter. White lives matter. All lives matter," O'Malley told the crowd, as some protesters heckled him.

O'Malley later said after a roundtable event on immigration that he regretted the comments. "I meant no insensitivity by that and I apologize if that's what I communicated. That was misstated. What I intended to say was that we're all in this together — that black lives do matter and we have a double-standard of justice in this country."

Sanders, during his abbreviated 20 minute appearance, spoke about the need to address wealth and income inequality, noting that blacks and Hispanics face high rates of unemployment.

His remarks were interrupted at times by the protesters, prompting Sanders to respond, "Black lives of course matter. I spent 50 years of my life fighting for civil rights."

Sanders called the criminal justice system "out of control" and described high rates of unemployment and incarceration for young black Americans.

The Netroots Nation convention has been a rough place for presidential candidates before. Clinton last appeared in 2007, when it was called the Yearly Kos, and heard boos from some activists who disapproved of her vote for the 2003 invasion of Iraq and her acceptance of campaign contributions from lobbyists.

Iowa Democratic Party dinner: 5 takeaways // Politico // Gabriel Debenedetti – July 18, 2015

If Hillary Clinton is worried about liberal challenger Bernie Sanders, she didn't let it show here on Friday night at the party's first cattle call event, which saw Democrats' quintet of presidential candidates finally descend on the same place at the same time.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As expected, at the Iowa Democratic Party's Hall of Fame Dinner all eyes were on Clinton and Sanders, who sat just feet away from each other. The cavernous ballroom of roughly 1,300 Iowan activists ate up the strain between the party's leading candidates, while laying bare some of their most glaring weaknesses. The crowd was largely made up of party establishment figures sympathetic to Clinton, but it also comprised a healthy pro-Bernie faction, creating a night of tension for two candidates who insisted on talking past one another, neither fully acknowledging the former secretary of state's status as a dominating front-runner who remains dogged by Sanders' fiery, insurgent, and grumpy candidacy.

Meanwhile the audience barely registered the presence of Lincoln Chafee or Jim Webb. But there were signs of a small opening for Martin O'Malley, whose speech was received favorably by a crowd that is nonetheless still working out what, exactly, is his pitch. For the former Maryland governor, who was expected to be Clinton's primary progressive antagonist until Sanders snatched the mantle from him, it was mostly a relief.

Here are POLITICO's five takeaways from the Democrats' first cattle call:

1. Hillary's sensitive to the critique that she's a candidate of the past

On the campaign trail, Clinton repeatedly drops lines about how Republican policies are backward-looking and how she wants to move the country forward. But on Friday night, she slipped beyond that standard campaign fare. Facing recent criticism from Republicans — particularly 40-somethings Marco Rubio and Scott Walker — that she represents the politics of her husband's White House and the 1990s, Clinton, 67, made clear she is fed up with this argument.

"Trickle-down economics has to be one of the worst ideas of the 1980s. It is right up there with New Coke, shoulder pads, and big hair," she said, in what amounted to catnip to a true blue crowd. "I'm never going to let the Republicans rip away the progress we've made. They may have some fresh faces, but they are the party of the past."

The "fresh faces" reference wasn't just an elbow thrown at Rubio and Walker, however. It also read like a brush-back pitch to O'Malley, whose "new leadership" slogan couldn't be clearer in its intent.

2. A healthy number of Iowa Democrats are on the same page as Bernie Sanders. But not the majority.

Faced with questions about Sanders' polling surge, Clinton supporters frequently say that 30 to 40 percent of the party fits Bernie's — or Elizabeth Warren's — ideological profile, but no more than that.

Friday night showed exactly why.

Clinton's speech regularly brought huge portions of the crowd to its feet with her broadsides against Republicans, and then to a hushed, reverent silence when she spoke about her mother's hard childhood.

But while Sanders' stemwinder drove so many "you tell 'ems" and "hell yeah"s from the crowd that it occasionally felt like a tent revival, well more than half the room felt no need to even acknowledge Sanders' most powerful lines. It was as if he was talking to the crowd wearing Bernie '16 stickers, but not to anyone else. The bulk of the audience effectively twiddled during the loudest stretches of the Sanders stump speech, leaving the rapturous applause to the designated Bernie tables.

The message of political revolution failed to land on ears that weren't already sympathetic to Sanders, suggesting there are limits to the bounds of his popularity in the state — and within the state party establishment — that by now knows him well.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

3. Clinton sees no benefit in acknowledging her Democratic rivals

Hillary Clinton had yet to mention any of her Democratic opponents on the campaign trail heading into Friday night. That didn't change once the evening's festivities were over, suggesting Clinton won't start taking on Sanders unless he starts matching or surpassing her in polls.

Instead, the former secretary of state went after Jeb Bush, Scott Walker, and Donald Trump by name, throwing the crowd the red meat it so craved and sending a clear message to the audience that she views herself as the front-runner for the nomination.

"We've heard a lot recently from the new Republican frontrunner, Donald Trump. Finally, a candidate whose hair gets more attention than mine," she said, to laughs and raucous applause.

"Governor Walker kicked off his campaign by rolling back reproductive rights for women and stripping union workers of their rights," she said to jeers.

And to Republicans who avoid discussing climate change by pleading ignorance as non-scientists, Clinton mocked their timidity. "I'm not a scientist either, I'm just a grandmother with two eyes and a brain, and I'm not going to let them take us backwards."

Clinton's camp sees no need to elevate any of the Democratic rivals trailing her by naming them, and except for a brief nod at the beginning of her speech that did not use any names, she might as well have been the headliner at a political rally for Iowa Democrats.

4. Bernie now recognizes the Democratic Party's diversity

It's abundantly clear to the Sanders campaign that it has a real candidate on its hands. But the Vermont senator has never had to appeal to minority voters in his heavily white state, and he's now starting to take up the challenge.

After tacking a passage about immigration reform onto his stump speech in front of a Hispanic advocacy group earlier this week, Sanders went much further on Friday, drawing huge applause from his pockets of the room by bringing up disproportionately high African-American incarceration rates and his hope to help undocumented immigrants.

Lines like these may be part of any standard liberal stump speech, but Sanders is no standard liberal. His rollicking, red-faced speech on Friday picked up steam with his usual anti-billionaire talk, but there was a noticeable ripple through his delighted supporters when he reached the sections designed to speak to minority voters.

5. O'Malley has the potential to catch fire in Iowa

O'Malley plainly showed the most potential in Cedar Rapids, successfully firing up a crowd full of partisans for rival candidates. But his performance also highlighted his central problem as he concentrates on Iowa: he has yet to define whether he wants to be the progressive standard-bearer or the candidate with executive experience.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"My name is Martin O'Malley, I'm running for president, and I need your help," he said, effectively acknowledging from the start that he is still working to gain traction and higher name recognition. The crowd rose to its feet repeatedly over the next 15 minutes as he ticked through a progressive wish-list — from Wall Street reform to sweeping clean energy measures. Nonetheless, O'Malley's central pitch seemed to be based on the notion that his city hall and governor's mansion experience would impress.

"I am the only candidate for president with fifteen years of executive experience," he said. "We didn't just talk about it, we actually got it done."

The two pitches are not mutually exclusive, but they're separate messages. Without choosing one to center his campaign on, O'Malley appeared to be a compelling character but not necessarily a viable option — at least for now. He finished to serious applause and scattered "O-Mall-ey!" chants. But they were drowned out within seconds by roars from far more enthusiastic backers of the next speaker:

"Bernie! Bernie!"

Black Lives Matter' protesters flummox O'Malley, Sanders // Politico // Daniel Strauss – July 18, 2015

When Martin O'Malley and Bernie Sanders took the stage at Saturday's Netroots Nation forum here in Arizona, things didn't go exactly as planned.

Both Democratic presidential candidates were supposed to sit down with activist and journalist Jose Antonio Vargas to talk about immigration. Instead, they got shouted down.

O'Malley, the former Maryland governor, was up first, and his forum was hijacked by protesters who said they were from the "Black Lives Matter" movement. They moved toward the stage, chanting, "What side are you on? Black people! What side are you on?"

Two of the activists climbed onto the stage and seized the microphones as O'Malley and Vargas stood by patiently.

"It's not like we like shutting shit down but we have to," activist Patrisse Cullors said. "We are tired of being interrupted."

But shutting things down is what they did.

O'Malley was repeatedly drowned out by chanting protesters who wanted to discuss police brutality against black Americans. When O'Malley finally did get a chance to respond, they kept shouting.

"I believe every police department in America should have to report in an open and transparent way all police-involved shootings, all discourtesy complaints, all brutality complaints," O'Malley, a former Baltimore mayor, said. Asked by Vargas about civilian review boards, O'Malley added, "all departments should have civilian review boards."

That was roughly as specific as the protesters allowed O'Malley to get. He went on to say, awkwardly, "black lives matter, white lives matter, all lives matter," sparking loud boos.

O'Malley repeated the phrase and the audience kept booing. Vargas tried to quiet the crowd down, but time was up anyway.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“Unfortunately, Senator Sanders is waiting out there,” Vargas said.

“We just started,” O’Malley quipped.

It started off well: Sanders supporters waved “Bernie” signs in the air as the independent Vermont senator took the stage, hoping to talk about economic policy and bash Republicans.

He got chaos instead.

“Here’s the serious issue: We live in a nation in which to a significant degree media is controlled by large multinational corporations. We live in a nation in which 95 percent of talk radio is right wing, including in areas where Republicans have almost no support,” Sanders began.

The protesters kept shouting, forcing Sanders to address there concerns.

“When we talk about issues like ‘black lives matter’, let me tell you something,” Sanders said. “A study came out a few weeks ago talking about youth unemployment in America, an issue we do not deal with as a nation. And here’s what, here’s what that said. What that report said is that if you are a high school graduate and you’re white, the unemployment rate is 33 percent. If you are Hispanic, the unemployment rate is 36 percent; if you are African American, the unemployment rate is 51 percent. And in my view maybe, just maybe, it is time we invest in jobs and education not in jails and incarceration.”

The protesters began shouting again when Sanders tried to pivot back to discussing Wall Street greed and economic inequality. At one point, Sanders offered a deviation from his usual talking points: “Black people are dying in this country because we have a criminal justice system that is out of control,” he said.

Vargas tried to pepper the Vermont senator with immigration questions, but the chants once again threatened to drown them out. At one point, Sanders’ frustration showed. “Black lives of course matter, but I have spent 50 years of my life fighting for civil rights and if you don’t want me to be here that’s OK,” he said.

Once again, time ran out and Vargas said, “Unfortunately we have to wrap it up.”

“OK, good,” Sanders said.

O'Malley apologizes for saying 'all lives matter' at liberal conference // CNN // Chris Moody – July 18, 2015

Democratic presidential candidate Martin O'Malley apologized on Saturday for saying "All lives matter" while discussing police violence against African-Americans with liberal demonstrators.

Several dozen demonstrators interrupted the former Maryland governor while he was speaking here at the Netroots Nation conference, a gathering of liberal activists, demanding that he address criminal justice and police brutality. When they shouted, "Black lives matter!" a rallying cry of protests that broke out after several black Americans were killed at the hands of police in recent months, O'Malley responded: "Black lives matter. White lives matter. All lives matter."

The demonstrators, who were mostly black, responded by booing him and shouting him down.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Later that day, O'Malley apologized for using the phrase in that context if it was perceived that he was minimizing the importance of blacks killed by police.

Invoking the familiar names of blacks who died at the hands of police, including Eric Garner, Michael Brown and Tamir Rice, thousands have taken part in protests across the country calling for a more aggressive federal response to recent slayings by police. A protester is arrested at the demonstration on December 13 in Oakland.

"I meant no disrespect," O'Malley said in an interview on This Week in Blackness, a digital show. "That was a mistake on my part and I meant no disrespect. I did not mean to be insensitive in any way or communicate that I did not understand the tremendous passion, commitment and feeling and depth of feeling that all of us should be attaching to this issue."

Judith Butler, a philosopher at the University of California, Berkeley, recently explained why some find it offensive to respond to the "Black Lives Matter" movement with the "all lives matter."

"When some people rejoin with 'All Lives Matter' they misunderstand the problem, but not because their message is untrue. It is true that all lives matter, but it is equally true that not all lives are understood to matter, which is precisely why it is most important to name the lives that have not mattered, and are struggling to matter in the way they deserve," Butler said in an interview with The New York Times. "If we jump too quickly to the universal formulation, 'all lives matter,' then we miss the fact that black people have not yet been included in the idea of 'all lives.'"

O'Malley isn't the first Democrat to come under fire for the remark. Hillary Clinton was criticized in June for doing the same thing.

Martin O'Malley And Bernie Sanders Interrupted By 'Black Lives Matter' Activists At Progressive Conference // HuffPo // Sam Levine – July 18, 2015

"Black Lives Matter" protesters interrupted Democratic presidential candidates Martin O'Malley, former governor of Maryland, and Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) during their appearances Saturday at Netroots Nation, a progressive conference being held in Phoenix this year.

O'Malley was interrupted after just one question during a panel discussion with Jose Antonio Vargas, and Sanders had barely begun speaking before he was cut off.

Demonstrators began chanting, "What side are you on?" during a Q&A session with O'Malley. O'Malley allowed the protesters to finish, but drew boos when he said that "black lives matter, all lives matter, white lives matter," according to Washington Post reporter Dave Weigel. O'Malley later admitted that he made a mistake in his choice of words, and said he did not mean any disrespect.

Sanders was quickly interrupted when he spoke and told protesters that he agreed with them.

Sanders tried to continue speaking, but Vargas eventually ended the panel early.

While O'Malley and Sanders had a difficult time speaking on Saturday, former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, the front-runner for the Democratic nomination, chose not to attend the conference and was campaigning in

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Arkansas instead.

Democratic Presidential Candidates Face Off in Iowa // ABC News // Josh Haskell – July 18, 2015

It was a big night for Democrats in Iowa who heard from all five presidential candidates on everything from income inequality to climate change and recent Supreme Court decisions on same-sex marriage and the Affordable Care Act.

Lincoln Chafee, Hillary Clinton, Martin O'Malley, Bernie Sanders, and Jim Webb didn't spend any time going after each other Friday, but instead laid out their visions for the country and at times went after the Republican presidential candidates.

Clinton spent the majority of her speech criticizing Republicans by name -- including former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush -- whose comments that "Americans need to work longer hours" didn't sit well with the former secretary of state.

"He now says he just wants part-time workers to be able to find full-time jobs," she said. "So do I. There's just one problem: his policies and the policies of all these Republican candidates would make that harder."

Hillary Clinton Thinks Telemarketers Are 'Really Annoying,' Too

Hillary Clinton Cashes in, Donald Trump Dead Last in 2016 Campaign Money Race

Bernie Sanders Gets His Say on Clinton's Day in Capitol

But the Democratic front-runner didn't stop with Bush. Clinton and O'Malley also went after billionaire Donald Trump.

“We've heard a lot recently from the new Republican front-runner, Donald Trump," said Clinton. "Finally, a candidate whose hair gets more attention than mine. But there's nothing funny about the hate he is spewing towards immigrants and their families."

"If Donald Trump wants to run on a platform of demonizing immigrants, he should go back to the 1840's and run for the presidential nomination of the Know-Nothing Party," said O'Malley.

The night began with the five candidates taking the stage together as loud chants of Bernie and Hillary filled the room. More than 1,300 from across the state greeted the candidates with open arms and listened to each 15 minute speech with the same amount of attention but varying levels of enthusiasm.

Clinton, O'Malley, and Sanders had a number of standing ovations from their backers in the room, but lesser known candidates Chafee and Webb had a harder sell. They laid out their visions for the country, spending a considerable amount of time telling Iowans about their accomplishments as public servants.

Sanders was the only candidate to bring up recent race-related shootings in America.

"I want to see an America where when young black men walk down the street, they will not be harassed by police officers," he said, pausing when the crowd gave him a standing ovation.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Raising his hands, Sanders added "They will not be killed and not be shot."

Outside the convention hall, O'Malley and Clinton supporters who didn't have tickets to the dinner chanted at each other as cars honked in downtown Cedar Rapids. All of the candidates stayed till the end of the event and worked the room afterwards.

The politicking continues Saturday in Iowa as 10 Republican presidential candidates will discuss their vision for the country at the Family Leadership Summit in Ames.

Sanders, O'Malley face protesters at Netroots Nation conference // LA Times // Nigel Duara – July 18, 2015

e annual Netroots Nation political conference, being held here this year, isn't just supposed to be friendly to progressive candidates. It is an applause-filled jaunt that can add luster to campaigns whose candidates want to be standard-bearers of the liberal wing of the Democratic Party.

That was far from the case on Saturday, the showcase day of the five-day event that began Wednesday, as former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley and Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont found themselves face-to-face with protesters, led by supporters of the Black Lives Matter movement.

Black lives matter, white lives matter, all lives matter.

- Former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley, to a chorus of boos

Black Lives Matter was fueled by several high-profile deaths of unarmed black men at the hands of police in the last two years, and the slogan has been the rallying cry for a series of protests calling for social justice.

Saturday's verbal confrontation first came during O'Malley's town hall meeting.

He had just delivered what should have been applause lines at such a conference — closing for-profit prisons and ending wealth inequality — when about 30 protesters streamed into the Phoenix Convention Center's main hall and began shouting questions:

"What are you doing to stop the killing of black men?"

"Do black lives matter to you?"

Seated onstage, hands clasped and elbows on his knees, O'Malley in response turned his speech over to related issues: creating civilian review boards for police departments, pushing through criminal justice reform and asking the same of other candidates. A protester was invited on stage.

"I recognize the pain and grief throughout country, to all the lives lost to violence," O'Malley said, to tepid applause, before expounding on the efforts he made when he was mayor of Baltimore to end an epidemic of violence and drug abuse.

Then, after the 15-minute interruption, O'Malley said, "Black lives matter, white lives matter, all lives matter."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

He was roundly booed. He repeated the line. More boos followed. He eventually waved to the crowd as he left the stage.

Sanders next took the stage with the protest in full swing, but nevertheless muscled his way through. He scoffed at questions about what he has done for the civil rights movement, replying that he's spent 50 years fighting for civil rights.

"We need a political revolution in this country," said Sanders, sticking to the grass-roots progressive message that has earned him crowds in the tens of thousands at appearances across the country.

The difference, said conference attendee Lexis Clark of Chicago, was that O'Malley seemed to waffle and waver during the protest, while Sanders, used to long, loud debates, simply boomed his way through the interruptions.

"I wasn't blown away" by O'Malley, said Clark, 30. "He didn't do a very good job controlling it."

To the protesters themselves, neither candidate did much to assure them that the goals of the Black Lives Matter movement would be considered.

"They all fumbled when we brought black issues to the table," said Ashley Yates, 30, one of Saturday's protest leaders. "That was by design."

It wasn't the first time a presidential candidate has been roundly booed at the conference. At the 2007 event, Hillary Rodham Clinton, in her first presidential campaign, heard boos for being too centrist and for voting in favor of the Iraq war. She skipped this year's event.

The conference, held this year in Phoenix in an attempt by organizers to plant a flag in a red state, issued a statement less than an hour after Saturday's protest to say it "stands in solidarity with all people seeking human rights."

"Our aim was to give presidential candidates a chance to respond to the issues facing the many diverse communities represented here," conference organizers said in an email. "Although we wish the candidates had more time to respond to the issues, what happened today is reflective of an urgent moment that America is facing today."

Yates was unconvinced.

While candidates' plans on issues such as banking reform and wage inequality have specifics — whom they would appoint, what steps they would take on Day One — they've been vague when it comes to pushing for racial and social justice.

"You can't hold anyone accountable for something they haven't agreed to yet," Yates said, adding that Netroots, for all its progressive leanings, remained a largely white space.

"Let's be honest: It's mostly white, concerning white issues," Yates said, "when we are out here dying."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

'Black Lives Matter' protesters halt Sanders, O'Malley events // The Hill // Mark Hensch – July 18, 2015

"Black Lives Matter" protesters disrupted two 2016 Democratic presidential candidates during speeches in Phoenix on Saturday.

Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) and former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley both had question-and-answer sessions halted at the 2015 Netroots Nation conference.

"Say that black lives matter," demonstrators chanted at both men. "Say that I am not a criminal. Say my name."

Activists began intruding on the event during O'Malley's session with host Jose Antonio Vargas.

"What side are you on?" they began singing at the former Maryland governor.

Vargas tried salvaging the situation, but protesters only shouted over him louder.

"We hear you," he said. "Everyone take a little breathe."

The flustered moderator then let a "Black Lives Matter" leader who identified herself as Patrisse Cullors address O'Malley.

"Let me be clear – every single day people are dying, not able to take another breath," she said.

"We are in a state of emergency," she added. "If you do not feel that emergency, then you are not human. I want to hear concrete action plans."

O'Malley responded by appealing to the unity of Americans that comes from their shared country.

"I think all of us have a responsibility to recognize the pain and grief caused by lives lost to violence," he said.

"Black lives matter. White lives matter. All lives matter," O'Malley added, drawing boos from the demonstrators.

An apology to O'Malley flashed on the event's teleprompter once the disruption began, according to reports.

Sanders fared little better with outraged crowd members when his session began.

"If you don't want to be here, that's OK," he said over yelling attendees. "I don't want to shout over people."

"Black lives of course matter," Sanders added. "I have spent 50 years of my life fighting for civil rights."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Sanders argued criminal justice reform is essential for improving race relations in the U.S.

“Black people are dying in this country because we have a criminal justice system that is out of control,” he said.

“We need fundamental reform in police departments all over this country,” Sanders said.

“In my view, maybe, just maybe, it is time to invest in jobs and not jails and incarceration,” he added.

Protesters hailed the two-year anniversary of the “Black Lives Matter” movement during their demonstration at Saturday’s event.

The protesters say law enforcement unfairly discriminates against blacks in both its policies and its enforcement.

Democratic candidates turn dinner into a GOP bashing party // NY Post // Bob Fredericks – July 18, 2015

All five declared candidates for the Democratic presidential nomination gathered at a party dinner in Iowa Friday night and took turns bashing Republicans while mostly playing nice with each other.

Hillary Rodham Clinton, the front-runner, and socialist Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, her toughest challenger so far, got most of the attention at the Hall of Fame celebration dinner, but ex-Maryland Gov. Martin O’Malley, former Rhode Island Gov. Lincoln Chafee and ex-Virginia Sen. Jim Webb were also on hand.

Clinton used tough rhetoric to go after the GOP candidates and brought Democrats to their feet, The Washington Post reported.

“I’m never going to let the Republicans rip away the progress we have made. Trickle-down economics has to be one of the worst ideas of the 1980s. It is right up there with New Coke, shoulder pads and big hair,” she said.

‘Black Lives Matter!’: Sanders, O’Malley Heckled by Liberal Demonstrators at Blogger Convention; Clinton a No-Show // The Blaze // Dave Urbanski – July 18, 2015

The demonstrators were promoting the national “Black Lives Matter” movement, which has sought changes to law enforcement policies in the aftermath of sometimes-violent protests in several cities. The group grew from the fatal shooting of a black, unarmed 18-year-old, Michael Brown, by a white police officer in the St. Louis suburb.

Sanders and O’Malley are vying to become the alternative to Democratic front-runner Hillary Rodham Clinton, who was campaigning in Iowa and Arkansas on Saturday and did not attend Netroots.

Before the demonstrations broke out, Vargas pressed O’Malley to defend his law enforcement record as Baltimore’s mayor a decade ago. O’Malley faced scrutiny when unrest broke out in his home city after an African-American man, Freddie Gray, died while in police custody in April.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

O'Malley discussed his work to deal with violence and drug addiction in Baltimore, telling the crowd, "there are very few issues in our country that are quite as painfully intertwined as the legacy of violence, race and law enforcement in America." He said his policies improved policing, reduced the number of police-involved shootings and increased drug treatment.

About 20 minutes into the interview, demonstrators walked into the cavernous ballroom, creating a confusing scene. Tia Oso, National Coordinator for the Black Alliance for Just Immigration in Phoenix, took the stage and addressed the crowd, noting two years had passed since the the Black Lives Matter movement started.

"We want to take a moment at Netroots to acknowledge the lives lost," Oso said. Organizers sought to restore order and at one point, Cheryl Contee, a Netroots Nation board member, took the stage and asked the audience to allow O'Malley to respond.

O'Malley said all Americans have a responsibility to "recognize the pain and the grief throughout our country, through all the lives that have been lost to violence." He reiterated that every police department should be required to report all police-involved shootings and create civilian review boards.

"Black lives matter. White lives matter. All lives matter," O'Malley told the crowd, as some protesters heckled him.

Sanders, during his abbreviated 20 minute appearance, spoke about the need to address wealth and income inequality, noting that blacks and Hispanics face high rates of unemployment.

His remarks were interrupted at times by the protesters, prompting Sanders to respond, "Black lives of course matter. I spent 50 years of my life fighting for civil rights."

Sanders called the criminal justice system "out of control" and described high rates of unemployment and incarceration for young black Americans.

Netroots Nation executive director Raven Brooks said in a statement that the organization "stands in solidarity with all people seeking human rights." He said Netroots aimed to give presidential candidates to respond to the issues faced by many diverse communities.

"Although we wish the candidates had more time to respond to the issues, what happened today is reflective of an urgent moment that America is facing today," Brooks said.

Here's another video taken Saturday of demonstrators chanting "This is what democracy looks like!" apparently while exiting a large conference room.

O'Malley Apologizes For Saying 'All Lives Matter' // Daily Caller // Derek Hunter – July 18, 2015

Former Maryland Gov. and Democratic Party presidential candidate Martin O'Malley, along with fellow candidate Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont, were shouted off stage at the Netroots Nation conference in Phoenix, Ariz., Saturday. O'Malley's offense was saying, "Black lives matter, white lives matter, all lives matter."

O'Malley has now apologized for including "white lives matter, all lives matter" in his statement.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Black Lives Matter movement on the extreme progressive left does not tolerate inclusion of all lives, or any other lives when it comes to mattering.

Appearing on the Internet based “This Week In Blackness,” or TWiB Nation, host L. Joy Williams excoriated O’Malley for his insensitivity for including “white lives” and “all lives” in his statement. The former governor did not repeat the phrases, he referred to them as “those other two phrases.”

“I want to ask something specifically,” Williams said, “Towards the end, in your explanation, you said the phrase ‘all lives matter,’ you said the phrase ‘white lives matter.’ But I want to ask you, do you understand the difference in responding in that conversation, in that context, with ‘all lives matter’ or ‘white lives matter’ when we’re specifically talking about black death, that is not all inclusive.”

O’Malley responded, “I certainly do and, in fact, I believe what I first said was that ‘black lives matter’ before those other two phrases. And when I said those other two phrases I meant no disrespect to the point, which I understand, that black lives matter is making.”

O'Malley, Sanders Shouted Down at Netroots by 'Black Lives Matter' Protest // The National Journal // S.V. Dante – July 18, 2015

Protesters upset that the topic of police shootings in black communities was not getting a high enough profile at the Netroots Nation conference shut down a much-touted forum Saturday featuring two Democratic presidential candidates.

Several dozen activists burst into the Phoenix Convention Center meeting hall as former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley was 20 minutes into a planned 40-minute moderated discussion. They sang – "What side are you on, people, what side are you on?" -- chanted, and eventually were given a microphone by conference organizers to ask O'Malley a question about police-involved violence.

"We hear you," Netroots board member Cheryl Contee said from the stage. "Give the governor a chance to respond."

O'Malley has been dogged by his record as Baltimore mayor since rioting there this year following the death of an unarmed black man in police custody. When his answer started describing some of his actions as mayor, the protesters began shouting him down again.

And when he said, "Black lives matter, white lives matter, all lives matter," the protesters roared in disapproval. O'Malley left the stage not long after.

Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, whose supporters had packed the hall, was similarly interrupted. Sanders tried to deliver a truncated version of his stump speech, only louder, in an attempt to drown out the protesters. When he was asked what his plan was to deal with police violence, he brought it back to a favorite topic of his, high unemployment in the black community, which he would solve with a trillion dollar program rebuilding the nation's infrastructure.

That answer failed to satisfy the protesters, who continued shouting and chanting until moderator Jose Antonio Vargas told Sanders that they had to wrap it up. Sanders replied: "Okay, good."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The protesters held a victory rally of sorts afterward. "People only yell when they feel they're not being heard," said one.

Ashley Yates, an activist who came to prominence in St. Louis during the riots there last year following the police shooting of a black man, was among the leaders of Saturday's protest. "We're telling you that black America is starved for resources and we are in a state of emergency," she said.

As to whether the disrupted discussion would make it harder for Netroots to attract presidential candidates in the future, Yates said: "That's Netroots' question to answer."

For its part, Netroots declined to criticize the protest. "Although we wish the candidates had more time to respond to the issues, what happened today is reflective of an urgent moment that America is facing today," the group said in a statement. "In 2016, we're heading to St. Louis. We plan to work with activists there just as we did in Phoenix with local leaders, including the #BlackLivesMatter movement, to amplify issues like racial profiling and police brutality in a major way."

Sanders continued with plans for a Saturday evening rally at the same Convention Center venue, while O'Malley held a discussion with local immigration activists Saturday afternoon.

Martin O'Malley Was Booed For Saying "All Lives Matter," & Here's Why That Phrase Should Just Disappear
// Bustle // Chris Togonotti – July 18, 2015

Saturday was a big day for Democratic presidential candidate Martin O'Malley. Despite serving two terms as the governor of Maryland and being one of just five Democrats in the 2016 field, he's getting pretty overlooked in the early going. So, like Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, he decided to speak at Netroots Nation, a good opportunity to draw some attention at a high-profile progressive event. And draw some attention he did, for all the wrong reasons: Martin O'Malley was booed for saying "all lives matter," and he really should have seen that one coming.

Look, there's no denying that O'Malley was probably a little thrown off his game. His appearance was interrupted by seemingly organized chants before the offending flap, an interruption that culminated in activists taking the stage and getting on the mic. That has to be a little disorienting, regardless of whether you're sympathetic to him or not.

But that kind of a moment can speak volumes, too – about how someone responds to a breakdown in the pre-arranged order of things, and how they choose to communicate about the most raw, serious issues for a given community. Here's are three reasons why Martin O'Malley got booed, and why "all lives matter" really needs to go away.

It's An Unneeded Statement

Think about the phrase black lives matter, and all the events that culminated to birth the movement. Mainly, instances of black people being slain by police without any legal action afterward. Michael Brown in Ferguson, no indictment. Eric Garner in New York City and John Crawford in Ohio – both men's deaths captured on video – no indictments. It's true that all lives do and should matter, but the point is that when black lives are lost, society doesn't treat it as such. Institutionally, and in the hearts and minds of countless racist trolls you can find in all corners of the internet, black lives matter less. Which is why it's so important to specifically name that, and to be unapologetic about it.

Stealing Black Activist Language Is Offensive

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Think of it like this: have you ever seen supporters of law enforcement tweet #BlueLivesMatter? It became a thing after the murder of NYPD officers Rafael Ramos and Wenjian Liu late last year, and you still see it from time to time. But beyond being intensely inflammatory – appropriating black activism against police brutality in service of law enforcement – it crucially misses the point.

After officers Liu and Ramos were killed, what happened? Their tragic deaths were national news, everybody knew their names, and there was a massive police and public response. The loss of life was treated as unacceptable and horrifying, and not just by police officers and their supporters, but by the public at large. And, had the perpetrator not killed himself shortly after the murders, he undoubtedly would have been hunted relentlessly and brought to justice. That's the difference.

Basically, if you're a white authority figure invoking the language of black activists, you should only do so address the issues, not dilute them.

He Didn't Just Say "All Lives Matter"

In reality, O'Malley's remarks were even a little bit worse than a simple "all lives matter" would have been. In full, while discussing how Maryland halted the death penalty under his watch, O'Malley said the following (the relevant portion starts at 59 minutes in).

Every life matters, and that is why this issue is so important. Black lives matter, white lives matter, all lives matter. … Black lives matter. White lives matter. All lives matter.

O'Malley must've felt some conviction about this, because he repeated it even with the boos and jeers still raining down from the first time. But, both in tone and in execution, it was an epic blunder. He came off, quite frankly, as though he were lecturing black people about their own movement. The argument of activists isn't that white lives don't matter, it's that black lives should matter every bit as much. In fact, over the din of the crowd, you can make out a man's voice yelling just that.

We don't need to hear that all lives matter! We already know that all lives matter!

In short, it came across as incredibly condescending, and made it seem as though O'Malley hadn't put enough thought into such a loaded remark.

GOP

DECLARED

BUSH

Raising money is a Jeb Bush family business, even for the next generation // WaPo // Ed O'Keefe – July 18, 2015

Politically, Jeb Bush wants voters to focus on his first name and his own political record. But when it comes to fundraising, he's still banking on the success of his last name.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

He hosted wealthy donors, many of whom backed his father and brother's presidential bids, at his parents' coastal estate in Maine this month. And on Friday night, he headlined a raucous dinner hosted by a PAC led in part by his two sons. It was held in a Venetian Hotel ballroom next to the theater where Diana Ross performs.

The group cannot officially endorse in the presidential race, so Bush and his family are drawing inspiration from the PAC as he continues fundraising. But the PAC is an outgrowth of the 2004 reelection campaign of George W. Bush — so, in essence, Jeb Bush is learning the lessons of his older brother.

With his father sidelined by injury and his brother staying out of the fray, Bush is deploying his wife and sons to appear at some of the 17 major fundraising events in 11 states and the District of Columbia that are scheduled through September.

Bush raised $11.4 million for his campaign in the last quarter — he was a candidate for just 16 days of the period. The sum was part of an unprecedented $119 million raised on his behalf by an allied super PAC and another leadership PAC. Most of his campaign money came from donors cultivated by the Bush family for more than 40 years. Just $368,000 came from people giving less than $200. Bush himself gave more to his campaign — $388,720 — to cover expenses.

Asked about the paltry sum of donations from small-dollar donors, Bush says that there will be plenty of time to cultivate grass-roots supporters.

"We had 16 days, and we wanted to send a statement of seriousness about the campaign. It was launched, and, in 16 days, we raised $11 million. I'm proud of that," he told reporters last week. "We'll have ample time to broaden that out. That's the intention."

For now, Bush is focused on bigger dollars, and his appearance on Friday night was a tacit acknowledgment of the work his sons are doing to help.

He appeared at a conference hosted by Maverick PAC, a group of wealthy Republicans under the age of 40 who support GOP political candidates of a similar age. The PAC was launched in Texas by about a dozen of George W. Bush's "Mavericks," or young professionals who helped raise at least $50,000 in 2004. In 2006, George P. Bush — Jeb's older son — joined the group and became chairman in 2010. He expanded the PAC beyond Texas to include more than 20 chapters, with several in Florida and one in London.

As Texas land commissioner, George P. Bush can no longer actively participate, but his friend, Jay Zeidman, kicked off the event Friday night. He stood in jeans and a button-down shirt handing out awards to winners of a "40 under 40" prize while attendees dined on chicken and pork barbecue, cole slaw and potato salad.

Spotted in the crowd was Charlie Spies, a Republican campaign finance lawyer, who represents Maverick PAC and Right to Rise USA, the super PAC allied with Jeb Bush that raised a record $103 million last quarter.

Two younger conservative authors, Guy Benson and Kristen Soltis Anderson, sat onstage sipping beer while touting their books. Benson admitted he'd spent most of the day drinking by the hotel pool. Both lamented that too many liberals rely on comedians Jon Stewart and John Oliver for their news and bemoaned the "stifling culture of political correctness."

Bush applauded enthusiastically from the front of the room. He was later introduced to the crowd by Fritz Brogan, a Washington restaurateur who worked in George W. Bush's administration and has grown close to Jeb Bush Jr.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Jeb Bush thanked his younger son for his early help and called out his wife, Columba, who was in the crowd.

"We've been married longer than the age of retirement of a MavPAC member," he said.

Father and son later headed upstairs to Bouchon, the French restaurant by chef Thomas Keller, where they hosted a kickoff reception for "Mission: NEXT" — essentially the 2016 version of George W. Bush's "Mavericks" group.

In a nod to his home state of Florida, Jeb Bush's donor program is called "Mission 2016 JEB" — a NASA-inspired title for a program that will have three distinct tiers for top bundlers.

The first tier, called Apollo, will be for bundlers who can help Bush raise at least $75,000. The second tier, called Endeavour, is for donors who reach at least $150,000. Top-flight bundlers will reach the Voyager level as they help rake in at least $250,000.

Mission: NEXT will be for donors under 40 who can help raise at least $50,000. George P. and Jeb Bush Jr. will co-chair the group and said in a joint statement that it "will be the central program for youth involvement in the campaign."

Through a spokesman, George P. Bush declined an interview request.

Jeb Bush Jr. said in a recent interview that when he meets with potential supporters, "I try to share my experience with Dad, working with him the last six years, what he's like as a dad or a grandfather, his experience in Florida as governor. And talk about potential solutions for things like student debt, the job market, health care, things that are facing millennials."

The two brothers have tapped their own professional networks — wooing junior executives such as Zeidman, business executives such as Brogan and attorneys, surgeons, investment bankers, accountants and other young professionals in Texas, Florida and elsewhere.

Andres Asion, a Miami real estate broker who is backing Jeb Bush and is friends with Jeb Bush Jr., said the brothers "have been raised in the business, per se, and they know their market and they know what they're doing very well."

Watching Bush's new plans unfold are several former members of Maverick PAC who have aged out and remain active in GOP politics and fundraising.

Jonathan Neerman, the former chairman of the Dallas County Republican Party, called the group "a starter PAC" that "was an introduction to the bundling world at a donor level that was not cost-prohibitive. Its genesis was really a networking opportunity for young bundlers from around the state to stay connected."

Another presidential candidate, Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Tex.), is a founding member and standout alumnus. His campaign chairman, Chad Sweet, is a former member.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"I've been tremendously impressed by the success of MavPAC over the years, serving as a vehicle for young professionals to play a meaningful role in the political process," Cruz said in an interview.

Clearly, Cruz learned from the experience: Despite trailing far back in most polls, he raised $14 million for his campaign last quarter and another $37 million through a constellation of super PACs backing his campaign. The combined $51 million put him just behind Bush in the GOP money race.

Jeb Bush consultant critiques Republican digital culture // Yahoo News // Jon Ward – July 18, 2015

A top digital consultant to Jeb Bush's presidential campaign had harsh words for Republican technologists on Saturday, saying that many of them are "impostors" and that the GOP has until recently been an "atrociously bad" place for tech savvy people who wanted to get involved in politics.

The Republican party "was a terrible place for a smart technologist to come work," Andy Barkett, a former Facebook engineer, said at a conference on technology and politics hosted by Lincoln Labs, a conservative nonprofit group.

Barkett, who was hired by the Republican National Committee as its chief technology officer two years ago, made reference to his time at the RNC, which did not go smoothly.

"I mean it was a terrible place for me when I started. It was horrible. It was like the worst experience of my life," Barkett said of his entry into Republican politics, after spending over a decade at Silicon Valley companies, where he moved into angel investing on the side. "It was just, like, atrociously bad."

Barkett was brought in after the RNC conducted an "autopsy" of the 2012 election that concluded they lagged far behind the Democrats in using technology to target voters for persuasion and turnout.

But Barkett said that Republican digital culture "is getting better, and now for the first time since I've been involved in it over the last few years, you can take a smart person and plug them in and they can be really effective and make a difference."

And yet, Barkett, 34, said that too many people in Republican politics, and political culture in general, still are too ignorant of basic technology.

"There's a whole bunch of people in politics who say a lot of words, all the buzz words that we talked about, and they say, 'I want more analytics.' None of them have any idea what any of those things mean," he said, seated on a stage during a panel discussion alongside digital operatives working for the presidential campaigns of Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Florida) and Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker.

"They have no idea what the difference is between building an infrastructure of servers that knows how to send e-mails, to having an e-mail list, or the difference between the records in the voter file and the analytics that you do in addition to those," he said.

Barkett urged people in politics doing tech-related work to "get over the impostor syndrome and learn what the f you are talking about."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Be honest with yourself, you're probably a political person and you probably don't know what the f you're taking about. And the first thing you should do is probably dig in and learn. In the short run it will hurt you, because you will be exposed as a fraud," he said. "You people will learn that you don't know these things yet. And in the long run it will help you, because you will then be one of the one percent of the people in politics who does know what they're talking about."

Yahoo Politics asked Barkett during the panel whether he was criticizing the 200 or so Republicans working in the tech space, and he clarified his comments.

"I wouldn't say all 200 of them are complete phonies. I would say that a lot of them are good at one thing or another. So a lot of them may be very good at online fundraising, which is a thing, which is important, or they may be very good at online advertising in a political context, which is a thing that's important," Barkett said. "There's not a lot of people who are genuinely well-rounded technology leaders. It's a pretty small percentage of that number."

Barkett is a controversial figure in Republican politics. His blunt style of communication and willingness to openly criticize other vendors and consultants quickly created many enemies when he arrived at the RNC. Less than a year after being hired by the RNC and its private sector data arm, Data Trust, to do work at both entities, he left Data Trust and went to work only at the RNC.

One of Barkett's biggest tasks at the RNC was to build a digital dashboard to access voter file data. That dashboard, which was called Beacon, never acquired a high user adoption rate and has been eclipsed by other platforms.

The RNC is currently working on a new dashboard that they hope will compete with the one being delivered to a growing number of Republican campaigns by the Koch brothers political arm, Freedom Partners, through a subsidiary called i360.

Barkett is now doing work for Bush's campaign through a company called Digital Core Campaign, LLC, which was paid $64,216 on June 30 for "web service." DCC advertises on its website that they do "big data infrastructure," "modeling and analytics," "digital communications," and "field and finance integration." The New York Times reported earlier this year that Barkett would be building a voter file to be used by both Bush's campaign and the super PAC supporting the former Florida governor.

Barkett on Saturday referred to Bush as his "client."

How Jeb Tackled the Cocaine Cartels // The Daily Beast // Betsy Woodruff – July 18, 2015

It was an October day in Miami, 1985, and Leonel Martinez didn't want to die.

Margarita Escobar—a Colombian woman known as La Doctora and rumored to be a distant relative of Pablo Escobar—had paid Martinez, a construction magnate, a hefty sum to move 12 duffel bags of cocaine from The Bahamas to Miami on his luxury yacht. The load got intercepted en route, though, and La Doctora wanted her money back. But Martinez didn't have it.

So she called him up and said she would be visiting his office. Martinez did the natural thing: He bought a Cadillac limousine, sent it to pick up her and her bodyguard at the airport—in an effort to project wealth he didn't quite have—and welcomed her to his office.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

She demanded he produce the cash. He didn't have it, and he offered her ten condominiums instead. But that wasn't good enough. Give her the money, she said, or she'd kill him.

"You can kill me, or you can wait," he replied.

She decided to wait, and she flew back to Colombia. Then Martinez got to work rustling up the thousands he owed her.

Overlooking that conversation was a wall plastered with pictures of Martinez glad-handing some of South Florida's most powerful political luminaries. That's because the drug-trafficker—according to retired DEA agent and a retired Metro Dade police officer who worked to hunt him down—had a knack for creating the illusion of intimacy with elected officials.

A few of those officials had the last name Bush.

But those donations didn't get him much.

In fact, as governor, Jeb Bush became a favorite of drug warriors. He mirrored his father's tough-on-drugs tactics in Florida, won the loyalty of cops and DEA agents, and showed the limits of money in politics.

When Jeb arrived in South Florida after the 1980 presidential campaign, it was a crazy time.

The use of drug money in politics was commonplace.

In fact, his dad's presidential campaign and the Jeb-helmed Dade County Republican Party both took contributions from Martinez, and faced minimal political repercussions when Martinez's true career was revealed.

Eduardo Gamarra, a professor in Florida International University's department of politics and international relations, said at that time Southern Florida was so saturated with cocaine-tainted cash that it would have been odd if none of it could get traced to Jeb.

"That's just the way things were in the 1980's," he said.

Gamarra added that grip-and-grin photos with drug dealers didn't immediately mean the politician was in league with them. Even then-state attorney Janet Reno appeared in a photo with Martinez when he was being investigated for bribery.

Martinez moved from Cuba to Miami when Castro rose to power, and he proceeded to build a successful construction business—with a lucrative marijuana- and cocaine-trafficking business on the side.

He also made a number of contributions to the Dade County Republican Party when young Jeb Bush chaired it, as Jack Colhoun detailed in an essay in the anthology Covert Action: The Roots of Terrorism. Martinez won respect in Republican circles and, according to his former defense attorney Ron Dresnick, even managed to snag a photo with Jeb. It was never released.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This came at a time when Jeb was laying some of the groundwork for the GOP's eventual and total takeover of state-level politics there. In 1984, Politico wrote, 4,000 Democrats became Republicans and 74 percent of Hispanics to join the voter rolls that year registered with the GOP.

That success ballooned, and Bush carried Miami-Dade in both of his successful gubernatorial campaigns. His impact in the Sunshine State is hard to overstate.

And a tiny little statistically insignificant sliver of it was thanks to coke money.

"Just like today everybody has to be a badass when it comes to fighting terrorists, the 80's and 90's were really the same. You had to demonstrate that you were a drug warrior."

By 1989, Martinez was unmasked as a narcotrafficker. The Miami Herald reported that he had promised to give a covert Drug Enforcement Administration informant a dump truck worth $80,000 and five lots worth $120,000 in exchange for 300 kilograms of cocaine. The Herald also noted that, in a government affidavit, between 1981 and 1989 Martinez and his team endeavored to move hundreds of pounds of marijuana and "multi-hundred kilogram shipments of cocaine" into Southern Florida. As one does.

The Martinez case was representative of a South Florida cocaine problem of cartoonish proportions—a culture where Jeb's political ambitions first began to flourish.

"It was a nuthouse," recalled Tom Raffanello, a former Special Agent in Charge of the DEA's Miami Field Division, who had that position for three years of Jeb's governorship there. "We averaged two drug-related shootings a month for almost two years. Everybody had a gun. Everybody was pissed off all the time."

Tony Kost, a retired Metro-Dade Police Department detective who worked to apprehend Martinez, Dominic Albanese (a retired DEA agent who worked on the investigation), and Raffanello all praised Jeb's work to continue the prosecution of the Drug War that started when his father, George HW Bush, was vice president for Ronald Reagan.

It's an interesting story of the failure of money in politics; though Martinez managed to donate his way into the good graces of South Florida Republicans, some of his favorite politicians ended up being the most dogged foes of his industry.

Albanese said that Jeb Bush's support of the War on Drugs—despite inadvertently appearing in a photo with a powerful drug trafficker—speaks to his integrity.

"I can't say enough good things about what the Bushes did for the anti-drug department, I'm telling you now," he added. "I know where we would have been if it wasn't for them. We'd be in deep kimchi right now, I'm telling you, with the drug problems."

Jeb Bush appointed the state's first drug czar, Jim McDonough, just a month after he assumed office. McDonough's responsibilities included coordinating statewide efforts to curtail the import and distribution of narcotics. Bush prioritized streamlining the communications between different agencies and governments—local, state, and federal—to make anti-drug efforts more efficient.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Gamarra, a Democrat, also said taking Martinez's cocaine cash shouldn't taint the Bush family's anti-drug legacy.

"It's kind of popular to go around saying we've lost the drug war," he said, "but South Florida really demonstrates how they built up the correct kind of legislation—financial controls and so on."

"You're not going to find an airplane flying into the Everglades dumping cocaine," he added. "Miami has drug problems today but this is not the 1980's by any stretch of the imagination."

Gamarra described Bush and his team as "the best drug warriors in town."

"Just like today everybody has to be a badass when it comes to fighting terrorists, the 80's and 90's were really the same," he continued. "You had to demonstrate that you were a drug warrior, that you were in favor of al the extreme kind of measures to stop drugs coming into the United States."

Data from the U.S. Department of Justice indicates that total violent crime grew at a slower rate than Florida's overall population during Bush's governorship.

While the population grew steadily, from 15.1 million people in 1999 to 18.3 million in 2007, the number of violent crimes committed in the state ebbed and flowed. In 1999, there were 129,044 total violent offenses. That number dipped to a low of 123,754 in 2004. And it grew to 129,602 in 2006, his last full year as governor.

The fact that violent crime didn't grow at the same rate as the population seems to corroborate the anecdotal evidence from South Florida's top drug warriors—that, with time, the state became less bloody.

Raffanello said Bush's efforts to improve communication between local sheriffs, the DEA, and other law enforcement arms were particularly fruitful.

As governor, he and his wife Columba participated in yearly Tallahassee summits that brought together the state's drug warriors for networking, planning, and coordination. Raffanello said the impact of those meetings—and the impact of the governor's involvement with them—made statewide enforcement efforts more organized and effective.

"I thought he really gave a shit," Raffanello said. "It's refreshing to see a politician care about an issue."

So his efforts seem to have made Florida less violent and crazy, but Gamarra said the overall outcome was mixed. While drug-related violence went down, there weren't great results as far as overall drug use.

"The objective of all of this stuff was to stop the flow of drugs into the United States," he said. "And we have just as many drugs coming into the United States today as we did in 1985. And the price is cheaper and quality of the drugs is better."

Still, Raffanello said Jeb's greatest impact was the shift of drug violence from the Sunshine State to the U.S./ Mexico border, saying the violence in Florida decreased "exponentially."

"We probably had three of the most successful years we had in the last two decades," he said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Talk of rolling back Obama's Iran nuclear deal on day one is not 'mature' // The Washington Times // Kellan Howell – July 18, 2015

Jeb Bush told a Nevada audience on Friday that he would not repeal President Obama's Iran nuclear agreement on day one.

Speaking in Carson City, the former Florida governor reiterated his opposition to the deal, which will ease economic sanctions on Iran in exchange for a decade of limitations to it's nuclear program.

But Mr. Bush stopped short of promising he would dismantle the deal and denounced other Republicans who have promised to do so, calling them panderers, Politico reported.

"At 12:01 on January, whatever it is, 19th [2017], I will probably have a confirmed secretary of state; I will not have a confirmed national security team in place; I will not have consulted with our allies. I will not have had the intelligence briefings to have made a decision," Mr. Bush said, Politico reported. "If you're running for president, I think it's important to be mature and thoughtful about this."

Mr. Bush said he would never have negotiated with Iran in the first place and told the crowd of roughly 100 people at the town hall that he doesn't discredit Mr. Obama for doing so, but for not negotiating harder.

"I'm deeply worried about this agreement because I think it's going to create the possibility of nuclear proliferation in the region and a much more unstable Middle East that will impact us," he said, Politico reported.

After holding a moment of silence for the Marines killed in a shooting Thursday at a recruiting center in Chattanooga, Tennessee, Mr. Bush slammed Mr. Obama for a foreign policy approach that has left the Middle East in tatters and had led to incidents of domestic terrorism like this week's shooting.

"We're living in times that are quite perilous," Mr. Bush said, Politico reported. "Now we see what happens when we pull back. These threats spread over the Internet all around the world including our own country. I, for one, we believe we need to reengage with the rest of the world, fight barbaric Islamic terrorism in the Middle East and also do what we need to do to protect the homeland, using all the tools available to make it so, protecting civil liberties along the way but make sure, make sure that we keep this country safe."

FBI officials have yet to confirm if the accused 24-year-old Kuwaiti-born gunman had any ties to Islamic terrorist organizations.

RUBIO

Rubio: 'The American people believe in immigration' // The Hill // Keith Laing – July 18, 2015

Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) on Saturday said he believes voters are willing to embrace immigration reform if officials find a way to stem the tide of illegal entrances into the country.

"I think the American people believe in immigration and want it to work for America," the Republican presidential candidate said at the Family Leadership Summit in Ames, Iowa.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"I don't think we can make any progress on it until we bring illegal immigration under control," Rubio continued. "That's been the biggest lesson of last three years."

Rubio pushed for an immigration reform package in 2013, prior launching his 2016 presidential bid, but he backed off amid staunch opposition from conservatives.

The White House hopeful placed blame for the failed immigration reform effort on President Obama and Democrats in Congress.

"I believe people are ready to be very reasonable about it [and] modernize our system," he said. "But before they do anything, they want to make sure that problem we have now of a rampant, out-of-control illegal immigration is brought under control and never happens again, and they don't believe that is and they don't trust this president to do it."

Obama has moved to address immigration through executive action, arguing he had to act on his own because Congress failed to pass an immigration reform measure in his first six years in office.

Rubio said blamed the congressional inaction on Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid (D-Nev.), who was the majority leader until the beginning of this year.

"It was frustrating for four years in the Senate, and Harry Reid chose to do nothing," he said. "And even now, we face the situation where even if we make progress, you have a president that will veto things."

"There are consequences to electing someone to the highest office of the land is who more interested in doing things by executive order than through the proper channel that our constitution gives us."

Rubio also criticized Obama for striking a nuclear agreement with Iran, saying the president is pursuing the deal "because he wants a legacy.

"He is dying to build exhibits for his presidential library," Rubio said of Obama, who promised to meet with hostile foreign leaders during his 2008 campaign.

"This is going to be that Barack Obama opened up America to Iran, and the next president blew it," Rubio continued. "And it's absurd and our allies in the region know it's absurd."

"We now live in a world were we treat the Ayatollah in Tehran with more respect than the Prime Minister of the only pro-American, free enterprise democracy in the Middle East, the state of Israel," the Florida senator said.

He said the final decision on the Iran deal will come down to "whether you are able to convince 13-14 Democrats to vote against it."

He said he is opposed to the nuclear agreement because "the inspection requirements in the deal are a complete sham."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"It sounds almost like an arbitration panel for a contract between two companies," Rubio added.

WALKER

Scott Walker Is Starting His Road to the White House in a Winnebago // ABC News // Jordyn Phelps – July 18, 2015

On his first trip to Iowa as the fresh face of the Republican presidential field, Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker has been putting the pedal to the metal, crisscrossing the Hawkeye State's corn field-lined interstates in a souped-up Winnebago RV with a goal of hitting all 99 counties before voters here cast the nation's first votes in the presidential nominating process.

Since arriving in Iowa Friday -- the final stop of his whirlwind five-state, 16-city campaign kickoff tour -- it has been abundantly clear that Iowa is the key to Walker's White House hopes.

"We're pulling a full Grassley. We're doing like Chuck Grassley and Joni Ernst and Terry Bandstad," Walker is telling audience after audience, referring to the state's two senators and governor, as he traverses the length and breadth of Iowa with his wife and two college-age sons. "We're going around in an RV in all 99 counties across this great state. We're having a lot of fun, it's a lot of fun for us cruising around the state in the RV."

It's a tried-and-true approach for the masters of Iowa-style retail politics, and one that's not only reaped benefits for Iowa politicians but presidential hopefuls too. Rick Santorum, the winner of the state's 2012 Republican caucuses, visited all 99 counties. And as the governor of a neighboring Midwestern state who spent his early childhood years in Iowa, the son of a small-town Baptist preacher, Walker goes heavy in emphasizing his Midwestern roots – and values -- as he makes his pitch to voters here.

While campaigning this week, he has taken to pulling from his pocket a 40-year-old-photo of him and his brother, David, holding an Iowa state flag and telling the story of how as boys they raised money to buy a state flag for the Plainfield, Iowa, town hall by walking around town with a mayonnaise jar with a slit in the top, eventually collecting enough coins to purchase the flag.

"That's the kind of people we are here in the Midwest," Walker said. "We stand up for what's right, we do the right thing, we don't make a lot of fuss about it, we just do it. And I think that's what we need now more than ever in Washington."

Everything from Walker's choice of transportation (he jokes he could go camping in the RV) to his footwear (Harley boots) and the contents of his pockets (that photo of him and his brother holding an Iowa state flag as children), bolster Walker's narrative as a relatable guy who could just as easily live down the block as he could at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

Walker closes his stump speech with a promise not to leave the people of Iowa behind in the rearview mirror of his Winnebago if they can deliver him a win in the 2016 caucuses.

"I'm not just coming to the caucus, I'm committed here," Walker says. "You help me win this caucus and we go on and become the nominee, we will be back in Iowa to win in November of 2016, because the pathway to a Republican president comes through the Midwest."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Iowa Republicans get some satisfaction as Scott Walker rolls up like a rock star // The Guardian // Ben Jacobs – July 18, 2015

In a shortsleeved button-down shirt and with a thin veil of sweat on his upper lip, Scott Walker would never be mistaken for Mick Jagger. Yet on his first official trip to Iowa as a candidate for the presidency, the Wisconsin governor came across as a rock star in mid-tour form.

In lieu of performing his greatest hits, Walker reached back to his 40-minute announcement speech from Monday – and gave some lines word for word.

Surrounded by a crowd of almost 200 in a room on the upper deck of a minor-league baseball stadium in Davenport, Walker said he could bring "new and fresh leadership which gets things done". He went on to recite the story of how he cracked down on organized labor in his home state, praising the idea of "true freedom" as he did so.

"As long as you don't violate the health and safety of your neighbor, go out and start your own business," Walker said.

He also denounced Barack Obama's deal with Iran and, unsurprisingly, cited Ronald Reagan as his foreign policy model.

Many of the attendees were familiar with Walker's record. John Moeller of Davenport told the Guardian he had long been a small donor to the Wisconsin governor. Pat Turner of nearby Coal Valley, Illinois, said her daughter, a student at the University of Wisconsin, experiencing major budget cuts pushed by the governor, didn't much like him. However, Turner, a former teachers union member, liked that the Wisconsin governor cracked down on tenure for public school teachers.

No screaming teenage girls ran on stage – although Miss Scott County 2014 did sit behind Walker, wearing tiara and sash. The governor was approached, after his speech, by a homeless man, who embraced him.

Gregory Kehl, a 60-year-old army veteran wearing a Harley-Davidson vest, asked to pray with the candidate. As they embraced, Kehl prayed for a Walker victory. He had never voted before, he said, but he would do so in this election for Walker.

Kehl then asked for help finding something to eat. Walker directed him to a staff member who took him to an assortment of hamburgers and bratwursts, provided for attendees.

Some more traditional Republican supporters were also impressed. Gene Lepperd of Bettendorf talked to the Guardian while munching on a bratwurst with onions and ketchup. Lepperd, who was wearing an Iowa State University polo shirt, said he thought Walker was No 1 in the 15-strong Republican field. Asked why, he cited Walker's record as governor.

A lot of politicians will give "these flowery speeches", Lepperd said, but he thought the governor was "one of the few who had walked the walk" with his conservatism in office in Wisconsin.

The Davenport event was Walker's first stop in Iowa as an official candidate – he has announced his intent to visit all 99 counties in the course of the primary campaign. He was scheduled to crisscross the Hawkeye State through Sunday.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Scott Walker promises forceful foreign policy in Sioux City stop // Sioux City Journal // Bret Hayworth – July 18, 2015

Pointing to his experience as Wisconsin's chief executive, Gov. Scott Walker on Saturday vowed he would establish the toughest foreign policy since Ronald Reagan if he wins the presidency in 2016.

Walker, a Republican, told a crowd of 200 in Sioux City that he would steer the nation away from Democratic President Barack Obama's failed, inadequate defense of longtime ally Israel and ensure that sanctions remain on Iran, a nation that is suspected of wanting to develop nuclear weapons. A 60-day period for Congress to review Obama's deal to lift sanctions on Iran is underway.

"Iran is not a place we should being doing business with," Walker said.

Walker spoke for 20 minutes outside a Republican Party office downtown on a sunny day. He didn't take questions from the crowd.

He came through the city as part of a six-state, 16-city swing after launching his campaign Monday in Wisconsin. He plans to visit 10 Iowa counties through Sunday, traveling in a Winnebago motor home.

Walker noted that he lived as a young boy in Plainfield, Iowa, in the 1970s before his minister father moved the family to Wisconsin. He peppered his remarks with statements about living in Iowa, Big 10 Conference sports and shopping for bargains at Kohl's.

When he turned to policies, Walker said he would boost the economy by reducing harmful federal regulations on business, decreasing tax rates and ensuring that all types of energy be used nationally.

"I am for building a better economy, where everyone can be lifted up and get their piece of the American Dream. And I am for protecting your children and grandchildren from the threats of radical Islamic terrorism and other threats like that in the world," Walker said.

As for his Wisconsin accomplishments, Walker pointed to education reform, lowering property taxes and reducing benefits to state employee union members in 2011.

Walker said in becoming the first Republican governor in Wisconsin since 1984 he has demonstrated the mettle needed to win a bruising presidential election next year.

"I am going to come back and play to win in Iowa," Walker said of the state that is among roughly 10 battleground states that could decide the presidency.

Walker has led the broad Republican field in Iowa polls for many months, even though he wasn't officially a candidate until this week.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Walker's visit closed out a notable week of Republican candidates making their first visit to Sioux City. Former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush spoke Monday, and U.S. Sen. Marco Rubio had a campaign stop on Friday. They drew crowds ranging in size from 140 (Rubio) to 240 (Bush).

Sandy Sievers, of Sioux City, said Walker is among her current five top choices for president. She also likes former Texas Gov. Rick Perry, Rubio, and U.S. Sens. Ted Cruz, of Texas, and Lindsay Graham, of South Carolina.

"I am checking Walker out thoroughly," Sievers said. "He is with my philosophy on foreign affairs. We do need to support Israel. We have kind of left them to sink or swim."

Jim Lewis, of Sioux City, has Walker and Perry in his top tier of candidates.

Lewis said the fact that Walker prevailed after an election to remove, or recall, him from the governor position is impressive.

"He is coming from a blue (Democratic-leaning) state. He won the election on the recall even more than he won the first time. To me, that shows he is doing the right thing," Lewis said.

PAUL

Report: Rand Paul calls for scrutiny of Muslims // USA Today // Bill Theobald – July 18, 2015

Breitbart News is reporting that GOP presidential candidate Rand Paul told one of its reporters backstage at a speech in Houston last night that the U.S. should provide extra scrutiny of people coming into the country from predominantly Muslim countries after the Chattanooga, Tenn., terrorist attack on Friday.

"I'm very concerned about immigration to this country from countries that have hotbeds of jihadism and hotbeds of this Islamism," Paul told Breitbart. "I think there does need to be heightened scrutiny. Nobody has a right to come to America, so this isn't something that we can say 'oh, their rights are being violated.' It's a privilege to come to America and we need to thoroughly screen those who are coming."

The alleged shooter in the Chattanooga incident -- which claimed the lives of five U.S. Marines -- was named Muhammad Youssef Abdulazeez. The 24-year-old was born in Kuwait and immigrated to the U.S.

Paul also cited an incident in his hometown of Bowling Green, Ky., where two Iraqi refugees who were placed in Kentucky tried to buy military grade missiles.

"I think we're doing the wrong thing by just having this open door policy to bring in people without significant scrutiny. I'm for increasing scrutiny on people who come on student visas from the 25 countries that have significant jihadism. Also, any kind of permanent visas or green cards, we need to be very careful. I don't think we're being careful enough with who we let in," he said.

Paul, a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee, said he would ask that senators to look at reinstating the National Security Entry-Exit Registration System program.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Started in 2002 after the 9/11 terrorist attacks, the DHS system recorded the arrival, stay and departure of people from countries chosen based on an analysis of possible national security threats. Registrants were also required to register when they left. The program was effectively eliminated in 2011.

Ron Paul Not Listed As Donor To Rand Paul's Presidential Campaign // Daily Caller // Jamie Weinstein – July 18, 2015

Rand Paul's father Ron does not appear to be among the over 100,000 donors so far to his son's presidential campaign.

According to the younger Paul's recent Federal Election Commission filing, the elder Paul, a former Texas congressman who himself ran for president three times, has yet to donate to his son's 2016 presidential campaign — at least not more than the $200 threshold where his donation would be required to report. Rand's mother, Carol, does not appear to have donated her son's campaign yet either.

In contrast, the other Republican presidential contender with a storied political family, Jeb Bush, has received the maximum allowable donation of $2,700 from both his father, former President George H.W. Bush, and his mother, former first lady Barbara Bush.

A host of Bush siblings and in-laws, including former President George W. Bush and former first lady Laura Bush, have also donated $2,700 to Jeb's campaign to win the Republican presidential nomination.

An email to Paul's campaign spokesman by The Daily Caller Thursday requesting comment went unreturned.

Between April when Paul officially entered the presidential field and June 30, Paul has raised nearly $7 million, according to numbers filed earlier this week with the FEC. That number places him ahead of Republican contenders like Carly Fiorina and Rick Perry, but behind Marco Rubio, Jeb Bush, Ben Carson and Ted Cruz.

Paul's mother Carol did donate $2,000 to her son's Senate race in 2010.

CRUZ

Cruz: Planned Parenthood leaders should be prosecuted // The Hill // Keith Laing – July 18, 2015

Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Texas) on Saturday said the leaders of Planned Parenthood should be prosecuted after the release of a video this week showing an executive discussing the donation of fetal organs.

"Every American should watch that video and say, 'Are those my values?' " the 2016 presidential candidate said at the Family Leadership Summit in Ames, Iowa.

"On tape, it appears a Planned Parenthood official is admitting to multiple felonies," he continued. "The U.S. Department of Justice, if it was not simply a partisan arm of the DNC, should open an investigation and prosecute Planned Parenthood. Congress should hold hearings and we should cut off funds."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Planned Parenthood's senior director of medical services, Dr. Deborah Nucatola, was filmed discussing the demand for fetal organs such as livers, lungs and “intact” hearts. The video has been viewed more than 1.5 million times since it was released Tuesday.

Republicans have threatened to cut of the group's federal funding since the release of the video, but Democrats have sought to protect the payments.

Paul said he also took issue with a recent Supreme Court decision to legalize same-sex marriage, which he said was "lawless and it was sad."

"It's naked judicial activism," he said.

Ted Cruz On Iran Deal: There Will Be Blood // Breitbart – July 18, 2015

In case there was any doubt, which there probably wasn’t, Sen. Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) is not a fan of the Iran deal that President Barack Obama announced on Tuesday.

Indeed, he told CQ Roll Call Tuesday it will fund murder.

If the deal goes into effect, it “will result in the United States government becoming one of the leading funders of international terrorism,” and that “those American dollars will be used to murder Americans, to murder Israelis, to murder Europeans.”

The Texas Republican said a sensible commander in chief would demand that Iran disassemble all centrifuges, forfeit its enriched uranium, shut down its intercontinental ballistic missile program — which is solely to “carry a nuclear weapon to the U.S.” — and stop being the world’s leading state sponsor of terrorism.

Cruz called Obama’s speech announcing the deal “particularly shameful” for not mentioning Americans imprisoned in Iran — specifically Pastor Saeed Abedini, Marine veteran Amir Hekmati and journalist Jason Rezaian.

“To see the president not even mention Americans wallowing in Iranian prisons for having the temerity to profess their faith, for having the temerity to exercise their First Amendment rights, I cannot imagine the heartbreak and betrayal that [their] families must be feeling and that every American should be feeling at a president who doesn’t stand up and defend Americans,” Cruz said.

Cruz, of course, isn’t the only 2016 aspirant to oppose the Iran deal. The party’s candidates appear united in opposition.

Ted Cruz says he won't 'go into the gutter' to criticize Donald Trump // Business Insider // Bryan Logan – July 18, 2015

Criticism of real estate mogul-turned-presidential candidate Donald Trump has been swift and boisterous of late, thanks to Trump's fiery statements labeling some Mexican immigrants as "rapists" and drug-runners.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Trump's latest target is Arizona Senator John McCain (R), a decorated veteran who was a prisoner of war in Vietnam.

After the billionaire businessman trampled McCain's service record Saturday, saying "He's not a war hero," and mocked McCain's time in captivity, the ensuing backlash was quick and sharp.

Current GOP presidential candidates and the Republican Party at large have summarily condemned Trump's attack, except for one candidate, Ted Cruz.

In a Bloomberg interview Saturday, Cruz said "I'm not going to go into the gutter with personal attacks"

Cruz hearkened back to his days in the Senate where he says "I haven't impugned the character of Republicans or Democrats and I don't intend to start today," Bloomberg reports.

Trump has doubled down on his unfiltered political rhetoric despite criticism coming from all sides, including Republican National Committee chairman, Reince Priebus.

News Corporation founder, Rupert Murdoch, tweeted Saturday that Trump is "embarrassing the country."

For better or worse, Trump has not been shy about challenging anyone who opposes him — engaging critics on social media and in public.

In the few weeks since Trump launched his 2016 presidential campaign, Ted Cruz, who is also vying for the GOP nomination, has made a concerted effort to stay out of Trump's way.

Even as the repudiation of Donald Trump's views on immigration exploded, Cruz — who is of Cuban ancestry — backed away, even saying he "salutes" Trump for "focusing on the need to address illegal immigration."

PERRY

Rick Perry redoubles attack on Donald Trump for John McCain remarks // The Guardian // Ben Jacobs – July 18, 2015

Former Texas governor Rick Perry doubled down on his condemnation of Donald Trump's attack on John McCain, demanding an immediate apology.

Trump, however, said only that McCain was "yet another all talk, no action politician who spends too much time on television".

Hours after Trump said McCain was "not a war hero" on stage at the Family Leadership Summit in Ames, Perry went on the same stage and tore into Trump for his remarks.

McCain's plane was shot down over North Vietnam in 1967 and he spent five and a half years in captivity, subject to repeated torture.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Perry said: “I was highly offended about what Donald Trump said about [McCain’s] years of sacrifice in a dirty, dingy, terrible prison in North Vietnam. Donald Trump owes every American veteran and, in particular, John McCain an apology.”

In response to a follow-up question from moderator Frank Luntz, the former Texas governor said that if Trump did not apologize it would disqualify him from being a legitimate candidate as well as commander in chief.

Perry’s comments received polite applause from the audience of thousands of Iowa social conservatives.

In a statement on Saturday afternoon, Trump tried to pivot on his comments about McCain and distance himself from criticism of the Arizona senator’s service. Trump said: “I am not a fan [of] John McCain because he has done so little for our veterans and he should know better than anybody what the veterans need, especially in regards to the VA [Veterans Affairs department].

“He is yet another all talk, no action politician who spends too much time on television and not enough time doing his job and helping the vets.”

Earlier on Saturday, Perry’s campaign had issued a statement stating Trump’s comments represented “ a new low in American politics” and urging the former Celebrity Apprentice host to “immediately withdraw from the race for president”.

In recent days, Perry has engaged war of words with Trump. The former Texas governor has condemned Trump’s comments on immigration and said the billionaire’s ideology was “a toxic mix of demagoguery and nonsense”.

In return, Trump tweeted that Perry “should be forced to take an IQ test before being allowed to enter the GOP debate”.

Perry is running for president for a second time, after his 2012 campaign was torpedoed by a debate gaffe, in which he forgot the name of a third government department he was proposing to abolish.

Perry calls on Trump to end his campaign: ‘His comments have reached a new low’ // Washington Times // Seth McLaughlin – July 18, 2015

Former Texas Gov. Rick Perry is calling on Donald Trump to bow out of the 2016 GOP presidential race, after the New York real estate mogul ridiculed Sen. John McCain’s military service.

Mr. Perry and Mr. Trump have been engaged in a back-and-forth that escalated Saturday when Mr. Trump dismissed the idea that Mr. McCain is a war hero for getting shot down over Vietnam and being imprisoned for nearly six years.

Mr. Perry called on Mr. Trump to apologize and end his bid for the White House, and the Republican National Committee said that there is “no place in our party” for Mr. Trump’s comments.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“As a veteran and an American, I respect Sen. McCain because he volunteered to serve his country. I cannot say the same of Mr. Trump. His comments have reached a new low in American politics,” Mr. Perry said. “His attack on veterans make him unfit to be Commander-in-Chief of the U.S. Armed Forces, and he should immediately withdraw from the race for President.”

Mr. Trump and Mr. Perry have been trading barbs for several days.

Mr. Trump said Mr. Perry failed to secure the Texas-Mexico border as governor and said Mr. Perry should be “forced to take an IQ test before being allowed to enter the GOP debate.”

Mr. Trump also had took aim this week at Mr. McCain, the party’s 2008 presidential nominee, calling him a “dummy” after the Arizona Senator said that Mr. Trump’s controversial remarks on immigration have fired “up the crazies” in the Republican party.

The feud spilled into the Family Leadership Summit in Iowa on Saturday when Mr. Trump mocked Mr. McCain’s war hero status.

“He’s not a war hero. He was a war hero because he was captured,” Mr. Trump said, sarcastically. “I like people who weren’t captured.”

Then he added, “He’s a war hero because he was captured. OK, I believe — perhaps he’s a war hero.”

Mr. Trump’s GOP presidential came to Mr. McCain’s defense.

“If there was ever any doubt that @realDonaldTrump should not be our commander in chief, this stupid statement should end all doubt,” Sen. Lindsey Graham of South Carolina said.

“Enough with the slanderous attacks,” said former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush. “@SenJohnMcCain and all our veterans - particularly POWs have earned our respect and admiration.”

Sean Spicer, RNC spokesperson, said Mr. McCain is “an American hero because he served his country and sacrificed more than most can imagine. Period.”

“There is no place in our party or our country for comments that disparage those who have served honorably,” Mr. Spicer said.

Despite the blow back, Mr. Trump signaled he plans on sticking around the nomination race, blasting out a news release in which he leveled additional criticism at Mr. McCain.

“He is yet another all talk, no action politician who spends too much time on television and not enough time doing his job and helping the Vets,” Mr. Trump said. “He is also allowing our military to decrease substantially in size and strength, something which should never be allowed to happen.”

“I have great respect for all those who serve in our military including those that weren’t captured and are also heroes,” he added. “I want to strengthen our military and take care of our Veterans. I want to MAKE AMERICA GREAT AGAIN especially for those that serve to protect our freedom. I am fighting for our Veterans!”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Rick Perry: Trump Is Unfit to Lead the Military, 'Should Immediately Withdraw' from Race // MediaIte // Josh Feldman – July 18, 2015

Lots of Donald Trump's Republican presidential candidates have already shredded him for his comments about John McCain, but Rick Perry came out swinging by calling for Trump to basically GTFO.

In case you missed it, the draft-defering Trump attacked McCain today over his war hero status because, "He's a war hero 'cause he was captured. I like people that weren't captured."

Now, for some unbelievable reason, lots of conservatives including the aforementioned candidates thought Trump crossed a line.

Perry was the first to release a statement on The Donald's latest rambling, this one really going for the jugular (emphasis his):

Donald Trump should apologize immediately for attacking Senator McCain and all veterans who have protected and served our country. As a veteran and an American, I respect Sen. McCain because he volunteered to serve his country. I cannot say the same of Mr. Trump. His comments have reached a new low in American politics. His attack on veterans make him unfit to be Commander-in-Chief of the U.S. Armed Forces, and he should immediately withdraw from the race for President.

For the record, when Trump was asked if he plans to apologize, he said no.

Rick Perry calls on Donald Trump to withdraw from the presidential race // Business Insider // Maxwell Tani – July 18, 2015

Real-estate magnate Donald Trump's latest comments were a bridge too far for many top Republican presidential rivals. And at least one candidate wants him out of the race.

Former Texas Gov. Rick Perry (R) said Trump should be disqualified from running for president.

"His attack on veterans make him unfit to be Commander-in-Chief of the US Armed Forces, and he should immediately withdraw from the race for President," Perry said in a statement.

At an event in Iowa on Saturday, Trump raised eyebrows for criticizing Sen. John McCain's (R-Arizona) military service and status as a prisoner of war in Vietnam.

"He's a war hero because he was captured. I like people that weren't captured," Trump said.

Trump's comments sparked immediate condemnation from the Republican presidential field. Perry was the first to explicitly call for him to withdraw from the race.

"I respect Sen. McCain because he volunteered to serve his country," Perry said in a statement. "I cannot say the same of Mr. Trump. His comments have reached a new low in American politics."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

GOP candidate and Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-South Carolina), McCain's long-time friend, also said Trump's comments were "disqualifying." Other Republican hopefuls, including former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush (R), Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker (R), and Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal (R), condemned Trump's remarks.

Trump was quick to slightly tone down his comments about McCain, though he did not apologize.

"He is yet another all talk, no action politician who spends too much time on television and not enough time doing his job and helping the [veterans]," Trump said in a statement. "He is also allowing our military to decrease substantially in size and strength, something which should never be allowed to happen."

As it has done when defending controversial comments in the past, Trump's campaign cited the excitement in the crowd as proof that his message resonated with the crowd.

"Note, Mr. Trump left to a long lasting standing ovation, which will be by far the biggest ovation of the weekend, and much congratulatory praise," a statement from the Trump campaign said.

Trump's comments come after McCain criticized the real estate mogul earlier this month for bringing out "the crazies" in the Republican base.

Perry — a former cargo-plane pilot in the Air Force — made military service a major part of his presidential campaign. In his announcement speech last month, the former governor was joined onstage with several veterans and the wife of sharpshooter Chris Kyle, made famous by the semi-biographical film American Sniper.

GRAHAM

'I feel like I'm on Oprah': Lindsey Graham tears up in Iowa as he explains how the government helped him survive his parents' early death // Daily Mail // David Martosko – July 18, 2015

South Carolina Sen. Lindsey Graham fought back tears on Saturday during a religious Republican gathering, recalling his late mother and father, and imagining how he would talk to them if he could.

Graham was left with a 13-year-old sister to raise at age 21 when his parents both died within a year's time, and he said he wished they knew 'that Darline turned out really good.'

And risking the wrath of more than 1,000 red-meat conservatives gathered in Ames, Iowa, he insisted that he and his younger sibling wouldn't have survived the crisis of their lives without robust government benefits.

'I'm a proud Republican but there's a time and a place for the government,' he said. 'I've been on my knees and some people helped me get up.'

'I'm glad I had college loans for my sister,' he said. 'I'm glad Social Security is there. If I got to be president of the United States I'd make sure we did the right thing and the hard thing, because the country needs a leader and Barack Obama has been a miserable failure as president.'

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Asked by moderator Frank Luntz at the Family Leadership Summit to say what he would say to his parents, Graham paused while tears welled in his eyes.

He said, whisper-like, that he would say 'that Darline turned out really good.'

'And I've tried hard. And thanks to you, I've come a long way.'

Over generous applause at one of the day's most genuine human moments, Graham told the crowd: 'Love is not the size of the house, but what happens inside the house. I was well loved.'

'To all those kids who were not well loved, I feel so sorry for you,' he preached. 'This is a Family Leadership council. We're all one car wreck away from needing somebody's help.'

As the ovation subsided, Graham turned and smiled.

'I feel like I'm on Oprah,' he said. 'I'm sorry.'

'What does that make me?' Luntz asked.

Graham's focus on the value of taxpayer-funded benefits was a stark contrast to other GOP presidential candidates who spent their alloted time on stage describing which federal programs – and entire cabinet departments – they would ban from Washington.

The Internal Revenue Service, the Education and Energy Departments and the section of Health and Human Services that administers Obamacare programs were popular targets.

And while neither Republicans nor Democrats are fond of bashing entitlements like Social Security, there's scant agreement on how to keep the programs functioning as benefit payouts dramatically outpace taxpayer contributions.

The Social Security and Medicare Boards of Trustees reported in 2014 that the two programs' long-term unfunded obligations – money the government will need to distribute but has no plan to collect in taxes – has reached nearly $49 trillion.

That figure continues to grow and is approaching triple the size of America's official public debt.

Republican reformers have been loath to risk the wrath of elderly voters and those approaching retirement, tiptoeing around the idea of changing how benefits are allocated.

Think-tanks periodically propose raising the retirement age as Americans' life-expectancy grows, in order to keep Social Security solvent, or 'means-testing' Social Security by denying benefits to people who already have confortable retirement incomes of their own.

I'm a proud Republican but there's a time and a place for the government. I've been on my knees and some people helped me get up. I'm glad I had college loans for my sister. I'm glad Social Security is there.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Sen. Lindsey Graham, reflecting on how the GOP needs to be willing to compromise in order to keep entitlement programs solvent

Democrats typically pan such proposals as mean-spirited and cruel, especially as biennial federal elections draw near.

But Graham, a centrist on immigration reform, said Saturday that his own experience with the Social Security program would drive him to reach across the political aisle as president and get something done.

'When I was 21 my mom died,' he said. 'A year later my dad died. I'm 22. My sister's 13.'

'My mom had Hodgkins Disease,' he recalled wistfully. 'We got totally wiped out because we were underinsured. So I don't need a lecture from Democrats about health care.'

'We got Social Security survivor benefits to help our family since my sister was a minor.'

Graham pointed to his own situation as an aging bachelor, and hinted that he was a stand-in for other Americans who could afford to bend on their retirement expectations.

'I'm 60, I'm not married, I don't have any children,' he said.

'What would I do to save Social Security for people who need it more than I do? Almost anything.'

'I would give up some of my benefits to save it for those who needed it more. I'd work with a Democrat to save Medicare and Social Security. Because if we don't, we're all going down together.'

Graham told the story of Republican President Ronald Reagan and Democratic House Speaker Thomas 'Tip' O'Neill collaborating in 1983 to avoid a Social Security default by raising the retirement age.

While both men's partisan backers grumbled, the pair took a public victory lap and became genuine friends.

That result, surprising for Washington, emerged after Reagan formed a White House commission on saving Social Security and invited O'Neill and the Democrats to share its seats.

In contrast President Barack Obama, said Graham, 'has done nothing but talk.'

A similar commision, named after co-chairs Alan Simpson and Erskine Bowles, a former Republican Senator and Clinton Chief of Staff, delivered recommendations on the long-term solvency of the U.S. treasury that the White House has largely ignored.

'He had a chance to do something about our national debt – Simpson-Bowles,' Graham complained on Saturday. 'He threw it in the trash can.'

SANTORUM

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Rick Santorum wants curbs on legal immigration in effort to help boost wages in US // AP – July 18, 2015

Several Republicans presidential candidates are vowing to stop illegal immigration. But Rick Santorum says the U.S. needs to curtail legal immigration as well.

The former Pennsylvania senator says the vast majority of immigrants coming into the U.S. — legally and illegally — are driving down wages for American-born workers.

Santorum tells Iowa evangelical voters on Saturday that "we need to hold the line and stop illegal immigration" while reducing legal immigration of unskilled workers by 25 percent. He says that will help bring up wages in the U.S.

Santorum is among 10 presidential candidates courting religious conservatives in Iowa. He won the state's caucuses in 2012, but faces strong competition for the evangelical vote in 2016.

HUCKABEE

Huckabee Responds to Trump: 'John McCain is a hero' // Alex Swoyer – July 18, 2015

GOP presidential candidate Mike Huckabee distanced himself from fellow candidate Donald Trump's statements about Sen. John McCain (R-AZ)43% on Saturday.

"I said very clearly Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) is a hero — Donald Trump will need to determine whether that's a statement he needs to walk back," Huckabee told a news conference, saying that he continues to speak only for himself.

Reporters also questioned Huckabee about Trump's popularity, since the real estate mogul has rocketed to number one in recent polls.

"I'm having a hard time understanding why I don't have 97 percent in the polls right now," Huckabee quipped, saying he'll focus on his campaign and not on Trump.

Huckabee added that the polls will continue to fluctuate.

"You guys are giving him so much attention — give me a little bit of the love," Huckabee joked to the press.

The crowd at the Family Leadership Summit certainly did. Huckabee got four standing ovations — the most for any candidate so far.

CARSON

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Carson: Black voters 'waking up' to GOP // The Hill // Keith Laing – July 18, 2015

Ben Carson on Saturday said African-American voters are "waking up" to the possibility of supporting GOP candidates for office like himself.

"I think there's a lot of people who are waking up," the neurosurgeon-turned-presidential candidate said at the Family Leadership Summit in Ames, Iowa.

"I met with a group of black pastors yesterday and people are waking up in droves," he continued. "I think they're realizing what's been happening here."

Carson said he converted to the Republican Party after growing up and going to school in Democratic strongholds during the Reagan administration.

"I started listening to Ronald Reagan ... and I said he doesn't doesn't sound like that," he said, noting he had heard horror stories about conservatives during his entire upbringing.

Carson criticized President Obama for shrinking the size of the U.S. military in the face of terrorism threats in the Middle East.

"Our military is shrinking while our enemies are growing and metastasizing," he said. "It seems like we're trying to destroy ourselves. We've got to do better than that."

The Republican presidential hopeful said he would prepared to fight Islamic State in Syria and Iraq if successful in his bid to become commander-in-chief.

"We have radical Islamic jihadists who want to destroy us and they want to destroy our way of life," he said. "And their existence is a threat to us. We cannot be in that mindset that we made a mistake and we spent a bunch of money, so let's just get into our little cocoon. That's not going to work."

Dr. Ben Carson on 'Trump's McCain Statement: 'We Need to Hear from Everybody' // Breitbart News // Alex Swoyer – July 18, 2015

In a press conference following GOP candidate Dr. Ben Carson's speech at the Family Leadership Summit in Ames, Iowa, Carson was asked what he thought about Trump's comments on illegal immigration and recent statement on Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) as a war hero, which Trump made during his own speech at the Summit.

"I think everybody has their niche – everybody has their voice," Carson answered. "I think we need to hear from everybody. And that's the beauty of the process we have."

A reporter asked Carson what niche Trump has in the GOP presidential race.

"I think that's a decision that will be made by the people," Carson answered.

Carson continued to say the people will decide who's voice they favor: "Not the media, not the pundits, but the people – all we have to do is make sure we allow voices to be heard."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Carson said he believes Sen. McCain has done some wonderful things when questioned if he considers McCain a war hero.

JINDAL

Jindal focuses on his religion in Indianola // The Des Moines Register // Paige Godden – July 18, 2015

Hours before Bobby Jindal met hundreds of media and fans Saturday at the Family Leadership Summit in Ames, he sat down with a much more intimate crowd 50 miles south in Indianola.

About 60 people gathered to see the Louisiana governor and White House hopeful at the First Assembly of God Church.

Jindal started his hour-long remarks by pointing out that the sleeping baby his wife Supriya Jolly was holding wasn't theirs.

"Before we start any rumors, that is not our baby," Jindal said. "That'd be news to my parents and a lot of other folks back home."

The Jindals have three children of their own: Slade, Selia and Shaan.

The youngest of which, Bobby said, was accidentally born at home.

His wife was in labor for more than 24 hours with the first two children, he said, but the third came in 30 minutes.

"I'll tell you this," Jindal told the crowd. "Any man who thinks they're tough, there's a reason the Lord God almighty decided women — not men — should have babies. If men had babies, there would be one and we'd get together and say 'never again.' "

The Republican focused a good portion of his speech on his religious beliefs.

He said as commander in chief he'd hunt down and kill radical Islamic terrorists and make sure to condemn the "evil individuals who are going straight to hell, where they belong."

Jindal later said Christians are the ones who are being persecuted in America.

His remarks on terrorism began with blasting President Barack Obama, who at the Pentagon earlier this week said the country can't win the war on terror with guns.

"You know, I'm glad generals Eisenhower and Patton didn't take that idea in World War II," Jindal said. "Can you imagine if a previous generation said we're going to win, we're going to beat evil with propaganda? The French would be speaking German today."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

He said instead of having a president who is busy apologizing for and criticizing America and wants to protect Americans from microwave popcorn, Oreos and junk food, citizens should want a president who will actually say the words "radical Islamic terrorism."

"How can we beat an enemy if we're not willing to name it, identify it and confront it?" Jindal asked. "I don't want a commander in chief who says we're going to contain them. I want a commander in chief who says we're going to hunt them down and kill them."

He said as president, he'd tell Muslim leaders they have to explicitly embrace the same freedoms for people of different religious beliefs as they want for themselves.

Jindal said his own statements are harsh, and he'll be judged for being anti-Muslim or racist, but he said it's just common sense to say he'd confront radical Islamic terrorism.

Later, he called out Hillary Clinton, who said Jindal was too extreme for saying he wants to get rid of the Supreme Court justices after they legalized gay marriage.

Maybe, he said, he really only wants two-thirds of the justices gone.

"We need Republicans who are willing to fight for our principles," Jindal said. "I'm for federal efforts to give us our Tenth Amendment back to define marriage as being between a man and a woman, but we also need to fight for our First Amendment rights."

He said the left is trying to take away the First Amendment right of freedom of religious expression.

"Several weeks ago, Hillary Clinton said those of us who are pro-life need to have our religious beliefs changed," Jindal said. "My religious beliefs are between me and God almighty. I'm not changing because Hillary Clinton doesn't like it, or the New York Times doesn't like it. But make no mistake, the left are now trying to silence us."

In Louisiana, Jindal said, he wrote an executive order in May protecting the rights of individuals and businesses that says no one can sanction or discriminate against those who have a traditional view of marriage.

His reward, he said, was a lawsuit from the American Civil Liberties Union.

"They used Louisiana's own Religious Freedom and Restoration Act to defend the rights of religious minorities, and I'm glad they did," Jindal said. "But now that Christians are the ones being persecuted and discriminated against, now the ACLU is showing its hypocrisy. They don't want anything to do with the rights of Christians.

"I want to say this very slowly and simply so even Hillary Clinton can understand it," Jindal said. "The United States of America did not create religions liberty. Religious liberty created the United States of America."

Jindal also talked about Israel and Iran, stating every time Israel gets attacked, the president talks in moral equivalents.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The president, he said, believes both sides should make concessions even though only one side is using suicide bombers to attack civilians.

Instead of putting pressure on Israel, Jindal said, the country needs to figure out how to reject violence and believe in itself.

"If they want negotiations, it's up to them to reject violence, to reject terrorism, to recognize the right for Israel's right to exist," Jindal said.

He questioned how Obama can be making deals with Iran when he can't even acknowledge Israel exists.

"We need to make it clear Israel is our most important ally in the Middle East," Jindal said. "Secondly, I will not recognize a bad deal negotiated by this president."

Jindal received a lot of applause with his stance on immigration, including a story on how his parents achieved the American dream.

"When they came, they came legally," he said to a clapping audience.

He received even louder applause when he said: "If folks want to come to our country, they should come legally, they should learn English, they should adopt our values and they should roll up their sleeves and get to work when they get here."

Jindal later said he'd try to protect the border, but he wouldn't do that with a 1,000-page immigration bill. The only thing that would be good for, he said, is if someone decided to stack the pages up along the border.

TRUMP

The Trump Campaign's Turning Point // NYT // Nate Cohn – July 18, 2015

Donald Trump's surge in the polls has followed the classic pattern of a media-driven surge. Now it will likely follow the classic pattern of a party-backed decline.

Mr. Trump's candidacy probably reached an inflection point on Saturday after he essentially criticized John McCain for being captured during the Vietnam War. Republican campaigns and elites quickly moved to condemn his comments — a shift that will probably mark the moment when Trump's candidacy went from boom to bust.

His support will erode as the tone of coverage shifts from publicizing his anti-establishment and anti-immigration views, which have some resonance in the party, to reflecting the chorus of Republican criticism of his most outrageous comments and the more liberal elements of his record.

His surge in the presidential polls began on June 16 when he declared his candidacy. Announcements of that type always yield a wave of media coverage, just as they did for candidates like Ted Cruz or Marco Rubio. So far this year, media attention from announcements has helped the best-known candidates by an average of six percentage points, with the effect degrading steadily afterward.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But Mr. Trump has not received an ordinary amount of media attention, and he has not received an ordinary bounce. He has been perfecting the art of attracting media attention for more than two decades, first in New York and then nationwide. Today, he is a celebrity, the biggest and best-known personality in the race, someone who would attract an unusual amount of attention and interest even if he said nothing unusual or interesting. Mr. Trump, of course, made unusual and provocative comments from the start, saying in his announcement speech that Mexican “rapists” were entering the United States.

The amount of news media coverage of Mr. Trump dwarfed the attention received by other candidates. His post-announcement bounce has dwarfed other candidates’ surges as well. In taking the lead in some polls, he has justified another wave of media coverage and attention that continues to the article you’re reading right now.

It is tempting to attribute Mr. Trump’s surge to something more than media coverage, to assume that his positions must have unusual resonance with Republican voters, or to infer that Republicans are clamoring for an anti-immigration candidate. Those factors do play a role, but the predominant force is extraordinary and sustained media coverage.

Donald Trump’s support kept climbing, even after his initial post-announcement boost.

The average includes Donald Trump and all candidates who received at least 4 percent in polls before their announcement: Jeb Bush, Scott Walker, Marco Rubio, Ted Cruz, Rand Paul, Mike Huckabee and Ben Carson.

The polling is consistent with the media-driven explanation as well. His support does not follow ideological lines, as Harry Enten of FiveThirtyEight has observed. It is not even clear that he has more support among immigration hard-liners than other Republicans. A Politico article titled “The Mystery of the Trump Coalition” struggled to identify which issues or demographics drove support for Mr. Trump. There might not be any.

Media-driven bumps occur all the time. Michele Bachmann, Rick Perry and Herman Cain all rode bits of good news to a lead in national polls in 2011. They even occur in general elections, like after a party convention, when voter preferences are far firmer than they are in a 17-way primary. Google Trends data indicates that the interest in Mr. Trump rivals or even exceeds the interest in Mitt Romney after the Republican National Convention and presidential debates in 2012.

But media-driven surges are not sustainable. Eventually, the media coverage shifts from whatever initially propelled the bounce — an announcement, a strong debate performance, a convention — toward a more serious examination of the candidate newly at the top of the polls. Some candidates can withstand this scrutiny. Most do not.

Google search interest in Donald Trump has been about the same as Mitt Romney’s during September and October of 2012, before the general election.

Lynn Vavreck, who contributes to The Upshot, and her fellow political scientist John Sides described the cycle of boom-bust candidacies as “discovery, scrutiny and decline” in their book “The Gamble.” Mr. Trump, who already enjoys high name recognition, may not present a typical case of “discovery,” but it’s highly unlikely he’ll avoid decline after encountering scrutiny.

Even a cursory look at Mr. Trump’s political record revealed a candidate with serious liabilities once journalists and campaigns started taking him seriously. He has donated more to Democrats than Republicans over the last decade. He has even donated to Hillary Clinton, who he has said he likes, and the Clinton Foundation. He has supported universal health care and seems to continue to do so. He has supported a $5 trillion dollar tax increase and has said he is “very pro choice,” although he has since changed his position on abortion. He is self-evidently unelectable in a general election, combining terrible poll numbers with an unpresidential persona.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Conservative candidates and their supporters view him as a rival. They have every incentive to publicize those of his views that the G.O.P. considers heretical. More moderate and establishment-friendly Republicans oppose his statements and views on immigration. They fear that his tone will alienate Hispanic voters, who are considered essential to the party’s general election chances now and in the future. Mr. Trump’s supporters will start taking cues from the uniform opinion of their fellow partisans.

Until today, the big question about Mr. Trump was when coverage would shift toward a serious examination of him. Journalists and campaigns have, understandably, been reluctant to treat him as a serious candidate. The Huffington Post, for instance, decided it would cover him in the entertainment section. But eventually, campaigns were bound to treat him as a threat to be neutralized, and journalists would decide he was a candidate who needed to be covered.

Today, Mr. Trump brought the shift upon himself. His comments were nothing less than an invitation for the rest of the Republican Party to begin their long-awaited offensive. So far, the Republican National Committee, Rick Perry, Bobby Jindal, Jeb Bush and Scott Walker have already criticized him for his comments.

After today, Republican commentators and campaigns will have far fewer reservations about attacking Mr. Trump. They will be dismissive of his candidacy, and they will probably diversify their attacks, expanding the onslaught to include his record of donating to Democrats and his continuing support for universal health care. Nearly all of the campaigns have incentives to pile on, and Mr. Trump — without a deep base of support and with few party allies — will struggle to hold on.

He will probably try to stoke support and coverage with more attention-grabbing remarks, though my hunch is that his act will have lost its novelty by the time the attacks begin to take their toll. Voters will be looking for more from him than the bombastic campaign he has offered so far. They will be looking for a serious presidential candidate, and they won’t find one.

Donald Trump disparaged John McCain’s military service. Is this the end of his run? // WaPo // Philip Bump – July 18, 2015

At Saturday's Family Leadership Summit in Ames, Iowa, Donald Trump may, at last, have crossed a line with Republican voters from which he can't walk back.

Arizona Sen. John McCain earlier this week harshly criticized the businessman in a conversation with the New Yorker, lamenting Trump's comments about Mexican immigrants. Having already responded on Twitter by calling McCain a "dummy," Trump upped the ante in Iowa by disparaging McCain's -- and every POW's -- military service.

"He's a war hero because he was captured," Trump said. "I like people that weren't captured."

The online response (for what it's worth) was immediate and harsh. Many pointed to the fact that Trump had received deferments that let him avoid service in Vietnam. In an ensuing press conference, Trump blamed a bone spur, among other things. A subsequent written statement offered that Trump has "great respect for all those who serve in our military including those that weren't captured and are also heroes." (And ends with: "Note, Mr. Trump left to a long lasting standing ovation, which will be by far the biggest ovation of the weekend, and much congratulatory praise.")

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Unsurprisingly, his primary opponents criticized him as well, at varying degrees of severity.

As CBS' John Dickerson pointed out on Twitter, Trump's comment allows establishment Republicans who disagreed with Trump's much more vituperative comments about Mexican immigrants to at last lay into him or write him off. Several of Trump's primary opponents were loathe to respond to his immigration comments with much ferocity. But defending illegal immigrants requires a higher political investment than defending former prisoners of war. Ted Cruz, Trump's most reliable defender on the immigration remarks, declined to condemn these comments, either.

Voters may react differently. Given the increasing number of times Trump has made outlandish comments that have been disproven or rebuked -- and that Trump has nonetheless steadily risen in the polls -- it's easy to envision Trump not paying much of a price this time, either.

Among the conservative voters that rallied to Trump's side after his attacks on immigration, McCain is hardly a favorite. (Some laughter can be heard in the audience following Trump's comment.) But for less fervent voters who liked the idea of straight-shooting Donald Trump who was the only guy talking about immigration, the comments will likely cause some reconsideration of support. Average Republican voters support deporting illegal immigrants. They are far more likely, however, to support military service.

It's worth noting that Trump endorsed McCain during the latter's 2008 bid for the presidency. At the time, Trump said that McCain was "a man worthy of respect." He continued: "And this country no longer has respect. What we need more than anything else is just that word: Respect."

Trump slams McCain for being 'captured' in Vietnam; other Republicans quickly condemn him // WaPo // Philip Rucker – July 18, 2015

Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump slammed Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.), a decorated Vietnam War veteran, on Saturday by saying McCain was not a war hero because he was captured by the North Vietnamese.

"He's not a war hero," Trump said. Sarcastically, Trump quipped, "He's a war hero because he was captured." Then, he added, "I like people that weren't captured."

Trump's comments came during his appearance at the Family Leadership Summit, a day-long gathering of about 3,000 social conservative activists that is drawing nine other Republican presidential candidates.

A celebrity businessman and reality television star, Trump has surged to the top of polls in the GOP race, in part because of his inflammatory comments about undocumented immigrants from Mexico.

Republican leaders and other candidates have been careful in how they respond to his immigration remarks, but his condemnation of McCain opened the floodgates, drawing swift and sharp criticism from other Republicans.

Former Texas governor Rick Perry, himself a subject of recent attacks from Trump, said Trump was "unfit" to serve as president and should "immediately withdraw" from the race.

"Donald Trump should apologize immediately for attacking Senator McCain and all veterans who have protected and served our country," Perry said in a statement. "As a veteran and an American, I respect Sen. McCain because he volunteered to serve his country. I cannot say the same of Mr. Trump. His comments have reached a new low in American politics. His attack on veterans make him unfit to be Commander-in-Chief of the U.S. Armed Forces, and he should immediately withdraw from the race for President."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Jeb Bush, the former Florida governor, also chimed in with a Twitter post calling or an end to such "slanderous attacks":

Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, campaigning in Western Iowa, denounced Trump's remarks and said McCain is "undoubtedly an American hero." This is a change in tune for Walker, who on Friday refused to speak ill of Trump over his immigration comments.

"He needs to apologize to Senator McCain and all the other men and women who have worn the uniform," Walker told reporters following a campaign stop in Sioux City. "It's just a disgrace."

Sen. Marco Rubio (Fla.) posted on Twitter: "America's POWs deserve much better than to have their service questioned by the offensive rantings of Donald Trump"

The Republican National Committee also criticized Trump and defended McCain.

"Senator McCain is an American hero because he served his country and sacrificed more than most can imagine. Period," RNC Chief Strategist and Communications Director Sean Spicer said in a statement. "There is no place in our party or our country for comments that disparage those who have served honorably."

Mitt Romney, who ran against McCain in the 2008 GOP primaries, also took to Twitter to defend him: "The difference between @SenJohnMcCain and @realDonaldTrump: Trump shot himself down. McCain and American veterans are true heroes."

Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Tex.), who has been perhaps the loudest defender of Trump's remarks about immigrants and met privately with Trump a few days ago in New York, refused to condemn Trump over his comments about McCain.

Cruz said that he considers McCain a friend and "an American war hero" and that it is an honor to serve with him in the Senate. But he said he would not criticize another Republican candidate, including Trump.

"I recognize that folks in the press love to see Republican-on-Republican violence, so you want me to say something bad about Donald Trump or bad about John McCain or bad about anyone else," Cruz told reporters here. "I'm not going to do it. John McCain is a friend of mine. I respect and admire him and he's an American hero. And Donald Trump is a friend of mine."

For the past few days, Trump has been publicly feuding with McCain, the GOP's 2008 presidential nominee. McCain said that Trump had drawn out "crazies" with his immigration-focused rally in Phoenix last weekend, and Trump responded by calling McCain a "dummy" for finishing at the bottom of his class at the Naval Academy.

Trump stepped up his criticism of McCain on Saturday in Ames. He said he had supported McCain's 2008 campaign and claimed to have raised $1 million for him.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“He lost,” Trump said. “He let us down. I never liked him as much after that because I don’t like losers.”

In a combative, 18-minute news conference following his remarks here, Trump refused to apologize for his attack on McCain's war service.

Trump said he considers prisoners of war to be heroes — although he called Sgt. Bowe Bergdahl an exception — but accused McCain of doing little to help veterans in the Senate.

“John McCain has not done enough for the veterans,” Trump told reporters. “The veterans in this country are suffering. The veterans in this country are treated as third-class citizens. John McCain talks a lot, but he doesn’t do anything.”

Trump grew hot and agitated by repeated and sharp questioning from reporters, who were asking him to explain his earlier suggestion that McCain should not be considered a war hero because he had been captured.

“I like the people that don’t get captured, and I respect the people that do get captured,” Trump said.

But he did not answer the questions about McCain directly. He snapped at one persistent reporter, “Go back to being a pundit.”

Trump managed to avoid serving in the Vietnam war because of a series of draft deferments. Asked why he didn’t serve, Trump said, “I had student deferments and ultimately had a medical deferment because of my feet. I had a bone spur.” But Trump said he did not recall which foot was injured and instructed reporters to look up his records.

Trump added, “I was not a big fan of the Vietnam War. I wasn’t a protester, but the Vietnam War was a disaster for our country. What did we get out of the Vietnam War other than death? We got nothing.”

After meeting with the news media, Trump took to Twitter, where he did not back down from his criticism of McCain:

Outside the political world, Trump was also being widely criticized.

Ann Mills-Griffiths, president of the National League of POW/MIA families, a nonprofit group that supports families of American troops held as prisoners of war and those missing in action, said that Trump's comments were inappropriate.

“Sen. McCain was a prisoner of war who came home with honor but also continued to serve the nation and certainly the cause of America’s veterans returned and unreturned,” Mills-Griffiths said in an interview. “We all need to be grateful for those who did serve with honor.”

John Rowan, president of the Vietnam Veterans of America, said in an interview that the group is “assiduously non-partisan” and does not support candidates or comment on political rhetoric.

Rowan said only of Sen. McCain’s service in Vietnam, including his time as a prisoner of war, that “he served his country well."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But Paul Rieckhoff, founder of Iraq and Afghanistan Veterans of America, commented that Trump's remarks were offensive to all veterans who have served overseas.

"Trump's asinine comments about Senator McCain's service are an insult to everyone who has ever worn the uniform — and to all Americans," Rieckhoff said on Twitter. "Trump's stupidity is especially egregious given the death of a Navy Petty Officer just this morning and the death of 4 Marines this week. An attack on one veteran's service is an attack on us all."

And John W. Stroud, national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, said: "For someone who never served a day in uniform to criticize the service and sacrifice of a combat-wounded veteran is despicable."

Trump Surge Leaves All but Jeb Bush in Donald's Dust // WSJ // Dante Chinni – July 18, 2015

Something strange has happened to the Republican presidential field since Donald Trump joined it a month ago: Mr. Trump and Jeb Bush are rising. Everyone else is falling in the polls, or seems stuck in place.

Mr. Bush's support has jumped by about four percentage points in the Real Clear Politics average of polls, rising to 15.5%. Mr. Trump's support has bumped up more than 10 points since mid-June, to 15% as of Friday.

And everyone else? Here's another view of how support for most of them has fallen during the course of the Trump bump.

The numbers suggest Mr. Trump is shaking up the GOP primary electorate in a meaningful way.

He seems to be taking support from the most conservative and anti-Washington rivals in the field, particularly Mike Huckabee, Scott Walker, Ted Cruz and Rand Paul.

Mr. Bush's rise in the polls, coming in tandem with Mr. Trump's growing strength, may be a sign that so-called establishment Republicans are closing ranks around Mr. Bush, possibly as a result of Mr. Trump consolidating his own support. Marco Rubio may be feeling some of that shift with his sinking numbers.

The numbers suggest there may be very different approaches among the candidates to dealing with Mr. Trump, who has the media's attention right now.

Mr. Bush's rise in the polls suggests that his base of support has little overlap with Mr. Trump's, and he therefore may have the least to lose in attacking the brash New Yorker. And Mr. Bush, in fact, has criticized Mr. Trump's now-famous claim that many Mexican immigrants are criminals.

The rest of the field may take a more subtle approach to handling Mr. Trump. Attacking him head-on may risk alienating his supporters.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

There's reason to believe that Mr. Trump will fade. Many voters have a negative view of him, as a recent USA Today/Suffolk University poll shows, suggesting that he may not weather well over time.

If Mr. Trump's negative ratings hobble him in the nomination fight, his supporters will be up for grabs. And the candidates who have lost support in the last month are going to be looking to get their voters back – and perhaps a chunk of someone else's supporters, as well.

Trump's Criticism of McCain Overshadows Issues in Iowa // AP – July 18, 2015

Donald Trump's criticism Saturday that Sen. John McCain isn't a war hero overshadowed his rivals' quest for support among evangelical voters at an Iowa political gathering designed to showcase their conservative views.

In their appeals to more than 2,000 religious conservatives crowded into an sports arena, Trump and other White House hopefuls urged a crackdown on illegal immigration, a forceful approach to the Islamic State group that could include ground troops, and a devotion to Christian values.

Yet Trump's questioning of a respected Republican leader's war record dominated the day.

When the moderator pressed Trump over his recent remark that McCain was "a dummy" and pointed out that the Arizona Republican was a war hero, Trump said: "He's not a war hero. ... He is a war hero because he was captured. I like people who weren't captured."

The comment directed at a former prisoner of war drew some boos from the audience and criticism from several Republican rivals who took the stage later in the day. McCain's spokesman offered no comment.

Trump's outsized role in the Republican presidential primary began last month when he described Mexican immigrants as "bringing drugs, they're bringing crime, they're rapists, and some, I assume, are good people."

"It turns out I was right," Trump declared on Saturday, citing the recent murder of a California woman by an immigrant in the country illegally. "I am so proud of the fact that I got a dialogue started on illegal immigration."

Trump was not alone in his hardline approach on illegal immigration.

Once a leading advocate for an immigration overhaul that included an eventual pathway to citizenship, Florida Sen. Marco Rubio said Saturday he'd support "work permits or something like that" for immigrants in the country illegally, but only after "we bring illegal immigration under control."

Rick Santorum, a former U.S. senator from Pennsylvania, took it a step further. He called for curbs on illegal and legal immigration, suggesting that both groups of immigrants are hurting American-born workers. He specifically called for cutting legal immigration by 20 percent.

"What is in the best interests of American workers?" Santorum said.

The Republicans' position moves further away from GOP leaders' previous calls to embrace comprehensive immigration changes heading into a presidential election where Hispanic voters are expected to play a critical role.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On foreign policy, the candidates offered an aggressive approach to the Islamic State group, whose rise has become an increasing concern for American policy makers and a focus in the Republican presidential primary.

Retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson, a conservative favorite, said he was skeptical of the U.S. invasion of Iraq more than a decade ago. On the Islamic State group, however, Carson said there was a "strong likelihood" that American ground forces would be necessary to contain the threat.

"I would send ground troops if I needed ground troops in order to take the land," Carson said. "You're not going to take the land without troops."

While not addressing ground forces, Rubio charged that, "ISIS is someone we can humiliate," using an alternative acronym for the group.

"We need to subject them to high-profile humiliating defeats that we broadcast and advertise to the world," he continued. "We have won propaganda wars before."

The conversation came as evangelical voters eye their options in an extraordinarily crowded Republican presidential contest. There are already 15 high-profile contenders in the race, while two more are expected to join by month's end.

Iowa's evangelical voters traditionally hold great sway in the state caucuses, which are expected for the first week in February. Christian conservatives backed the winners of the last two caucuses, Mike Huckabee in 2008 and Rick Santorum in 2012, but neither became their party's nominee.

Former Iowa Republican Party Chairman Matt Strawn said it was likely too early for a leader to emerge among Christian conservatives.

"Not only are there considerable options within the Christian conservative lane, but there are also those in that lane that demonstrate appeal to a broader base," he said.

Indeed, muscular policies on immigration and foreign policy are often popular among the GOP's most passionate voters — as is a commitment to Christian values.

"I go to church. And I love God," Trump said. "I'm a religious person. ... People are so shocked when they find this out."

Trump attacks McCain: 'I like people who weren't captured' // Politico // Ben Schreckinger – July 18, 2015

Donald Trump might finally have crossed the line.

Appearing on Saturday at the Family Leadership Summit in Ames, Iowa, the real estate mogul took his running feud with Arizona Sen. John McCain to a new level.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“He’s not a war hero,” said Trump. “He was a war hero because he was captured. I like people who weren’t captured.”

The remarks, which came after days of back-and-forth between McCain and Trump, were met with scattered boos.

McCain, a former Navy pilot, spent roughly five-and-half years in a notorious North Vietnamese prison known as the “Hanoi Hilton,” where he was repeatedly tortured. He spent two of those years in solitary confinement.

At a press availability following his remarks, Trump denied saying that McCain isn’t a war hero and said, “If somebody’s a prisoner, I consider them a war hero.”

He also continued his attacks on the Arizona senator, saying, “I think John McCain’s done very little for the veterans. I’m very disappointed in John McCain.”

Trump received four student deferments from military service between 1964 and 1968. In Ames, he told reporters another medical deferment he received after graduating was for a bone spur in his foot. When asked which foot, Trump told reporters to look up the records.

In a follow-up statement sent to reporters, Trump again declined to apologize, calling McCain “yet another all talk, no action politician who spends too much time on television and not enough time doing his job.”

Trump’s fellow Republican presidential candidates quickly distanced themselves from his remarks — with a few notable exceptions.

“Enough with the slanderous attacks,” Jeb Bush tweeted.

“@SenJohnMcCain and all our veterans - particularly POWs have earned our respect and admiration.”

“John McCain is an American hero. I have nothing but respect for his service to our country,” tweeted Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal. “After Donald Trump spends six years in a POW camp, he can weigh in on John McCain’s service,” he added in a second tweet.

”.@SenJohnMcCain is an American hero & all POW’s deserve our nation’s highest debt of gratitude. @realDonaldTrump’s comments are disgraceful,” tweeted former Texas Gov. Rick Perry.

“As a fellow veteran I respect @SenJohnMcCain because he volunteered to serve his country. I cannot say the same about Mr. @realDonaldTrump,” Perry added. He then called in a statement for Trump to drop out of the race.

South Carolina Sen. Lindsey Graham, a close friend of McCain’s, tweeted, “If there was ever any doubt that @realDonaldTrump should not be our commander in chief, this stupid statement should end all doubt.” He added: “At the heart of @realDonaldTrump statement is a lack of respect for those who have served - a disqualifying characteristic to be president.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

At a campaign event in Sioux City, Iowa, Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker called McCain “an American hero.” At a press gaggle afterwards, he said of Trump, “I unequivocally denounce him.”

“I know @SenJohnMcCain. Senator John McCain is an American hero. Period. Stop,” tweeted New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie.

“America’s POWs deserve much better than to have their service questioned by the offensive rantings of Donald Trump,” tweeted Florida Sen. Marco Rubio, who spoke at the summit before Trump.

Sean Spicer, a spokesman for the Republican National Committee, tweeted: “.@SenJohnMcCain is an American hero because he served his country and sacrificed more than most can imagine. Period.”

“There is no place in our party or our country for comments that disparage those who have served honorably,” he added.

Not all Republicans were ready to condemn Trump. When asked by POLITICO if the mogul’s comments were out of line, Santorum declined to comment. In a tweet, he defended McCain, but did not mention Trump: “.@SenJohnMcCain is an American hero, period.”

Texas Sen. Ted Cruz spoke at length to reporters about McCain’s heroism between signing books and appearing on-stage at the summit, but he, too, declined to condemn the comments when asked about them.

Neurosurgeon Ben Carson, whose appearance followed Trump’s at the summit, declined to comment on Trump’s remarks after leaving the stage. He also would not say when asked whether or not McCain was a war hero. “It depends on your definition of a war hero,” he said.

Trump on John McCain: 'I Like People That Weren't Captured, Okay?' // Bloomberg // Sahil Kapur – July 18, 2015

Donald Trump went where nobody could have expected even Donald Trump to go.

The real estate mogul and Republican presidential candidate, who's leading the field in several recent polls, lit into Senator John McCain of Arizona on Saturday when speaking to a conservative conference, even going after his legendary military service—and drawing instant condemnation from fellow candidates.

"He's not a war hero," Trump said in a question-and-answer session with pollster Frank Luntz. Then he altered his comment: "He's a war hero because he was captured. I like people that weren't captured, okay?"

“He's a war hero because he was captured.”

The crowd responded with an awkward mix of shocked "oohs" and scattered applause. "Because he was captured, okay? Perhaps he's a war hero. But right now he's said some very bad things about a lot of people."

McCain spent more than five years in captivity as a prisoner of war in Vietnam, a brutal period during which he was tortured and faced solitary confinement, after his plane was shot down. His feud with Trump escalated last week after Trump rallied conservatives in Phoenix against illegal immigration, which McCain, who is running for reelection to the Senate in 2016, told New Yorker "fired up the crazies."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Trump retorted: "I know what a crazy is. I know all about crazies. These weren't crazy."

And that wasn't all Trump had to say about McCain. He attacked him for having "graduated last in his class" at the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis (McCain actually graduated fifth from last).

Asked why he didn't serve in the Vietnam War, Trump responded that he had a bone spur, although he couldn't remember in which foot. "It's a long time ago. I had student deferments and ultimately had a medical deferment because of my feet," he said.

Badgered by reporters at a news conference shortly after, Trump repeatedly refused to back down or apologize for his attack on McCain, and even launched new missives. "I think John McCain has done very little for the veterans. I'm very disappointed in John McCain."

"If someone's a prisoner I would consider that person a war hero. And we have a lot of war heroes that weren't prisoners also. And we should give them credit, too," he said.

Trump's fellow Republican candidates at the Ames, Iowa, forum, including Bobby Jindal, Lindsey Graham, and Rick Perry, quickly condemned the comments.

"John McCain is an American hero. I have nothing but respect for his service to our country," Louisiana Governor Jindal said on Twitter. "After Donald Trump spends six years in a POW camp, he can weigh in on John McCain's service."

Former Florida Governor Jeb Bush, who was not at the conference, also tweeted. "Enough with the slanderous attacks."

Trump questions McCain's bravery, says 'he is not a war hero' // CNN // Mark Preston & Eugene Scott – July 18, 2015

Donald Trump ignited a political firestorm Saturday by questioning whether Sen. John McCain -- who spent over five years as a prisoner during the Vietnam War -- is a war hero.

By mid-afternoon, Trump tried to walk back his blunder on Twitter, saying "captured or not, all our soldiers are heroes!"

But his attempt at damage control seemed unlikely to diminish the anger his remarks had caused. They provoked an immediate outcry from his 2016 presidential rivals and the Republican National Committee, which has expressed concern about the impact his controversial remarks on immigration have had on the GOP brand.

For Republicans waiting to pounce on Trump and knock him from his position as the party's leading presidential candidate, the real estate mogul may have handed them an opening.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Cruz declines to denounce Trump's McCain comments

The controversy began early Saturday afternoon, when Trump, speaking at a question-and-answer session at the Family Leadership Summit in Ames, Iowa, commented on McCain, with whom he's recently feuded over illegal immigration.

"He is not a war hero," Trump told pollster Frank Luntz, who was hosting the session.

"He is a war hero," Luntz interjected.

"He is a war hero because he was captured," Trump said, cutting him off. "I like people that weren't captured, OK? I hate to tell you. He is a war hero because he was captured. OK, you can have -- I believe perhaps he is a war hero."

The comments met with a mix of gasps, boos, laughter and some applause from an audience.

McCain, a Naval aviator, was shot down in 1967 over North Vietnam and fractured both arms and legs after being ejected from his aircraft. He was repeatedly tortured during his stay in the notorious "Hanoi Hilton" -- and refused early release when the North Vietnamese learned his father was a Navy admiral -- until he finally returned home in 1973 following the Paris Peace Accords.

The Arizona senator, who has limited mobility in his arms following his war experience, received the Distinguished Flying Cross, a Silver Star and a Purple Heart for his service.

Trump believes in God, but hasn't sought forgiveness

Trump, meanwhile, received several deferments during the war. According to The Smoking Gun, which obtained selective service records for Trump in 2011, he received four student deferments between 1964 and 1968, and later a medical deferment in 1968.

McCain spokesman Brian Rogers told CNN that the senator would have no comment on Trump's statements.

But McCain's daughter, Meghan, tweeted that she was "horrified" and "disgusted" by the remarks.

"I can't believe what I am reading this morning," she said. "There are no words."

2016 GOP hopefuls rip remark

Trump's comments were swiftly condemned on Twitter Saturday afternoon, with multiple Republican 2016 candidates blasting the remarks.

Former Texas Gov. Rick Perry said in emotional comments made to an audience at the summit that if Trump doesn't apologize, he is unfit to be commander-in-chief of the United States.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"To disparage a legitimate American hero like John McCain -- you may disagree with his policies and that's fine. I tell people all the time it's OK to question your government," said Perry, an Air Force veteran. "But don't question the men and women of the military who sacrifice and sometimes pay a huge price for our safety and our freedom and our economics."

Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, a frequent target of Trump's criticism, also came to McCain's defense.

"Enough with the slanderous attacks. @SenJohnMcCain and all our veterans - particularly POWs have earned our respect and admiration," he tweeted.

Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal called McCain "a hero" on Twitter.

South Carolina Sen. Lindsey Graham, a close friend of McCain's, fired off a series of tweets criticizing Trump and questioning his qualifications to be president in light of the comments.

But while Texas Sen. Ted Cruz -- who has stood out in the 2016 field as a supporter of Trump's controversial remarks on immigration -- defended McCain in a tweet, he notably declined to criticize Trump when asked by reporters to comment on the real estate mogul's remarks. Instead, he blamed the media for trying to turn Republicans against each other.

"You know I recognize that folks in the press love to see Republican-on-Republican violence, and so you want me to say something bad about Donald Trump, or bad about John McCain or bad about anyone else," he said. "I'm not going to do it."

Retired neurosurgeon Dr. Ben Carson was also asked if he defined McCain as a war hero, and said that while he believed the senator has "done some wonderful things," he also stopped short of denouncing Trump.

"It depends on your definition of a war hero. I think he has done some wonderful things, certainly the history is consistent with what we would consider a war hero," Carson said. "So do we take that away from him because some people disagree with him politically? I think that's probably a stupid way to do things."

Mitt Romney, the 2012 presidential candidate, vouched for McCain's heroism and praised veterans on Twitter.

"The difference between @SenJohnMcCain and @realDonaldTrump: Trump shot himself down. McCain and American veterans are true heroes," he tweeted.

But Trump dismissed Romney -- and McCain again -- in a tweet.

Why would anybody listen to @MittRomney? He lost an election that should have easily been won against Obama. By the way, so did John McCain," he tweeted.

Sean Spicer, the communications director for the Republican National Committee, said in a statement that McCain "is an American hero because he served his country and sacrificed more than most can imagine. Period."

"There is no place in our party or our country for comments that disparage those who have served honorably,"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Spicer said.

Secretary of State John Kerry, a Vietnam War veteran, said McCain is "a hero, a man of grit and guts and character personified. He served and bled and endured unspeakable acts of torture."

Speaking to reporters after the event, Trump sought to clarify his comments.

"If a person is captured, they're a hero as far as I'm concerned," Trump said. "But you have to do other things also. I don't like the job John McCain is doing in the Senate. He's not taking care of our veterans."

Borger: Trump is the guy GOP candidates can't afford to ignore

His campaign also released a statement, in which Trump said McCain has done "little" for U.S. veterans.

"I am not a fan John McCain because he has done so little for our veterans, and he should know better than anybody what the veterans need, especially in regards to the (Department of Veterans Affairs)," Trump said in the statement. "He is yet another all-talk, no-action politician who spends too much time on television and not enough time doing his job and helping the vets. He is also allowing our military to decrease substantially in size and strength, something which should never be allowed to happen."

Joel Arends, chairman of Veterans for a Strong America, in a statement said feuding between McCain and Trump over issues "has nothing to do with Mr. Trump's high regard for the military or veterans as a whole. Mr. Trump is supporter of the U.S. military and of America's veterans. It is well known that when Mr. Trump is attacked by a detractor, he swings back." The group said it was glad Trump clarified his remarks and said McCain is a war hero.

This is not the first time Trump has taken a jab at the 2008 Republican nominee this week.

After McCain criticized Trump's visit to Phoenix last weekend, saying he "fired up the crazies" in regard to his controversial comments on illegal immigration, Trump called the Arizona senator a "dummy" on Twitter.

".@SenJohnMcCain should be defeated in the primaries. Graduated last in his class at Annapolis--dummy," he said.

In his campaign's statement on Saturday, Trump again referenced illegal immigration as the main reason for his feud with McCain.

"Furthermore, he was extremely disrespectful to the thousands upon thousands of people, many of whom happen to be his constituents, that came to listen to me speak about illegal immigration in Phoenix last week by calling them 'crazies,'" the statement said. "These were not 'crazies' -- these were great American citizens."

Trump supported McCain's presidential candidacy in 2008. He donated $28,450 to John McCain's Victory Committee, a super PAC, and endorsed him on CNN's "Larry King Live" that year, calling him "a smart guy and I think he's going to be a great president."

During Saturday's Q&A session, Trump claimed he raised $1 million for the Arizona senator. After the event,

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Trump added on Twitter that McCain "let us down by losing to Barack Obama in his run for President!"

Republicans Condemn Donald Trump After He Belittles John McCain's War Record // TIME // Zeke Miller – July 18, 2015

The Republican National Committee and a bevy of GOP presidential candidates lined up to repudiate Donald Trump on Saturday after the reality television star-turned-White House hopeful attacked the military service of Sen. John McCain, a former POW.

Appearing at a candidate cattle call in Ames, Iowa, the real estate mogul told a crowd he was no supporter of the 2008 Republican presidential nominee. "He was a war hero because he was captured," Trump said. "I like people who weren't captured."

Trump's critique of McCain did what his previous controversial remarks could not quite do: open the floodgates for fellow Republicans to denounce him. After all, the perceived political risk inherent in defending the record of a war hero is far less than that of getting involved in contentious debates around immigration.

McCain, who was held captive in Vietnam for nearly six years after his airplane was shot down over Hanoi, has been critical of the Trump's bombast, saying that it had "fired up the crazies." Trump's already-controversial mocking of the Arizona senator is only the latest in a series of provocative statements and scandals that have swirled around his campaign, including his comment that many Mexican immigrants are "rapists" and his claim "The illegals come in, and the illegals kill their children."

"Senator McCain is an American hero because he served his country and sacrificed more than most can imagine. Period," said RNC communications director Sean Spicer. "There is no place in our party or our country for comments that disparage those who have served honorably."

Trump, who is riding atop the GOP primary polls, appears certain to make the first GOP debate stage on Aug. 6, even as the RNC is facing escalating calls to somehow bar him from participating. But under Federal Election Commission rules, there is no legal mechanism for the party or the hosting network, Fox News, to ban a candidate who meets the qualifications.

But the comments about McCain have set up a race among GOP candidates to most-forcefully condemn their fellow candidate, a trend that is likely to continue live on national television at the debate. In a statement, former Texas Gov. Rick Perry said Trump's comments were disqualifying and, "he should immediately withdraw from the race for President."

Other candidates and Republican leaders weighed in on stage at the Iowa Family Leader summit after Trump spoke, or took to Twitter to lambast him:

For his part, Trump issued a statement lambasting McCain's "extremely disrespectful" description of Trump supporters and saying in part, "I have great respect for all those who serve in our military including those that weren't captured and are also heroes."

But the statement showed no signs of contrition, noting, "Mr. Trump left to a long lasting standing ovation, which will be by far the biggest ovation of the weekend, and much congratulatory praise."

In a series of Twitter postings later, Trump lauded veterans but did not back off his earlier remarks, and in fact continued to criticize McCain's record.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Donald Trump Hits the Limits of Celebrity // TIME // Zeke Miller – July 18, 2015

Controversy has always been at the heart of Donald Trump's professional career, defined by his ostentatious displays of wealth, innumerable public feuds, and a television show built around firing people. So when he entered the political arena, there was little question that it would revolve around the same, but few predicted the Trump-sized firestorm he set off Saturday when he criticized the military service of former Vietnam POW Sen. John McCain.

After a lifetime in the spotlight, Trump is painfully learning the difference between the rules of the game when playing as a candidate instead of a celebrity.

For years, Republicans have courted Trump's endorsement, entertainment, and deep pockets, tolerating—even encouraging and profiting from—his longstanding list of outlandish comments. They invited him to keynote state party conventions and to endorse their 2012 nominee, even as they stood silently by as he challenged President Obama's birthplace and indulged in his routine name-calling.

Not even comments deemed insulting to a vital segment of the electorate—suggesting that many who have immigrated to the U.S. illegally from Mexico are "rapists"—were enough to spark widespread condemnation.

But on Saturday the floodgates opened, with Trump criticism flowing from nearly every fellow 2016 candidate, the Republican National Committee, former GOP nominee Mitt Romney, and even Fox News' Rupert Murdoch. For many in the party, it was a long-anticipated occasion—the inevitable moment when the candidate so obviously and completely stepped in it that sitting silent was no longer an option.

"He's not a war hero," Trump said Saturday of the 2008 Republican presidential nominee at a candidate forum in Ames, Iowa. "He's a war hero because he was captured. I like people who weren't captured."

Trump avoided serving in the Vietnam War using four deferments, including a medical deferment for a bone spur. McCain was shot down over Hanoi and imprisoned for nearly six years, undergoing physical and psychological torture at the infamous Hanoi Hilton.

Already feeling the financial burn of the ending of a series of financial and endorsement deals in the wake of his immigration comments, the statement set Trump on the path to becoming a Party pariah.

The swift reaction reflected both the GOP's pent-up frustration with the man at the top of their primary polls, and the reality that in Republican politics, offending those in the U.S. illegally may provoke mild consternation, but attacking veterans is sacrilegious.

"When is Donald Trump going to stop embarrassing his friends, let alone the whole country," Murdoch tweeted Sunday.

Former Texas Gov. Rick Perry, who has sought to use his criticism of Trump to his own political advantage, became the first GOP candidate to call on his rival to withdraw from the race, as South Carolina Sen. Lindsey Graham called it disqualifying for the highest office in the land.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“Seems to me that there’s an enormous sense of relief among Republicans that he f—-d up so badly,” said one Republican operative.

Party officials, including RNC Chairman Reince Priebus, had been sending signals to Trump for weeks to tone down his rhetoric against those in the U.S. illegally for fear of alienating Hispanic voters. They also were critical of his frequent criticisms of fellow Republicans, violating Ronald Reagan’s 11th commandment.

“There is no place in our party or our country for comments that disparage those who have served honorably,” RNC communications director Sean Spicer said in a statement Saturday in response to the McCain comments, an exceptionally rare critique of a presidential candidate’s own party.

In a defiant statement Saturday, Trump criticized McCain for allegedly failing veterans which noted that he has “great respect” for people who served in the military. It concluded without any effort at appeasing his critics: “Mr. Trump left to a long lasting standing ovation, which will be by far the biggest ovation of the weekend, and much congratulatory praise.”

After Donald Trump says John McCain 'not a war hero,' Republican rivals denounce him // LA Times // Noah Bierman – July 18, 2015

nald Trump, whose bombastic statements have shot him to the top of Republican presidential primary polls, mocked Sen. John McCain's war record as a POW in Vietnam on Saturday, crossing a line that triggered condemnations from previously quiet GOP leaders and rivals.

They used their strongest terms to date — calling Trump’s comments “slanderous,” declaring him unfit for office, and asserting that the Republican Party has no tolerance for disparaging statements about combat veterans.

The question now is whether Trump, who saw his campaign take off after broadly denouncing Mexicans who cross the border illegally as rapists and drug dealers, will remain popular with segments of the GOP base who revere military service, prisoners of war and the 2008 presidential nominee’s connection to both.

“He’s not a war hero,” Trump said at the Family Leadership Summit in Ames, Iowa, in response to a question about McCain, who has sharply criticized Trump’s withering comments on immigrants.

“He's a war hero because he was captured. I like people that weren't captured, OK? I hate to tell you. He's a war hero because he was captured, OK? And I believe — perhaps he's a war hero. But right now, he's said some very bad things about a lot of people,” Trump said.

McCain, a Navy aviator during the Vietnam War, suffered several broken bones and spent more than five years as a prisoner in North Vietnam, including two years in solitary confinement, after his Skyhawk was shot down during a bombing mission over Hanoi in 1967.

McCain, the son of the U.S. Navy commander in the Pacific at the time, refused North Vietnamese offers for an early release because Americans captured before him remained prisoners of war. He was released in 1973, and has served Arizona in the Senate since 1987. The Republican now heads the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Trump received four student deferments from the draft between 1964 and 1968 and a medical deferment that kept him out of the military, according to reports published in 2011.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

For all the expressions of indignation, the dust-up inevitably was a reminder of Republican-backed attacks on combat medals awarded to John F. Kerry, the former senator, 2004 Democratic presidential nominee and now secretary of State, for his service in Vietnam. The attacks, which hurt Kerry's 2004 campaign, ultimately were discredited as untrue.

Since announcing his campaign on June 16, Trump has lost numerous commercial endorsements and business deals due to his harsh comments about Mexican immigrants.

His rhetoric has worried Republican leaders, who are trying to broaden the party's support among women and minorities, especially the growing number of Latino voters, before the 2016 election. In a Univision poll, 71% of Latinos surveyed had an unfavorable view of Trump.

Some GOP candidates have refrained from criticizing Trump until now because many core conservatives, who vote heavily in Republican primaries, support him. A Fox News poll released Friday found 68% of GOP voters said Trump was "basically right" about immigration.

But by appearing to attack military veterans and POWs, a more powerful constituency among conservatives and other voters, Trump may finally have given party leaders a chance to pop his balloon, which has been eclipsing other candidates.

The Republican National Committee immediately denounced Trump's comments Saturday, saying "there is no place in our party or our country for comments that disparage those who have served honorably."

Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, who had previously avoided discussing Trump, told reporters Saturday, "I unequivocally denounce him," according to his campaign.

Fellow leading candidates Sen. Marco Rubio, the Florida Republican whose parents were born in Cuba, and Jeb Bush, the former Florida governor whose wife is Mexican American, also criticized Trump.

"Enough with the slanderous attacks," Bush wrote on Twitter.

Former Texas Gov. Rick Perry — who days ago condemned Trump's "toxic mix of demagoguery and nonsense" — on Saturday called upon him to end his campaign because of comments that have "reached a new low in American politics."

"His attack on veterans make him unfit to be commander-in-chief of the U.S. armed forces, and he should immediately withdraw from the race for president," Perry said in a statement.

Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal said on Twitter that "after Donald Trump spends six years in a POW camp, he can weigh in on John McCain's service."

Texas Sen. Ted Cruz was a notable exception, calling McCain a friend and hero on Twitter but adding, "Donald Trump is a friend of mine."

Trump has clashed verbally with McCain, who supported a comprehensive immigration overhaul that passed the

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Senate but died in the House. While on a campaign swing in Phoenix last week, Trump slammed McCain in his home state, violating normal rules of party politics.

“I've supported John McCain, but he's very weak on immigration,” Trump said. He also questioned whether McCain, who is up for reelection in 2016, would hold onto his Senate seat.

“I think he will probably lose if somebody runs against him for the Republican nomination,” Trump said.

McCain told the New Yorker that Trump’s comments were “very hurtful … because what he did was he fired up the crazies.”

On Saturday, his daughter Meghan McCain said on Twitter that she was “horrified” and “disgusted” by Trump’s latest comments: “There are no words.”

Trump clarifies attacks on McCain // The Hill // Keith Laing – July 18, 2015

Donald Trump accused Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) of being "all talk, no action" on veterans issues on Saturday as he sought to clarify his dismissive words toward McCain earlier in the day.

"I am not a fan of John McCain because he has done so little for our Veterans and he should know better than anybody what the Veterans need, especially in regards to the VA," Trump said in a statement released by his campaign.

"He is yet another all talk, no action politician who spends too much time on television and not enough time doing his job and helping the Vets," Trump continued. "He is also allowing our military to decrease substantially in size and strength, somethings which should never be allowed to happen."

Trump faced immediate criticism Saturday after mocking McCain’s six years as a prisoner during the Vietnam War.

“He was a war hero because he was captured,” Trump sarcastically told host Frank Luntz during the 2015 Family Leadership Summit. “I like people who weren’t captured.”

Trump was swiftly rebuked by the Republican National Committee and several of his fellow 2016 Republican presidential candidates.

Trump said in his statement that McCain has been "extremely disrespectful to the thousands upon thousands of people, many of whom happen to be his constituents, that came out to listen to me speak about illegal immigration by calling them 'crazies.'

"These were not 'crazies' --- these were great American citizens," Trump said.

"I have great respect for all those who serve in our military including those that weren't captured and are also heroes," he continued. "I want to strengthen our military and take care of our veterans. I want to make America great again, especially for those that serve to protect our freedom. I am fighting for our veterans!"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Trump's statement noted at the end: "Mr. Trump left to a long lasting standing ovation, which will be by far the biggest ovation of the weekend, and much congratulatory praise."

Draft-Dodging Trump Says POW McCain 'Not A War Hero' // Daily Beast // Olivia Nuzzi – July 18, 2015

In September 2008, Donald Trump donated $28,450 to John McCain's Victory Committee and endorsed him on Larry King Live. "I know him. I like him. I respect him," he said. "He's a smart guy and I think he's going to be a great president."

Seven years later, Trump is the one running, and he now respects McCain, who spent five years as a prisoner during the Vietnam War, so little that he says he's not really a war hero.

During a discussion at the Family Leadership Summit in Iowa Saturday afternoon, Trump said, "He's not a war hero. He's a war hero because he was captured. I like people that weren't captured, OK? I hate to tell you."

Trump, whose candidacy has been defined by his insults to various groups of people and even entire ethnicities, finally went too far.

Paul Rieckhoff, the founder and CEO of Iraq and Afghanistan Veterans of America, told The Daily Beast that Trump's comments were "asinine" and an insult "to everyone who's ever worn the uniform and to all Americans."

Rick Perry, one of just two Republican primary contenders to have served in the military (the other is Senator Lindsey Graham), called for Trump to withdraw from the contest.

"Donald Trump should apologize immediately for attacking Senator McCain and all veterans who have protected and served our country," he said in a statement. "As a veteran and an American, I respect Sen. McCain because he volunteered to serve his country. I cannot say the same of Mr. Trump. His comments have reached a new low in American politics. His attack on veterans make him unfit to be Commander-in-Chief of the U.S. Armed Forces, and he should immediately withdraw from the race for President."

Lindsey Graham responded to Trump on Twitter: "At the heart of @realDonaldTrump statement is a lack of respect for those who have served—a disqualifying characteristic to be president."

So did Jeb Bush: "Enough with the slanderous attacks. @SenJohnMcCain and all our veterans–particularly POWs have earned our respect and admiration."

And Scott Walker: "Just told a crowd in Sioux City: @SenJohnMcCain is a war hero."

"He's not a war hero. He's a war hero because he was captured. I like people that weren't captured, OK? I hate to tell you."

And Bobby Jindal: "After Donald Trump spends 6 years in a POW camp, he can weigh in on John McCain's service."

And Rick Santorum: ".@SenJohnMcCain is an American hero, period."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

And Chris Christie: "I know @SenJohnMcCain. Senator John McCain is an American hero. Period. Stop."

Ted Cruz initially stood out as being the only candidate to refuse to stand by McCain, telling The Washington Post's Philip Rucker, "Folks in the press love to see Republican on Republican violence, so you want me to say something bad about Donald Trump or bad about John McCain or bad about anyone else. I'm not going to do it." Perhaps regretting that decision, Cruz then Tweeted, "John McCain is an American hero. Although we have some policy disagreements, I'm proud to serve alongside him."

As the crowd in Iowa laughed, gasped and booed—unsure if Trump was joking—he doubled down on his point. "He's a war hero because he was captured! OK? I believe, perhaps, he's a war hero. But right now? He's said some very bad things about a lot of people."

Actually, he's said very bad things about just one person who Trump cares a lot about: Trump.

On Thursday, The New Yorker's Ryan Lizza published an interview with McCain, wherein the Arizona senator criticized Trump, who had just held a rally in Phoenix. "This performance with our friend out in Phoenix is very hurtful," McCain said. "Because what he did was he fired up the crazies."

It would become evident, in the following days, that Trump—callous and bombastic by nature—had hurt feelings.

He immediately lashed out first on Twitter, saying "The thousands of people that showed up for me in Phoenix were amazing Americans. @SenJohnMcCain called them 'crazies'—must apologize!" He then said he thought McCain should lose his Senate primary: ".@SenJohnMcCain should be defeated in the primaries. Graduated last in his class at Anapolis--dummy!"

And then in an interview on MSNBC's Morning Joe on Friday. "I'm a loyalist," he said. "I'm a person that like, if somebody is with me, I'm with that person. And John McCain was very disloyal to me."

Saturday afternoon, in a statement following his insult to McCain, Trump said that McCain, whose office has not yet responded to a request for comment from The Daily Beast, had been "disrespectful" to the people who came to see him speak in Phoenix when he told The New Yorker they were "crazies."

"These were not 'crazies,'" Trump said. "These were great American citizens."

Trump's decision to criticize McCain's military record is all the more puzzling given the circumstances surrounding his lack of one.

Trump claimed, in an April interview on WNYW, that he avoided the Vietnam War because "I actually got lucky because I had a very high draft number." He said, while attending the Wharton School of Finance, that "I was watching as they did the draft numbers and I got a very, very high number and those numbers never got up to me."

But The Smoking Gun reported that Trump's draft number was 365, and when it was drawn on Dec. 1, 1968, "18 months after Trump graduated" from the Wharton School, Trump "had already received four student deferments and a medical deferment," according to records obtained by the publication.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Rieckhoff joked, “He was so interested in seeing the president’s birth certificate, I’m sure he’d be willing to provide the documentation about that.”

Despite his lack of service, Trump, in the post-insult statement, said, “I am not a fan of John McCain because he has done so little for our Veterans and he should know better than anybody what the Veterans need, especially in regards to the VA. He is yet another all talk, no action politician who spends too much time on television and not enough time doing his job and helping Vets.”

It was, in fact, McCain (along with Senator Bernie Sanders, a candidate for the Democratic nomination) who last year passed legislation to reform the Department of Veterans Affairs and improve veterans’ access to health care, among other things.

In the statement, Trump clarified that he has “great respect for all those who serve in our military including those that weren’t captured and are also heroes.”

The release ended with a “note”: “Mr. Trump left to a long lasting standing ovation, which will be by far the biggest ovation of the weekend, and much congratulatory praise.”

Trump fuels GOP fire with criticism of McCain // The Hill // Mark Hensch – July 18, 2015

Republicans of all stripes spent Saturday hammering Donald Trump for his remarks mocking Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) over his time spent as a prisoner of war in Vietnam.

Many of the GOP’s most visible members are suggesting the outspoken billionaire and presidential candidate went too far taunting McCain during a speech Saturday afternoon.

“He was a war hero because he was captured,” Trump sarcastically told host Frank Luntz during the 2015 Family Leadership Summit in Ames, Iowa. “I like people who weren’t captured.”

The quip came after Luntz challenged Trump’s criticisms of McCain’s political career.

The pollster questioned his verbal attacks on McCain, calling him a “war hero.”

“I supported McCain for president,” Trump said. “He lost and let us down,” he added, arguing he spent $1 million supporting McCain’s Oval Office bid.

“I’ve never liked him as much after that,” Trump added. “I don’t like losers.”

The Republican National Committee (RNC) quickly rejected the business mogul’s remarks.

“Senator McCain is an American hero because he served his country and sacrificed more than we can imagine – period,” said RNC Chief Strategist and Communications Director Sean Spicer said in a statement.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“There is no place in our party or our country for comments that disparage those who have served honorably,” he added.

Trump’s many rivals for the 2016 GOP presidential nomination joined the RNC in discrediting his political legitimacy.

Former Texas Gov. Rick Perry said Trump should immediately mend fences with McCain over his remarks, or end his campaign.

“As an individual who has worn the uniform of this country, I was highly offended by what Donald Trump said about John McCain,” Perry said during his own 2015 Family Leadership Summit remarks.

“Donald Trump owes every American, and in particular John McCain, an apology,” he added.

Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.), a close friend of McCain’s, argued McCain and other prisoners of war like him deserve “recognition and respect” for their sacrifices.

“If you want to be commander-in-chief and you are serious about wanting that job, the last thing you’d do is disrespect the people in our armed services,” he said.

Former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush expressed disgust with Trump’s statements in a post on Twitter.

“Enough with the slanderous attacks,” he tweeted. “@SenJohnMcCain and all our veterans – particularly POWs have earned our respect and admiration.”

Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) was equally dismissive of Trump.

“America’s POWs deserve much better than to have their service questioned by the offensive rantings of Donald Trump,” he wrote.

Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker vowed he would personally defend McCain’s tenure during the Vietnam War against any critics.

“@SenJohnMcCain is an American hero, period,” he said on Twitter. “I’ll denounce any attack against his service and anyone else who wears this uniform.”

Sen. Ted Cruz (Texas), who considers himself a friend of both McCain and Trump, refused comment on the bitter feud.

“I recognize that folks in the press love to see Republican-on-Republican violence, so you want me to say something about Donald Trump or bad about John McCain or bad about anyone else,” he said, according to The Washington Post. “I’m not going to do it.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“John McCain is a friend of mine,” Cruz added. “I respect and admire him and he’s an American hero. And Donald Trump is a friend of mine.”

Former GOP presidential nominee Mitt Romney noted the differences between McCain and Trump’s military backgrounds in his own pointed criticism on Twitter.

“The difference between @SenJohnMcCain and @realDonaldTrump: Trump shot himself down,” Romney wrote. “McCain and American veterans are true heroes.”

Megan McCain, John McCain’s daughter, expressed disbelief that Trump would insult her father’s sacrifices during the Vietnam War.

“I can’t believe what I am reading this morning,” she wrote on Twitter. “Horrified. Disgusted. There are no words.”

“I have a brother that just returned from Afghanistan a month ago, glad he can come home to this being said about his father and his service,” she added.

The Concerned Veterans of America (CVA) offered a comparison between McCain and Trump on military service in its own rebuke of the real estate mogul.

“Donald Trump’s attacks against Senator John McCain today are the height of arrogance and reveal that he has no understanding of what our Vietnam POWs endured and the honor they displayed during their captivity – Senator McCain among them,” the group said in a statement.

“A man who received four student deferments to avoid service in Vietnam has absolutely no credibility to attack someone like John McCain who volunteered to serve his country and suffered 5 1/2 years of torture as a result,” it said.

The military personnel organization took issue with Trump’s remarks over veterans affairs made during the same controversial speech.

“Donald Trump also revealed he has no idea what he is talking about in regards to reforming and fixing the VA,” it said.

“If he did, he would have known that Senator McCain has been a leader in fighting to give veterans more health care choices and to hold the VA accountable for its failures,” it added.

“Finally, this incident should clarify for veterans which leaders really understand the issues they face and the sacrifices they made as part of their military service. Unfortunately, it appears Donald Trump is not one of them.”

Later Saturday, as criticism was percolating, Trump sought to clarify his remarks, saying his problem with McCain stems from the senator’s policy stances.

"I am not a fan of John McCain because he has done so little for our Veterans and he should know better than anybody what the Veterans need, especially in regards to the VA," Trump said in a statement released by his campaign.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"He is yet another all talk, no action politician who spends too much time on television and not enough time doing his job and helping the Vets," he continued. "He is also allowing our military to decrease substantially in size and strength, somethings which should never be allowed to happen."

Trump also accused McCain of being “extremely disrespectful” toward attendees of an immigration rally in Phoenix last weekend that was headlined by Trump.

"These were not 'crazies' --- these were great American citizens," he said.

"I have great respect for all those who serve in our military including those that weren't captured and are also heroes," Trump added.

"I want to strengthen our military and take care of our veterans. I want to make America great again, especially for those that serve to protect our freedom. I am fighting for our veterans!"

Trump’s statement noted at the end: “Mr. Trump left to a long lasting standing ovation, which will be by far the biggest ovation of the weekend, and much congratulatory praise.”

Trump was taking issue with McCain’s critique of his July 11 rally against illegal immigration in Phoenix.

McCain argued in an interview published Thursday that the event energized the right wing’s most extreme members.

“It’s very bad,” he said of Trump’s Phoenix rally earlier this month.

“This performance with our friend out in Phoenix is very hurtful,” McCain added. “Because what he did was he fired up the crazies. Now he galvanized them. He’s really got them activated.”

Trump has retaliated by calling McCain a “dummy” and predicting he will lose his upcoming Senate primary in Arizona.

Trump on Saturday said McCain is insulting the Americans who support stronger policies against illegal immigration.

“15,000 people showed up to hear me speak,” Trump said of the Phoenix event, adding that it was “beautiful.”

“He called them all crazy,” he added of McCain. “I know all about crazies, and those weren’t crazies.”

Trump comments on McCain war record spark outrage // USA Today // Jason Noble – July 18, 2015

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Donald Trump's insults of Sen. John McCain at a presidential candidate forum here on Saturday drew sharp and immediate condemnation from across the Republican spectrum — including calls for him to quit the 2016 race.

The swift, nearly unanimous rebuke prompted by Trump's comments questioning McCain's war heroism may suggest a shift in the Republican presidential contest, as rivals seize an opportunity to marginalize a popular but divisive figure who some see as potentially destructive to the party's standing among Latino voters.

The comments that sparked the firestorm came after forum moderator Frank Luntz interrupted a Trump tirade against McCain to note the senator's heroism in the Vietnam War and the more than five years he was held as a prisoner of war.

"He's a war hero because he was captured," Trump replied dismissively. "I like people that weren't captured, OK?"

Trump went on to insult McCain's academic achievements at the U.S. Naval Academy. At a subsequent news conference, he said McCain "has not done enough for the veterans in this country."

The businessman and reality TV star, who entered the GOP race last month, has dominated media coverage for weeks with controversial comments on immigration and unflinching criticism of other candidates. More recently, he's begun to take the lead in national polls.

But by expanding his bombastic rhetoric to include criticism of a former prisoner of war, Trump may have overplayed his hand, even with Republicans eager for a candidate at odds with the political establishment, said political scientist Kyle Kondik, managing editor of a political newsletter published by the University of Virginia.

"There's a constituency that supports the pretty stridently anti-illegal immigration comments which Trump has made," Kondik said. "But I don't think there's a constituency for comments that come off as anti-military or basically making fun of POWs, which is what Trump did."

Indeed, rival GOP candidates, party officials and others who may have been looking for an opportunity to distance themselves from Trump seized on the comments. Within an hour, at least a half-dozen fellow candidates tweeted to either criticize Trump or defend McCain, and a few did so on the very same stage at Stephens Auditorium later on Saturday.

Cary Gordon, an evangelical pastor from Sioux City, said that he has seen Trump surging in Iowa in recent weeks and that Trump has surprised many grass-roots conservative activists with his accessibility and thoughtfulness at campaign events.

But that momentum is almost certainly lost now, Gordon said.

"Donald Trump probably handed ammunition to his own firing squad today," he said.

Trump's comments came during the Family Leadership Summit, a key forum for candidates seeking to win approval from the state's sizable bloc of socially conservative evangelical voters.

At a news conference following his appearance, Trump did not apologize for his remarks, according to the Associated Press. He did offer this clarification: “If a person is captured, they’re a hero as far as I’m concerned. I don’t like the job John McCain is doing in the Senate because he is not taking care of our veterans.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Also appearing Saturday were presidential candidates Marco Rubio, Ben Carson, Ted Cruz, Mike Huckabee, Rick Perry, Bobby Jindal, Rick Santorum, Lindsey Graham and Scott Walker.

Cruz, a senator from Texas, won numerous standing ovations and some of the loudest cheers of the day with red-meat conservative rhetoric opposing abortion — including calling for criminal investigations into Planned Parenthood — same-sex marriage and Islamic extremism.

"Cruz has stood up and taken stands against what we call the mainstream political machine," said Jeanne Shattuck, an attendee from Dallas Center.

Jindal, the Louisiana governor, competed with Cruz on crowd response, hitting big applause lines when criticizing the media for failing to adequately scrutinize President Obama and calling for federal employees to be jailed for malfeasance.

Similarly, Graham, a senator from South Carolina, received sustained, booming applause for criticism of Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton's handling of the attack in Benghazi, Libya, as secretary of state, an issue that has animated conservatives but had received relatively little mention Saturday.

Rubio, a senator from Florida, has been viewed with skepticism among many conservatives for his previous support for a comprehensive immigration reform package in the Senate. On Saturday, though, he appealed to many in the crowd with substantive answers on immigration, the Islamic State and entitlement reform.

Edward Wollner, a supporter of Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul, said Rubio's performance made him "a little bit more viable."

"Honestly, I came in pretty closed-minded on Rand," Wollner said. "Rubio I had kind of written off as a young, one-term senator, but he could actually be competitive in a general election."

Many attendees were complimentary toward all the candidates who appeared on Saturday, and far from ready to commit to one with the caucuses still more than six months away.

"It's a no-lose situation, if you're a conservative, at this point," said Scott Schaefer, a pastor from Davenport who described himself not as a Republican but as a "Christian conservative compassionate capitalist constitutionalist."

"This country needs a pastor, someone to shepherd this country."

After Attacking John McCain's War Record, Donald Trump's Dramatic Fall Is Predictable // Forbes – July 18, 2015

Mr. Trump has decided to attack Senator John McCain’s war record.” He’s not a war hero,” said Trump. “He’s a war hero because he was captured. I like people that weren’t captured.” Mr. McCain is, in fact, a bona fide war hero who rejected efforts to release him in exchange for selling out his fellow prisoners of war. Mr. Trump’s activities extend only to building monuments to himself because no one else apparently will do so. This is shameful. But let’s be serious, folks. Donald Trump’s rise in the polls is as predictable as his dramatic fall will be.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Donald knows how to capture media attention. After all, he has been doing it for decades now. He has teased about running in the past and received too much coverage for that. Now he is a declared candidate and he dominates attention for himself, something he craves and masters, by simply being outrageous. He is Kim Kardashian's rear, Paris Hilton's sex tape, and Caitlin Jenner's transformation – all rolled into one and now dominating media attention. In short order, Donald Trump's candidacy will be Sarah Palin's plea for attention and Kate Gosselin's whatever.

But we are talking about the Presidency of the United States and now, today, the inevitable merging of this iconic institution with celebrity culture. Enter The Donald. He has "surged" and "rocketed" – both Washington Post terms – into second place in the battle for the Republican nomination. Then, as of now, into first place. Stuff happens.

Some pundits say he is tapping into something. There is a rage against the machine and Donald Trump represents a genuine phenomenon. But let me be emphatic here: There is nothing genuine about him or about this. Allow me to explain. First, there is a real anger out there among voters. There was George Wallace, Pat Buchanan and Ross Perot, then the Tea Party. This is a bona fide strain in American history. It is called xenophobia and fear of the modern. It is the angry white man in a nation that is becoming more non-white, less heterosexual, and less reliant on either organized religion or traditional notions of patriotism. The demographics alone show how much the America of "the old white man" is shrinking. And today, in this worldview, is Armegeddon , the worst case scenario – a President who is a man of color, with a Muslim name, insufficient proof of his nativity, and in possession of a worldview that recognizes the limits of U.S. power in the world and a willingness to lead from behind.

Enter Donald Trump. Yes, indeed, Mr. Trump has struck a responsive chord among some. But let's not get carried away with it. When the Washington Post reported almost two weeks ago that Mr. Trump had both "surged" and "rocketed" into second place in the GOP race, it really meant that his polling numbers had moved from 6%-8% to 10%-12%. And now a couple of polls show him leading the GOP pack with 17%-18%.

Several obvious points explain this. First, he has sucked all the oxygen out of the room. Mr. Trump likes to produce good copy and that is what has done. He has offended a large and growing constituency, our largest next door neighbor, and the sensibilities of many stripes of Americans – including some very high profile corporations and celebrities who also know how to grab public attention. He has made a career out of being outrageous and he is only doing what does best.

Second, this is the summer. Other candidates are just getting started and (for them, at least) this is not the time to be making mistakes and saying the wrong things. Rather, now is the time for the smaller events, the local news coverage, the slow plodding visits and calls to raise money.

Third, there is in fact a constituency out there that is alienated and angry. One that is looking for tough talk now, a reassertion of American greatness in the world, an expression of outward resentment – what the great historian Richard Hofstadter once called the "paranoid style in American politics". Trump has captured and captivated it for the moment. But this is how you get to 17% or 18% (perhaps even 20%) in the polls. That does not win an election even with so many candidates in the race. When well over half of GOP voters say they disapprove of Mr. Trump and will never vote for him, how does he grow? I suppose he can attack gays. There are also Muslims and kids with disabilities. But a lot of that would be duplicative. After all, if you hate Latinos, odds are you already fear sharia law, gay couples, and tax money spent on special education.

Besides, does anyone really think Mr. Trump can sustain this outrageous behavior for another year and a half? I for one don't think we will be talking about him in the fall of 2015. I am remembering Michele Bachman, Herman Cain and Newt Gingrich. There are even more candidates this time around who can be the GOP "Flavor of the Month."

This summer, the circus marquis welcomes you to see and hear the narcissistic bloviator who says the kinds of things you won't hear anywhere else. But look closely and the same sign will have a banner reading, "Featuring Next Month…"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

UNDECLARED

OTHER

Seeing Crowd, G.O.P. Donors Holding Back // NYT // Nicholas Confessore & Sarah Cohen – July 18, 2015

Despite a wealth of choices in a crowded primary field, the vast majority of high-level Republican donors and fund-raisers have not yet backed any candidate financially, magnifying the importance of the coming debates as the presidential hopefuls seek to impress potential backers.

Only about a fifth of the 1,000 or so fund-raisers and their spouses who rallied around Mitt Romney, the Republican nominee in 2012, have given money to any of the 2016 candidates, according to a New York Times review of fund-raising records reported by the candidates last week.

Those who remain uncommitted — hundreds of volunteer "bundlers" who could collect contributions from their friends and business associates — represent a huge pool of untapped campaign cash, potentially hundreds of millions of dollars, that could remake the primary campaign.

Some of the bundlers and donors said they had held back, in part, because the field was the strongest they had seen in years, with several viable contenders representing the party's different generational and ideological segments.

Unlike in 2012, when Mr. Romney dominated fund-raising even as he fought off a series of insurgencies by more populist candidates, the affections of many donors in 2016 are divided among three or four candidates. Others are quietly weighing the impact of Donald J. Trump, who has jumped to the lead in some national polls despite raising almost no money from the party's establishment.

"I haven't committed to anyone at this point, and I'm not on the verge of committing to anyone," said Paul E. Singer, a hedge fund manager who is among the most sought-after Republican bundlers in the country, at an investment conference last week. "I think there are a number of candidates that are smart, solid, good potential leaders, leaders and potential leaders."

The slow recruitment of major donors and bundlers is also a function, several donors and Republican leaders said, of the candidates' early emphasis on raising money for "super PACs," which tend to be funded by a much smaller pool of extremely wealthy donors.

Note: Some contributions to Marco Rubio, Ted Cruz, Lindsey Graham and Rand Paul were made to their Senate campaigns before they became presidential candidates. Data for John Kasich, Scott Walker, Chris Christie and Democrat the Jim Webb is not yet available, so their donors are not known.

Source: New York Times analysis of Federal Election Commission data

Candidates cannot solicit the unlimited checks that fuel super PACs, and several White House aspirants delayed entering the race this year and spent the winter and spring securing commitments from mega-donors. One result: Vast amounts of money are already flowing into the Republican race, but mostly to super PACs, not candidates.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Super PACs and outside groups backing individual Republican candidates have raised about $230 million, while the candidates took in just $64 million through the end of June.

“The super PAC donors were more important, to some extent eclipsing the traditional world of hundreds of bundlers,” said Fred Malek, the finance chairman of the Republican Governors Association. “The next quarter is going to be hugely different.”

Mr. Romney’s financial operation raised $1 billion in 2012, more than any Republican campaign in history, by combining those who raised money for former President George W. Bush with hundreds of new Republican bundlers, many of them from Wall Street. Some of Mr. Romney’s top bundlers, including the Oklahoma energy executive Harold Hamm and Joseph W. Craft, the chief executive of one of the country’s largest coal producers, have not yet given to a Republican candidate in 2016.

The Times analyzed a list of Mr. Romney’s bundlers and their spouses that USA Today assembled in 2012 with data from the Sunlight Foundation, which tracks invitations to political fund-raisers, and the Federal Election Commission, which requires that candidates disclose the names of registered lobbyists who raise money for them.

Jeb Bush, the former president’s brother, appears to have won over the largest share of Mr. Romney’s bundlers, with at least 120 donating to his campaign. They include Brian Ballard, a Florida lobbyist, and Dan Loeb, a hedge fund manager who shares Mr. Bush’s passion for education issues.

“Jeb’s record as a champion of parent choice and academic excellence is unparalleled,” Mr. Loeb said in an email. “He understands that as a nation we have a responsibility to even the playing field through education so that every child has a chance at the American dream.”

Some bundlers are committed to Republicans who did not enter the race until July and have not yet reported any fund-raising numbers, such as Gov. Scott Walker of Wisconsin. An unknown number may have given to the candidates’ super PACs, which do not have to report their donors until the end of July.

Other bundlers, like Jenny Craig, the California-based diet guru, have given to multiple candidates. Still others, like Frank VanderSloot, who runs an Idaho-based health products company, are weighing the prospects of two candidates they like.

“Frank VanderSloot is committed to helping both Marco Rubio and Scott Walker get their messages out,” said Tony Lima, a spokesman for Mr. VanderSloot. “He is engaged in that process.”

But the scramble for other major bundlers is a boon for candidates not named Bush, several of whom are banking on the debates, which begin Aug. 6, as a chance to prove their mettle and recruit new donors and fund-raisers.

Almost 50 Romney bundlers, among them Wayne Berman, an executive at the Blackstone Group, and Harlan Crow, a Texas builder, have already given money to Mr. Rubio, the Florida senator; 14 each have contributed to Senators Ted Cruz of Texas and Lindsey Graham of South Carolina; and at least 10, including the prominent New York hedge fund manager John Paulson, have donated to Carly Fiorina, the former chief executive of Hewlett-Packard.

A separate analysis, looking at the top 250 donors to Republican candidates and party organizations, showed a similar phenomenon: Fewer than 100 have contributed to any of the 2016 candidates, according to the Times analysis. Some of them have contributed to more than one candidate, indicating that they are hedging their bets in what is likely to be a volatile and fiercely fought campaign.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“I decided to give all of the ones I like the support, just in case they made the primary,” said Elloine M. Clark, a Texas philanthropist who wrote large checks to Mr. Cruz, Mr. Rubio, Senator Rand Paul of Kentucky and Gov. Bobby Jindal of Louisiana.

“I didn’t want to cut anybody out,” Ms. Clark added. “I want to see some intelligent young people in the race.”

The Republican contenders are moving aggressively to tap that money. In recent weeks, some have begun shifting from raising money for their super PACs, which typically depend on a handful of ultra-wealthy donors, to their campaigns, which require the help of hundreds of bundlers and thousands of donors.

“As we talk to bundlers around the country, there is still a great pause going on right now,” said Ray Washburne, the finance chairman for Gov. Chris Christie of New Jersey. “There’s been no breakaway candidate, and everyone is waiting to see the first debate.”

On Republican Hopefuls’ Checklist: A Super PAC and Lots of Money // WSJ // Patrick O’connor and Reid J. Epstein - July 19, 2015

Expanding roles of super PACs, condensed nominating calendar are set to transform 2016 primary campaigns; a well-positioned Jeb Bush

WASHINGTON—Some Republican presidential candidates could be in for sticker shock.

Right to Rise, the super PAC supporting Jeb Bush, estimates it will cost nearly $60 million just to run 10 days’ worth of advertising in each of the first 30 primary states. And that price tag doesn’t include turning on the lights of campaign offices and filling them with full-time staff dedicated to identifying supporters and getting them out to vote on Election Day.

The expanding roles of super PACs and a condensed nominating calendar are fundamentally transforming the way the 2016 primary campaign will be conducted. Gone are the days when campaigns could just scrape together enough money to advertise in Iowa and New Hampshire, and then count on an early victory to spur an infusion of fresh contributions.

‘This is a new world with new rules.’

—Former House Speaker Newt Gingrich

Now, more than ever before, a premium is attached to amassing ahead of time enough money for a mad dash through big states. Roughly 62% of the delegates will be allotted in the first 52 days of voting, from February 1 through March 22. Eleven states hold nominating contests on March 1, including Texas with its 20 media markets.

“This is a new world with new rules,” said former House Speaker Newt Gingrich, who waged an unsuccessful White House bid in 2012. “You have lots of candidates who are going to have super PACs and you’re going to have many more well-funded candidates than you had in 2012.”

No Republican is better-positioned for this new era than Mr. Bush. Right to Rise, which ended June with more than $98 million in the bank, is gearing up for a big, multistate advertising push that will allow the group to run ads in Minneapolis and Dallas when the rest of the field is fixated on Manchester and Des Moines. The goal is to build such a big media presence that other camps will struggle to keep pace.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“Gov. Bush has said that he is running to win and will do so by communicating his conservative reform agenda across the country,” said Paul Lindsay, a spokesman for Right to Rise. “We are planning a serious and robust independent effort to help him achieve that goal and challenge Hillary Clinton and the Democrats in the general election.”

Mr. Bush has raised a combined $114 million when his campaign cash is combined with Right to Rise. While he’s ahead in the GOP money race, other candidates are competitively positioned. Texas Sen. Ted Cruz and a trio of outside groups had raised a combined $52 million by the end of June to back his candidacy. Florida Sen. Marco Rubio and his aligned super PACs had raised a total of $44 million.

Beyond media strategy, the new environment is changing traditional travel itineraries. Candidates are already devoting more attention to later primary contests, making regular stops in some of the 11 states with primaries on March 1 as well as those that vote after them.

Tennessee House Speaker Beth Harwell said that four years ago no candidates visited her office. ENLARGE

Tennessee House Speaker Beth Harwell said that four years ago no candidates visited her office. PHOTO: ERIK SCHELZIG/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Four years ago, no candidates visited Tennessee House Speaker Beth Harwell. This year, Mr. Bush has visited her office twice. Ohio Gov. John Kasich stopped by last week, and former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee attended an event for her in the spring. She is attending an event with Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker this week.

“Now, in the crowded primary, Tennessee is a plum state,” she said.

Three Republicans attended the Georgia Republican convention in June—New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, Messrs. Cruz and Rubio—even though the event fell on the same day as Iowa Sen. Joni Ernst’s pig roast in Boone. Messrs. Cruz and Walker are expected back in Georgia next week.

“We haven’t seen this level of candidates coming through the state than I can ever remember,” said Georgia Secretary of State Brian Kemp, a Republican who led efforts to create a so-called “SEC Primary” in which a number of Southern states vote on March 1. (The contest is named after college football’s Southeastern Conference.)

With 16 Republicans running and the polls muddled, many campaigns are preparing for a longer-than-normal primary because of the strong possibility that several candidates will split the first four nominating contests in Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina and Nevada.

“They’re all concluding that you’re going to have three different winners in the first three states,” said Erick Erickson, the conservative pundit who helped organize a forum for GOP candidates in early August in Atlanta that effectively replaces the once-dominant Iowa Straw Poll. “March 1 is when you’re going to narrow it down to one or two.”

Because delegates will be allotted to candidates based on their percentage of the vote until March 15, there is a chance the nomination remains up-for grabs even after March 1. And the tight timeline means it will be difficult for an underfunded candidate, like former Pennsylvania Sen. Rick Santorum was in 2012, to score an early win and collect enough money to get up on the air in those March 1 media markets.

Right to Rise spent weeks compiling advertising rates for individual media markets in all 30 states that vote between Feb. 1 and March 22. They put the cost of running ads for 10 days on the radio and on cable, broadcast and satellite television in each state at $57 million. That total includes $8.4 million for Texas alone.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The actual costs are bound to be much higher because television advertising rates are likely to skyrocket with so many groups competing for time, including the Democratic candidates. Mrs. Clinton's campaign is already reserving time on stations, as are other candidates.

TV stations must give candidates a low rate, but supply-and-demand will dictate the cost for super PACs. In 2012, Republican nominee Mitt Romney's super PAC was charged $3,600 to air three 30-second ads during one New Hampshire program; the Romney campaign paid half that for the same time.

The risk for all these candidates is that the wealthy benefactors financing these groups may cut them off if they don't catch on in the earliest voting states. Even those Republicans with the most money may struggle to compete in March if they lose every contest in February. Former New York City Mayor Rudy Giuliani famously flamed out in 2008 when his campaign opted not to compete in Iowa, New Hampshire or South Carolina.

"There are more super PACs that will have the funding to compete deeper into the calendar and that will give candidates the option to stay in the race longer," said Carl Forti, who ran the super PAC for 2012 GOP nominee Mitt Romney. "But you can't underestimate momentum, and the press coverage that will come from winning an early state can minimize the advantage of money."

GOP contenders court evangelical vote in Iowa // AP – July 18, 2015

Republican presidential contenders seeking to woo evangelical voters are making their case for conservative social issues at a gathering expected to attract thousands of potential Iowa caucus-goers.

Ten candidates are scheduled to appear Saturday in Ames at the annual Family Leadership Summit. No one seeking the GOP nomination has emerged as a clear favorite among evangelical voters.

"They understand that this base has been very influential in past caucuses," said Bob Vander Plaats, president of the Family Leader, the conservative organization sponsoring the event.

Vander Plaats, who has not endorsed any candidate in the 2016 race, expressed concern that the Christian conservative vote might be split up between multiple candidates, diluting its impact.

"The goal would be in this summit, and any subsequent venue or event, that we would start recognizing a leader we could unite around and champion – and try to get the person across the goal line," he said.

Scheduled to attend are Florida Sen. Marco Rubio, Texas Sen. Ted Cruz, South Carolina Sen. Lindsey Graham, Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal, former Texas Gov. Rick Perry, former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee, former Pennsylvania Sen. Rick Santorum, retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson and reality TV personality Donald Trump.

During the daylong event, the candidates will be questioned on stage by political consultant Frank Luntz.

Iowa's evangelical voters traditionally influence the state's first-in-the-nation presidential caucuses because they tend to be organized and participate. Christian conservatives backed the winners of the last two caucuses, Mike Huckabee in 2008 and Rick Santorum in 2012, but neither was the eventual nominee.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Former Iowa Republican Party Chairman Matt Strawn said it was likely too early for a leader to emerge among Christian conservatives. He also noted that some of the candidates may have a wider draw.

“Not only are there considerable options within the Christian conservative lane, but there are also those in that lane that demonstrate appeal to a broader base,” he said.

GOP's 2016 ad war slowly heating up // CNN // Tom LoBianco – July 18, 2015

Dollar days at the local Ford dealer are about to get pushed out by heartwarming tales of Gov. John Kasich's mailman father and Gov. Rick Perry's humble start as an Eagle Scout.

The stories candidates want to tell about their everyman roots, played out in gauzy, 30-second blips, are about to take over airwaves in Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina and Nevada.

There are 15 candidates so far officially seeking the Republican nomination. And every one of them wants to get on the air. Only the top 10 contenders, as determined by an average of national polls, will make it on stage for the first Republican debate, just a few weeks from now, and candidates are scrambling to make the cut.

"I am tired of hyphenated Americans. We are not Indian-Americans or African-Americans, or Asian Americans, we're all Americans," intones Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal, in his own twist on the typical candidate introduction spot, which features clips of his family. Jindal has been pacing himself on TV throughout Iowa for more than a month now.

Jindal, Perry and Kasich didn't crack 5% support among Republicans in the most recent CNN / ORC poll, released late in June.

So far, the top tier is holding back. Former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, whose supporters touted an eye-popping $114 million haul, and Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, who formalized his candidacy this week, have yet to begin unloading on-air.

Sen. Marco Rubio, who's sitting at the front of the GOP pack with Bush and Walker, made a surprise move last month, spending $10 million to flood the airwaves -- not now, but beginning in November, in the thick of the primary fight.

According to federal filings for WMUR in New Hampshire, Rubio will grace "Live with Kelly and Michael" and "The View" through the morning, before book-ending the mid-day news. Then the afternoon is booked with spots airing with "General Hospital," "The Chew" and "Who Wants to be a Millionaire." Finally, ABC primetime viewers get their final dose of Rubio during the nightly news and "Jimmy Kimmel Live!"

Kasich's supporters paid for a $1.7 million Hail Mary that went up on air last weekend in New Hampshire. In it, the often-blunt and sometimes prickly veteran politico talks about his upbringing over a light piano soundtrack and clips from smalltown America.

"My dad carried mail on his back. They called him 'John the Mailman.' They loved him because he looked out for everyone in those neighborhoods," Kasich, who has not yet officially announced his candidacy for president, said in the ads. "I learned something from my father: Do your best to look out for other people."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

And Christie, who's launching a come-from-behind bid in the Granite State, is planning to spend $1.1 million in combined online and on-air advertising beginning next week.

For candidates looking to get a leg up, buying up ads early can help them find a foothold in the wide, wide field of big-name Republicans, said Greg Moore, state director for Americans for Prosperity-New Hampshire.

The name of the game, he said, is building name identification among possible voters.

"If you're trying to catch a wave, people have to know who you are before you grab a surfboard," Moore said.

Craig Robinson, editor of The Iowa Republican website and a veteran campaigner, said he's been impressed by the early consistency from Perry and Jindal.

"Thus far it's been a Rick Perry, Bobby Jindal kinda air war," Robinson said. "It's been those two who have really been on TV and have had a prolonged presence."

The question for both, however, will be whether they can maintain their pace throughout the year, he said. The stakes, in the Republican pack, are holding onto territory and even carving a slice of land, at least one large enough to appear on stage for the first Republican debates.

"For Perry, he needs to hold onto his debate spot. For Jindal, he needs to break into that," Robinson said.

Moore is watching for most ads to start in earnest around September, when schools are back in and families have returned from vacation. Once airtime in Manchester has been snatched up, look for the candidates (and their affiliated super PACs) to begin buying in the Boston market, which covers southern New Hampshire.

Mike Schreurs, a veteran Republican buyer in Iowa who has advised Sen. Chuck Grassley since 1974, noted that some candidates haven't had to spend heavily yet because they're already getting plenty of exposure on their own, through "earned media."

Others, like retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson, have been making effective use of radio advertising, Schreurs said. Former Hewlett-Packard CEO Carly Fiorina could be the next candidate hitting the radio.

Full-blown political saturation of the airwaves hasn't happened yet, but Schreurs noted that could change in a minute once one of the big names like Walker or Bush begin unloading on air.

"I think that's all going to change soon," he said.

TOP NEWS

DOMESTIC

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ku Klux Klan and New Black Panther Party Protest at South Carolina Capitol // NYT // Alan Binder – July 18, 2015

With police officers watching from nearby rooftops and a din of racial slurs heard on the pavement below, members of the Ku Klux Klan and the New Black Panther Party appeared at dueling rallies outside the South Carolina State House on Saturday, eight days after officials here removed the Confederate battle flag from the Capitol grounds.

Despite sporadic scuffles and hours of inflammatory rhetoric from white and black demonstrators alike, the authorities largely maintained order and prevented any significant violence. The police made five arrests, and the South Carolina Department of Public Safety estimated that the State House crowd, including onlookers, had at one point swelled to about 2,000 people. They chanted — or at least heard — volleys of incendiary speech and shouts of “white power!” and “black power!”

Excerpts From the Confederate Flag Debate in the South Carolina HouseJULY 8, 2015

Bystanders watched people wave flags celebrating Pan-Africanism, the Confederacy and the Nazi Party. And they watched as black demonstrators raised clenched fists, and white demonstrators performed Nazi salutes.

Much of the day’s drama was on the south side of the State House, near a statue of former Senator Strom Thurmond, where a few dozen people associated with the Loyal White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan held a demonstration. A Columbia newspaper, The State, reported that it was the first Klan rally outside the State House since the late 1980s.

Saturday’s protesters, who were predominantly men, did not don the Klan’s traditional white hoods and robes. Even as they denied being members of a hate group, their message was a relentless one of white supremacy.

“This is my country,” one shouted at a group of black onlookers. “My ancestors founded this country!”

“Peace is over with,” said William Bader, who said he was a Kentucky resident and the imperial wizard of the Trinity White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. “There is no peace.”

Mr. Bader, who said he planned to wear his Klan regalia for a cross burning on Saturday night, added, “What do I want to see happen? White revolution is the only solution.”

But on Saturday afternoon, Mr. Bader and the other demonstrators who championed a vision of white supremacy were vastly outnumbered as they protested for an hour in a barricaded area of the State House grounds and sometimes became involved in angry shouting matches with black people in the crowd.

There were physical altercations beyond the barricades, but police officers resolved them quickly. When the protest ended and the white demonstrators began to march away around 4 p.m., state troopers with long guns, as well as a Sheriff’s Department tactical team, helped to clear a path.

It barely worked. Hundreds of Klan critics followed the white demonstrators to a nearby parking garage, and the authorities had to block roads so the protesters could leave. One driver, besieged by a crowd of protesters that ran toward the departing vehicles, crashed into a lamppost.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Some of the white people who circulated in the crowd before the Klan rally said they were drawn to the protests by a blend of curiosity and support for preserving Southern history.

"We're not allowed to have this as a heritage," Jerry Anderson, a 49-year-old white man who drove here from northwest Georgia, said as he gestured toward another man's Confederate battle flag. "But they can fly theirs, and they can say what they want to, and it's O.K."

Mr. Anderson said he had never attended a Klan event, adding: "I've never had a reason to go to one. But they take that away and holler that we're the racists, so, yeah, I'm here."

By attending, people like Mr. Anderson defied Gov. Nikki R. Haley, a Republican, who on Thursday asked South Carolinians to keep "away from the disruptive, hateful spectacle members of the Ku Klux Klan hope to create over the weekend."

Earlier on Saturday, a rally organized by Black Educators for Justice, a Florida-based group with ties to the former director of the New Black Panther Party, attracted a smaller crowd and a far less conspicuous police presence. Among the speakers was the chairman of the New Black Panther Party, Hashim Nzinga, who made little mention of the June 17 massacre of nine black people at Charleston's Emanuel African Methodist Episcopal Church. Instead, he argued that blacks must offer renewed and vigorous resistance to what he regards as generations of oppression.

"Do what you need to do now before your coffin," Mr. Nzinga said as a sign nearby urged "death to the K.K.K."

Mr. Nzinga found a receptive crowd, including Charles Goins, a 36-year-old truck driver who held the red, black and green flag of Pan-Africanism. Mr. Goins flatly and frequently said he did not expect the day's rallies to aid in race relations, but he said they could inspire blacks in South Carolina to demand greater equality.

"If anything, this will unify black people because we're tired of being stepped on. We're tired of being pushed around," he said. "This is not the '50s or the '60s."

But the crowds, which brought downtown Columbia traffic to a halt on a sweltering day, eventually dissipated, especially once the Klan supporters had been escorted from the area.

INTERNATIONAL

ISIS Says It Carried Out Bombing That Killed 100 in Iraq // NYT // Anne Barnard – July 18, 2015

The Islamic State group has claimed responsibility for a bombing in eastern Iraq, and Iraqi officials on Saturday said the death toll had risen to 100, with 20 more missing and more than 100 wounded.

The bomb tore through a marketplace on Friday as shoppers prepared for a major Muslim holiday in Khan Bani Saad, a mostly Shiite town about 12 miles from Baquba, the capital of Diyala Province.

Government troops and Shiite militias months ago wrested back parts of the province from the Islamic State, also known as ISIS and Daesh, its Arabic acronym.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The attack was a blow to the unity and optimism that Iraqi officials have sought to project as they mount a new offensive to drive the militants out of Anbar Province, to the west. The government has struggled to oust the group, more than a year after Islamic State fighters seized large areas of northern and western Iraq.

In a statement claiming responsibility for the blast, the Islamic State, which has often singled out Shiites as targets, declared that the bombing was revenge for what it called a massacre of Sunnis in the town of Hawija, farther north.

The statement may have been referring to an episode in March, during a battle that eventually drove the Islamic State from the central city of Tikrit. Residents of Hawija reported at the time that dozens of Islamic State fighters had been killed by their commanders for trying to flee the battlefield.

It is not unusual for conflicting accounts of clashes to emerge. There have also been cases of indiscriminate killings by some Shiite militias in areas that they have taken back from the Islamic State.

The militant group also claimed in its statement that the bomb had hit “a gathering of Shiite militias.” But Iraqi officials said that many civilians, including women and children, were killed or wounded in the blast.

The Islamic State, which follows an extremist interpretation of Sunni Islam, views Shiites as apostates and has often attacked Shiite civilians. Its statement declared that it used three tons of explosives to kill and wound more than 180 “apostates.”

Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi said in a statement that the Islamic State was attacking civilians in response to recent government advances.

“The terrorist criminal gangs of Daesh committed a heinous crime targeting civilians in Khan Bani Saad after the victories achieved by our heroic forces in various places, and the Anbar operation is part of it,” he said.

The bomb struck as people were shopping for Eid al-Fitr, the end of the holy month of Ramadan. Sunni Muslims generally celebrated the holiday a day earlier.

The police and health officials said that in addition to the dead, at least 133 people were wounded in the blast. Identifying the dead was a painstaking task because many bodies were dismembered, the officials said.

It was the most deadly bombing in the area since the American invasion of Iraq in 2003, said Khudhur al-Ubaidi, the secretary of the Diyala provincial council, adding that the death toll was expected to rise because “most of the injured are in critical condition, and more bodies are still under the rubble.”

Bombings have been a terrifying commonplace in Iraq since long before the Islamic State existed in its current form. They often struck at Shiite religious gatherings, but also hit marketplaces with shoppers of all sects, throughout the American occupation and the years of sectarian infighting that peaked in 2006 and 2007.

In recent years, car bombs and suicide bombs have been the militants’ weapons of choice for attacks in government-held areas.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Iran will uphold its anti-American policies and continue to support regional allies inimical to Western interests, Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei said Saturday, days after Tehran and six world powers struck a landmark nuclear deal that renewed hopes of improved ties between longtime adversaries.

"Our policy regarding the arrogant U.S. government will not change," Mr. Khamenei said in a televised address to mark Eid al-Fitr, the Muslim feast day at the end of the holy month of Ramadan. "We don't have any negotiations or deal with the U.S. on different issues in the world or the region."

Mr. Khamenei said the country wouldn't surrender to excessive demands, and vowed not to change Iran's policy of supporting regional allies that the U.S. and Israel oppose.

Iran provides vital support for the Syrian regime, Hezbollah in Lebanon and Shiite militias in Iraq, among other groups.

"Whether [the deal is] ratified or not, we will not give up on our friends in the region," Mr. Khamenei said.

The comments were the most detailed from Mr. Khamenei since the nuclear deal was struck Tuesday. The hard-line cleric's views are being closely watched because he has the final say in most matters of state and could still back out of the agreement.

While Mr. Khamenei was equivocal about the deal's ultimate success, he also hailed it as a win for Iran in a decadelong struggle to preserve its nuclear achievements, including thousands of centrifuges that enrich uranium.

He didn't explicitly reject its provisions, nor did he fully embrace the deal, an ambiguity that appeared to both play to his hard-line base and appeal to Iranians who support the negotiations. A majority of Iranians supported the deal, according to a poll conducted in May by the University of Tehran and IranPoll.com.

"After 10 to 12 years of struggle with the Islamic republic, they have no other way today but to tolerate the spinning of a few thousand centrifuges in the country, the continuation of this industry and research and development," Mr. Khamenei said.

Iran's nuclear deal with six world powers—the U.S., the U.K., France, Germany, Russia and China—puts curbs on its nuclear program in exchange for the removal of sanctions that have reduced its oil exports and hurt its economy.

The U.S., the EU and the United Nations imposed the sanctions over suspicions that Iran sought to develop nuclear weapons, a charge Iran has always denied.

Mr. Khamenei's insistence that Iran's policy toward the U.S. wouldn't change appeared to run counter to recent suggestions by top government officials that the deal could be a springboard for closer cooperation against common threats, including Islamic State extremists in Iraq and Syria.

Iranian Foreign Minister Javad Zarif, who spearheaded Iran's negotiations, said in an Eid message Friday that he hoped the nuclear deal could bring about better regional and international collaboration. President Hassan Rouhani, a pragmatic moderate, has articulated a foreign policy of engagement based on mutual respect since his election in 2013.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Mutual distrust between Iran and the U.S. dates to the Iranian revolution in 1979, which ousted the U.S.-backed Shah Reza Pahlavi and ushered in the Islamic government in place today.

Chants of “Death to America” have since been a regular refrain during government gatherings and Friday prayers, and hard-liners often refer to the U.S. as “the great Satan,” a phrase coined by Iran’s first Supreme Leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Despite the nuclear deal’s finalization on Tuesday, it still faces hurdles both in Iran and the U.S.

In Iran, the parliament and the Supreme National Security Council, a body over which Mr. Khamenei has control, must sign off. But it is ultimately Mr. Khamenei whose decision counts.

The U.S. Congress also has 60 days to weigh in on the deal. If lawmakers pass a resolution disapproving the deal and President Barack Obama vetoes it, a two-thirds majority in the House and Senate is required to override the veto. Mr. Obama can still implement the deal if Congress can’t override his veto.

Since the deal was signed, Mr. Obama’s administration has been fending off opposition in Congress while trying to assure the U.S.’s Gulf Arab allies that they won’t be abandoned in Washington’s mending of ties with Tehran.

In a speech following the deal, Mr. Obama said the accord wouldn’t resolve all the U.S.’s differences with Iran, and that sanctions imposed over the country’s human rights record would stay in place. But he said the deal also “offers an opportunity to move in a new direction” toward tolerance and peace.

The predominantly Sunni Muslim Gulf countries, led by Saudi Arabia, are skeptical of the deal because they see Shiite Iran as their most potent regional rival.

Mr. Obama met Saudi Arabia’s Foreign Minister, Adel al-Jubeir, on Friday to discuss the Iran deal and other regional issues, according to a White House statement.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"King & Spalding" <update@kslawmail.com>
To:	"Odesta, Podesta" <podesta@law.georgetown.edu>
Date:	4/21/2015 5:36:45 AM
Subject:	King & Spalding Client Alert: Is Congress Ready To Act On Trade Legislation? Bill To Renew Trade Promotion Authority About To Be Considered

KING & SPALDING

Client Alert

Government Advocacy & Public Policy Practice Group

Is Congress Ready To Act On Trade Legislation?

Bill To Renew Trade Promotion Authority About To Be Considered

On April 16, long-awaited trade promotion authority (TPA) legislation was introduced in the House and Senate. The Bipartisan Congressional Trade Priorities and Accountability Act of 2015 (S. 995/H.R. 1890) is sponsored by the Chairman and Ranking Member of the Senate Finance Committee, Senators Orrin Hatch (R-UT) and Ron Wyden (D-OR), and the Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee Paul Ryan (R-WI). The ranking member of the Ways and Means Committee, Sandy Levin (D-MI), was notably not a co-sponsor of the bill. The legislation renews presidential authority to negotiate and submit to Congress trade agreements, including the nearly-completed Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP). Previous trade promotion authority lapsed in 2007. More »

Contact(s)

Michael A. Andrews
Thomas J. Spulak
Bonnie B. Byers
George C. Crawford
Joseph Laroski
Lauren M. Donoghue

About King & Spalding

Celebrating more than 125 years of service, King & Spalding is an international law firm that represents a broad array of clients, including half of the Fortune Global 100, with 800 lawyers in 17 offices in the United States, Europe, the Middle East and Asia. The firm also represents hundreds of clients with new ventures and mid-sized companies in emerging industries. For additional information, visit www.kslaw.com .

This alert provides a general summary of recent legal developments. It is not intended to be and should not be relied upon as legal advice. In some jurisdictions, this may be considered "Attorney Advertising."

Abu Dhabi | Atlanta | Austin | Charlotte | Dubai | Frankfurt | Geneva | Houston | London | Moscow | New York | Paris | Riyadh | San Francisco | Silicon Valley | Singapore | Washington, D.C.

In some jurisdictions, this may be considered "Attorney Advertising."

To ensure future delivery of King & Spalding e-mails to your inbox, add the domains @kslaw.com and @kslawmail.com to your safe senders list.

Update your contact profile or unsubscribe.

© King & Spalding | 1180 Peachtree Street NE | Atlanta, GA 30309 | www.kslaw.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sara Du Bois" <sdubois@progressivemediausa.org>
To: "Sara Du Bois" <SDuBois@progressivemediausa.org>
Date: 6/26/2008 1:43:12 AM
Subject: [big campaign] '08 Daily News Clips - 6/26

08 Election Daily News Clips
June 26th, 2008

Candidate Tracking:

All times in Eastern Standard Time

8:30am BUSH: Remarks at the National Hispanic Prayer Breakfast in Washington, DC

12pm McCain: Town Hall in Cincinnati, OH
- Tracking scheduled for this event

1pm BUSH: Remarks to the Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives' National Conference in Washington , DC

4pm BUSH: Participates in the arrival of the Crown Prince of Abu Dhabi from the United Arab Emirates at Camp David

5:30pm McCain: Finance Reception in Cincinnati, OH

News Clips:

MCCAIN NEWS

Top McCain Adviser Has Found Success Mixing Money, Politics (Washington Post 6/26/08)
By Matthew Mosk; A01
As Sen. John McCain's top presidential campaign adviser, Richard H. "Rick" Davis has worked for almost a year without compensation, telling reporters that the sacrifice shows his dedication to the cash-strapped Arizona Republican. He also took a protracted leave from his Washington lobbying firm to distance himself from ethical questions.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/25/AR2008062502858.html

McCain-Obama So Far: Positively Negative (Washington Post 6/26/08)
By Dan Balz; A06
A campaign between Sens. Barack Obama and John McCain once offered enormous possibilities for something new. Instead, the two presumptive nominees have opened their campaigns for the White House with what looks and sounds like a repeat of the kind of politics both have promised to leave behind.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/25/AR2008062502847.html?hpid=topnews

Echoes of Bush's '04 Campaign in Sales Pitch for McCain (NYT 6/26/08)
By SHERYL GAY STOLBERG
President Bush, offering a glimpse of the White House strategy for selling Senator John McCain to voters this fall, told a Republican crowd here on Wednesday that Mr. McCain, the presumptive Republican presidential nominee, is the only candidate "who knows what it takes to defeat our enemies."
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/26/us/politics/26bush.html

McCain pledges oil independence for U.S. (LA Times 6/26/08)
By Maeve Reston
In Nevada, he says he'd free America from foreign suppliers by 2025. He also pitches nuclear power, a touchy topic in the state.
http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-campaign26-2008jun26,0,2405380.story

Who's 'Dr. No' of energy policy? (LA Times 6/26/08)
By Noam N. Levey
The McCain camp tries to stick the label on Obama, but the movie villain, like the Republican, said yes to nuclear power.
http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-trailno26-2008jun26,0,4986575.story

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

McCain camp releases 'Dr. No' web ad (CNN blog 6/25/08)
By Martina Stewart
The battle over energy policy between Sens. John McCain and Barack Obama has ventured into the realm of online video.
http://politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com/2008/06/25/mccain-camp-releases-%e2%80%98dr-no%e2%80%99-web-ad/?dr-no?-web-ad/
Link to video of ad: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=a3Zy50Dy6Zk
Link to McCain press release: http://www.johnmccain.com/informing/news/PressReleases/909debdc-93e0-4d6a-8374-2fd7bd2b4542.htm

John McCain doesn't work weekends (Politico 6/26/08)
By: Jonathan Martin
Since effectively capturing the Republican nomination when Mitt Romney dropped out of the race on February 7, John McCain has held just one public campaign event on a weekend.
http://www.politico.com/news/stories/0608/11355.html

On the Web, Supporters of McCain Wage An Uphill Battle (Washington Post 6/26/08)
By Jose Antonio Vargas; C01
Republican's Online Presence Lags Far Behind Obama's
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/25/AR2008062503116.html

For Mother McCain, 96 Is More Than an Age: It's an Average Speed. (Washington Post 6/26/08)
By Mary Ann Akers And Paul Kane; A17
Nothing, not even skyrocketing gas prices, seems to slow down Roberta McCain, the indefatigable 96-year-old mother of Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) and a notorious lead-foot behind the wheel. She's still speeding around like a NASCAR driver on the last lap. Mrs. McCain told us at a recent cocktail party that she got a $40 speeding ticket in Chevy Chase a few weeks ago. "Don't speed up there," she warned with a wry smile.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/25/AR2008062502596.html

Obama plans to run McCain ragged across the US (AFP 6/26/08)
Democrat Barack Obama is broadening the playing field against his Republican White House rival John McCain with a nationwide trawl for votes that could, if successful, produce a landslide.
http://afp.google.com/article/ALeqM5gvcHS7wuzzITQw1fEY_duczVEWjA

McCain pushes energy plan on delicate ground (AP 6/26/08)
Takes nuclear power plan to Nevada, sidesteps nuclear waste controversy
http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/25372699/

Gov. Crist Takes Middle Way In Environment, Energy (WSJ 6/26/08)
By Stephen Power
In the space of a week, Florida Gov. Charlie Crist cheered the oil industry by suggesting he could live with oil wells off the Florida coast, then won praise from Greens for cutting a deal to reclaim 300 square miles of the Everglades from sugar farming.
http://online.wsj.com/public/article/SB121443962081205471.html?mod=special_page_campaign2008_topbox

John McCain Meets with Log Cabin Republicans President (GayPatriot 6/25/08)
GayPatriot has exclusively learned that presumptive Republican Presidential nominee Senator John McCain held a personal meeting with the head of the national gay Republicans organization, the Log Cabin Republicans. Log Cabin President Patrick Sammon confirmed his meeting with Senator McCain earlier today.
http://www.gaypatriot.net/2008/06/25/breaking-election-newsgaypatriot-exclusivejohn-mccain-meets-with-log-cabin-republicans-president/
See also: http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2008/06/25/mccain-in-the-closet-secr_n_109279.html

ANALYSIS-McCain foreign policy susceptible to Obama attack (Reuters 6/25/08)
By David Morgan
Republican candidate John McCain could be vulnerable on foreign policy and national security -- his major campaign assets up to now -- if Barack Obama can paint him as a symbol of contradiction and hardline ideology, experts say.
http://www.reuters.com/article/vcCandidateFeed2/idUSN24328846

McCain In 2004: "Bin Laden May Have Just Given Us A Little Boost" (TPM 6/25/08)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By Greg Sargent
This is a live one. John McCain said he strenuously disagrees with top adviser Charlie Black's comment that a terror attack on U.S. soil would help McCain's campaign -- but more evidence has just emerged that McCain does believe this, or a variation of it, anyway.
http://tpmelectioncentral.talkingpointsmemo.com/2008/06/mccain_in_2004_bin_laden_may_h.php

Former McCain Strategist Blames Charlie Black's Gaffe On 'Tremendous Reporter Cleavage' (ThinkProgress 6/25/08)
In a new Fortune magazine article, Sen. John McCain's (R-AZ) chief strategist Charlie Black claimed that another terrorist attack on U.S. soil would be "a big advantage" for their campaign. On Dennis Miller's radio show today, former top McCain strategist Mike Murphy attempted to explain away the gaffe with a crude joke:
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/06/25/black-cleavage/
Link to audio: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=EMM1seEVka0&eurl=http://thinkprogress.org/

In 2005, McCain Said Even The 'Scum Of Humanity' Deserve To Have 'Some Adjudication Of Their Cases' (ThinkProgress 6/25/08)
After last week's Supreme Court decision granting terror detainees the right of habeas corpus, Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) blasted the decision as one of the worst ever. Raising the specter of Osama bin Laden being tried in civil court, McCain invoked the Nazi war crimes trials to declare that bin Laden should be denied habeas rights at all costs, Supreme Court be damned:
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/06/25/mccain-nazi-flip/

McCain Attacks Obama Using Hip Film Reference...from 1962 (ABC News blog 6/25/08)
By Jake Tapper
Three weeks after Sen. Barack Obama, D-Illinois, began accusing Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., of "running for George Bush's third term," McCain started saying Obama was running for "Jimmy Carter's second" term.
http://blogs.abcnews.com/politicalpunch/2008/06/mccain-attack-1.html

McCain tries to balance energy solutions, votes (AP 6/25/08)
By GLEN JOHNSON
After fending off ocean drilling critics in California, Republican John McCain on Wednesday bucked opponents of a Nevada nuclear waste repository as he outlined ways to resolve the nation's energy crisis while seeking votes in another swing state.
http://ap.google.com/article/ALeqM5hsrp6j9iu62RFM1PULIv9y6YNHoAD91HG3NG0

More offshore drilling does little at the pump: EIA (Reuters 6/25/08)
By Tom Doggett
Allowing oil drilling in U.S. offshore waters that are now closed to energy exploration would do little to lower gasoline prices paid by consumers, the government's top energy forecaster said on Wednesday.
http://news.yahoo.com/s/nm/20080625/ts_nm/usa_oil_offshore_dc

Obama Condemns Supreme Court Decision in Child Rape Case (WSJ blog 6/25/08)
By Susan Davis
Barack Obama criticized the Supreme Court's 5-4 decision today striking down the use of the death penalty in cases of child rape. ...Expected Republican nominee John McCain also disagreed with the court's decision.
http://blogs.wsj.com/washwire/2008/06/25/obama-condemns-supreme-court-decision-in-child-rape-case/?mod=googlenews_wsj

Obama Florida supporters slam McCain (MSNBC 6/25/08)
By Athena Jones
The Obama campaign hosted a call with Florida legislators to slam McCain as a poor candidate for South Florida who would have a big, uphill climb if he is to appeal to voters there.
http://firstread.msnbc.msn.com/archive/2008/06/24/1164983.aspx

OPINIONS AND EDITORIALS

A winning strategy for McCain (Boston Globe 6/26/08)
By Todd Domke
THE TRENDS are troubling for John McCain. Polls show growing support for Barack Obama, for Democrats generally, and for change. And since Obama broke his public financing pledge he'll have much more money than McCain for advertising. How can McCain change the dynamic of this race?
http://www.boston.com/bostonglobe/editorial_opinion/oped/articles/2008/06/26/a_winning_strategy_for_mccain/

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Obamacons Who Worry McCain (Washington Post 6/26/08)
By Robert D. Novak; A19
What is an "Obamacon?" The phrase surfaced in January to describe British conservatives entranced by Barack Obama. On March 13 the American Spectator broadened the term to cover all "conservative supporters" of the Democratic presidential candidate. Their ranks, though growing, feature few famous people. But looming on the horizon are two big potential Obamacons: Colin Powell and Chuck Hagel. ...The Obamacon syndrome is based on hostility to Bush and his administration and on revulsion over today's Republican Party. The danger for McCain is that desire for a therapeutic electoral bloodbath could get out of control.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/25/AR2008062501942.html?hpid=opinionsbox1

McCain is on track with battery prize (Arizona Republic 6/26/08)
By Don Walter
Sen. John McCain's idea to offer government prizes to whoever can develop a new era of batteries and a zero-emissions car is not only courageous and innovative but demonstrates a clear understanding of how to get results ("McCain offers prize for new battery," Republic, Tuesday).
http://www.azcentral.com/arizonarepublic/opinions/articles/0626thurlets261.html

Snuggling Up to the Bundlers (NYT 6/26/08)
In his self-serving retreat from the spending restraints of public financing, Senator Barack Obama hailed his formidable Internet army of small donors as "a new kind of politics." Maybe so. But just in case, the senator is not about to neglect the old politics of special-interest money bundlers in his presidential campaign. ...Senator John McCain — who is also vying for the mantle of reformer in chief — is opting for the public subsidies that begin after the conventions. In the meantime, he is relying on his own flock of special-interest bundlers to raise all the private funds he can.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/26/opinion/26thu3.html

Another wedge issue (LA Times 6/26/08)
By Salam Al-Marayati and Steven B. Jacobs
Exploiting the Muslim- Jewish divide is the wrong way to win votes.
http://www.latimes.com/news/opinion/la-oe-almarayati26-2008jun26,0,5362594.story

Terror Gaffe is a Blot on McCain Campaign (Seattle Times 6/25/08)
http://seattletimes.nwsource.com/html/editorialsopinion/2008015338_terrored25.html

It's All About Obama (WSJ 6/26/08)
By KARL ROVE
The senator risks being painted as arrogant and self-centered.... Many candidates have measured the Oval Office drapes prematurely. But Barack Obama is the first to redesign the presidential seal before the election.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB121443823260805375.html?mod=opinion_main_commentaries

BUSH NEWS

U.S. to Take North Korea Off Terror List (NYT 6/27/08)
By NORIMITSU ONISHI and EDWARD WONG
North Korea submitted a long-delayed declaration of its nuclear program on Thursday, as the Bush administration said it would remove the country it once described as part of the "axis of evil" from the State Department's list of state sponsors of terrorism.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/27/world/asia/27nuke.html?hp
See also: http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/U/US_NKOREA?SITE=NVLAS&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

White House Tried to Silence EPA Proposal on Car Emissions (Washington Post 6/26/08)
By Juliet Eilperin; A02
White House officials last December sought to stop the Environmental Protection Agency from submitting a proposed rule that would limit greenhouse-gas emissions from new vehicles, agency sources said yesterday. And upon learning that EPA had hit the "send" button just minutes earlier, the White House called again to demand that the e-mail be recalled.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/25/AR2008062502713.html

Bush visits Michigan, says McCain will win state (AP 6/25/08)
A jovial President Bush spoke to an enthusiastic crowd of 300 Republican donors, promoting Michigan candidates and presidential hopeful John McCain.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://www.mlive.com/elections/index.ssf/2008/06/bush_visits_michigan_says_mcca.html

Bush Misread War-Powers Cases (WSJ 6/25/08)
By Jess Bravin
WASHINGTON -- At the Supreme Court, it has become a biennial ritual: The Bush administration loses a major war-powers case. In 2004, 2006 and again this month, the justices rejected the president's claim that he can effectively do as he wishes with prisoners he designates as "enemy combatants."
http://online.wsj.com/public/article/SB121443502741304977.html?mod=special_page_campaign2008_leftbox

OTHER TOP NEWS

Guantanamo Detainee to File Habeas Petition (Washington Post 6/26/08)
By Josh White and Del Quentin Wilber; A14
Mohammed Sulaymon Barre fled his native Somalia as civil war raged in the early 1990s, receiving U.N. refugee status and landing in Pakistan, where he settled his family and worked for a financial services company. In a nighttime raid in November 2001, Pakistani authorities arrested Barre, holding him for four months and then turning him over to U.S. forces in Afghanistan as an alleged terrorist.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/25/AR2008062502598.html

High Court To Announce Ruling on D.C. Gun Ban (Washington Post 6/26/08)
By Paul Duggan; A16
With its term coming to an end, the U.S. Supreme Court this morning is expected to issue its ruling on the District's handgun-ownership ban in a case that could result in a landmark interpretation of the Second Amendment.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/25/AR2008062502712.html

Damages Cut Against Exxon in Valdez Case (NYT 6/26/08)
By ADAM LIPTAK
The Supreme Court on Wednesday reduced what had once been a $5 billion punitive damages award against Exxon Mobil to about $500 million. The ruling essentially concluded a legal saga that started when the Exxon Valdez, a supertanker, struck a reef and spilled 11 million gallons of crude oil into the Prince William Sound in Alaska in 1989.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/26/washington/26punitive.html?hp

Right to Face Accusers Is Affirmed in Unusual Case (Washington Post 6/26/08)
By Carrie Johnson; A02
The Supreme Court yesterday threw out the conviction of a man accused of murdering his ex-girlfriend because the defendant could not challenge an incriminating account she gave the police weeks before her death.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/25/AR2008062502614.html

Global warming could increase terrorism, official says (CNN 6/25/08)
* Climate change could destabilize "weak" states, intelligence chair says
* Global warming could spark mass migrations, classified report finds
* U.S. food production could increase with climate change, report suggests
* But it says U.S. coasts could be threatened by larger storm surges

http://www.cnn.com/2008/POLITICS/06/25/climate.change.security/index.html?eref=rss_politics

House passes AMT patch (The Hill 6/25/08)
By Jessica Holzer
The House approved legislation to shield 25 million families from a scheduled tax increase this year, voting to raise taxes on the private equity industry and major oil companies to offset part of the measure's $60 billion cost.
http://thehill.com/leading-the-news/house-passes-amt-patch-2008-06-25.html

Afghanistan attacks up 40% in east, Pentagon says (LA Times 6/25/08)
By Peter Spiegel and Julian E. Barnes
Insurgent activity has spread into once stable areas, data show, prompting alarm among officials.
http://www.latimes.com/news/printedition/front/la-fg-usafghan25-2008jun25,0,4289911.story

POLLS

Poll: McCain Takes Seven-Point Lead In Missouri (TPM 6/25/08)
By Eric Kleefeld

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

A new SurveyUSA poll shows John McCain taking a decent lead in one battleground state: Missouri.
http://tpmelectioncentral.talkingpointsmemo.com/2008/06/poll_mccain_takes_sevenpoint_l.php

Gallup finds 80% see McCain as a commander in chief, 55% Obama (LA Times blog 6/25/08)
By Andrew Malcolm
Republican Sen. John McCain, a retired Naval aviator, Naval Academy graduate, war veteran and son and grandson of admirals, draws a very high level of confidence among American voters in his ability to serve as commander in chief -- fully 80% of those surveyed say McCain could handle the top job.
http://latimesblogs.latimes.com/washington/2008/06/gallup-finds-80.html

--
Sara DuBois
Deputy Director - Tracking/Media Monitoring
Progressive Media USA
sdubois@progressivemediausa.org
202-609-7681 (office)
410-967-7306 (cell)
--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Gary Ritterstein, Douglass for Congress" <info@johndouglassforcongress.com>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 9/1/2012 9:49:42 AM
Subject: drama queen

John,

Despite bankrolling his campaign with millions of dollars from the likes of the Koch Brothers and Wall Street, Corporate Congressman Robert Hurt is still trying to get away with playing the victim card. Instead of showing up at debates to explain his ties to dangerous uranium mining that puts our district at risk, he is hiding behind campaign statements that try to gin up another right-wing hissy fit.

Congress is no place for a drama queen. It takes a leader who is tough enough to handle a little political criticism. Having narrowly escaped several kidnap attempts, General Douglass has been through far worse. He's tough enough to lead in our military and is tough enough to lead in Congress.

Will you stand tough now with an immediate contribution?

The more they whine, the more we win. If you contribute by Monday's deadline, we'll keep up the fight to replace a Corporate Congressman with a true patriot who will fight for Virginia families.

Our opponent's own polling shows that we are gaining momentum. Our support has surged by 7 percent before we even hit the airwaves. And we're on the verge of our strongest fundraising month to date.

Our grassroots movement comes from a campaign that does more than 300 events and makes tens of thousands of calls. It comes from you. And we won't back down until we restore our representation in the people's House to the people of Virginia. Please contribute now.

Thanks,

Gary Ritterstein
Campaign Manager

Paid for by John Douglass for Congress

14249 Hume Rd
Hume, VA 22639

send to a friend

TO UNSUBSCRIBE FROM THIS MAILING LIST, CLICK Þ$HERE POWERED BY Þ%NGP VAN, INC.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Wilson Center" <wwics@wilsoncenter.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 12/30/2015 11:22:40 AM
Subject: Read, Watch and Listen to the Best from the Wilson Center In 2015

To view this email as a web page, click here

Dear John D.,

Thanks to our scholars, our staff, and our friends around the world, this has been an exceptional year in programming at the Wilson Center. More than ever, our publications and our conversations bridged the worlds of scholarship and policy.

Below you'll find a list of the standout events, publications, and articles of 2015 organized by the themes we found most significant.

READ NOW

Wilson Resources Programs Experts Events Publications

Follow The Wilson Center

About The Wilson Center
The Wilson Center, chartered by Congress as the official memorial to President Woodrow Wilson, is the nation's key non-partisan policy forum for tackling global issues through independent research and open dialogue to inform actionable ideas for Congress, the Administration, and the broader policy community.

© Copyright 2015, The Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars , All Rights Reserved.

Ronald Reagan Building and International Trade Center
One Woodrow Wilson Plaza | 1300 Pennsylvania, Ave., NW | Washington, D.C. 20004 | 202.691.4000
Subscriber: podesta@law.georgetown.edu | Manage your Subscriptions | Unsubscribe from All

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "t r u t h o u t" <messenger@truthout.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 8/11/2014 8:50:55 AM
Subject: Communal Lands: Theater of Operations for the Counterinsurgency

View Recent Newsletters

Tell a friend about Truthout!

Monday, 11 August 2014

truthout

Donate Today!

Truthout is a 501(c)3 nonprofit organization; donations are tax deductible.

Communal Lands: Theater of Operations for the Counterinsurgency

Renata Bessi and Santiago Navarro F., Translated by Miriam Taylor, Truthout: The Pentagon has been funding mapping expeditions of indigenous areas in Mexico. Its aim? To incorporate indigenous territories into the transnational corporate model of private property, either by force or through agreements.

Read the Article and View the Photos

Fracked on Their Own Petard: The Self-Implosion of an Industry on the Ropes

Adam Briggle, Truthout: As Denton seeks to become the first city in Texas to ban fracking, the industry is trying to frame the fight in economic terms. That frame, it turns out, is a poor choice for leaders.

Read the Article

Gar Alperovitz | Is Worker Ownership a Way Forward for Market Basket?

Gar Alperovitz, Truthout: Market Basket seems a prime candidate for transition to employee ownership that could keep the leadership that built the company's culture in place, while laying the groundwork to maintain that culture by rooting ownership in the company itself.

Read the Article

"Pro-Troop" Charity Misleads Donors While Lining Political Consultants' Pockets

Kim Barker, ProPublica: Move America Forward has collected millions of dollars to send care packages to US troops. But its appeals often rely on images and stories borrowed without permission, and its assets have been used to benefit consulting firms and political action committees.

Read the Article

Reflections on the Maidan and Pro-Autonomy Political Movements in Ukraine

Roger Annis, Truthout: Social researcher at the

BuzzFlash

"Poor Door" Approved for Luxury Apartment Building in NYC Is Economic Apartheid

Mark Karlin, BuzzFlash at Truthout: The rich, apparently, do not want to have their days disturbed by mingling with those of less income. So, real estate developers in at least three cities are developing rental buildings with separate doors for wealthy renters and those with reduced economic means.

Read the BuzzFlash Commentary

Study: Keystone XL's Carbon Emissions

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Moscow-based Institute for Globalization Studies and Social Movements Daniel Grigor'ev speaks with Truthout about the origins and development of Ukraine's "Maidan" and East Ukraine's autonomy movements.

Read the Interview

Another Unarmed Black Teen Shot by Militarized Police

The Daily Take Team, The Thom Hartmann Program: On Saturday, 18-year-old Michael Brown was shot and killed by a Ferguson, Missouri, police officer. Brown's death has sparked considerable outrage in Ferguson, with protests breaking out all weekend long and continuing today.

Read the Article

As Migrant Children Face Backlash, Communities Mobilize to Drown Out Hate

Laurie Smolenski, Waging Nonviolence: During rallies this summer, the hateful taunts of anti-immigration counter-protesters were drowned out by communities singing songs of freedom, resonating toward the skyscrapers in Manhattan.

Read the Article

Dean Baker | The Entitlement of the Very Rich

Dean Baker, Truthout: Last week we got to see the thinking of the very rich when Jeffrey Immelt, the CEO of General Electric, complained at a summit with African heads of state and business leaders about the fact that there is even an argument over the reauthorization of Export-Import Bank.

Read the Article

California Drought Leaves Farmworkers Hung Out to Dry

Julia Wong, In These Times: The crops being harvested in California this summer are smaller than usual thanks to the record-setting drought that has reached extreme levels in more than half of the state. It's another blow to California's hundreds of thousands of farmworkers who are struggling to survive.

Read the Article

Our Privacy and Liberty Are Still at Risk, Even if Leahy NSA Bill Passes

Elizabeth (Liza) Goitein, Brennan Center for Justice: Even if the Senate version of the USA Freedom Act becomes law, Americans' private information will remain vulnerable - under both the domestic programs addressed by the bill and other, much larger, programs nominally targeted at foreigners.

Read the Article

On the News With Thom Hartmann: Walgreens Will Not Move Overseas to Avoid Taxes, and More

In today's On the News segment: Walgreens has caved to public pressure and announced that it will

Would Be Four Times Higher Than the US Thought

Read the Article at The Guardian

Obama's Pentagon Covered Up War Crimes in Afghanistan, Says Amnesty International

Read the Article at The Daily Beast

The Wall Street Journal: The Funny Papers of Modern Journalism

Read the Article at BuzzFlash

Koch Brothers Reach Out to Hispanic Community in New "Libre Initiative"

Read the Article at the Associated Press

The Man With the Cardboard Sign: "Ferguson Police Just Executed My Unarmed Son!!!"

Read the Article at Prison Culture

Minimum Wage Laws Aren't Just for Workers With the Lowest Wages

Read the Article at Al Jazeera America

George Will Confirms Nixon's Vietnam

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

not move overseas to avoid paying US taxes; in the last year alone, the default rate on federal student loans has risen by 5 percent; the United States is the richest nation on the planet, but we're the only advanced economy that doesn't guarantee workers a vacation; and more.

Watch the Video and Read the Transcript

Treason
Read the Article at BuzzFlash

A Bike That Stamps Your Message on the Street, and Three Other Open-Source Tools for Activists

Molly Rusk, YES! Magazine: StreetToolbox offers new tools for the political communicator - from a remote-controlled car that writes messages in colored sand to a kit that turns your bike into a mobile printing press.

Read the Article and Watch the Videos

The Mass Destruction of Iraq: The Disintegration of a Nation: Why It Is Happening and Who Is Responsible

Truthout writers William Rivers Pitt and Dahr Jamail have collaborated on a new e-book that examines the history behind the chaos in Iraq. From PNAC to Bush, with vivid reporting from the scene, this book definitively explains why this is happening. Order The Mass Destruction of Iraq for Kindle now!

Get the E-Book

Support Truthout with a tax-deductible donation

Please add messenger@truthout.org to ensure you receive our messages
Truthout is a proud member of the New spaper Guild/CWA, Local 36047
Subscribe | Unsubscribe
Privacy Policy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: theSkimm <dailyskimm@theskimm.com>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 8/6/2015 3:19:43 AM
Subject: Daily Skimm: Throw it back

Is this email not displaying correctly? View it in your browser.

theSkimm

Skimm for August 6th

Skimm'd after watching "The Wonder Years." Sigh.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"The choice we face is ultimately between diplomacy or some form of war" – President Obama on why he wants Congress to approve a little thing called the Iran nuclear deal.

SKIMM THIS

THINGS EVERYONE'S TALKING ABOUT

THE PLANE

THE STORY

Everyone's pretty, pretty sure that debris found last week on an island in the Indian Ocean is from the missing plane. More sure than they were last lime . And the time before that .

WHAT DO WE KNOW?

A Malaysia Airlines flight from Kuala Lumpur to Beijing went missing more than a year ago with 239 people on board, and no one knew what the F happened. Last week, debris washed ashore on Reunion Island (in the Indian Ocean, near Madagascar). It was sent to France, where experts said they have a strong feeling it's from the missing plane.

theSKIMM

It looks like this is a major clue to the mystery of the plane. But still TBD – how and why the plane turned from its original flight path.

SKIMM THIS

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

THE DEBATE

THE STORY

The first presidential debate is tonight. And the GOP has the talking stick. The top 10 candidates — based on the average of recent national polls — will argue it out on Fox News over who should take the White House.

WHO DO I NEED TO KNOW?

Donald Trump…the one with the hair. He's polling the highest by far – despite being the most controversial candidate by far.

Former Gov. Jeb Bush (FL)…the one who's a Bush. But he wants you to call him Jeb. Exclamation mark included.

Gov. Scott Walker (WI)…the one with the union beef. He's apparently uninterested in beef with other candidates tonight.

Former Gov. Mike Huckabee (AR)…the one who was a pastor and previously seen on Fox News. He has some aggressive stances on social issues.

Ben Carson…the one who's a neurosurgeon with no political experience.

Sen. Ted Cruz (TX)…the one who's a Tea Party golden boy.

Sen. Marco Rubio (FL)...the one with a 'Gate. #WaterBottleGate

Gov. Chris Christie (NJ)…the other one with a 'Gate. #BridgeGate.

Sen. Rand Paul (KY)…the one where every time he says he wants 'smaller government,' you take a drink.

Gov. John Kasich (OH)…the one who barely made the cut, and also used to be a Fox News host. Welcome home.

theSKIMM

It's still 2015, but it already smells like 2016 spirit.

SKIMM THIS

REPEAT AFTER ME...

WHAT TO SAY WHEN YOU GO TO YOUR BOSS'S SUMMER MANSION FOR THE OFFICE BBQ...

Must be nice. Yesterday, the SEC told the CEOs of most public companies to make their salaries public…and then play a game of compare and contrast with their employees' salaries. Hint: one is much higher. In some cases, CEOs are making 800 times the average employee. Supporters are saying 'bout time,' this will put a spotlight on income inequality. Critics are saying 'WTF,' this is a useless rule that only serves to shame CEOs about how much they make. In other paycheck news, Netflix wants its employees to keep theirs while they have babies. Earlier this week, the company announced it's allowing new parents to take off up to a year and still get paid. So that makes changing diapers a little more bearable.

SKIMM THIS

WHAT TO SAY WHEN THE WAITRESS ASKS TO SEE YOUR ID...

That's a controversial question in Texas. Yesterday, a federal appeals court ruled against a Texas law that requires voters to show certain approved forms of ID at the polls. For example, college IDs are a no-go, but driver's licenses and concealed gun licenses are OK. The court decided it has a discriminatory effect on minority voters. This law was signed in 2011 and has been controversial ever since. Supporters say it's needed to protect the voting process in Texas. Critics — including the Justice Department — say that voter fraud is a non-issue and instead, the law just makes it harder for low-income and minority voters to get an "I Voted" sticker. Now, the law's going to a lower court for some revisions. PS: today is the 50th anniversary of the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

WHAT TO SAY WHEN YOU REMEMBER TONIGHT IS JON STEWART'S LAST SHOW ...

Cosby jokes might be off limits. It looks like Bill Cosby will have to talk about one of the sexual abuse cases against him. He's been ordered to give a deposition under oath later this year. The alleged victim is one of the women who have publicly accused Cosby of sexual abuse. She was a minor when the alleged abuse happened, so the statute of limitations that has allowed Cosby to keep quiet until now doesn't apply. He's never been charged.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

WHAT TO SAY WHEN THE INTERN IS SITTING AT YOUR DESK...

So you think this is yours now? Recently, China's been saying 'mine' to contested territory in the South China Sea. Yesterday, US Sec. of State Kerry told China's foreign minister 'relax' with the territory grabbing. The South China Sea is home to major shipping routes, which is why pretty much every country in the neighborhood says it's theirs. Last year, China went SimCity on everyone and built about 2,000 acres of artificial islands…complete with helipads, airstrips, and military facilities. The US has repeatedly told China to kindly pump the brakes, since this could become a bigger issue in the region. And yesterday, Kerry told them again. Good talk.

SKIMM THIS

THING TO KNOW

Catty-corner: The phrase your aunt uses when you're trying to agree on a meeting place for brunch. It means diagonally opposite.

SKIMM SHARE

It's almost Friday. We're here to help you get the party started…early. Share theSkimm and you could have a Skimm happy hour set and $100 worth of liquid courage coming your way. Share here.

SKIMM BIRTHDAYS

indicates Skimm'bassador. Clap your hands.

Emiko Faust (Jackson, MS); Becky Pospisal (Clive, IA); Eileen Buckley (Chicago, IL); Brianna Sikorski (Joliet, IL); Alexis Eggleton (Goshen, NY); Molly Bradford (Missoula, MT); Hannah White (Atlanta, GA); Sasha Swerdlow (Los Angeles, CA); Natasha Abdullah (Houston, TX); Kim Maddox (Louisville, KY); Laura Smith (Raleigh, NC); Christine Nowack (Olney, MD); Hana Betts (McLean, VA); Elizabeth Trainor (Roseland, NJ); Kayla Calder (Toronto, Canada); Laura Evans (McLean, VA); Monica DeLuca (Massapequa, NY); Malia Funk (Columbus, OH); Rissa Reddan (Chicago, IL); Megan Dupuy (Bator Rouge, LA); Laura Bilicic (Chicago, IL); Lauren Seiple (Charlotte, NC); Alexandra Weingarten (Roslyn, NY); Jeff Piotrowski (Philadelphia, PA); Lily Mortimer (New York, NY); Alix Rabins Clyburn (Maplewood, NJ); Brianna Welle (Minneapolis, MN); Wes Wynne (New York, NY); Caron Blanton (Madison, MS); Donna Piard (New York, NY); Gin Barbera (Amelia Island, FL); Holly Usiak (Chapel Hill, NC); Jessica Fleury (Bethesda, MD); Julie Mackenie (Boston, MA); Lindsey Marmorstein (New York, NY); Mallory Jones (Ann Arbor, MI); Alli Movsovitz (Atlanta, GA); Irina Kous (Boston, MA); Lindsay Bembenek (Arlington VA); Minnie Tesage (Thomaston, CT); Kathy Wallace (Fitchburg, MA)

Skimm'd something we missed?

Email SkimmThis@theSkimm.com • Read in browser »

SHARE & FOLLOW US

FACEBOOK TWITTER TUMBLR INSTAGRAM PINTEREST

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Copyright © 2015 theSkimm, All rights reserved. You are receiving this daily Skimm because you opted in at our website

Unsubscribe john.podesta@gmail.com from this list

Update subscription preferences

Our mailing address is:

theSkimm

584 Broadway

Ste. 409

New York, NY 10012

Add us to your address book

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Cammie Croft" <cammie@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 7/10/2008 6:36:24 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Tracking Update: McCain Town Hall Meeting Belleville, MI 07/10/08

Hi All,

Unfortunately, a stubborn McCain volunteer wouldn't let our tracker into today's town hall meeting. But here's the good news: we were able to cover the event via online video and web quality clips are available by request. Below are our notes.

BIG HIGHTLIGHTS:

- McCain does NOT mention Gramm comments
- McCain tells Michigan crowd that 'I have to look you in the eye and tell you you're jobs aren't coming back'
- McCain reiterated his support for No Child Left Behind and for 'choice and competition' in schools
- When asked about his changing positions on the Bush tax cuts and the environment, McCain repeated in his response, 'I have not changed positions.'
- When asked how he will defend Israel as president, McCain said 'the United States of America can never allow a second Holocaust'

Belleville, MI - McCain Town Hall Meeting 07/10/08

Speech Highlights:
- Town hall meetings are the best way to communicate. Senator Obama has chosen not to participate in these town hall meetings.
- The town hall meeting I hope to have is one on the economy, but I'll answer all questions.
- I don't want to insult your intelligence by tell you that the state of Michigan has lost over 70,000 jobs. 8.5% of your workforce is out of the job.
- Families are sitting around the table each night and worrying how to pay their bills.
- The price of a gallon of gas is over $4 -- over $5 in California.
- We got to reform government and keep taxes low.
- Right now we are gridlocked in our nation's capital. I don't know if you saw it or not, but Congress is at an approval rating of 9%.
- My whole life has been spent putting my country first. And I promise to always do that.
- I believe in the greatness of America. I'm encouraged when I go to places in America that are using technology and innovation.
- My opponent would like to have small businesses have mandatory health care -- which means new jobs will not be created.
- The last thing we need in an economic downturn is to raise taxes. Obama wants to raise a broad range of taxes.
- If you want a candidate that will raise your taxes, Senator Obama is your candidate. I am not your candidate.
- I believe in free trade. I also believe in fair trade. And we do have means for addressing inequalities. I will be very active in preventing abuses.
- I have to look you in the eye and say I believe in free trade.
- Let me talk to you about spending. Government has grown by 60% in the last 8 years. Spending has gotten out of control. That is a great failure of this President for not vetoing those spending bills.
- Ronald Reagan used to say -- Congress spends money like a drunken sailor ... And I got a letter from a former drunken sailor who said he was offended by the association.
- We spent $15 million of your money for asparagus subsidies. That was in the farm bill. I voted against that.
- Any pork-barrel project that comes across my desk, I will veto.
- I have never asked for or received a pork-barrel project for my state. Obama has.
- My friends our single biggest challenge is our dependence on foreign oil. We are sending billions of dollars to countries overseas that don't like us very much.
- We need to embark on a mission -- I'm calling it the Lexington Project. We need to do wind, solar, nuclear, tide -- all these sources.
- We can unleash that power -- and we can do that right here in Michigan where we have some of the most innovative workers in the nation.
- The lowest income Americans are being hurt most by the cost of gasoline.
- The point is Americans need relief. And we should give them a gas-tax holiday.
- It's a security issue and an environmental issue. We need to drill offshore.
- We've got to have nuclear power -- my friends the French. 80% of their electricity is coming from nuclear energy.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- We need to reprocess and story nuclear power.
- I'm proud of my record. In January, I'm going to go in there and take them all on. The Democrats, the Republicans, the Libertarians -- the vegetarians. I'll make it happen.
- I promise to serve -- I did it as a prisoner of war and in Congress.
- Thank you very much for being here. I'll now take your questions.

Question and Answer

1 Q) You visited my plant 2 years ago. I donated to your campaign. You say fair trade, free trade. We want fair trade. We've lost a lot of our jobs. For job training programs, where are you going to find the teachers? And once they're trained, I can go and hire an engineer for cheaper in China. We want fair trade.

MCCAIN: I see what your saying. We have the WTO and other organizations that help make trade fair. But the innovation and hope lies in America. You can never replace the ingenuity and greatness of the American worker. We are the best. Bill Gates started in a garage I believe. I'll look at you in the eye again and say there are certain jobs that aren't coming back. But with green technology there will be new jobs available. I am confidant that flex fuels and hybrids are part of the answer. I understand again that people are hurting. But they need to have hope and confidence in the future. I do. And I will keep taxes low. And I will dedicate federal funds to research and development money. The right leadership, motivation and incentives and we can do this. The future of the economy is in green technologies. I believe that green technologies are going to fuel the economic recovery of this nation.

FOLLOW-UP: I believe we do need the leadership and the training programs. But where are you going to get the teachers? And the violations in free trade! We've all testified before Congress and there's not much else we can do.

MCCAIN: All I can say to you is -- I will exercise every possible means to make sure that trade regulations are not violated by our foreign partners. I also believe we can provide the job training programs. We all know a job is more of a job in America -- we know it has to do with pride and family. I appreciate this exchange, but to do nothing contradicts what America is about. And I believe opening markets to our products is the way to go because we have the best, most innovator worker in the world. And I'm not afraid to compete. I have to tell you, I do believe in the overall benefits of trade.

2 Q) [Superintendant of schools] We have lots of displaced workers, but a lot of them don't have the degrees to access our programs. What can you do to help these workers get access?

MCCAIN: Our job training programs are stuck back in the 1950's. We need to fix that. And I want to come to your school and learn what I can do. I'd like to come and visit your school, see the programs you have and make sure displaced workers have access to your programs.

FOLLOW-UP: Thank you and you are invited.

MCCAIN: You're welcome and I will be in contact with you.

3 Q) [Doctor, candidate for board of education] I'd like to open up our education system to choice. How can the government promote school choice without becoming overly bloated?

MCCAIN: I agree with you and thank you for your work. My wife Cindy taught special education. And that is another type of education that needs attention. I believe in choice and competition. I believe in No Child Left Behind, but it was a start and it needs to be fixed. The city of New Orleans has many charter schools and the quality of education is on its way up. Cindy and I sent our children to a Catholic school. We're not Catholic, but we were thankful for the choice to send our kids to a good school.

4 Q) [Owns flag company] Thank you for your service. I'm completely committed to not voting for Barack Obama. I'm trying to get committed to voting for you. I don't like your votes against the Bush tax cuts, some of your environmental votes. And I see you've changed your positions and are right on those now. However, I'm not sure. We want to take you to the dance, we're just concerned about who you are going to go home with.

MCCAIN: I hate to tell you, but I have not changed positions. When we first had these tax cuts, we did not have any restraints in spending. I haven't changed my position -- I wanted tax cuts, but I wanted that coupled with restraints in spending. And on the environment, I believe we have a respectful disagreement. Teddy Roosevelt is my hero. We Republicans are fundamentally good environmentalists. But suppose I'm wrong and climate change doesn't exist -- and we just go ahead and create all these great green jobs. But suppose I'm right -- we risk hurting future generations.

But I have not changed positions.

FOLLOW-UP: I believe drilling is not hurting the environment.

MCCAIN: Let me chime in. I believe we do have to drill -- we do have to have to do offshore drilling.

FOLLOW-UP: If we don't drill, other countries are going to -- and already are. We should drill in ANWR. Everyone is going to be out of the job because they can't travel anywhere.

MCCAIN: If we build the 45 powerplants that I want to build, that's 700,000 jobs. I think it should still be up to the states if they want drilling off their coasts.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

5 Q) Most of us hold several patents because of the R and D tax credit. We need that, but it's under scrutiny. We need to have that tax credit to continue to be innovative. Very few metal stamping presses left. A lot of these investments we have made have been possible because of bonus deprecation. We need that to make certain things possible. We need incentives to keep businesses here.

MCCAIN: Thank you. The R and D tax credit for research and development is one of the big scams in America. We put it up for a vote every couple years so we can go a ring some money out of you every election year. We need to make that permanent.

A business tax -- the corporate tax is the second highest in the world. We need to lower it. I'm with you all the way.

FOLLOW-UP: We need to make sure our customers are investing here. A lot of the jobs that haven't been created in the United States is because we haven't been making enough investments here at home.

MCCAIN: I thank you for your passion and what you've done for America. These have been tough times for you. We need a plan. We need to not just go to Congress but to the people and share that plan. I'm going to reach out my hand to the Democrats and protect intellectual property. It's time we put our country first. I thank you for what you do.

6 Q) [transportation rep] Transportation and freight issues in the area. Would support that -- personally take a look at that?

MCCAIN: Yes I will personally take a look at that. We tried to spend several million to build a bridge to nowhere in Alaska. That's your money, your tax dollars. It's outrageous. How we spend your money and transportation dollars is not based on any real qualifications. I will stop this outrageous, corrupt process for how we spend your money. I'm proud of my record on the issue.

7 Q) When you are president, what is your commitment to Israel going to be? How do you feel about the unofficial talks between Israel and Syria?

MCCAIN: On your second question, it's a democratic, freely elected nation and they have the right to make the decision to speak with who they want to. On your first question, I am very worried about Iran and what they are doing and how that threatens Israel. Obama wants to sit down with the leader of Iran without any pre-conditions. I'm not going to do that until they stop killing our soldiers. I won't do it. I will do everything in my power to put sanctions on Iran to get them to stop. But if the Iranians obtain nuclear weapons, there is going to be a huge problem. We need to act together with all of our allies. The United States of America can never allow a second Holocaust.

FOLLOW-UP: As a Holocaust survivor, I thank you.

MCCAIN: No, thank you. I am very honored to be in your presence.

8 Q) I've always been a Democrat. I've lost all respect for Hillary and I'm not voting for Obama. I'm from a military family. my son is serving. I truly believe you are an American hero. I want to know where you stand, on immigration. I'm behind you on most things, but I don't know where you are on that issue. I see the people all around me losing their homes and at the same time I see immigrants working. And it's unfair and I think people should be held accountable.

MCCAIN: Thank you and your son for his service. I'd like to give my respect for Hillary Clinton. Twice now we have attempted comprehensive immigration reform. It is a federal responsibility to secure our borders. Americans want our borders secure. We can do that. I come from a border state. We also have to have a temporary worker program that includes biometric documentation so we can track them. I want to assure you that small business people don't know if people's documentation is real or not. We've got to address the issue of the 12 million illegal immigrants in this country. Two million should be deported immediately because they've committed crimes. The rest of them we have to deal with humanely. As soon as I'm president, we'll begin work on this issue.

FOLLOW-UP: We have allowed people who are not even citizens of this country to rally and protest. It just does not sit right with me. I see protesting all the time and these immigrants.

MCCAIN: I know -- I see them at my events all the time -- the anti-war protesters I mean.

FOLLOW-UP: I'm a true American coming from a military family. We can't event pledge of allegiance in our schools. Americans need to stand up for the true Americans.

MCCAIN: I apologize, the federal government has failed you.

Conclusion

Thank you for being here. Michigan is a battleground state and will be important in determining who is the next president of the United States. I know you are hurting and I will fix that. When I was a prisoner of war, I was given the opportunity to go home early. But I didn't accept. I put my country first. And though we may disagree from time to time, I promise you, I will always put my country first.

--

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Cammie L. Croft
Tracking/Media Monitoring Director
Progressive Accountability Office
cammie@progressiveaccountability.org
202-609-7679 (office)
206-999-3064 (cell)
--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~

You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Rick Hegdahl, VoteVets.org" <info@votevets.org>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 9/9/2015 7:38:38 AM
Subject: [Iran] We met members of Congress last night

As you know, VoteVets has been working hard to bring a number of veterans and military family members to Washington, D.C. to make our voices heard in support of a diplomacy-first approach with Iran.

Well, yesterday afternoon we arrived. And last night, we joined former Speaker of the House, Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi, and several other Members outside of Congress on our first stop of the trip.

Today, we're meeting with a number of Representatives we need to vote the right way in the House, and tomorrow we will head to the White House.

One of the members of our delegation, Gold Star Mom Karen Meredith, wrote a letter to VoteVets' supporters about her son, Ken Ballard, who was killed in Najaf, Iraq while fighting an Iranian-backed militia in 2004.

Read her note below and sign our petition urging Congress to support a diplomacy-first approach with Iran as the best way to prevent them from obtaining a nuclear weapon, and keep the U.S. out of another war.

VoteVets is the only progressive organization with the ability to organize and mobilize veterans and military family members on scale in support of the values we share.

We'll be in touch with more from the trip later this week. But we wanted to give you one last chance to sign the petition before our trip to the White House tomorrow.

All my best,

Rick Hegdahl
Iraq War Veteran
VoteVets

Add your name to Gold Star Mom Karen Meredith's petition supporting a diplomacy-first approach with Iran. She's in D.C. with VoteVets to deliver the message to Congress and the White House this week.

John -

My only child, Ken Ballard, joined the Army after graduating High School in 1995. As an Army granddaughter, Army daughter, Army sister, and Army mom, I couldn't be more proud of his decision.

He was stationed in Bosnia as an enlisted soldier with the 1st Armored Division, and later attended college on the Army Green to Gold scholarship before he was commissioned as a Lieutenant in the Army in 2002.

He deployed to Iraq in May of 2003, and 384 days later he was killed while fighting an Iranian-backed militia in Najaf. He had been scheduled to return home eight days earlier, but his tour was extended.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This week, I'll carry his memory with me to Washington, D.C. where I plan to encourage members of Congress to back a diplomacy-first approach to keep Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon. Not only is this deal the best way to ensure Iran isn't able to gets it's hands on the bomb, but Congress must act to move our military away from another war in the Middle East.

Add your name to the VoteVets petition supporting the Iran deal. Together, we'll deliver your name members of Congress later today, and to the White House on Thursday.

Ken and I chatted online or on the phone almost every day -- he was the kind of son everyone should have.

Since his death, I've been active in the Gold Star and Veteran's communities as an advocate for military families. I feel as if my trip to Washington, D.C this week is an extension of that work and support. And I thank you for adding your name to mine ahead of my visit.

All my best,

Karen Meredith
Gold Star Mom
VoteVets

PAID FOR BY VOTEVETS ACTION FUND

This email was sent to john.podesta@gmail.com. If that is not your preferred email address, click here . Click here if you'd like to unsubscribe. We try to send only the most important information and opportunities to participate via email. To sustain VoteVets with a contribution click here .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 9/18/2014 8:24:43 AM
Subject: MUST READ: CNBC: Empowering women is good for the economy

CNBC: Empowering women is good for the economy

By Shelly Porges

Last month, the Gujarat state government in India instituted a two-week celebration on the empowerment of women. The celebration quickly subsided when the police took actions more reminiscent of female oppression than empowerment, putting up posters with women dressed in jeans and shorts that read "Do not step out of the house in inappropriate clothing" and urging girls to refrain from using cell phones for no reason whatsoever.

Across the world's economies, women face all kinds of barriers to their empowerment. Two decades after Hillary Clinton's 1994 speech in Beijing where she so famously declared that "women's rights are human rights," the fight continues.

But empowering women is not just the right thing to do. It's the smart thing to do.

This week, powerhouse leaders including Hillary Clinton, House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, and Senator Kirsten Gillibrand will come together at a Center for American Progress roundtable to continue the dialogue on women's economic security and empowerment.

Women are an extremely powerful resource for global entrepreneurship and economic development — one that is not currently tapped to its potential. Research has shown that where women are economically empowered, communities and nations thrive.

That is why over the past few years, the conversation has developed into empowering women economically. In 2011, for example, the State Department held the first Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) Women and the Economy Summit, a breakthrough forum in San Francisco on the economic empowerment of women where we hosted 21 of the world's economies — including China, Russia, and Indonesia — that represented 55 percent of the world's GDP.

At the forum, Secretary Clinton persuaded the countries to agree to the "San Francisco Declaration" — an agenda to integrate female economic empowerment and entrepreneurship into their economic policies. It declared that the countries "will take concrete actions to realize the full potential of women, integrate them more fully into APEC economies, harness their talents, remove barriers that restrict women's full economic participation, and maximize their contributions towards economic growth."

This was a monumental breakthrough for many of the economies and for the United States, and is just one example of the enormous strides that have been made. But there is more to be done to continue to increase opportunities for women entrepreneurs and to raise their profile to the highest levels.

Each of us can also do our part by:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- Purchasing goods or services from women-owned businesses locally and around the world;
- Supporting organizations that assist women entrepreneurs; and
- Joining angel investment groups like Golden Seeds that invest in women-founded and led enterprises.

The United States recently celebrated Women's Equality Day — let's do more to make every day equal for women everywhere. As Hillary Clinton says, "it is the great unfinished business of the 21st century."

Commentary by Shelly Porges, the national finance co-chair for Ready for Hillary PAC. She was also the former senior advisor to the Global Entrepreneurship Program at the U.S. State Department, and launched the State Department's Global Women's Business Initiative. Follow her on Twitter @shellyporges.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 8/11/2014 6:43:43 AM
Subject: Correct The Record Monday August 11, 2014 Afternoon Roundup

Correct The Record Monday August 11, 2014 Afternoon Roundup:

[Ready for Hillary's Adam Parkhomenko and Kirby Hoag announced their engagement on Sunday morning.]

Tweets:

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: Bill and Hillary listened to Arkansans in all 75 counties about the details and struggles of education inequality: http://thecabin.net/interact/opinion/columns/2014-08-07/ernst-hillary-clinton-and-education#.U-UqZoBdUyC … [8/11/14, 9:01 a.m. EDT]

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: Don Ernst traces @HillaryClinton 's history as an advocate for education equality in this op-ed for @lcdonline : http://thecabin.net/interact/opinion/columns/2014-08-07/ernst-hillary-clinton-and-education#.U-UqZoBdUyC … [8/11/14, 8:30 a.m. EDT]

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: HRC at women's event: "no country in the 21st century can advance if half the population is left behind" #HRC365 http://1.usa.gov/LrT3Ei [8/10/14, 5:00 p.m. EDT]

Headlines:

The Week: "The political brilliance of Hillary out-hawking Obama"

"Pundits love to say that people vote their pocketbooks, not foreign policy. Well, what Clinton is doing here transcends foreign policy. It's about restoring America's swagger. And I think there's a real hunger for this."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Politico: "Bill Clinton to headline DCCC fundraiser"

"Bill Clinton will headline a fundraiser for the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee next month, signaling the beginning of fall political activity by the Clintons ahead of the midterms, according to an invitation obtained by POLITICO."

Washington Post blog: Achenblog: "Hillary Clinton takes on Barack Obama"

"This doesn't look like a mere kerfuffle to me: This is a planned political maneuver by the former Secretary of State and not-quite-announced presidential candidate."

Salon column: Joan Walsh: "Hillary's overlooked '16 worry: Will she write off the anti-interventionist left again?"

"I'd rather progressives start out realistic, elect Clinton, let her appoint two Supreme Court justices, do some good things on economic policy, and continue with at least 98 percent of Obama's foreign policy — while progressives work to change the House and Senate."

Huffington Post: "Former Deputy CIA Director Disagrees With Hillary Clinton On Syria"

"Former Deputy CIA Director Mike Morell said he disagreed with Clinton's suggestion — offered in a recent Atlantic Magazine interview — that the United States should have armed Syrian rebels far earlier than it did."

CNN: "With vocal support of Israel, Clinton rankles pro-Palestinian Americans"

"Hillary Clinton has been upfront about her support for Israel's recent military operations in Gaza. And her outspokenness is infuriating pro-Palestinian supporters in the United States."

Washington Post blog: The Fix: "What Hillary Clinton is doing by slamming President Obama's foreign policy"

"Clinton does very little by accident in the public space. This interview with Goldberg was no exception."

Mother Jones opinion: Kevin Drum: "Is There a Hillary Doctrine?"

"I don't know for sure."

Haaretz opinion: Peter Beinart: "Israel's new lawyer: Hillary Clinton"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

[Subtitle:] “She sees the Israeli-Palestinian conflict through Bibi’s eyes, which could be the reason she gets so much wrong.”

Washington Post blog: PostEverything: “Which GOP hopeful does Hillary Clinton sound like? The answer may surprise you…”

“In bringing up containment, it would seem that Clinton is trying to steer a middle ground between Obama’s reluctance to take more aggressive action and the neoconservative impulse to take aggressive action at the drop of a hat.”

Yahoo: “Bernie Sanders says he has a ‘damn good platform’ to run for president in 2016”

“One of Sanders’ most likely competitors, should he choose to seek the Democratic nomination, is Hillary Clinton. And while Sanders praised Clinton for a successful career, he was critical of the Democratic Party’s seeming coronation of the former secretary of state.”

Articles:

The Week: “The political brilliance of Hillary out-hawking Obama”

By Matt K. Lewis

August 11, 2014, 10:22 a.m. EDT

[Subtitle:] She sounds like a Democrat that even Republicans can love

Hillary Clinton's interview with Jeffrey Goldberg at The Atlantic — in which she dinged Obama for "the failure to help build up a credible fighting force" of moderates in Syria, leading to "a big vacuum, which the jihadists have now filled" — is leading to a lot of headlines about the former secretary of State sprinting from the failing foreign policy of her former boss.

This political knifing of Obama is surely not the friendliest thing the Clintons have ever done. And it's obviously hypocritical — Clinton was secretary of State for four years! Nonetheless, this rhetoric is music to the ears of of both GOP and Democratic hawks, friends of Israel, and many Americans of all political stripes watching in horror as ISIS commits crimes against humanity in Iraq.

It's called triangulation. It's a method perfected by Bill Clinton and Dick Morris. And it's brilliant.

This excerpt in particular struck me as the work of a master:

“At one point, I mentioned the slogan President Obama recently coined to describe his foreign-policy doctrine: ‘Don't do stupid shit’ (an expression often rendered as ‘Don't do stupid stuff’ in less-than-private encounters).

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“This is what Clinton said about Obama's slogan: ‘Great nations need organizing principles, and 'Don't do stupid stuff' is not an organizing principle.’ [The Atlantic]”

Ouch.

Pundits love to say that people vote their pocketbooks, not foreign policy. Well, what Clinton is doing here transcends foreign policy. It's about restoring America's swagger. And I think there's a real hunger for this.

So many people today have the sense that America is floundering at home, and being pushed around abroad by thugs and dictators and autocrats. It's not just about national security — this takes a toll on our national psyche. Americans don't want to get bogged down in a foreign land, and most are sick of military adventurism. But they sure as hell don't like malaise or looking like weaklings, either.

Obviously, Clinton's gambit isn't fool proof. There will be some on the left who will resent her out-hawking of Obama. Presumably, this makes Clinton more vulnerable to a primary challenge from the left. Still, this was very smart.

As a female candidate, Clinton probably still feels she has to demonstrate that she's tough. Elbowing Obama helps a lot in this regard. But perhaps most importantly, she might be depriving the GOP of its best arguments for winning over Obama-weary independent and Democratic voters in the 2016 general election.

What if moderates believe they can restore American greatness without taking a chance on someone who might have a "scary" social issues policy? If one believes America has moved leftward on social issues — and that ObamaCare isn't likely to be the defining issue of the 2016 presidential election — then Clinton may be co-opting the strongest argument the GOP has: A return to American toughness and exceptionalism.

As Dave Wiegel pointed out, a recent CNN poll shows Clinton doing better with white voters than any Democrat since 1976. And that was before the triangulation began in earnest. It's not hard to imagine Clinton absolutely cleaning up with non-evangelical whites who never really liked Obama — and who are sick of America being pushed around.

And Clinton's move doesn't just make sense if she's matched up against a non-interventionist like Rand Paul. Let's suppose she goes up against Marco Rubio — someone thought of as more hawkish. Rubio has the ability to inspire Americans to be a force for good in the world, and boasts a unique biography that taps into hope for the future and the American Dream. That isn't all that different than what Clinton is selling.

Ironically, she might even be able to cast him (or Ted Cruz) as some sort of inexperienced show horse — someone, who (she won't say it, but... like Barack Obama) spent just a few years in the Senate before running for president. She might bring up that 3 a.m. call again. And this time (ironically, because Obama was elected president) it might resonate. That message will appeal to middle-of-the-road Republican voters in the general election.

The GOP had better watch its back.

Politico: “Bill Clinton to headline DCCC fundraiser”

By Maggie Haberman

August 11, 2014, 12:12 p.m. EDT

Bill Clinton will headline a fundraiser for the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee next month, signaling the beginning of fall political activity by the Clintons ahead of the midterms, according to an invitation obtained by POLITICO.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The event will be hosted by Jim Chanos and Dennis Mehiel, along with House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi and DCCC Chairman Steve Israel.

It is scheduled for Sept. 4 in New York City, according to the invitation.

Both Bill and Hillary Clinton are in high demand by committees and candidates to help out in a difficult midterm cycle for Democrats.

Washington Post blog: Achenblog: "Hillary Clinton takes on Barack Obama"

By Joel Achenbach

August 11, 2014, 10:34 a.m. EDT

Here we are witnessing the world on fire again, in multiple locations. August is never as slow as it ought to be. I think of it as the time my tomatoes ripen, but in some parts of the world it's known as Fighting Season. The news from much of the world is so awful that you almost feel guilty watching baseball, much less plotting a trip to the beach.

Questions: Why is it so hard to get supplies to those poor people who have taken refuge on the mountain? What will happen if the militants blow up the Mosul Dam? What's the latest from the Green Zone in Baghdad?

Meanwhile, we see an eruption of dissent within the Democratic establishment: Hillary Clinton has distanced herself quite dramatically from President Obama. This doesn't look like a mere kerfuffle to me: This is a planned political maneuver by the former Secretary of State and not-quite-announced presidential candidate.

In her interview with the Atlantic, she states:

"The failure to help build up a credible fighting force of the people who were the originators of the protests against Assad—there were Islamists, there were secularists, there was everything in the middle—the failure to do that left a big vacuum, which the jihadists have now filled."

Just in case you thought that notion slipped out accidentally, she doubled down, jabbing Obama for his cautious approach to foreign policy:

"Great nations need organizing principles, and 'Don't do stupid stuff' is not an organizing principle."

Obama, however, gave an interview to Tom Friedman on Friday in which he explicitly derided the idea that there was a road not taken in Syria that could have squelched the gestation of ISIS:

"With 'respect to Syria,' said the president, the notion that arming the rebels would have made a difference has 'always been a fantasy. This idea that we could provide some light arms or even more sophisticated arms to what was essentially an opposition made up of former doctors, farmers, pharmacists and so forth, and that they were going to be able to battle not only a well-armed state but also a well-armed state backed by Russia, backed by Iran, a battle-hardened Hezbollah, that was never in the cards.'"

Counterfactual history is for arm-wavers: No one can know what might have been.

But think ahead to 2016: Clinton has taken a big step toward advocating a more hawkish and interventionist foreign policy. Would love to see her debate Rand Paul on that!

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As for Obama: His strategy, as articulated to Friedman, goes beyond “Don’t Do Stupid Stuff.” He believes that the U.S. should use its military might as political leverage. We shouldn’t simply answer the bell whenever someone needs us to serve as an emergency air force, Obama says. Think long-term, think endgame, think about the political fallout from the military actions. His broader message to the fighting factions abroad: We can’t solve your problems. Only you can solve your problems. And the only way you can solve your problems is to stop trying to kill everyone you disagree with.

But hate is toxic, and does not tend to mellow into something more palatable over time. Hate can’t be wished away.

I wrote something in late June that touched on Obama’s philosophy:

“Obama’s signature philosophy has been to turn crises into mere problems. It’s a ratcheting down of dilemmas, at least in theory. The catastrophe is reframed as a crisis and the crisis is reframed as a problem and the problem is reframed as a policy question.”

The world isn’t cooperating. The president now has to scale up in the opposite direction. Problems are now crises; crises are becoming catastrophes. No use pretending otherwise.

A smart and unified U.S. policy, with politics stopping at the water’s edge, is probably unattainable given our own domestic rancor and the cable TV shout-fest culture, and Clinton’s comments suggest that even the Democrats could become fractured. Everyone play the blame game!

So: This is a bad situation and could get even worse. If the U.S. policy is to await the efflorescence of harmony and power-sharing among rival factions in places like Iraq, we may want to rethink that. It’s hard to see how the U.S. can finesse this situation with limited air strikes here and there. Even reluctant warriors know that.

Salon column: Joan Walsh: “Hillary’s overlooked ’16 worry: Will she write off the anti-interventionist left again?”

By Joan Walsh

August 11, 2014, 11:56 a.m. EDT

[Subtitle:] For all the talk about her positioning around inequality, her foreign policy may alienate voters she needs in '16

Political mischief-makers are having a lot of fun with Jeffrey Goldberg’s Hillary Clinton interview, published Saturday night for maximum Monday morning OMG predictability. I admit: that makes me instinctively inclined to minimize the fissures between Clinton and President Obama that Goldberg widened into chasms to conform with his own political worldview.

Except I can’t entirely. Because Clinton and her team are smart enough to know that’s exactly what Goldberg would do. Which means that’s what they wanted him to do.

It’s important to note that there’s almost nothing new in the Goldberg interview. We already knew that Clinton is somewhat more hawkish than Obama. Specifically, we knew that as Secretary of State she backed arming “moderate Syrian rebels,” took a maximalist approach to Iran sanctions, and was sometimes uncomfortable leaning on Benjamin Netanyahu the way Obama wanted, because she’s already told us. Here’s the best take on the way Goldberg, and more important lots of pundits, have exaggerated those differences.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton also can't be blamed for the timing of its publication – the weekend Obama ordered U.S. began airstrikes in Iraq to set back ISIS, which enraged the right and the left for different reasons and satisfied practically no one. She gave the interview before the crisis escalated.

What's most disturbing about the conversation is not its timing in relation to Iraq, but to the Israel-Gaza debacle. The person most furious about Clinton's remarks should not be Obama, but Secretary of State John Kerry, who has been barbecued by Israeli officials and hawkish American critics for daring to pressure Benjamin Netanyahu to be a tiny bit more careful not to kill children while obliterating Hamas.

Clinton apparently felt it important to avoid every opportunity Goldberg gave her to criticize Netanyahu, occasionally sounding more hawkish than Goldberg himself, at a time when her successor was under very unfriendly political fire. Even assuming that everything she said about Palestinian leaders blowing chances at peace is true, I see no reason for such unyielding support for Netanyahu — not to mention so little compassion for Palestinian victims — except to court favor with hardline supporters of Israel. That's disturbing.

On the issue of arming "moderate" Syrian rebels, Goldberg's headline and introduction exaggerate the extent to which Clinton was criticizing Obama. She explains to him, as she does in her book, that she thought it was possible to identify and support a secular opposition, but admits "we'll never know" if she was right, and adds: "And I don't think we can claim to know."

Yes, she used the word "failure," which became Goldberg's headline. But her overall take on the differences between them is considerably more generous, and I'm inclined to read "failure" as "inability" – or as a generic failure of U.S. leaders, herself included, and their global allies, to figure out how to advance a moderate Syrian alternative.

But Clinton's take on the potential power of the "moderate" elements in the Free Syrian Army stands in clear opposition to Obama's, published for maximum contrast in an interview with Thomas Friedman the same weekend. Obama told Friedman that the idea of finding and backing a capable and moderate Syrian opposition has "always been a fantasy. This idea that we could provide some light arms or even more sophisticated arms to what was essentially an opposition made up of former doctors, farmers, pharmacists and so forth, and that they were going to be able to battle not only a well-armed state but also a well-armed state backed by Russia, backed by Iran, a battle-hardened Hezbollah, that was never in the cards."

That difference between Obama and Clinton led Steve Clemons to warn that the interview will "reawaken the substantial resistance to her as a reckless interventionist by some quarters." I would not call Clinton "reckless," but Clemons has a point.

As someone who supported Clinton in 2008 and who anticipates supporting her again in 2016, assuming she runs, I found the interview sobering. So far, my approach to 2016 is to say that Clinton may not be perfect, but she's the not-perfect candidate we know, very well. I would rather not see progressives set up someone who seems perfect (Sen. Elizabeth Warren, perhaps?) who will turn out to be not perfect — whether on Israel, Iraq or some crisis that hasn't emerged yet — as Sen. Obama did. Especially since I don't see anyone on the horizon with Obama's politics, charisma, or capacity to unite the party.

I'd rather progressives start out realistic, elect Clinton, let her appoint two Supreme Court justices, do some good things on economic policy, and continue with at least 98 percent of Obama's foreign policy — while progressives work to change the House and Senate.

I still mostly feel that way. I also hope anti-interventionist progressives won't be fooled by Sen. Rand "Stand with Israel" Paul. That said, I am not sure what we need is an American president who's even closer to Benjamin Netanyahu and who can't be moved to utter a word of genuine compassion for innocent Palestinian victims. Clinton may think she can write off the anti-interventionist left – again — and win the White House this time. But she may find out she's wrong this time too.

Huffington Post: "Former Deputy CIA Director Disagrees With Hillary Clinton On Syria"

By Sam Stein

August 11, 2014, 11:31 a.m. EDT

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

WASHINGTON -- On one of the first major foreign policy rifts between President Barack Obama and his former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, one top former administration official is siding with the president.

Former Deputy CIA Director Mike Morell said he disagreed with Clinton's suggestion — offered in a recent Atlantic Magazine interview — that the United States should have armed Syrian rebels far earlier than it did.

"There is no doubt that what ISIS [the Islamic State] was able to do in Syria was probably the key factor in strengthening them in terms of what they are doing in Iraq today," Morell told "CBS This Morning" on Monday. "It is difficult for me to see how arming the moderate rebels would have made that much difference in Syria. We would have had to have it on a very, very large scale that I think would have frightened our partners in the region because it would have put a very, very large footprint, U.S. footprint on the ground in the Middle East."

"So you support the decision made by the president at the time," host Charlie Rose asked.

"Yes," Morell replied.

A lifer in the intelligence community, Morell served as both deputy director and acting director at the CIA when the Obama administration's policy toward the Syrian rebels was put in place. His skepticism about arms transfers ended up prevailing, though contemporaneous reporting has shown it was one of the most contentious foreign policy debates inside the administration. (Eventually, the president did send light arms to the rebels).

The argument has been revived in recent weeks as the Islamic State has moved from waging an insurgency inside Syria toward wreaking havoc through western, mid and northern Iraq. And in a notable break from the president, Clinton stressed that more could have been done earlier to deal with the menace.

"The failure to help build up a credible fighting force of the people who were the originators of the protests against Assad — there were Islamists, there were secularists, there was everything in the middle — the failure to do that left a big vacuum, which the jihadists have now filled," she told The Atlantic.

Whether timed for political benefit or an honest assessment of her policy preference, Clinton's deviation from Obama on Syria underscored the rifts that continue to exist within the Democratic Party on matters of foreign affairs. Its more hawkish wing may have been humbled by the Iraq War, but recent events in the Middle East have encouraged its members to speak up a bit more.

The president has never been a part of that camp, as his "don't do stupid stuff" ethos is (more often than not) philosophically at odds with it. And in comments that appeared before Clinton's, he made the same case as Morell -- that more weapons in Syria never would have guaranteed better results.

"This idea that we could provide some light arms or even more sophisticated arms to what was essentially an opposition made up of former doctors, farmers, pharmacists and so forth, and that they were going to be able to battle not only a well-armed state but also a well-armed state backed by Russia, backed by Iran, a battle-hardened Hezbollah, that was never in the cards," the president told the New York Times' Tom Friedman.

CNN: "With vocal support of Israel, Clinton rankles pro-Palestinian Americans"

By Dan Merica

August 11th, 2014, 1:10 PM ET

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Washington (CNN) - Hillary Clinton has been upfront about her support for Israel's recent military operations in Gaza. And her outspokenness is infuriating pro-Palestinian supporters in the United States.

Since Israel kicked off Operation Protective Edge against Hamas in early July, Clinton has strongly and repeatedly said she backs Israel's right to defend itself. She stepped up that message in a recent interview with The Atlantic, in which she charged Hamas for "stage-managing" the conflict to engender sympathy.

"There have been a lot of political support for what Israel has done in Gaza, but to go so far to say that Palestinians are stage managing dead children is disgusting," said Rania Khalek, a Lebanese blogger for the pro-Palestine Electronic Intifada blog. "It is really disheartening and frustrating to see politicians in the United States blaming Palestinians for their own slaughter."

[TWEETS]

Israel has been criticized for hundreds of civilian deaths, particularly those at United Nations schools and local hospitals. The country's leaders contend, however, that Hamas is intentionally firing rockets from within civilian areas in order to engender support for its cause when innocent civilians are killed.

"What you see is largely what Hamas invites and permits Western journalists to report on from Gaza. It's the old PR problem that Israel has," Clinton said. "Yes, there are substantive, deep levels of antagonism or anti-Semitism towards Israel, because it's a powerful state, a really effective military. And Hamas paints itself as the defender of the rights of the Palestinians to have their own state. So the PR battle is one that is historically tilted against Israel."

The comment, particularly the charge of stage managing, did not sit well with pro-Palestine activists and writers.

The reaction to Clinton's interview with the Atlantic from pro-Palestine activists and writer was swift and loud, especially on Twitter:

[TWEETS]

In addition to their frustration, the biggest takeaway for pro-Palestinian writers from Clinton's interview was this: She is running for president.

"Stage-managing is an exaggeration," said Hussein Ibish, a senior fellow at The American Task Force on Palestine, a nonprofit think tank on the Israel-Palestine conflict.

Ibish said that there is plenty to criticize Hamas over, but Clinton's comments went further than she ever has because he feels she is vying to win the presidency in 2016.

"I don't think there is a lot of political cache is taking on pro-Israel sentiment when you are going for the highest office in the land," he said. "From a political point of view, I understand why someone is going to do that. What she is engaging in is politics, not foreign policy."

Ibish was not alone in this sentiment. A handful of pro-Palestine activists and writers said her comment further cemented their feeling that Clinton - the Democratic party's frontrunner for the presidency in 2016 - is vying for the job.

She was "posturing in preparation for a presidential run," Yousef Munayyer, executive director of the The Jerusalem Fund, said bluntly.

"The language that she used yesterday, the uncritical acceptance of the Israeli narrative in Gaza, means she is already thinking in a very politically calculated mode and is prepared to defend against critics on the right," he added.

CNN reached out to a Clinton spokesman to respond to these claim, but did not immediately receive a response.

Clinton has long been a vocal supporter of Israel, but that support has not always been certain.

When she ran for Senate in 2000, she had to win over a skeptical New York Jewish community by reassuring her commitment to Israel. Some, at the time, worried that the former first lady was too sympathetic to Palestinians. But she effectively won them over and enjoyed Jewish support in both of her Senate race and her failed bid at the presidency in 2008.

Although Clinton's cred with American Jews was somewhat questioned during her four years as President Barack Obama's secretary of state – largely because of her work with Iran – Clinton been vocally pro-Israel since kicking off her memoir tour in June.

During an NPR interview in July, Clinton strongly sided with Israel in the country's conflict with Hamas and the Gaza Strip.

Clinton said that she has "no doubt" that the current conflict "was a deliberate provocation" by Hamas to "engender more sympathy for their cause and also to put Israel on the back heal."

"I think the responsibility falls on Hamas," Clinton said.

Washington Post blog: The Fix: "What Hillary Clinton is doing by slamming President Obama's foreign policy"

By Chris Cillizza

August 11, 2014, 11:10 a.m. EDT

Former Secretary of State and all-but-announced presidential candidate Hillary Clinton offered her most public break yet from President Obama over the weekend, slamming his "don't do stupid [stuff]" foreign policy and suggesting he had not been aggressive enough in asserting America's role in the world.

"Great nations need organizing principles -- and 'Don't do stupid stuff' is not an organizing principle," Clinton told the Atlantic's Jeffrey Goldberg in a line that surely launched a thousand grimaces (or worse) in the White House.

Clinton, of course, knew what she was doing -- picking a prominent foreign policy writer to make a pointed critique of the current Administration's policies at the very moment when President Obama's ratings are at -- or damn close to -- their lowest ebb of his time in office. So, why did she do it -- and what does her willingness to so publicly break with the Obama Administration tell us about how she's positioning herself for 2016?

Here are three thoughts.

1) Clinton isn't worried about the Democratic primary. At all. Consider the 2008 race. By this time in that contest, then Illinois Sen. Barack Obama had already emerged as a potentially potent political force who was running to Clinton's ideological left largely on his opposition to the Iraq war. Clinton would never have made such a hawkish statement as this one back then, worried that it would embolden an already-rising Obama. (It turned out that Clinton's vote for the use of force resolution and her unwillingness to back away from it was enough for Obama to capitalize.) Why do it now then? Because she is supremely confident that there simply is no serious primary challenger out there who would be emboldened to take on the race because of her more hawkish (than Obama at least) views on foreign policy. Sure, people like Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders or former Montana Gov. Brian Schweitzer might run in 2016 against Clinton but she doesn't spend one second worrying about them. This positioning on foreign policy -- that America needs to be more aggressive in asserting its views on the world stage -- is entirely aimed at a general electorate.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

2) Clinton as ready on day one. Remember that "3 a.m. phone call" ad? The idea was that Barack Obama was untested on the world stage and sought to raise the question in voters' minds whether the freshman Illinois Senator was the person they wanted dealing with a complex world. Now, six years later, there are many people -- Democrats, Independents and, obviously, Republicans -- who believe that Obama wasn't prepared to take on the various challenges the changing world presented to him. Clinton's "organizing principle" argument is aimed directly at those doubts about Obama. Her argument is a simple one: I know the world. I know how complicated it is. I know all of these things because I have spent decades in government (and out of government) studying them, building relationships with foreign leaders, developing best practices. On day one, I step into the job with a broad idea of how I want America to be seen in the world -- and a plan to make it happen.

3) Clinton wants people to remember she never always agreed with Obama. One of the challenges Clinton will face in 2016 -- although not the biggest challenge -- is her association with Obama, particularly on foreign policy. (She was, after all, the top diplomat in the Obama Administration for his first term.) What Clinton does not want to do, however, is be forced to own every decision the President made -- especially those that she disagreed with. On Afghanistan, Clinton -- along with Secretary of Defense Robert Gates -- advocated for putting more troops in the country. On Libya , Clinton was a lead voice making the case for a military intervention to topple Muammar Gaddafi. And, in the interview with Goldberg, Clinton calls the U.S.'s decision to not actively involve itself in the early days of the uprising in Syria a "failure". There will be plenty on the foreign policy front that Clinton will have to own -- "pushing the reset button" with Russia, anyone? -- but she also wants to make very clear that had she been president, our foreign policy might have looked very different over the past six years.

Clinton does very little by accident in the public space. This interview with Goldberg was no exception.

Mother Jones opinion: Kevin Drum: “Is There a Hillary Doctrine?”

By Kevin Drum

August 11, 2014, 11:21 a.m. EDT

Jeffrey Goldberg's interview with Hillary Clinton is being taken as an effort by Hillary to distance herself from President Obama. Here's the most frequently quoted snippet:

HRC: Great nations need organizing principles, and “Don’t do stupid stuff” is not an organizing principle. It may be a necessary brake on the actions you might take in order to promote a vision.

....JG: What is your organizing principle, then?

HRC: Peace, progress, and prosperity. This worked for a very long time. Take prosperity. That’s a huge domestic challenge for us. If we don’t restore the American dream for Americans, then you can forget about any kind of continuing leadership in the world. Americans deserve to feel secure in their own lives, in their own middle-class aspirations, before you go to them and say, “We’re going to have to enforce navigable sea lanes in the South China Sea.”

I've seen the first part of this excerpt several times, and each time I've wondered, "So what's your organizing principle." When I finally got around to reading the interview, I discovered that this was Goldberg's very next question. And guess what? Hillary doesn't have one.

She's basically hauling out an old chestnut: We need to be strong at home if we want to be strong overseas. And that's fine as far as it goes. But it's not an organizing principle for foreign policy. It's not even close. At best, it's a precursor to an organizing principle, and at worst it's just a plain and simple evasion.

It so happens that I think "don't do stupid stuff" is a pretty good approach to foreign policy at the moment. It's underrated in most of life, in fact, while "doctrines" are mostly straitjackets that force you to fight the last war over and over and over. The fact that Hillary Clinton (a) brushes this off and (b) declines to say what her foreign policy would be based on—well, it frankly scares me. My read of all this is that Hillary is itching to outline a much more aggressive foreign policy but doesn't think she can quite get away with it yet. She figures she needs to distance herself from Obama slowly, and she needs to wait for the American public to give her an opportunity. My guess is that any crisis will do that happens to pop up in 2015.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I don't have any problems with Hillary's domestic policy. I've never believed that she "understood" the Republican party better than Obama and therefore would have gotten more done if she'd won in 2008, but I don't think she would have gotten any less done either. It's close to a wash. But in foreign policy, I continually find myself wondering just where she stands. I suspect that she still chafes at being forced to repudiate her vote for the Iraq war—and largely losing to Obama because of it. I wouldn't be surprised if she still believes that vote was the right thing to do, nor would I be surprised if her foreign policy turned out to be considerably more interventionist than either Bill's or Obama's.

But I don't know for sure. And I probably never will unless she gets elected in 2016 and we get to find out.

Haaretz opinion: Peter Beinart: "Israel's new lawyer: Hillary Clinton"

By Peter Beinart, The Atlantic

August 11, 2014, 5:24 p.m.

[Subtitle:] She sees the Israeli-Palestinian conflict through Bibi's eyes, which could be the reason she gets so much wrong.

Who's the Israeli government's best spokesperson? Ron Dermer? Michael Oren? Bibi himself? Nope. It's Hillary Clinton. In her interview on Sunday with Jeffrey Goldberg, Clinton offered the most articulate, sophisticated, passionate defense of Netanyahu's conduct I've heard from a government official on either side of the Atlantic. Unfortunately, important chunks of it aren't true.

Let's take her claims in turn.

In his first term, Netanyahu moved towards a Palestinian state

Clinton began her defense of Bibi by noting that in his first term, in the late 1990s, he had "give[n] up territory" and "moved in that direction [towards a Palestinian state], as hard as it was."

That's extremely generous. It's true that in 1997, Bibi withdrew Israeli troops from most of the West Bank city of Hebron (though they can reenter any time Israel wants) and the following year signed the Wye River Accords, under which Israel was supposed to hand over 13 percent of the West Bank to the Palestinian Authority (though Bibi's government fell before it could do so).

What Clinton leaves out is that Bibi only agreed to these withdrawals to forestall the far larger ones envisioned under the Oslo Accords he inherited from Yitzhak Rabin and Shimon Peres. In 1993, when Oslo was signed, Bibi publicly compared it to Neville Chamberlain's surrender of the Sudetenland to Adolf Hitler.

He accepted Oslo in the 1996 election campaign only because he couldn't repudiate a process endorsed by the Israeli center and championed by the United States. So Bibi sabotaged Oslo by accelerating settlement growth and minimizing the amount of land Israel relinquished. "Before I took office," he later boasted, "the conception was to give away everything except for two percent [of West Bank] while I turned everything around and gave just two percent to [full control] of the Palestinian Authority." Or as he told settlers after leaving office, "I stopped the Oslo Accords."

The Clinton administration officials who dealt with Bibi in his first term understood this all too well. "Neither President Clinton nor Secretary

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

[Madeleine] Albright believed that Bibi had any real interest in pursuing peace," writes Dennis Ross in The Missing Peace. Ross' deputy, Aaron Miller, adds in his memoir that, "all of us saw Bibi as a kind of speed bump that would have to be negotiated along the way until a new Israeli prime minister came along who was more serious about peace."

That's a far cry from what Hillary told Goldberg. Then again, Ross and Miller aren't running for president.

Bibi agreed to a settlement freeze but Abbas wouldn't negotiate

Fast-forwarding to the Obama years, Clinton claims that, "I got Netanyahu to agree to the unprecedented settlement freeze… It took me nine months to get Abbas into the negotiations even after we delivered on the settlement freeze."

What's striking, again, is what Clinton leaves out. The settlement freeze was indeed, unprecedented. Unfortunately, it didn't actually freeze settlement growth. It's not just that, as Clinton admits, the "freeze" exempted East Jerusalem. Even more importantly, it exempted buildings on which construction had all ready begun. This loophole proved crucial because, as the Israeli press reported at the time, settlers spent the months preceding the "freeze" feverishly breaking ground on new construction, on which they continued to build during the ten month "freeze," before breaking new ground once it expired. As a result, according to Peace Now, there was more new settlement construction in 2010 - the year of the freeze - than in 2008. As Obama administration envoy George Mitchell admitted to Palestinian negotiator Saab Erekat, the Obama administration had wanted a freeze that truly stopped settlement growth but "we failed."

Clinton's claim that Abbas refused to negotiate until the last minute is disingenuous too. In fact, Israeli and Palestinian negotiators met repeatedly during the "freeze." In January 2010, just over a month after it began, veteran Israeli columnist Ben Caspit reported that, "In the past weeks, Israeli representatives, including Netanyahu, have repeatedly rejected official documents that their Palestinian counterparts have tried to submit to them, with details of the Palestinian positions on all the core issues. The Israeli representatives are completely unwilling to discuss, read or touch these documents, not to speak of submitting an equivalent Israeli document with the Israeli positions."

While reporting my book, The Crisis of Zionism, I heard four different Obama officials confirm this account. During the settlement "freeze," the Palestinians submitted to Netanyahu and his aides the same positions they had submitted to Netanyahu's predecessor, Ehud Olmert. These included a Palestinian state on the 1967 lines with a 1.9 percent land swap for territory inside Israel proper, Israeli control of all the Jewish neighborhoods of East Jerusalem, international troops in the Jordan Valley and the return of 150,000 Palestinian refugees over ten years. The Netanyahu government, by contrast, steadfastly refused to discuss the parameters of a Palestinian state.

In her interview with Goldberg, Clinton never mentions that.

Netanyahu's views on Palestinian statehood resembled Ehud Barak's.

Given the evidence that during her time as secretary of state, Bibi refused to discuss territory, Clinton's claim that "I saw Netanyahu move from being against the two-state solution to…considering all kinds of Barak-like options" is bizarre. Whatever you think of Ehud Barak's offer at Camp David in July 2000, it was a detailed offer. Netanyahu, by contrast, refused put forward a territorial proposal not merely during Clinton's term, but during John Kerry's far more aggressive effort to broker a deal. During the Kerry negotiations, according to Haaretz's Barak Ravid, Netanyahu "flatly refused to present a map or even to discuss the subject theoretically…throughout the nine months of the talks Netanyahu did not give the slightest hint about the scale of the territorial concessions he would be willing to make."

It's too bad Goldberg didn't press Clinton on what kind of "Barak-like options" she heard Netanyahu propose, because the best reporting we have suggests he offered no territorial "options" at all.

Netanyahu is right to demand indefinite control of the West Bank

Most remarkable of all, Clinton tells Goldberg that, "If I were the prime minister of Israel, you're damn right I would expect to have security [control over the West Bank]." What makes this statement so remarkable is that earlier in the interview, Hillary praised the Clinton parameters outlined by her husband in December 2000. Those parameters permit Israeli troops to remain in the Jordan Valley, along the West Bank's border with Jordan, for three years. Later in the interview, Clinton claims that she convinced Abbas to agree to allow Israeli troops to remain for "six, seven, eight years" and that she "got Netanyahu to go from forever to 2025" as a date for their withdrawal. Even this, from a Palestinian perspective, represents painful backsliding from the position outlined by Hillary's husband. But as Hillary must know, Bibi three weeks ago said that in light of regional developments, "there cannot be a situation, under any agreement, in which we relinquish security control of the territory west of the River Jordan."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Which is to say that, as of now, Bibi's position really does seem to be "forever." Yet rather than challenge that stance, Clinton endorses it.

Why does Clinton again and again endorse Netanyahu's view of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict even when it contradicts long-standing American positions? Because she's so willing to see the world through his eyes. Notice how she begins her statement about security control of the West Bank: "If I were the prime minister of Israel." There's nothing wrong with that. U.S. officials should understand, and empathize with, Israeli leaders, even right-wing ones. But what's missing from Clinton's interview is any willingness to do the same for Palestinians. If it's so easy to understand why some Israelis might want perpetual military control of the West Bank, why can't Clinton understand why Palestinians - after living for almost fifty years under a foreign army - might not want it to indefinitely patrol their supposedly independent state.

One of the hallmarks of Barack Obama's statements about Israel and Palestine, going back to his 2008 presidential campaign, has been his insistence on giving voice to the fears and aspirations of both sides. Writing about his trip to Israel in The Audacity of Hope, Obama wrote that, "I talked to Jews who'd lost parents in the Holocaust and brothers in suicide bombings; I heard Palestinians talk of the indignities of checkpoints and reminisce about the land they had lost." In Jerusalem last March, he spoke movingly, and in detail about the Jewish story, but also asked Israelis to "put yourself in their [the Palestinians] shoes. Look at the world through their eyes." In her interview with Goldberg, that's exactly what Clinton does not do. Her interpretations of recent Israeli-Palestinian history reflect from a deep imbalance: a willingness to see reality through Israeli eyes and an almost total refusal to do the same for Palestinians.

"For far too long," wrote Aaron Miller in 2005, "many American officials involved in Arab-Israeli peacemaking, myself included, have acted as Israel's attorney, catering and coordinating with the Israelis at the expense of successful peace negotiations." From the beginning, Barack Obama has tried to avoid that. Although he hasn't brokered Israeli-Palestinian peace, he has tried to make good on his campaign promise to "hold up a mirror" to both sides. In Hillary Clinton, by contrast, at least judging from her interview on Sunay, Israel has yet another lawyer. And a very good one at that.

Washington Post blog: PostEverything: "Which GOP hopeful does Hillary Clinton sound like? The answer may surprise you…"

By Daniel W. Drezner

August 11, 2014, 8:49 a.m. EDT

So, a few high-ranking Democrats gave some foreign policy interviews over the weekend.

Barack Obama's muse du jour was the New York Times' Thomas Friedman. You can go read their interview. I, for one, am delighted with it, because it pretty much confirms the point I made last month about Obama's Zen Master approach to foreign policy. As a general rule, Obama is reluctant for the United States to take the lead in other countries' civil strife, unless he thinks the balance of domestic politics on the ground favors the side he wants to back. It certainly explains why he didn't intervene in Syria but why he's intervening in Iraq right now.

The thing about Obama is that on foreign policy, he's pretty predictable at this point, and also spectacularly bad at, well, you know, the actual politics of the whole thing. So his chat with Friedman is not the most interesting interview by a high-ranking Democrat to be published this weekend (though it is always fun to see what thing Obama says that Breitbart will distort the most).

No, that honor goes to Hillary Clinton's chat with The Atlantic's Jeffrey Goldberg.

There's a lot to parse through here, and much of it has already been parsed, but there was one part of the interview that did jump out at me, in talking about the need for an ordering principle for U.S. foreign policy in the Middle East:

"I think part of the challenge is that our government too often has a tendency to swing between these extremes. The pendulum swings back and then the pendulum swings the other way. What I'm arguing for is to take a hard look at what tools we have. Are they sufficient for the complex situations we're going to face, or not? And what can we do to have better tools? I do think that is an important debate.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"One of the reasons why I worry about what's happening in the Middle East right now is because of the breakout capacity of jihadist groups that can affect Europe, can affect the United States. Jihadist groups are governing territory. They will never stay there, though. They are driven to expand. Their raison d'être is to be against the West, against the Crusaders, against the fill-in-the-blank—and we all fit into one of these categories. How do we try to contain that? I'm thinking a lot about containment, deterrence, and defeat. You know, we did a good job in containing the Soviet Union, but we made a lot of mistakes, we supported really nasty guys, we did some things that we are not particularly proud of, from Latin America to Southeast Asia, but we did have a kind of overarching framework about what we were trying to do that did lead to the defeat of the Soviet Union and the collapse of Communism. That was our objective. We achieved it.…

"[M]ost Americans think of engagement and go immediately to military engagement. That's why I use the phrase 'smart power.' I did it deliberately because I thought we had to have another way of talking about American engagement, other than unilateralism and the so-called boots on the ground. (emphasis added)"

In bringing up containment, it would seem that Clinton is trying to steer a middle ground between Obama's reluctance to take more aggressive action and the neoconservative impulse to take aggressive action at the drop of a hat. But what's fascinating about the reference to containment is that it reminded me of a GOP contender who, last year, made a similar analogy in a speech at the Heritage Foundation. Can you guess who said this?

"What the United States needs now is a policy that finds a middle path. A policy that is not rash or reckless. A foreign policy that is reluctant, restrained by Constitutional checks and balances but does not appease. A foreign policy that recognizes the danger of radical Islam but also the inherent weaknesses of radical Islam. A foreign policy that recognizes the danger of bombing countries on what they might someday do. A foreign policy that requires, as Kennan put it, 'a long term, patient but firm and vigilant containment of . . . expansive tendencies.' A policy that understands the 'distinction between vital and peripheral interests.'….

"Like communism, radical Islam is an ideology with worldwide reach. Containing radical Islam requires a worldwide strategy like containment. It requires counterforce at a series of constantly shifting worldwide points. But counterforce does not necessarily mean large-scale land wars with hundreds of thousands of troops nor does it always mean a military action at all."

If you said "Rand Paul," you're right — and likely very confused. After all, there's been a lot of chatter the past few months about what neoconservatives would do in a Clinton vs. Paul race, as they think the former is more hawkish than the latter. Indeed, as Time's Michael Scherer pointed out last Friday, "[Rand Paul] is also running for President—albeit without an official campaign—on the idea that he can best distinguish himself from Clinton on key matters of foreign policy that are likely to resonate with independent and young voters." But the above quotes don't sound very different at all.

How to explain this? Well, there are two possibilities. The first is that, despite all the hyperbole about political polarization, the two-party system is once again producing a Kang vs. Kodos choice:

[SIMPSONS CLIP]

The other possibility is that we're in the very preliminary stages of the 2016 presidential election, and statements like these are sufficiently anodyne and flexible enough to allow either candidate to reference containment without feeling locked into any particular foreign policy position. And that embracing concepts like "smart power" and "neither isolationism nor invasion" will resonate pretty well with foreign policy cognoscenti.

For me, what all of this means is that whatever any potential 2016 hopeful says about foreign policy right now isn't worth a bucket of warm spit. We're at the posturing phase of a presidential campaign that's already started way too damn early. Let's wait at least a year and see if these candidates actually add some flesh to these foreign policy bare bones.

Am I missing anything?

Yahoo: "Bernie Sanders says he has a 'damn good platform' to run for president in 2016"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By Jeff Zeleny, Richard Coolidge and Jordyn Phelps

August 11, 2014

Sen. Bernie Sanders isn't afraid to be called a socialist. In fact, the Vermont Independent proudly labels himself a Democratic socialist.

"Do you hear me cringing? Do you hear me running under the table?" Sanders said rhetorically when asked if Democratic socialist is an accurate description.

Sanders is so delighted with his brand of politics that he said in an interview with "The Fine Print" that it would be a "damn good platform" on which to run for president.

"If the American people understand what goes on in countries like Denmark, Sweden, Norway, and other countries, they will say, 'Whoa, I didn't know that!'" Sanders said, pointing out that health care is considered a right, "R-I-G-H-T," among even the most conservative politicians in Denmark.

Sanders described his credo as a fight to protect America's working class from what he sees as the threat of an approaching "oligarchic form of society."

"You have today in America more income and wealth inequality than any time in this country since 1928 and more than any major country in the world," Sanders said. "So, you got the top one percent owning 38 percent of the wealth in America. Do you know what the bottom 60 percent own? 2.3 percent."

"You know what that is?" he said. "That's called oligarchy."

Though Sanders isn't making any secret of his possible 2016 presidential bid, he said he's still determining whether he could generate a sufficient level of grassroots support on which to build a campaign.

"Look, it's easy for me to give a good speech, and I give good speeches," he said. "It is harder to put together a grassroots organization of hundreds of thousands of millions of people prepared to work hard and take on the enormous amounts of money that will be thrown against us."

One of Sanders' most likely competitors, should he choose to seek the Democratic nomination, is Hillary Clinton. And while Sanders praised Clinton for a successful career, he was critical of the Democratic Party's seeming coronation of the former secretary of state.

"She has accomplished a lot of very positive things in her career, but I'm not quite sure that the political process is one in which we anoint people," Sanders said.

Though he stopped short of criticizing Clinton directly, he said she is not a sufficient champion of his message for the middle class.

"What I'm telling you is that this country has more serious problems today than any time since the Great Depression," he said. "Those are the real issues that we've got to start dealing with."

To hear more specifics about Sanders' potential presidential platform, check out this episode of "The Fine Print."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "German Marshall Fund" <press@gmfus.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 10/2/2015 6:14:07 AM
Subject: Transatlantic Take: T wo Takes on the Legacy of '89

If you have problems viewing this email, you can view it as a web page. To view the mobile-friendly web page click here.

G | M | F The German Marshall Fund of the United States
STRENGTHENING TRANSATLANTIC COOPERATION

Transatlantic Take

Two Takes on the Legacy of '89

Ivan Krastev and Stephen F. Szabo — October 2, 2015

The Ambiguous Legacy of 1989

Ivan Krastev

"History is irony on the move," European philosopher Emil Cioran wrote some half a century ago. And he has a point. Twenty-five years ago, East Europeans destroyed the Berlin Wall and opened their arms to the world beyond their borders. Today, with the similar enthusiasm, the same East Europeans are rebuilding the walls destroyed, then hoping to find protection from the misery and the dangers of the bigger world. And Russian President Vladimir Putin is not alone in blaming democracy and capitalism's creative destruction for the current world disorder. Never before have the legacies of 1989 been more contested or looked more ambiguous...

FULL ARTICLE

Partners in Leadership? Germany and the United States 25 Years After Unification

Stephen F. Szabo

WASHINGTON—President George HW Bush called for Germany to be a Partner in Leadership with the United States in May 1989, six months before the fall of the Berlin Wall. He did this in anticipation of the changes that were building, sensing that with the end of the Cold War, Germany would be the central power in Europe. Chancellor Helmut Kohl was reluctant to take on this role, and this reluctance has characterized Germany ever since. Today, the United States looks to Germany to provide leadership to a Europe adrift. Germany stands as one of the few successful countries in Europe with a stable leadership while France and Britain seem shadows of the countries they were in 1990, with the European Union unable to fill the gap...

FULL ARTICLE

Ivan Krastev is a Bosch Public Policy fellow at the Transatlantic Academy and the chairman of the Centre for Liberal Strategies in Sofia, Bulgaria.

Stephen F. Szabo is the Executive Director of the Transatlantic Academy, an initiative of the German Marshall Fund of the United States in Washington, DC. Follow him at @stephenfszabo .

The views expressed in GMF publications and commentary are the views of the author alone.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Strengthening Transatlantic Cooperation

Our Organization
About GMF
Career Opportunities
Press Room

Our Work
Leadership
Policy
Civil Society
Research & Analysis
Transatlantic Academy

Our Events
Major Conferences & Forums
Recent & Upcoming Events

Our Experts
Find an Expert

Manage preferences | Forward email | Unsubscribe | Subscribe

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jake Sullivan" <jake.sullivan@gmail.com>
To: "Stuart Eizenstat" <seizenstat@gmail.com>
Date: 10/9/2015 4:45:05 AM
Subject: Re: Zarif/Iran

Thanks Stu. Sounds like a fascinating discussion.

On Oct 8, 2015, at 12:06 AM, Stuart Eizenstat <seizenstat@gmail.com > wrote:

From: Eizenstat, Stuart [mailto:seizenstat@cov.com]
Sent: Wednesday, October 07, 2015 3:21 PM
To: 'seizenstat@gmail.com '
Cc: Holte, Laurina
Subject: TPP and Iran

Dear Jake,

I attended a meeting on Monday, October 5, in New York with Iranian Foreign Minister Mohammad Zarif, hosted by the Atlantic Council (whose Iran Task Force I chair) and the New America Foundation (with Bill Leurs and Tom Pickering). This is the third meeting I have had with Zarif.

He made the following points in a 20 minute speech and answers to questions:

1. The nuclear agreement was a victory for diplomacy and dialogue. What was a success for Iran is not a defeat for the U.S. This is not a zero sum game. The agreement is the best insurance against an Iranian breakout. The "fabricated nuclear material cannot be used for making a bomb." We are willing to take "your nuclear fuel, so we will not need to make any of our own."

2. Implementation of the agreement requires transparency and a commitment to abide by its terms, and Iran will do so.

3. The US seems intent in terms of sanctions relief to do the "least it can do". He is "concerned with the tough interpretation of sanctions relief by OFAC. Moreover, the New York banking authorities are complicating things even more with financial sanctions, making it difficult for European companies to get the funds to invest in Iran.
This sends negative signals Treasury and DOJ should give a reasonable interpretation to the lifting of sanctions. Otherwise, it will make it difficult for even European companies to do business in Iran. Here again, the U.S. seems to view sanctions relief as a zero sum game, in which whatever helps Iran is bad for the U.S. It is in everyone's interest if Iran's economy recovers, and gets out of a "siege mentality".

4. Iran does not expect American companies to do business with Iran because of continuing U.S. sanctions. But under existing rules, many U.S. companies can do business with Iran. For example, Iran needs 400 new aircraft, and can purchase them from either Boeing or Airbus. There is no legal bar to Boeing selling its aircraft to Iran, with an OFAC license. Likewise, humanitarian goods can be sold to Iran from the U.S. now, including pharmaceuticals and medical devices made by GE. Iran can be a "huge market" for U.S. goods and services.

5. Even if the lifting of sanctions will not help U.S. companies that much, compared to European companies, eventually this will happen.

6. Just as politics in the U.S. are difficult, they are also "difficult" in Iran .A member of the Iranian parliament said that Zarif's hands should be cut-off for shaking hands with President Obama at the United Nations this week. It is wrong to think that all decisions in Iran are made by one man.

7. Iran and the U.S. have negative views of each other. The U.S. sees Iran as determined to get a nuclear weapon, while Iran sees the U.S. as trying do dominate the Middle East.

8. He spent a good deal of time discussing Saudi Arabia. He said since his first days in office he has sought a dialogue, but Iranian overtures have been rebuffed. He was told by the Saudis, "leave the Arabs to ourselves". He recounted that he left the World Economic Forum immediately and made the long trip to Saudi Arabia for the funeral of King Abdullah. But he received barely a handshake for his efforts. Saudi Arabia also sees relations with Iran as a zero sum game. The Saudis think ISIS can help them against Iran. Iran has sent a new Ambassador to Saudi Arabia who they trust, and he hopes this will help the relationship.

9. I asked him about the use of the unfrozen assets, and I said that people here will be looking to see if Iran spends its new-found funds on its people and investments, of if substantial amounts go to Hezbollah. He gave a tough response. "The money is our money and it was illegally blocked by the U.S., and what we do with our money is purely our business." He further said, "You spend 10 times more in the Middle East than we do, and what has it gotten you?" He contended Iran would only get $40 billion and we will spend it for our people.

10. If we give funds to Hezbollah, they are a positive force in Lebanon, and have kept ISIS out of Lebanon.

11. Regarding Syria, he said the presence if Russian military equipment and personnel was a good thing for Syria. He contented that "four months ago ISIS was close to Damascus, and this necessitated Russian help to beat them back. Iran "does not intend to send troops to Syria, but we will play a greater role in training and supporting the Syrian Army. He asked rhetorically, "what good has the U.S. and its allies done in combating ISIS?" He said flatly, "We are cooperating with Russia in Syria." The U.S., he asserted, has a dilemma in Syria. If you stick with the rebels, your support is not likely to be effective; if you support Assad you are changing your policy. He asserted that

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

12. Regarding the 1994 AMIA bombing and the recent controversy over the death of the prosecutor Nisman, shortly before he was to deliver a report to the Argentine Congress, the person who alleged Iran blew up AMIA has been proven a fraud and liar. He did saw shortly after Nisman's death that it was a suicide, but he was simply following the statement made by Argentina's democratically elected leader. "It is a mistake to allege Iran blew up AMIA." The Saudis are behind all of this with their incorrect allegations.

13. Robin Wright of the Post, asked him about the release of the prisoners, including Jason, their journalist. Zarif said he knows Jason and would like to see him released, but he is an Iranian citizen, and an Iranian court found him guilty of passing along intelligence to a foreign power He is subject to Iranian law. "It will be hard to justify their release to our public." However, he added, "I am ready for a negotiation, but it will have to involve the release of Iranian prisoners in the U.S." The US "says we should be flexible", but you are not flexible with our prisoners". But he would like to see them back in the U.S. and their prisoners back in Iran.

Best wishes,

Stu Eizenstat

P.S. On the unrelated issue of TPP, I am disappointed with the position Hillary took. Of course, I am fully aware of the politics of the issue, but she could have stressed the geo-political advantage of passing it, in terms of combating Chinese influence in Asia. Also, the environmental groups seem positive. She might have dealt with the deficiencies in the trade area by bilateral side agreements, as with NAFTA. Her position will complicate an already difficult fight to pass TPP; its defeat would be a gift to China.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "t r u t h o u t" <messenger@truthout.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 10/5/2014 8:17:17 AM
Subject: Housing Rights Group Says HUD Program Helps Wall Street, Hurts Homeowners

View Recent Newsletters

Tell a friend about Truthout!

Sunday, 5 October 2014

truthout

Donate Today!

Truthout is a 501(c)3 nonprofit organization; donations are tax deductible.

Housing Rights Group Says HUD Program Helps Wall Street, Hurts Homeowners

Rebecca Burns, Truthout: Housing rights organizations say a new federal housing program has deepened the pain of homeowners and tenants by handing their fates over to hedge funds and investment groups that have no interest in keeping residents in their homes.

Read the Article

Noam Chomsky: Resisting Empire for More Than Four Decades

Marcus Raskin, Haymarket Books: For the casual observer, Chomsky seems to hold that on the one hand, there is science and analysis, and on the other hand, there are those desired values that we hold dear and preach about through different social means, writes Marcus Raskin in the forward to Chomsky's book, Masters of Mankind.

Read the Excerpt

Since Hiroshima: Australia's Active Involvement in the Use and Abuse of Nuclear Energy

Lindsay Fitzclarence, Truthout: Australia has been involved in nuclear power politics since the 1940s as both a weapons test site and a source of base fuel uranium.

Read the Article

Feeling the Touch of the Goad: A Sense of Urgency as a Spur to Climate Action

Ven. Bhikkhu Bodhi, Truthout: The texts of early Buddhism provide us with a psychological model of how the sense of urgency arises and how it can be channeled into effective action. This sense is necessary to confront climate change.

Read the Article

Monsanto Announces "Global Center" for Developing GMO Corn

Anastasia Pantsios, EcoWatch: Monsanto

BuzzFlash

The BuzzFlash commentary for Truthout will return soon.

The Most Ambitious Environmental Lawsuit Ever

Read the Article at The New York Times

Pacific Northwest Tribes Fight to Save Threatened Salmon

Read the Article at Al Jazeera America

Mass Graves With Charred Victims Found in Southern Mexico

Read the Article at Reuters

As Supreme Court Term Begins, Prospect of a Gay-Marriage Ruling Looms

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

announced this week that it is opening a new facility in Mexico to research and develop new hybrid types of corn resistant to disease and climate conditions - but the reception hasn't been particularly warm.

Read the Article

Truthout Interviews Featuring James Kilgore on Reversing Mass Incarceration in the US

Ted Asregadoo, Truthout: Ted Asregadoo talks to author and research scholar at the University of Illinois' Center for African Studies James Kilgore about what the movement against mass incarceration can learn from those combatting climate change.

Watch the Video

Military Firms Likely to Benefit From Airstrikes in Iraq, Syria

W.J. Hennigan, Los Angeles Times: With US and allied aircraft now bombing Islamic State and Al Qaeda positions in Iraq and Syria, many analysts foresee a boost to bottom lines for munitions manufacturers, weapons producers and other military contractors.

Read the Article

Student Protests Are a Bigger Deal Than You Think

Jeff Bryant, Campaign For America's Future: Students who are alarmed to know they're not allowed to learn about civil dissent and protest have quite rationally chosen to protest.

Read the Article

Ellsberg Sees Vietnam-Like Risks in ISIS War

Barbara Koeppel, Consortium News: Daniel Ellsberg, the former Defense Department official who leaked the Pentagon Papers exposing the Vietnam War lies, is alarmed at the many parallels between Vietnam and President Obama's new military campaign against ISIS in Iraq and Syria.

Read the Article

The Scourge of Siphon-Up Economics

Marjorie E. Wood, OtherWords: Addressing inequality head-on will put our nation's wealth back where it belongs - with all of us.

Read the Article

This week in SpeakOut:

Paul Thomas deconstructs the cruel practices of Southern Christianity; Kayly Ober questions the absence of risk analysis from government response to climate change; Michaela Wade discusses the growing and extreme divide between rich and poor in San Francisco and simultaneous loss of the city's famous whimsical character and charm; Reprieve calls for transparency in the Guantanamo force feeding trial; Nozomi Hayase reviews Julian Assange's new book, When Google Met WikiLeaks; Melissa Fisher and John Lawrence report on potential for worker co-ops in New York City; Darius Shatahmasebi analyzes New Zealand's National Party's record in light of its recent electoral victory; Les Kishler discusses the art and science of deep gardening; Dr. Marc Gopin argues professionals should return some of the benefits of their professions to society; Erin Niemela criticizes the use of polls as a "rally around the flag" tactic during wartime; Edward Tick talks about mentally-ill veteran Omar Gonzales, who scaled the White House walls, and how we need a new paradigm in treatment of US veterans; Public Citizen releases a new report excoriating extra-judicial trade tribunals; Acronym TV

Ruling Looms Large
Read the Article at the Washington Post

Open Pits Offer Cheap Disposal for Fracking Sludge, but Health Worries Mount Read the Article at Inside Climate News

Los Angeles County Supervisors to Weigh County Jails' Collaboration With ICE Agents
Read the Article at the Los Angeles Times

Doctors With Borders
Read the Article at Texas Observer

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

confronts white privilege in the climate justice movement; and more.

Read the Articles

Support Truthout with a tax-deductible donation

Please add messenger@truthout.org to ensure you receive our messages

Truthout is a proud member of the New spaper Guild/CWA, Local 36047

Subscribe | Unsubscribe

Privacy Policy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jake Sullivan" <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "Christina Reynolds" <creynolds@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 7/3/2015 7:44:06 AM
Subject: Re: Hillary Clinton to Jewish donors: I'll be better for Israel than Obama - POLITICO

We have a two pager I'm getting clearance from her on. That is what we have to ship around.

On Jul 3, 2015, at 12:17 PM, Christina Reynolds <creynolds@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

> We could either get a donor to leak it or just give it to a reporter if we want to get it out there. I'm semi-surprised it's not out yet.
>
> On Jul 3, 2015, at 12:15 PM, Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
>
> > Do we need to push it harder over the next few days? Get something written? I feel like we're going to want something to point to. Or maybe even just content on the website?
> >
> > On Jul 3, 2015, at 12:12 PM, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> >
> > > That's basically the goal of the BDS letter.
> > >
> > > On Fri, Jul 3, 2015 at 12:11 PM, Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> > > > I was just thinking: has she made a clear statement on Israel yet? I get this question from donors all the time. Does she need to state her principles on Israel before Iran? Or do both at the same time?
> > > >
> > > > On Jul 3, 2015, at 10:00 AM, Oren Shur <oshur@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> > > >
> > > > > This article seems to make the case for the Mook approach - clear, direct and principled.
> > > > >
> > > > > Sent from my iPhone
> > > > >
> > > > > Begin forwarded message:
> > > > >
> > > > > From: Ian Sams <isams@hillaryclinton.com >
> > > > > Date: July 3, 2015 at 9:31:09 AM EDT
> > > > > To: Clips <clips@hillaryclinton.com >
> > > > > Subject: Hillary Clinton to Jewish donors: I'll be better for Israel than Obama - POLITICO
> > > > >
> > > > > http://www.politico.com/story/2015/07/hillary-clinton-jewish-donors-israel-119705.html
> > > > >
> > > > > Hillary Clinton to Jewish donors: I'll be better for Israel than Obama
> > > > >
> > > > > But the former secretary of state is sending mixed signals on the president's Iran

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

deal.

By Kenneth P. Vogel and Tarini Parti
7/3/15 6:33 AM EDT
Updated 7/3/15 6:33 AM EDT

Hillary Clinton is privately signaling to wealthy Jewish donors that — no matter the result of the Iranian nuclear negotiations — she will be a better friend to Israel than President Barack Obama.

But, even as donors increasingly push Clinton on the subject in private, they have emerged with sometimes widely varying interpretations about whether she would support a prospective deal, according to interviews with more than 10 influential donors and fundraising operatives.

Story Continued Below

Clinton's private responses in some ways resemble a foreign policy Rorschach test; donors who see a deal as important to world peace have come away thinking that Clinton shares their perspective, but so, too, do donors who oppose any prospective agreement as compromising Israeli security.

Publicly, she's expressed support for the negotiating process, which she secretly initiated during her time as secretary of state, but has also said "no deal is better than a bad deal."

With the talks heading into the home stretch in Vienna, the issue is emerging as an early test for Clinton's presidential campaign. She's already struggling to balance two of her biggest strengths as a candidate — her deep foreign policy track record and her vaunted fundraising ability — and that balance could become even trickier if there's a deal.

"Whatever way you go, there will be some people who won't like it," said Sarah Kovner, a prominent New York donor who is a leading bundler for Clinton's campaign and worked in Bill Clinton's presidential administration. "You can't have everybody with you. You've got to do what you think is right for the country."

The negotiations are of intense interest for some Jewish donors whose political giving is animated by their support for Israel. They're being counted on by Clinton's allies to donate huge sums for a campaign and a pair of supportive super PACs that, taken together, are expected to raise $2 billion or more.

Clinton's campaign rejected any suggestion that she's trying to have it both ways on Iran.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Her support for the negotiating process and touting support for Israel are not contradictory," said Clinton spokesman Nick Merrill. "A strong deal is good for Israel in her view."

And several people who've heard her address the issue say the fact that different people can come away with such different interpretations is a testament to her nuanced approach to the issue and her skill as a politician, rather than any vacillation on the subject.

"That's just smart politics," said one donor who supports the negotiations and recently talked to her about them. "Because, right now, you have the freedom to say all those things, so why would you commit and box yourself in until you saw what the deal was?"

Clinton recently told another pro-deal donor that she was "very supportive of the negotiating process," the donor recalled, while a third funder said she boasted of her role in starting the talks. "So it seemed like she was supporting it," recalled the funder.

And, at a Manhattan fundraiser last week featuring a largely Jewish group of donors, Clinton defended Obama against charges he had weakened the U.S.-Israel relationship, asserting that such criticism stemmed from a "perception" problem, according to a donor who was present. But she also suggested that if she were elected president she could correct that problem and bring the two nations closer.

"Diplomacy is all about personal relationships, and I've got my own relationships," she said, referencing her two-decade association with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, an ardent opponent of the Iran deal and, occasionally, of Obama. Clinton even cited her rapport with former Israeli ambassador to the U.S. Michael Oren, who last week published a book that was brutally critical of the Obama administration and was timed for release to try to stymie the Iran deal. "I know Michael well, but I haven't read the book," she said.

At a fundraiser last month at the Long Island home of Democratic donor Jay Jacobs, Clinton was asked by an Orthodox rabbi about threats to Israel's security. "She did stress in no uncertain terms her full and fervent support of the state of Israel and the defense of the state of Israel," recalled Jacobs. "And the people in the audience who heard it seemed to be comfortable with her answer."

Likewise, donors at a different New York fundraiser seemed to fully accept her answer to a slightly different question about the U.S. interest in the deal, said billionaire hedge fund manager Marc Lasry, a leading Clinton donor. "She said 'I'm going to do what's in the best interest of the U.S.,' and that was the end of it," Lasry said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Dan Berger, a Philadelphia lawyer and major Democratic donor who supports the framework of a deal, cautioned that the interests of the U.S. and Israel, "although close, are not identical. It might not be in the best interest of American Jews, but it's got to be in the best interest of the majority of the people." He urged Jewish donors "to take a step back and look at the complexity and judge the agreement based on its merits," adding: "I'd hope Hillary would judge it based on its merits and not on political support."

Lasry rejected the suggestion that Clinton would even consider the fundraising implications when assessing any deal.

But Clinton's senior foreign policy advisers have briefed interested wealthy donors on both the negotiations over the deal and its prospects for congressional approval, according to one donor who recently talked to a top Clinton aide.

"It's a tricky issue for her," said the donor who was briefed, arguing that Jewish donors who oppose a deal and favor military intervention in Iran "are going to put her in a box."

Clinton's allies are carefully monitoring the sensitivities of a handful of hawkish Democratic mega-donors for signs that the Iran talks may be influencing their willingness to write million-dollar super PAC checks. Chief among that group is billionaire Hollywood entrepreneur Haim Saban, who sources say has spoken multiple times with Clinton and her top aides about the deal.

In April, he strongly suggested that Clinton opposed the deal. "I know where she stands, but I can't talk about it," Saban told an Israeli television news channel, adding under questioning, "She has an opinion, a very well-defined opinion. And in any case, everything that she thinks and everything she has done and will do will always be for the good of Israel. We don't need to worry about this."

He soon backtracked, saying "I have no idea what Hillary thinks about the Iran deal."

And multiple prominent Jewish donors who joined Saban at a White House meeting with Obama in April to discuss the Iran negotiations said Saban expressed open-mindedness about supporting the deal, though one participant suggested his opinion shouldn't hold as much weight as those of foreign policy professionals.

"Haim Saban is a very smart businessman who has a tremendous amount of love for the Clintons, but I don't think he is the most sophisticated policy analyst that there is," said the donor.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Saban's representatives did not respond to questions about his interactions with Clinton.

But on Thursday, POLITICO reported that he donated $2 million this year to a super PAC supporting her presidential campaign, which Democratic finance sources interpreted as a sign that Saban's financial support will not be conditioned on Clinton taking a certain stance on the Iran deal.

Steve Rabinowitz, a Democratic consultant who worked in the Clinton White House and was a co-founder of Jewish Americans Ready for Hillary, argued that the Iran deal isn't going to be a deciding issue for either donors or voters.

"Do people in my community talk about the Iran deal? Sure. But is it affecting their support for Hillary Clinton? No," he said. "Iran certainly will — and already has — become a talking point, but it will not move three votes or $3."

Clinton has the potential to bring along donors like Saban who might have been skeptical of negotiating with Iran, argued the Long Island donor Jacobs. "Hillary has a lot of credibility and support in the Jewish community. It's broad and deep. People understand that she has fought and has been there as an advocate," he said. "So when she speaks on the issue, there will be more people in the Jewish community who have perhaps unfairly not appreciated President Obama's support who will at least give her view a more open-minded assessment."

If Clinton backs any eventual deal, its proponents will be under pressure to step up their giving — both to the Clinton super PACs and to pro-deal groups — because she is likely to come under heavy fire from deep-pocketed groups that oppose the deal.

"If there's a deal, and she comes out in favor of it, you can be sure there will be a great deal of fire trained on her," said Noah Pollak, the executive director of the Emergency Committee for Israel. The conservative group has worked to rally opposition to the talks and this week began airing an ad pressuring New York Democratic Sen. Chuck Schumer, who is considered a key vote on the deal, to oppose it.

The left-leaning Israel advocacy group J Street, which has worked to build support for the deal, is expected to come to the defense of supporters, including potentially Clinton, though on some issues, the group's members regard her as too hawkish for their tastes.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“For people who speak on these Middle East issues on which we have strong positions, we come to their support and defense on those issues, regardless of party, regardless of candidacy,” said Victor A Kovner, a Democratic donor who chairs J Street’s PAC.

Kovner, like his wife, Sarah Kovner, is backing Clinton, and said he has communicated his support for a deal to the candidate.

“She is familiar with my view, but she has a lot of supporters and advisers on both sides of this question — around the nation, both within the Jewish community and beyond the Jewish community.”

Authors:

View Comments

--
Ian Sams
(423) 915-6592

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Milia Fisher" <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 4/23/2015 1:58:51 PM
Subject: Re: Statement of Frank Giustra | CEO.CA

Sure! Here's the phrase exactly, adding his twitter handle. Going out in 10.

.@Frank_Giustra replies, adding actual facts to NYT conjecture: http://ceo.ca/2015/04/23/statement-of-frank-giustra/

On Thu, Apr 23, 2015 at 8:53 PM, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com > wrote:

Can you tweet statement with something very simple like Guistra replies, adding actual facts to NYT conjecture.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: "Josh Schwerin" <joshschwerin@gmail.com >
Date: Apr 23, 2015 8:06 PM
Subject: Statement of Frank Giustra | CEO.CA
To: "hrcrapid@googlegroups.com " <hrcrapid@googlegroups.com >
Cc:

http://ceo.ca/2015/04/23/statement-of-frank-giustra/

Statement of Frank Giustra

POSTED ON APRIL 23, 2015 BY FRANK GIUSTRA
CATEGORY FRANK GIUSTRA ,

A book that has not yet been published has caused the New York Times to publish a wildly speculative, innuendo-laced article about the Clinton Foundation and my role in contributing money to it. There is not one shred of evidence to back up the Times' conclusions. This is not about me, but rather an attempt to tear down Secretary Clinton and her presidential campaign. If this is what passes for investigative journalism in the United States, it is very sad.

The facts do not comport with the story in the New York Times. The reporter, Jo Becker, wrote a similar piece in 2008, which was eventually debunked by Forbes. http://www.forbes.com/2009/01/12/giustra-clinton-kazakhstan-pf-ii-in_rl_0912croesus_inl.html

1. I began working on financing the purchase of mining stakes from a private Kazakh company in early 2005. The purchase was concluded in late 2005.

- In late 2005, I went to Kazakhstan to finish the negotiations of the sale. Bill Clinton flew to Almaty a few days after I arrived in the country on another person's plane, not on my plane, as the Times reported. Bill Clinton had nothing to do with the purchase of private mining stakes by a Canadian company.
- I sold all of my stakes in the uranium company – Uranium One – in the fall of 2007, after it merged with another company. I would note that those were sold at least 18 months before Hillary Clinton became the Secretary of State. No one was speculating at that time that she would become the Secretary of State.
- Other media outlets have insinuated that I influenced the decision by the U.S. to sign a free trade agreement with Colombia. At one point, I was an investor in Pacific Rubiales, a Colombian energy company. I sold my shares in Pacific Rubiales several years before the U.S.-Colombia Free Trade Agreement, which, I will note, was approved by several U.S. agencies and the White House. To theorize that I had anything to do with that is sheer conjecture.

I hope that the U.S. media can start to focus on the real challenges of the world and U.S. society. Focus on poverty, homelessness, infrastructure, health care, education, or fractious world politics. You are a great country. Don't ruin it by letting those with political agendas take over your newspapers and your airwaves.
I am extremely proud of the work that we have done at the Clinton Giustra Enterprise Partnership. Thousands of people, all over the world, have been helped by this initiative. I plan to continue that work long after the harsh glare of this week's media stories has faded.

4 Votes

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Sent from my iPad

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com.
To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

--
Milia Fisher
Special Assistant to the Chair
Hillary for America
mfisher@hillaryclinton.com
o: 646.854.1198 c: 858.395.1741

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jeff Liszt" <jeff@algpolling.com>
To: "Jim Margolis" <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>
"Joel Benenson" <jbenenson@bsgco.com>
"John Anzalone" <john@algpolling.com>
"Peter Brodnitz" <pbrodnitz@bsgco.com>
"Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com>
"Robby Mook" <robbymook2015@gmail.com>
"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
"Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hrcoffice.com>
"Nick Merrill" <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com>
"Huma Abedin" <huma@hrcoffice.com>
"Cheryl Mills" <cheryl.mills@gmail.com>
"Philippe Reines" <pir@hrcoffice.com>
Date: 2/5/2015 12:33:41 PM
Subject: RE: Bush Detroit Econ speech

It's a scary new wrapping paper for trickle down. Very much in synch with what we're hearing in groups.

Then again maybe not so new:

"We will extend the promise of prosperity to every forgotten corner of this country. To every man and woman, a chance to succeed. To every child, a chance to learn. To every family, a chance to live with dignity and hope." –GWB

Jeffrey LISZT
Anzalone Liszt Grove
928 Broadway #405
New York, NY 10010
www.algpolling.com
+1 (646) 368 1947
Skype: jbliszt
Twitter: @anzaloneliszt @psephologist

From: Margolis, Jim [Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com]
Sent: Thursday, February 05, 2015 12:01 PM
To: Joel Benenson; John Anzalone; Jeff Liszt; Peter Brodnitz; Mandy Grunwald; Robby Mook; John Podesta; Dan Schwerin; Nick Merrill; Huma Abedin; Cheryl Mills; Philippe Reines
Cc: Anson Kaye; John Rimel; Jim Margolis
Subject: Bush Detroit Econ speech

If you haven't read Jeb's Detroit speech, take a look.
He's in a fertile zone, GOP primary electorate notwithstanding.

For those of you who've had to put up with my interest exploring 'opportunity' framing, he has some of the elements here.

Here's the full text of Jeb Bush's "right to rise" speech in Detroit

Updated by Vox Staff on February 5, 2015, 9:20 a.m. ET Tweet (26) Share (4) +
Tweet Share

Bill Pugliano/Getty Images

Follow Vox!

By signing up, you agree to our terms.

Thank you. I am delighted to be here. You are part of a great story - the revival of a city that means so much to all Americans. In these past few years, when confronted with grave challenges, you have seized the opportunity to reform the city you love.

And you have begun to repair the damage done by decades of mismanagement and empty promises.

I want to congratulate Governor Rick Snyder for his leadership. I want to acknowledge Secretary of State Ruth Johnson, and Attorney General Bill Schuette. And Mayor Mike Duggan for his determination to serve the city of his birth.

I want to recognize as well the hard work of Kevyn Orr, who I am proud to say is a son of Florida.

And finally, I want to recognize all those who were involved in making difficult and often painful decisions. Your work is not complete. But your efforts have captured the attention of our nation.

Because across the U.S., we are asking ourselves the same questions:

How do we recapture the prosperity and opportunity that once defined cities like Detroit?

How do we restore America's faith in the moral promise of our great nation that any child born today can reach further than their parents?

This is an urgent issue: Far too many Americans live on the edge of economic ruin.And many more feel like they're struck in place, working longer and harder, even as they're losing ground.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Tens of millions of Americans no longer see a clear path to rise above their challenges. Something is holding them back. Not a lack of ambition. Not a lack of hope. Not because they are lazy or see themselves as victims.
Something else. Something is an artificial weight on their shoulders.
Today and in the coming weeks, I will address this critical issue.
And I will offer a new vision. A plan of action that is different than what we have been hearing in Washington D.C. It is a vision rooted in conservative principles and tethered to our shared belief in opportunity and the unknown possibilities of a nation given the freedom to act, to create, to dream and to rise.
We see that belief every day in action.
In oil and gas fields once given up for dry we are now assuring America's energy security. In hospitals, we are extending life and beating back once untreatable diseases. In charter schools, we are connecting students to their potential. In labs and hacker spaces, invention comes from every corner of society and the world still comes to America to learn how to create and innovate.
People know this country can be more than it is today. And that each one of us can, and must, be a part of it.
But they know this as well: We have a lot of work to do.
Today, Americans across the country are frustrated. They see only a small portion of the population riding the economy's up escalator... It's true enough that we've seen some recent and welcome good news on the economy.
But it's very little, and it's come very late.
Six years after the recession ended, median incomes are down, households are, on average, poorer ... and millions of people have given up looking for a job altogether. Roughly two out of three American households live paycheck to paycheck. Any unexpected expense can push them into financial ruin. We have a record number of Americans on food stamps and living in poverty.
The recovery has been everywhere but in the family paychecks. The American Dream has become a mirage for far too many. So the central question we face here in Detroit and across America is this: Can we restore that dream -- that moral promise -- that each generation can do better?
If we can't answer that question, no tax, no new welfare program, will save our system or our way of life. Because America's moral promise isn't broken when someone is wealthy. It's broken when achieving success is far beyond our imagination.
America is a place where, as Lincoln dreamed, any person may look forward and hope to be a hired laborer this year...and the next, work for himself... and finally, to hire men to work for him!
America, though discouraged, has not given up on the dream of Lincoln.
The dream of Lincoln is alive at 5 a.m. at a bus depot in a distant suburb or in an inner city as workers get to jobs in hotels and restaurants and hospitals. The dream is alive in the breath of a construction worker running cable under a city street in the bitter night air.
The dream is alive in the college student driving an Uber car part-time to graduate debt-free.
Lincoln's dream is alive every day nand at every moment when people choose to buy a home, start a business, enroll in school, save for the future. They know such commitments aren't easy and don't pay off right away. But they're worth doing. If Americans are working harder than ever earning less than they once did, our government and our leaders should step up, offer a plan, fix what's wrong - or they should step aside.
Let's ask how we got to this point. Let's start in Detroit.
Because in a sense, the troubles Detroit faces are an echo of the troubles facing Washington, D.C.
Decades of big government policies, petty politics, impossible-to-meet pension promises, chronic mismanagement and broken services — combined with a massive loss of jobs and competitiveness in the auto industry — drove tens of thousands of people from this city and this region.
For example: Detroit under the previous administration was so proud of shutting down businesses that hadn't paid their licenses and fees, they bragged about it in press releases. The city threatened nearly 900 businesses with closure and followed through on nearly 400 businesses, shutting them down.
Many of these were small businesses run out of homes and alley-facing garages, run by people who just wanted to take that first step up the economic ladder.
One of those business owners, Derek Little, had a simple way to describe his frustration: I'm running a legit business... They could be doing something better.
And while the city was shutting down people who were trying to build a business ...it couldn't even do its job correctly: The city was losing money writing parking tickets.
Of course, on Amtrak they lose money on the snack car. They literally have a captive audience.
But government inefficiency isn't just irritating. It's instructive. If the government can't collect parking fines, or sell snacks on a train, why would government know how to enable every citizen to move up in life?
That's why I launched the Right to Rise PAC. So that someone would speak for people who don't want to wait for the government to deliver prosperity. They want to earn it themselves. Government isn't the only issue here. There is far more at work. But in a sense, fixing government policy is the easiest problem to solve. And it's the one most responsive to the demands of voters.
So, I am getting involved in politics again, because that's where the work has to begin. The opportunity gap is the defining issue of our time.
More Americans are stuck at their income levels than ever before. It's very hard for people to go from the bottom rungs of the economy to the top. Or even to the middle.
This should alarm you. It alarmed me. The problem starts when we fear the one thing that can help unlock the economic status quo: The freedom to compete and work as a team to build great things.
Competition is messy. But it's essential. We've all seen the battles: The taxicab companies fight against web-enabled car services. The restaurants fight against the food trucks. The brick-and-mortar retailers fight against the Internet companies.
I'm not here to take sides. And I don't think government should either. Because when government protects one business against another, or tilts the field of competition, there is a clear loser: Anyone who wants to create something as a team. Anyone who wants to innovate and shake things up. Anyone who wants more choices and better service. And we know that in the end, standing against competition and dynamism is a losing battle.
In 1955, 60 years ago, the Fortune 500 list first appeared. Of the companies on that list, fully 88% don't even exist today or have fallen away. Today's Fortune 500 will be replaced by new companies that are just starting today.
This is hard for some people to accept. Because entrenched interests do not like giving up what they have. That's why they fear small competitors who have nothing to lose. You know the stories: The president of Michigan Savings Bank imparted some wisdom to the young lawyer for a small start-up company: The horse, the bank president said,'is here to stay, but the automobile is only a fad.'
The small start-up that lawyer represented... was the Ford Motor Company.We can laugh about it now because Ford and the other innovators of Detroit had the economic freedom to compete and to prove the doubters wrong.
Our nation has always valued such economic freedom because in economic freedom, each citizen has the power to propel themselves forward and upward.
This really isn't understood in Washington D.C. And you can see why: It's a company town.
And the company is government. It's all they know.
For several years now, they have been recklessly degrading the value of work, the incentive to work, and the rewards of work.
We have seen them cut the definition of a full-time job from 40 to 30 hours, slashing the ability of paycheck earners to make ends meet. We have seen them create welfare programs and tax rules that punish people with lost benefits and higher taxes for moving up those first few rungs of the economic ladder.
Instead of a safety net to cushion our occasional falls, they have built a spider web that traps people in perpetual dependence. We have seen them waive the rules that helped so many people escape welfare.
The progressive and liberal mindset believes that to every problem there is a Washington D.C. solution. But that instinct doesn't solve any problem, other than the problem of how to keep Washington's regional economy well-lubricated.
And the cost is enormous!
Let's say you're a hard-working middle-class family. You work hard. You pay your mortgage on time. As President Obama likes to say: You play by the rules.
But for President Obama, one of the rules is this: He reserves the right to change the rules.
Just last month, he thought it was a good idea to tax 529 college savings plans. Remember: 529s were created to be tax-free ways to save for college. Millions of people started them for their kids and grandkids. So it's no surprise people hated the president's idea. And he dropped it. But it was an instructive lesson in the liberal and progressive mindset. Saving for college is the responsible thing to do. But instead of embracing 529s, the liberals moved to tax them.
It's frustrating. But it shows you how they think.
And if you want to know how they act, ask Sharon DeLay. Sharon founded a recruiting company in Westerville, Ohio. Here's what she said: It's as if the politicians and regulators in Washington want me to fail - and spend all their time thinking up new ways to ensure that I do ...You either want me to be the engine of the economy or you don't!
Here's a message for Sharon and millions like her: There's a better way.Let'sine this path first by the core principles of a Right to Rise society because once we do that, the policies, the laws and the way forward will be much clearer.
Let's start with the first principle: When it comes to ensuring opportunity and a chance at success, the most important factor isn't government. It's a committed family.
Social scientists across the ideological spectrum agree on this: If you want to predict whether someone will graduate from school, go to college and move forward in life, just find out one thing: Were they raised in a loving household by two parents? If you didn't, you can overcome it, but it's very hard. If you did, you have a built-in advantage in life.
The evidence is overwhelming. Every child has a greater chance at opportunity when they are raised by loving, caring and supportive parents and a committed family. That isn't the work of government. But it's critical that governmental leaders recognize that and support it.
A second principle: Growth above all. A growing economy, whether here in Detroit or throughout this country is the difference between poverty and prosperity for millions. If you want to close the opportunity gap, grow the economy. This is a principle that concentrates the mind.
If a law or a rule doesn't contribute to growth, why do it? If a law subtracts from growth, why are we discussing it? And for what it's worth, I don't think the US should settle for anything less than 4% growth a year — which is about twice our current average. At that rate, the middle class will thrive again.
And in the coming months, I intend to detail how we can get there, with a mix of smart policies and reforms to tap our resources and capacity to innovate, whether in energy, manufacturing, health care or technology.
Third: The right to rise depends on a government that makes it easier to work than not work.
That means fewer laws restricting the labor market and reducing the penalties that come with moving up from the lowest rungs of the ladder.
Fourth: To address the income gap, let's close the opportunity gap, and that starts with doing everything we can to give every child, from every neighborhood, a great education. This won't happen overnight — trust me, I know. But I also know it works. And it takes every tool we have.
Accountability for teachers and school administrators, assessment of student learning, high standards, and choices. These key elements of school reform work and we have the results to prove it.
Finally, let's embrace reform everywhere, especially in our government. Let's start with the simple principle of who holds the power. I say give Washington less and give states and local governments more.
We make multi-billion dollar infrastructure decisions based on a labor law written in 1921. President Obama proposes making rules on the Internet using laws written in the 1930s. We regulate global airlines using laws written for railroads. Our immigration laws were written a half-century ago.
Governmental policy seems frozen, incapable and fearful of change. It is in the way. And we deserve better than this.
If we don't transform ourselves to meet new challenges and seize new opportunities, we know what happens next. Look around this city. In its history there is a warning to all of us.
A century ago, Detroit was America's great innovation hub. The Silicon Valley of its age.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It was bigger than Chicago. It was the nation's wealthiest city in 1960.
Detroit put the world on wheels and created the jobs that lifted millions of Americans into the middle class.
This city was the arsenal of Democracy and delivered the arms needed to defend freedom across two oceans.
Detroit promised prosperity and it delivered.
Sons of sharecroppers coming up from the South, farmhands from the Upper Midwest, immigrants who spoke Polish, Yiddish, Greek and Arabic.
Their children settled. They prospered. And some of their grandchildren are in this room today.
And now, you are rebuilding this city. I know you will be that great city again. Because Americans by nature work and strive to succeed.
It is already happening.
In the Madison Building, not far from here, new companies are rising. One of them, iRule, is led by two young men, one born in Russia, the other in Israel. They left secure jobs as automotive engineers to start their business in 2009. At the very bottom of the recession. Here's what one of them, Itai ben Gal said: ‘We know Detroit has its baggage, but we believe we're part of the solution.'
Three years later, they have 21 employees, including Itai's father, who is the CFO.
And this activity is happening downtown, in an area once ignored.
Another Detroit entrepreneur grew up in the suburbs. He rarely came downtown as a child. But today, he works here. He lives here. This is what he said: 'We see the city for what it can be... not for what it was.'
That's how we should see everything. Not just Detroit.But in all of America.
I know some in the media think conservatives don't care about the cities.
But they are wrong. We believe that every American and in every community has a right to pursue happiness. They have a right to rise.
So I say: Let's go where our ideas can matter most. Where the failures of liberal government are most obvious. Let's deliver real conservative success.
And you know what will happen?
We'll create a whole lot of new conservatives.
I know, because I've lived it.
I come from Miami, another city that faced the same struggles as Detroit.
In my city, the schools were failing, opportunity was scarce and for too many, simply being born in the wrong neighborhood meant the American Dream was cruelly out of reach.
I joined with my friend, Willard Fair, a courageous leader in the civil rights movement.
We decided that the right to rise, was also a civil right. So we went to work to change education in Florida.
While there's much more to do, we saw lives changed and hope restored.
You can do it, here in Detroit. We can do it, across America.
Because this morning, 320 million Americans got up ... and they are on 320 million different paths of life.
It's our goal to see them succeed.
And it's our responsibility to do everything possible to help them.
Because by their success, they will not only build prosperity for themselves. They will renew the promise of this nation when everyone, has the right to rise.
Those are the stakes. That's why we're here. Please join me in this great cause.
Thank you and may God bless you, and may God bless America.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: sewallconroy@comcast.net
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 10/25/2008 10:46:19 AM
Subject: liz sherwood randall

John,

I know that it is important to include Liz Sherwood Randall in the transition. Based on her ability to contribute to the DOD Agency team to date, we had assigned her to the Russia policy team.

However, the organizational structure that Susan and Jim agreed upon today now leaves Liz with a minor role (albeit one consistent with having a family in CA). Given the level of interest, I wanted to double back with you.

Should we put Liz Sherwood back on DOD Agency team so she has the choice of a more significant role? Pls advise.

–sarah

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: theSkimm <dailyskimm@morning7.theskimm.com>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 8/18/2015 9:22:18 PM
Subject: Daily Skimm: Up now.

Is this email not displaying correctly? View it in your browser.

theSkimm

Skimm for August 19th

Skimm'd at a baseball game

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Big hug" — Russian President Vladimir Putin signing off on a radio chat with Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev. Cuties.

SKIMM THIS

THINGS WITH TROUBLE IN AISLE FOUR

WALMART

THE STORY

Yesterday, Walmart said it's officially on the profit struggle bus.

WAIT, WHY?

The retailer's sales haven't been looking so hot lately. To reverse that, the company started spending more. Think: longer hours, increased wages for workers , and a bigger focus on e-commerce. The good news? Sales went up. The bad news? Walmart has been spending so much that its overall profits are down...by double digits. Yesterday, it also announced that it's lowering earnings targets moving forward. Womp womp.

theSKIMM

Walmart used to be the world's most valuable retailer. Until recently, when a little company called Amazon took its place. Yesterday's announcement is more bad news for traditional stores who were slow to jump on the e-commerce bandwagon.

SKIMM THIS

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

TARGET

THE STORY

Yesterday, Target agreed to say 'sorry' for a 2013 data breach. In this case, 'sorry' means a $67 million check.

WAIT, WHY?

Back in the holiday season of 2013, Target got hit by an epic cyberattack. 40 million credit and debit cards were exposed to fraud. Not a Merry Chrismukkah. Yesterday, Target announced a settlement with Visa. The $67 million will go towards the banks that sent customers new Visas after theirs were hacked. Target's still settling up with MasterCard.

theSKIMM

Credit card companies, the government, and pretty much every business in the world is trying to figure out how to make their networks more secure. This settlement is another reminder that hacks are a security threat — and they're also pretty f'ing expensive messes to clean up.

SKIMM THIS

REPEAT AFTER ME...

WHAT TO SAY WHEN YOU'RE BF ASKS IF YOU'RE READY...

Oh, I'm ready. Yesterday, the FDA approved a drug that wants to turbocharge women's sex drive. It's called Addyi' because "I just watched 'The Notebook' again" didn't fit on the box. This is the first approved drug of its kind and the pharmaceutical industry has pushed for it to get the green light for a while. And surprise, so have women. But the FDA rejected it twice because of concerns over side effects. The libido-fixing drug apparently doesn't pair well with alcohol, among other lovely side effects. Women who take the drug reportedly have one extra "sexually satisfying event" per month. That's an event that will get RSVPs.

SKIMM THIS

WHAT TO SAY WHEN THE AIRPORT SECURITY LINE IS BACKED UP AND YOU MISS YOUR FLIGHT...

The TSA is going to hear about this in my Yelp review. Thanks to a new agreement with the review site, US agencies can now claim or create Yelp pages. And respond directly to your constructive criticism about the long line at the post office. This should go well.

SKIMM THIS

WHAT TO SAY AFTER YOU HEAR THE WHITE HOUSE HIRED ITS FIRST OPENLY TRANSGENDER STAFFER ...

Bout time. This week, two women are becoming the first female graduates of the Army's Ranger School. Meaning they completed an intense training course that makes your triathlete friend look out of shape. Rangers are an elite special ops force in the US military. So elite that 400 people tried out, and only 96 made the cut - including these two women. Problem is, they can't actually join the Rangers yet because women still aren't officially allowed to serve in combat roles. The Pentagon's making a decision later this year on how that rule should change for different military positions. But the Navy SEALs are feeling inclusive. Yesterday, a top Navy admiral said there's "no reason" that women who can take the heat should be left off the SEAL team.

SKIMM THIS

THING TO KNOW

Mineral water: Making regular water feel inferior since forever. It's water that comes from a mineral spring, complete with — yup – minerals like calcium. Often sparkling (think: Perrier).

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SKIMM LIFE

We're all about that 'bass(ador). Yup, the Skimm'bassadors have their own playlist now. Listen up.

SKIMM SHARE

Skimm'ing is good, but Skimm'ing from the beach is better. Top 10 sharers get to sit in the sand with this swag . Here's how to share theSkimm .

SKIMM BIRTHDAYS

 indicates Skimm'bassador. Make a wish.

Amy Yazdian (New York, NY); Whitney Hinckley (Cincinnati, OH); Girina Pandit (Tucson, AZ); Terri Peters (Pasadena, MD); Molly Jong-Fast (New York, NY); Ashley Cangelosi Llewellyn (New Orleans, LA); Madison McGill (Grapevine, TX); Molly Cullen (Minneapolis, MN); Shannon Campagna (Alexandria, VA); Steffie Tomson (Houston, TX); Sophia Serrao (Gainesville, FL); Cassandra Lautredou (Little Rock, AR); Kandace Parker (Little Rock, AR); Emily Button (Indianapolis, IN); Colleen McGee (Annapolis, MD); Girina Pandit (Tucson, AZ); Pedro Mendonça (São Paulo, Brazil); Rachel Cargo (Boston, MA); Bart Witmer (San Francisco, CA); Melissa Manuel (New York, NY); Robert Kroez (Delmar, NY); Jessie Alvaro (Fair Lawn, NJ); Laura Gibson (Elmhurst, IL); Bozenna Hartzell (New York, NY); Julie Noblick (Washington, DC); Carson Heimann (New York, NY); Katie Taaffe (Dallas, TX); Victoria Pappas (New York, NY); Elly McKenna (Fairfield, CT); Laura Granite (New York, NY); Emma Tuz (New York, NY); Taylor Gillilan (Birmingham, AL); Robin Moodley (Cleveland, OH); Cynthia Johnson (Culver City, CA); Meira Levison (Tel Aviv, Israel); Sandra Midlitz (Yardley, PA); Brandy Satterwhite (Raleigh, NC); Cindy Meyer (Leawood, KS); Barbara Steppe (North Bellmore, NY); Danielle Moran (Berkeley Heights, NJ); Tara Delany (Orlando, FL); Courtney Futryk (Washington, DC); Molly Breiner (New York, NY); Lilibeth Rivera (Bronx, NY); Jamie Rosenberg (Edgartown, MA); Matt Golden (Weston, MA); Peggy Hoyt (Winnetka, IL); Janeen Gonzalez (Los Angeles, CA); Heidi Adams (Raleigh, NC); Andrea LoBalbo (Arlington, VA); Elizabeth Scouler (Los Angeles, CA); Hannah Gettleman (Chicago, IL); Jennie Dopf (New York, NY); Haley Vallon Chestnut (Athens, GA)

Skimm'd something we missed?

Email SkimmThis@theSkimm.com • Read in browser »

SHARE & FOLLOW US

FACEBOOK TWITTER TUMBLR INSTAGRAM PINTEREST

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Copyright © 2015 theSkimm, All rights reserved.

Our mailing address is:

theSkimm Inc.

584 Broadway, Ste. 409

New York, NY, 10012, United States

Update Profile

Unsubscribe

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Cammie Croft" <cammie@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 7/16/2008 5:49:05 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Tracking Update: McCain Speech/Q&A NAACP Cincinnati, OH 07/16/08

Hello All,

Just off the phone with our tracker Jacob who is on the ground today in Cincinnati. Below are the notes from our call.

BIG HIGHLIGHTS:

- Demonstrator outside of event with sign, "JOHN MCCAIN VOTED AGAINST MLK DAY"
- McCain opens with kind words about Obama, acknowledges Obama's historical significance
- McCain emphasizes education, says "the worst problems of our public school system are often found in black communities"
- McCain attacks public education, calls for reform
- McCain proposes "bonuses" for encouraging teachers to teach in tough neighborhoods and rewarding teachers for a job well done; He calls for such funds to be controlled by princpals
- McCain proposes $500 million for virtual learning programs, online classes
- McCain references his "friend" John Lewis
- McCain asked about Katrina; calls the government's response a disgrace
- McCain promises to fund No Child Left Behind
- McCain asked about why he didn't fill out his NAACP candidate survey, says he'll do it immediately

Cincinnati, OH - McCain Speech/Q&A NAACP 07/16/08

Background Details:
- McCain staffers interspersed with NAACP staffers and secret service
- On stage: NAACP emblem that reads, 'Power, justice, freedom, vote'
- Outside: Protester with "JOHN MCCAIN VOTED AGAINST MLK DAY" sign
- Dana Bash present along with several local media outlets
- Conference hall packed 1-1,200 people present
- Several audience members wearing Obama T-shirts; tracker did not see any signs or chum for McCain
- Crowd not excited about McCain, subdued reaction; at one point the jumbotron screen cut to a crowd shot after he said something that was meant to gain applause and the crowd shot showed people with their arms crossed

FULL Transcript:
LINK: http://thepage.time.com/transcript-of-mccains-remarks-at-the-naacp/

Thank you. Julian Bond, Dennis Courtland Hayes, Roslyn Brock – I appreciate your kind invitation, and this warm welcome to the NAACP. This is your second invitation to me during my presidential campaign, and I hope you'll excuse me for passing on the opportunity at your convention last year. As you might recall, I was a bit distracted at the time dealing with what reporters uncharitably described as an implosion in my campaign. But I'm very glad you invited me again.

Let me begin with a few words about my opponent. Don't tell him I said this, but he is an impressive fellow in many ways. He has inspired a great many Americans, some of whom had wrongly believed that a political campaign could hold no purpose or meaning for them. His success should make Americans, all Americans, proud. Of course, I would prefer his success not continue quite as long as he hopes. But it makes me proud to know the country I've loved and served all my life is still a work in progress, and always improving. Senator Obama talks about making history, and he's made quite a bit of it already. And the way was prepared by this venerable organization and others like it. A few years before the NAACP was founded, President Theodore Roosevelt's invitation of Booker T. Washington to dine at the White House was taken as an outrage and an insult in many quarters. America today is a world away from the cruel and prideful bigotry of that time. There is no better evidence of this than the nomination of an African-American to be the presidential nominee of his party. Whatever the outcome in November, Senator Obama has achieved a great thing – for himself and for his country – and I thank him for it.

As our country has changed these past few decades, so have many of your debates within the NAACP, and within other civil-rights organizations. In the days of separate lunch counters, bullhorns, and fire hoses, the mission was hard and dangerous, but it was easily defined. The advancement of African Americans meant equal protection under law, in a country where the law had simply codified injustice. That cause required the enormous courage and commitment of generations, and a determination to hold this nation to its own creed.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

You know better than I do how different the challenges are today for those who champion the cause of equal opportunity in America. Equal access to public education has been gained. But what is the value of access to a failing school? Equal employment opportunity is set firmly down in law. But with jobs becoming scarcer – and 400,000 Americans thrown out of work just this year – that can amount to an equal share of diminished opportunity. For years, business ownership by African Americans has been growing rapidly. This is all to the good, but that hopeful trend is threatened in a struggling economy – with the cost of energy, health care, and just about everything else rising sharply.

As in other challenges African Americans have met and overcome, these problems require clarity of purpose. They require the solidarity of groups like the NAACP. And, at times, they also require a willingness to break from conventional thinking.

Nowhere are the limitations of conventional thinking any more apparent than in education policy. Education reform has long been a priority of the NAACP, and for good reason. For all the best efforts of teachers and administrators, the worst problems of our public school system are often found in black communities. Black and Latino students are among the most likely to drop out of high school. African Americans are also among the least likely to go on to college.

After decades of hearing the same big promises from the public education establishment, and seeing the same poor results, it is surely time to shake off old ways and to demand new reforms. That isn't just my opinion; it is the conviction of parents in poor neighborhoods across this nation who want better lives for their children. In Washington, D.C., the Opportunity Scholarship program serves more than 1,900 boys and girls from families with an average income of 23,000 dollars a year. And more than 7,000 more families have applied for that program. What they all have in common is the desire to get their kids into a better school.

Democrats in Congress, including my opponent, oppose the D.C. Opportunity Scholarship program. In remarks to the American Federation of Teachers last weekend, Senator Obama dismissed public support for private school vouchers for low-income Americans as, "tired rhetoric about vouchers and school choice." All of that went over well with the teachers union, but where does it leave families and their children who are stuck in failing schools?

Over the years, Americans have heard a lot of "tired rhetoric" about education. We've heard it in the endless excuses of people who seem more concerned about their own position than about our children. We've heard it from politicians who accept the status quo rather than stand up for real change in our public schools. Parents ask only for schools that are safe, teachers who are competent, and diplomas that open doors of opportunity. When a public system fails, repeatedly, to meet these minimal objectives, parents ask only for a choice in the education of their children. Some parents may choose a better public school. Some may choose a private school. Many will choose a charter school. No entrenched bureaucracy or union should deny parents that choice and children that opportunity.

We should also offer more choices to those who wish to become teachers. Many thousands of highly qualified men and women have great knowledge, wisdom, and experience to offer public school students. But a monopoly on teacher certification prevents them from getting that chance. You can be a Nobel Laureate and not qualify to teach in most public schools today. They don't have all the proper credits in educational "theory" or "methodology" – all they have is learning and the desire and ability to share it. If we're putting the interests of students first, then those qualifications should be enough.

If I am elected president, school choice for all who want it, an expansion of Opportunity Scholarships, and alternative certification for teachers will all be part of a serious agenda of education reform. I will target funding to recruit teachers who graduate in the top 25 percent of their class, or who participate in an alternative teacher recruitment program such as Teach for America, the American Board for Teacher Excellence, and the New Teacher Project.

We will pay bonuses to teachers who take on the challenge of working in our most troubled schools – because we need their fine minds and good hearts to help turn those schools around. We will award bonuses as well to our highest-achieving teachers. And no longer will we measure teacher achievement by conformity to process. We will measure it by the success of their students.

Moreover, the funds for these bonuses will not be controlled by faraway officials – in Washington, in a state capital, or even in a district office. Under my reforms, we will entrust both the funds and the responsibilities where they belong in the office of the school principal. One reason that charter schools are so successful, and so sought-after by parents, is that principals have spending discretion. And I intend to give that same discretion to public school principals. No longer will money be spent in service to rigid and often meaningless formulas. Relying on the good judgment and first-hand knowledge of school principals, education money will be spent in service to public school students.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

We can also help more children and young adults to study outside of school by expanding support for virtual learning. So I propose to direct 500 million dollars in current federal funds to build new virtual schools, and to support the development of online courses for students. Through competitive grants, we will allocate another 250 million dollars to support state programs expanding online education opportunities, including the creation of new public virtual charter schools. States can use these funds to build virtual math and science academies to help expand the availability of Advanced Placement math, science, and computer science courses, online tutoring, and foreign language courses.

Under my reforms, moreover, parents will exercise freedom of choice in obtaining extra help for children who are falling behind. As it is, federal aid to parents for tutoring for their children has to go through another bureaucracy. They can't purchase the tutoring directly, without having to deal with the same education establishment that failed their children in the first place. These needless restrictions will be removed, under my reforms. If a student needs extra help, parents will be able to sign them up to get it, with direct public support.

Over the years, the NAACP has brought enormous good into the life of our country – in part by broadening the reach of economic opportunity. There was a time when economists took little if any notice at all of the poverty of black communities. Even in times of general economic growth, many lived in a perpetual recession, and the jobs available didn't promise much upward mobility. Our country still has a lot of progress to make on this score. But with 1.2 million businesses today owned and operated by African Americans, more and more are no longer just spectators on the prosperity of our country. They are stakeholders. As much as anyone else, they count on their government to help create the conditions of economic growth – and, as president, I intend to do.

Senator Obama and I have fundamental differences on economic policy. But when he describes my plan, I'm not sure his heart is always in it – so let me have a go at it myself. I believe that in a troubled economy, when folks are struggling to afford the necessities of life, higher taxes are the last thing we need. The economy isn't hurting because workers and businesses are under-taxed. Raising taxes eliminates jobs, hurts small businesses, and delays economic recovery.

Under my plan, we will preserve the current low rates as they are, so businesses large and small can hire more people. We will double the personal exemption from $3,500 to $7,000 for every dependent, in every family in America. We will offer every individual and family a large tax credit to buy their health care, so that their health insurance is theirs to keep even when they move or change jobs. And we will lower the business tax rate, so American companies open new plants and create more jobs in this country, instead of going overseas to flee the second-highest tax rate in the world.

My opponent and I have honest differences as well about the growth of government. And it may be that many of you share his view. But even allowing for disagreement, surely there is common ground in the principle that government cannot go on forever spending recklessly and incurring debt. Government has grown by 60 percent in the last eight years, because the Congress and this administration have failed to meet their responsibilities. And next year, total federal expenditures are predicted to reach over three trillion dollars. That is an awful lot for us to be spending when this nation is already more than nine trillion dollars in debt – or more than thirty thousand dollars in debt for every citizen. That's a debt our government plans to leave for your children and mine to bear. And that is a failure not only of financial foresight, but of moral obligation.

There will come a day when the road reaches a dead-end. And it won't be today's politicians who suffer the consequences. It will be American workers and their children who are left with worthless promises and trillion-dollar debts. We cannot let that happen. As President, I'll work with every member of Congress – Republican, Democrat, and Independent – who shares my commitment to reforming government and controlling spending. I'll order a top-to-bottom review of every federal program, department, and agency. We're going to demand accountability. We're going to make sure failed programs are not rewarded … and that discretionary spending is going where it belongs – to essential priorities like job training, the security of our citizens, and the care of our veterans.

To get our economy running at full strength again, we must also get a handle on the cost of energy. Under my plan, we will produce more of America's own energy. We will build at least 45 nuclear plants that will create over 700,000 good jobs to construct and operate them. We will develop clean coal technology – which alone will create tens of thousands of jobs in some of America's most hard-pressed areas. We will accelerate the development of wind and solar power and other renewable technologies, and we will help automakers design and sell cars that don't depend on gasoline. Production of hybrid, flex-fuel, and electric cars will bring America closer to energy independence. And it will bring jobs to auto plants, parts manufacturers, and the communities that support them.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Our country is passing through a very tough time. But Americans have been through worse, and beaten longer odds. The men and women of the NAACP know more than most about facing long odds, and overcoming adversity.

Many of you are veterans of the great civil rights struggles of a generation and more ago. Like my friend John Lewis, some of you have seen enough years to have known Martin Luther King, Jr., and even marched at his side or not far behind in Birmingham, Montgomery, or elsewhere. For all of this, like Dr. King, you were called agitators, trouble-makers, malcontents, and disturbers of the peace. These are often the terms applied to men and women of conscience who will not endure cruelty, nor abide injustice.

Perhaps with more charity than was always deserved, it was Dr. King who often reminded us that there was moral badness, and there was moral blindness, and they were not the same. It was this spirit that turned hatred into forgiveness, anger into conviction, and a bitter life into a great one. He loved and honored his country even when the feeling was unreturned, and counseled others to do the same. He gave his countrymen the benefit of the doubt – believing, as he wrote, that "returning hate for hate multiplies hate, adding deeper darkness to a night already devoid of stars. Darkness cannot drive out darkness; only light can do that."

I remember first learning what had happened in Memphis on the fourth of April, 1968, feeling just as everyone else did back home, only perhaps even more uncertain and alarmed for my country in the darkness that was then enclosed around me and my fellow captives. In our circumstances at the time, good news from America was hard to come by. But the bad news was a different matter, and each new report of violence, rioting, and other tribulations in America was delivered without delay. The enemy had correctly calculated that the news of Dr. King's death would deeply wound morale, and leave us worried and afraid for our country. Doubtless it boosted our captors' morale, confirming their belief that America was a lost cause, and that the future belonged to them.

Yet how differently it all turned out. And if they had been the more reflective kind, our enemies would have understood that the cause of Dr. King was bigger than any one man, and could not be stopped by force of violence. Struggle is rewarded in God's own time. Wrongs are set right and evil is overcome. We know this to be true because it is the story of your cause, and the story of our country.

As much as any other group in America, the NAACP has been at the center of that great and honorable cause. I'm here today as an admirer and a fellow American, an association that means more to me than any other. I am a candidate for president who seeks your vote and hopes to earn it. But whether or not I win your support, I need your goodwill and counsel. And should I succeed, I'll need it all the more. I have always believed in this country, in a good America, a great America. But I have always known we can build a better America, where no place or person is left without hope or opportunity by the sins of injustice or indifference. It would be among the great privileges of my life to work with you in that cause.

Thank you all very much.

Question and Answer

1) QUESTIONER: I am a flood survivor and I want to know what you will do about FEMA.

MCCAIN: The government's response to Katrina was a disgrace. I will combine the best in business and government to respond more competently to natural disasters. Attacks by natural calamities are just as bad, if not worse, than attacks by terrorists on our nation. I would also consider drills to see how we and our agencies respond.

2) QUESTIONER: We are concerned with justice and fairness of sentencing. With that in mind what kind of judges would you appoint?

MCCAIN: I would appoint judges who strictly adhere to and interpret The Constitution. I voted for Ginsberg and Breyer because I thought they were qualified. Why we strayed from those immortal words that all men are created equal from our founding fathers I will never know.

3) QUESTIONER: Will you fully fund NCLB?

MCCAIN: I will. NCLB also needs to be fixed. The status quo is not acceptable. Also, the rise in autism is an issue.

4) QUESTIONER: Did you miss the opportunity to fill out the NAACP civil rights survey and do you look forward to completing it in the future?

MCCAIN: We get hundreds of surveys and we fill out them all. Yes, we will complete it immediately. I'd be glad to.

5) QUESTIONER: I work with head start workers and federal funding has not been allocated to them. What will you do now as a senator so head start workers can get the funds needed to educate the poor?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

MCCAIN: I would be glad to fully fund those programs, but there has to be monitoring so we know there will be a return on the taxpayer's money. There's no reason you should resent any scrutiny, if you receive full funding. How's that?

FOLLOW-UP: The federal monitoring is from the people who run the programs. If I am making $17k a year, I cannot afford basic costs of living. These people have gone to school and gotten the mandates that have been allocated by city governments and they need to make living wages. What are you gonna do? We can't continue this way.

MCCAIN: I'll be glad to tell you exactly what I'm gonna do. As I said in my speech, a great and outstanding teacher such as yourself deserves rewards. I don't want someone to have tenure after only two years of teaching. I want us to reward good teachers and find bad teachers another line of work.
In NYC and New Orleans we've seen dramatic education improvements because of choice and competition and merit-based rewards.

6 Q) QUESTIONER: I am a pastor in San Fransisco. I would like to know your position on faith-based initiatives. We live in a nation where we are supposed to have freedom of and from religion. What is the point of these programs when we are supposed to have equality for all regardless of affiliation?

MCCAIN: I noticed Sen. Obama gave a speech on faith-based organizations. I think the some of the finest services rendered unto this country has come from them because of Judaeo-Christian values. These organizations represent the best of America because it manifests the ideas that we are to help the poor and heal the sick.

--
Cammie L. Croft
Tracking/Media Monitoring Director
Progressive Accountability Office
cammie@progressiveaccountability.org
202-609-7679 (office)
206-999-3064 (cell)

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jon Soltz, VoteVets.org" <info@votevets.org>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 8/19/2015 8:19:20 AM
Subject: Why this Iraq vet supports Iran deal

John -

If you haven't had the chance to read Garett Reppenhagen explain how his service in Iraq informs his support for a diplomacy-first approach with Iran, you should do that today. It's below.

Garett's story is unique, but he is by no means alone. VoteVets has collected over 1,000 stories from veterans who served in World War II, Vietnam, Korea, Iraq, and Afghanistan... all of whom support the deal.

Make a $3 contribution to help us elevate those stories ahead of September's Iran vote.

The Koch and Lieberman-linked organizations opposing this deal have unlimited resources. But these stories, and the experiences that inform them, are far more valuable.

Thanks for ensuring they get heard.

Jon Soltz
Iraq War Veteran & Chairman
VoteVets

VoteVets.org
Country. Service. Action.

Read my story and contribute $3 to VoteVets to elevate the voices of veterans like me who support a diplomacy-first approach with Iran.

John -

The last time the U.S. Military was called on in the name of stopping Weapons of Mass Destruction, I was stationed in the Diyala Province in Iraq as a Sniper in the U.S. Army 1st Infantry Division.

I participated in combat missions while the infrastructure of the country was destroyed, sectarian violence divided communities, millions were displaced from their homes, countless Iraqis were killed and injured, and our fellow service members were caught in the middle.

After helping to secure the scene of a HEMTT Tactical Truck that was destroyed by a roadside bomb in Iraq, and watching two female soldiers medivaced knowing they would likely not survive their injuries, I started to wonder what could have prevented the conflict I found myself deployed to.

Aside from the many American troops killed in action during Operation Iraqi Freedom, the burden of war continues to impact our veterans. Substance abuse, traumatic brain injuries, incarceration, homelessness, and suicide are just some of the issues veterans face coming home from war. Although these sacrifices are high, our military members take pride in risking their lives for our homes, families, and country.

That is why we need to ensure we do everything we can to prevent future war unless it is absolutely necessary. Our country needs to exhaust all diplomatic efforts before the possibility of military action is warranted. We owe it to the men and women that choose to serve this country.

The deal our State Department, and the other permanent members of the UN Security Council, has negotiated with Iran is the best diplomatic effort we can agree upon. It has great potential to stop Iran from obtaining nuclear weapons and prevent the future deployment of our Armed Forces.

VoteVets is elevating the voices of veterans like me who support this deal - contribute $3 to help ensure we are heard before Congress votes in September.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Before we see more of my brothers and sisters in uniform medivaced away from the combat zone let's support diplomacy and support the Iran Deal.

We have a very unique and important voice in this debate.

Thank for helping to ensure that it's heard.

Garett Reppenhagen
Iraq War Veteran
VoteVets

Contribute

PAID FOR BY VOTEVETS ACTION FUND

This email was sent to john.podesta@gmail.com. If that is not your preferred email address, click here . Click here if you'd like to unsubscribe. We try to send only the most important information and opportunities to participate via email. To sustain VoteVets with a contribution click here .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Robby Mook" <re47@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "Jake Sullivan" <jake.sullivan@gmail.com>
"Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com>
"Jennifer Palmieri" <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com>
"Kristina Schake" <kschake@hillaryclinton.com>
"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 4/19/2015 2:19:42 PM
Subject: Fwd: NYT: Book Questions Clinton Donations

The enviros may latch onto this going forward. Have we discussed when she will come out against Keystone? After POTUS vetoes?

and more than $1 million in payments to Mr. Clinton by a Canadian bank and major shareholder in the Keystone XL oil pipeline around the time the project was being debated in the State Department.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: Josh Schwerin <jschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: Sun, Apr 19, 2015 at 9:08 PM
Subject: NYT: Book Questions Clinton Donations
To: hrcrapid <HRCrapid@googlegroups.com >

Book Questions Clinton Donations

By AMY CHOZICK APRIL 19, 2015

http://www.nytimes.com/2015/04/20/us/politics/book-questions-clinton-donations.html?_r=0

The book does not hit shelves until May 5, but already the Republican Rand Paul has called its findings "big news" that will "shock people" and make voters "question" the candidacy of Hillary Rodham Clinton.

"Clinton Cash: The Untold Story of How and Why Foreign Governments and Businesses Helped Make Bill and Hillary Rich," by Peter Schweizer — a 186-page investigation of donations made to the Clinton Foundation by foreign entities — is proving the most anticipated and feared book of a presidential cycle still in its infancy.

The book, a copy of which was obtained by The New York Times, asserts that foreign entities who made payments to the Clinton Foundation and to Mr. Clinton through high speaking fees received favors from Mrs. Clinton's State Department in return.

"We will see a pattern of financial transactions involving the Clintons that occurred contemporaneous with favorable U.S. policy decisions benefiting those providing the funds," Mr. Schweizer writes.

His examples include a free-trade agreement in Colombia that benefited a major foundation donor's natural resource investments in the South American nation, development projects in the aftermath of the Haitian earthquake in 2010, and more than $1 million in payments to Mr. Clinton by a Canadian bank and major shareholder in the Keystone XL oil pipeline around the time the project was being debated in the State Department.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In the long lead up to Mrs. Clinton's campaign announcement, aides proved adept in swatting down critical books as conservative propaganda, including Edward Klein's "Blood Feud," about tensions between the Clintons and the Obamas, and Daniel Halper's "Clinton Inc.: The Audacious Rebuilding of a Political Machine."

But "Clinton Cash" is potentially more unsettling, both because of its focused reporting and because major news organizations are expected to pursue the story lines found in the book.

Members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee have been briefed about the book's findings, which have already made their way into several of the Republican presidential candidates' campaigns.

Conservative "super PACs " plan to seize on "Clinton Cash," and a pro-Democrat super PAC has already assembled a dossier on Mr. Schweizer, a speechwriting consultant to former President George W. Bush and a fellow at the conservative Hoover Institute, to make the case that he has a bias against Mrs. Clinton.

And the newly assembled Clinton campaign team is planning a full-court press to diminish the book as yet another conservative hit job.

Mr. Schweizer and a spokeswoman for HarperCollins, which is owned by News Corporation and is publishing the book, declined to comment.

The timing is problematic for Mrs. Clinton as she begins a campaign to position herself as a "champion for everyday Americans."

From 2001 to 2012, the Clintons' income was at least $136.5 million, Mr. Schweizer writes, using a figure previously reported in The Washington Post. "During Hillary's years of public service, the Clintons have conducted or facilitated hundreds of large transactions" with foreign governments, he writes. "Some of these transactions have put millions in their own pockets."

Continue reading the main story

The Clinton Foundation has come under scrutiny for accepting foreign donations while Mrs. Clinton served as secretary of state. Last week, the foundation revised its policy to allow donations from countries like Germany, Canada, the Netherlands and Britain but prohibit giving by other nations in the Middle East.

Mr. Schweizer's book will be released the same day former President Bill Clinton and the Clintons' daughter, Chelsea, will host the Clinton Global Initiative gathering with donors in Morocco, the culmination of a foundation trip to several African nations. (A chapter in the book is titled "Warlord Economics: The Clintons do Africa.")

There is a robust market for books critical of the Clintons. The thinly sourced "Blood Feud," by Mr. Klein, at one point overtook Mrs. Clinton's memoir "Hard Choices" on the best-seller list.

But whether Mr. Schweizer's book can deliver the same sales is not clear.

Mr. Schweizer writes mainly in the voice of a neutral journalist and meticulously documents his sources, including tax records and government documents, while leaving little doubt about his view of the Clintons.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

His reporting largely focuses on payments made to Mr. Clinton for speeches, which increased while his wife served as secretary of state, writing that "of the 13 Clinton speeches that fetched $500,000 or more, only two occurred during the years his wife was not secretary of state."

In 2011, Mr. Clinton made $13.3 million in speaking fees for 54 speeches, the majority of which were made overseas, the author writes. Among the connections he tries to draw is a $750,000 speaking fee to Mr. Clinton by the Swedish telecom company Ericsson and a State Department list of new sanctions on Iran that did not include telecom.

Mr. Schweizer, president of the Government Accountability Institute, is the author of the 2013 book "Extortion: How Politicians Extract Your Money, Buy Votes, and Line Their Own Pockets," and "Throw Them All Out" about elected officials receiving insider stock tips.

--
Josh Schwerin
Spokesperson
Hillary for America
@Josh Schwerin

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com .
To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Cheryl Mills" <cheryl.mills@gmail.com>
To: "Kristina Schake" <kristinakschake@gmail.com>
Date: 3/10/2015 4:14:12 AM
Subject: Re: Iran

+ Jake

On Tue, Mar 10, 2015 at 10:39 AM, Kristina Schake <kristinakschake@gmail.com > wrote:

> Language from Jake:
>
> Let me say a word on Iran. As Secretary of State, I worked with Congress on a bipartisan basis to construct the most effective sanctions regime in history. Those sanctions, along with patient and determined diplomacy, brought Iran to the negotiating table. Now the President and his team are in the midst of intense negotiations. Their goal is a diplomatic solution that would close off all of Iran's pathways to a nuclear bomb and give us unprecedented access and insight into Iran's nuclear program. Reasonable people can disagree about what exactly it will take to accomplish this objective, and we all must judge any final agreement on its merits. But right now, there is an urgent need to restore a bipartisan commitment to the patriotic idea that politics stops at the water's edge. The recent letter from Republican senators was out of step with the best traditions of American leadership. One has to ask: what was the purpose of this letter? There appear to be two logical answers -- either these Senators were trying to be helpful to the Iranians, or hurtful to the commander-in-chief in the midst of high-stakes international diplomacy. Either answer does discredit to the letter's signatories. We can all agree that a diplomatic solution that prevents Iran from acquiring a nuclear weapon is the right objective. Let's give the president the space and support he needs to achieve it. Let's choose statesmanship over politics.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
To: "Jake Sullivan" <jake.sullivan@gmail.com>
Date: 5/3/2015 12:28:44 PM
Subject: Re: 8 am Agenda & Standing Meetings / Calls

I'd stick with Bush/Rubio.

On Sunday, May 3, 2015, Jake Sullivan <jake.sullivan@gmail.com > wrote:

> It always makes sense to whack Steve King. And this is particularly outrageous and bigoted and [fill in the bad word]. But the question from you and the comms team is whether hitting King takes away from our effort to get a clean contrast with Bush/Rubio et al. They would also attack King, so it sort of lets them off the hook.
>
> On Sun, May 3, 2015 at 7:09 PM, Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com > wrote:
>
> > If you won't be on the call, Jake, can I ask one immigration question. Does it make any sense to whack Steve King for trying to change the Constitution to deny babies born here the right to American citizenship if their parents aren't citizens? (basically get rid of the 14th amendment). It seems like a great contrast to what HRC is proposing.
> >
> > Mandy Grunwald
> > Grunwald Communications
> > 202 973-9400
> >
> > -----Original Message-----
> > From: Jake Sullivan <jake.sullivan@gmail.com >
> > To: Kristina Schake <kschake@hillaryclinton.com >
> > Cc: Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com >; Huma Abedin <ha16@hillaryclinton.com >; Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com >; John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >; Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >; Margolis, Jim <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com >; Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com >; Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com >; John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com >; David Binder <David@db-research.com >; Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >; Marissa Astor <mastor@hillaryclinton.com >; Teddy Goff <tgoff@hillaryclinton.com >; Oren Shur <oshur@hillaryclinton.com >; Tony Carrk <tcarrk@hillaryclinton.com >
> > Sent: Sun, May 3, 2015 7:03 pm
> > Subject: Re: 8 am Agenda & Standing Meetings / Calls
> >
> > Marlon and I will be on a plane to Atlanta. Dan can walk through our immigration gameplan.
> >
> > On Sun, May 3, 2015 at 6:48 PM, Kristina Schake <kschake@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> >
> > > Our agenda for tomorrow's 8 am is:
> > >
> > > - Immigration plan
> > > - Clinton Cash update
> > >
> > > Just to remind everyone that these are our standing meetings/calls going forward:
> > >
> > > Monday, Wednesday, Friday 8 am Call
> > >
> > > Week & Month Look Ahead - Thursdays
> > > Normally this call will be every Thursday, but due to scheduling conflicts this week it will be Friday at 1 pm. It will be a one hour call and then every other week it will be a 2 hour in-person meeting. The first in-person meeting will be on May 14. Marissa is scheduling it with your offices.
> > >
> > > --
> > > Kristina Schake
> > > Hillary for America

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To:	CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date:	2/6/2015 9:45:53 AM
Subject:	2.6.15 CTR Weekend TPs
Attachments:	2.6.15 Weekend Package.docx

Hi all,

Please find Correct The Record's weekend talking points package both attached and below.

2.6.14 Weekend Package

1. Hillary Clinton: Fighting for America's Workers
2. Hillary Clinton: Vaccinations
3. Hillary Clinton: Tops New Millennial Poll
4. Eleven Things You Should Know About Hillary Clinton

TALKING POINTS: HILLARY CLINTON: FIGHTING FOR AMERICA'S WORKERS

"This is the country where if you work hard, you can make it. And each generation is supposed to have it a little better than the one before." – Hillary Clinton, 10/23/14

- Hillary Clinton has stood up and fought for American workers her entire life, reflecting her belief that our country's future depends on a strong and successful middle class.
- Clinton worked to close tax loopholes and called for eliminating "any tax break that promotes or rewards outsourcing." Hillary also supported legislation to discourage outsourcing in the private sector and to restrict federal agencies from outsourcing work.
- Clinton proposed a $1 billion per year innovation fund to encourage states to develop family leave and paid leave policies, and also called for providing paid parental leave to all federal employees.
- Clinton cofounded the bipartisan Senate Manufacturing Caucus and fought to bring new manufacturing technology to small and medium-sized businesses, which would help to create jobs and spur manufacturing growth.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- Clinton stood up against unfair Chinese trade practices and voted in favor of authorizing action on Chinese imports if the Chinese government did not reform its currency practices.
- Clinton worked to expand job training opportunities for workers and led efforts to bring together local businesses, governments, educational institutions and labor organizations to collaborate on new programs to train workers for modern technology jobs.
- Clinton backed efforts to expand protections for workers' pensions and to protect overtime pay for working Americans.
- Clinton fought to strengthen safety protections for coal miners and worked to secure health coverage for laid off and retired steelworkers.
- Clinton worked to give all American workers the opportunity to easily save for the future. Hillary proposed creating "American Retirement Accounts" that would give workers greater security on their savings and increase flexibility in making investments.

BOTTOM LINE: Hillary Clinton's life has been about fighting to protect and lift up American workers and their families. Hillary's vision for our future is reflected by her efforts to ensure everyone has a fair shot at the American Dream.

TALKING POINTS: HILLARY CLINTON AND VACCINATIONS

BACKGROUND: The recent measles outbreak has been attributed by many to a decline in childhood vaccinations, sparking a debate in America about the safety of vaccinating our children. As a result, some in the media and various pundits have accused Hillary Clinton of flip flopping on the vaccine issue.

THE FACTS:

Hillary Clinton has consistently supported researching the causes of autism and finding fact-based solutions to fight the disorder.

Hillary Clinton has a long record of protecting children in America and all over the world through life-saving vaccines.

In 2008 , Senator Clinton, along with President Obama and many others, wrote she was committed to investing in additional research to find the causes of autism.

Clinton wrote she supported additional research on the possible environmental causes of autism, including but not limited to, vaccinations.

It is a consistent approach by Secretary Clinton to seek and research in order to utilize the best information possible to come to a conclusion, exactly the process here.

HILLARY CLINTON'S LONG RECORD OF PROTECTING CHILDREN THROUGH VACCINATIONS:

- As First Lady, Hillary Clinton spearheaded the Childhood Immunization Initiative and worked to create the Vaccines for Children Program, bringing childhood immunization rates to an all-time high.
- She introduced or cosponsored more than 10 bills to promote awareness of vaccines and expand vaccine supplies for emergencies.
- Hillary cosponsored the Childhood Vaccine Supply Act to combat the shortage of routine childhood vaccines.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- As Secretary of State, Hillary Clinton used diplomacy to combat unfounded rumors about the dangers of polio vaccines.
- Today, through her work at the Clinton Foundation, the Clinton Health Access Initiative (CHAI) is partnering with governments of Kenya, Ethiopia, and Malawi to support the national rollout of new vaccines, which will prevent 50,000 child deaths each year.
- On Monday, February 2, 2015, Hillary Clinton tweeted, "The science is clear: The earth is round, the sky is blue, and #vaccineswork. Let's protect all our kids. #GrandmothersKnowBest."

TALKING POINTS: HILLARY CLINTON TOPS NEW MILLENNIAL POLL

BACKGROUND: A new Fusion Massive Millennial poll of 18-34 year olds conducted January 6-11, 2015 finds that Hillary Clinton leads the field of potential Democratic candidates and beats the preferred GOP nominee by double digits.

THE POLL:

- 57% of young Democrats polled chose Hillary Clinton as their preferred Democratic presidential nominee, 47% higher than the next potential candidate.
- In a head-to-head matchup with young Republicans' preferred GOP nominee, Mitt Romney, who eventually decided not to run, Hillary Clinton wins by double digits, 55%-31%.

THE BIG PICTURE:

- Even as right-wing attacks groups throw everything but the kitchen sink at Hillary Clinton, she continues to connect with Democrats, Independents and Americans of all backgrounds who are hungry for her experience, leadership and vision. Because of Hillary Clinton's years of public service, her strong record as a leader, and her commitment to being a voice to the voiceless, she has the support of so many Americans.
- This latest poll is in line with what others polls and pundits have been showing for months – that Hillary Clinton has unprecedented support, despite the onslaught of Republican attacks against her.
  - A Bloomberg Politics/Des Moines Register Iowa poll conducted January 26-29, 2015 finds that 56% of the likely Democratic caucus-goers polled in Iowa said that Hillary Clinton was their first choice for president, 40% ahead of the next potential candidate. The poll also shows that Hillary Clinton is viewed favorably by 84% of Democratic likely caucus-goers.
  - An ABC News/Washington Post poll conducted January 12-15, 2015 finds that Hillary Clinton leads each of the top potential GOP candidates in hypothetical matchups by double digits. According to the poll, Hillary leads Jeb Bush 54%-41%, Mitt Romney 55%-40%, Chris Christie 53%-40%, Rand Paul 54%-41%, and Mike Huckabee 56%-39%.
  - For 17 out of the past 18 years, Hillary Clinton has been named Americans' Most Admired Woman, according to a Gallup poll from December 8-11, 2014.
  - Clinton is extremely popular among Democrats: an NBC/Marist poll from July 7-13, 2014 puts her favorability/unfavorability rating in Iowa at 89 percent/6 percent; in New Hampshire it's even higher, at 94 percent/4 percent.
  - In polls conducted this summer in Ohio, New Jersey and Florida, Hillary Clinton had commanding leads over potential 2016 GOP contenders.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- According to a Quinnipiac press release on the Ohio poll , "Secretary Clinton, on the other hand, is almost everyone's favorite candidate."
- Regarding the New Jersey poll, a Quinnipiac official stated , "As Gov. Christopher Christie traipses around the nation, his presidential potential seems alive, but former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, the adopted girl next door, easily beats him in his home state."
- Based on the Florida poll, CNN reported that "Hillary Clinton is the clear 2016 frontrunner in the nation's largest presidential battleground state."

TALKING POINTS: ELEVEN THINGS YOU SHOULD KNOW ABOUT HILLARY CLINTON

Secretary Clinton helped restore America's leadership and standing in the world during a time of global challenges and changes. Secretary Clinton worked tirelessly to revitalize American diplomacy and strengthen alliances by traveling nearly a million miles for hundreds of meetings with foreign leaders in 112 countries. As America's lead diplomat, Secretary Clinton understood the importance of engaging the public and took diplomacy directly to people around the world. Just as she was as a senator, Secretary Clinton was a workhorse, often taking on difficult challenges and addressing them directly around the world.

Secretary Clinton built and maintained a coalition to enact the toughest sanctions in Iran's history. Secretary Clinton helped impose the toughest sanctions in Iran's history by getting Russia and China on board. Even the Wall Street Journal editorial board noted that, "Clinton surely pulled out every stop to get Russia and particularly China…on board." And as Howard Dean recently told CNN , "Hillary Clinton cranked up the sanctions for the first time under President Obama that actually made the Iranians come to the table."

Secretary Clinton played an integral role in the New START Treaty with Russia. Secretary Clinton played an active role in reaching a missile reduction agreement with Russia,working to push it through the Senate and securing more than the necessary two-thirds majority. She entered the treaty into force in Munich with her Russian counterpart. As a result of the treaty's passage, there will be fewer nuclear missile launchers . Simply put, the world is safer.

Secretary Clinton supported the raid that brought Osama bin Laden to justice. As NBC's Brian Williams reported on his website, "Secretary of Defense Robert Gates recommended an air strike with no forces on the ground. CIA Director Panetta supported a raid by Special Forces and so did Secretary of State Clinton."

Secretary Clinton helped avert all-out war in Gaza by negotiating a cease-fire between Israelis and Palestinians. In November 2012, after eight days of violence, Secretary Clinton negotiated a Gaza cease-fire with Egyptian president Mohamed Morsi. In an article titled "Hillary Clinton scores Gaza cease fire success," Politico noted that, "Secretary of State Hillary Clinton got a Gaza cease-fire right at the moment hope seemed dead for a rapid end to the violence…"

Secretary Clinton played a role in bringing one war to an end and planning for the end of another. Working closely with Department of Defense colleagues and as part of the President's national security team, Secretary Clinton played a role in the end of war in Iraq and in beginning a transition in Afghanistan, with all NATO allies having agreed to stand-up a post withdrawal support plan. As President Obama told 60 Minutes, it was "all a consequence of the great work that Hillary did and her team did and the State Department did in conjunction with our national security team."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Secretary Clinton was critical in America's "pivot to Asia" strategy. As Martin Indyk of the Brookings Institute wrote in Foreign Policy , "The 'pivot' to East Asia will probably be Obama's most lasting strategic achievement… [but] it is Clinton's too. She laid the groundwork, built the relationships, and developed the complex architecture of the new strategy — and she turned up at that pivotal moment in Vietnam in July 2010 to declare the U.S. commitment to the region." Secretary Clinton earned praise for her work in opening up Burma, a place that had not been visited by a Secretary of State in 50 years.

Secretary Clinton worked to build the coalition to oust Qadhafi and stop massacres in Libya. As the Washington Post reported upon the end of NATO operations in Libya, "U.S. officials and key allies are offering a detailed new defense of the approach and Clinton's pivotal role – both within a divided Cabinet and a fragile, assembled-on-the-fly international alliance. What emerges from these accounts is a picture of Clinton using her mixture of political pragmatism and tenacity to referee spats among NATO partners, secure crucial backing from Arab countries and tutor rebels on the fine points of message management."

Secretary Clinton engaged in economic statecraft. Secretary Clinton's focus on economic engagement resulted in increased investment through three new free trade agreements(Colombia , Panama and South Korea) and 15 Open Skies agreements including with Japan, Brazil, Saudi Arabia and Israel.

Secretary Clinton brought the State Department into the 21st Century. Secretary Clinton helped the State Department adapt to emerging issues such as cyber security by creating theCenter for Strategic Counterterrorism Communications to combat Al-Qaeda's growing influence online. She recognized the important role of energy in U.S. foreign policy and helped create theBureau of Energy Resources to protect our energy infrastructure and influence how nations move to cleaner fuel.

Secretary Clinton elevated the cause of women's rights to new heights. Secretary Clinton recognized women's rights as a major foreign policy issue. It is, according to Newsweek, the area of "hardships faced by women and girls across the world–that her impact has been most profound." Hillary convinced the White House to allow her to create a new position at the State Department: Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's Issues. Newsweek continued, "Across the world, in diverse and deeply reactionary cultures, Clinton and [Ambassador-at-Large] Verveer have spoken and fought to liberalize attitudes on women's role in the economy, girls' schooling, women's health, domestic violence, issues arising from war and conflict, and myriad other concerns."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "John Podesta" <jp66@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 4/23/2015 4:41:54 AM
Subject: Fwd: Formal response from me

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: Thu, Apr 23, 2015 at 1:10 AM
Subject: Fwd: Formal response from me
To: H <hdr29@hrcoffice.com >, Huma Abedin <ha16@hillaryclinton.com >, Nick Merrill <nmerrill@hillaryclinton.com >, John Podesta <jp66@hillaryclinton.com >, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >
Cc: Kristina Schake <kschake@hillaryclinton.com >, Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com >

The memo we sent to NYT follows.

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

> From: Brian Fallon <brianefallon@gmail.com >
> Date: April 23, 2015 at 12:50:45 AM EDT
> To: jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com , bfallon@hillaryclinton.com
> Subject: Fwd: Formal response from me
>
> ---------- Forwarded message ----------
> From: Brian Fallon <brianefallon@gmail.com >
> Date: Wed, Apr 22, 2015 at 9:15 PM
> Subject: Formal response from me
> To: Jo Becker <jbecker@nytimes.com >, "McIntire, Mike" <mcintire@nytimes.com >
>
> Below is the campaign's official response to your inquiry.
>
> MEMORANDUM
>
> TO: Jo Becker and Mike McIntyre, New York Times
>
> FROM: Brian Fallon, Hillary for America
>
> DATE: April 22, 2015
> RE: Response to story based on “Clinton Cash”
>
> ---
>
> The below memorandum presents our response to the questions you have posed in the course of your reporting on Peter Schweizer’s book, Clinton Cash.
>
> At the outset, it is important to note that no one – neither Mr. Schweizer, nor the Times, nor anyone else -- has ever produced a shred of evidence supporting the theory that Hillary Clinton ever took action as Secretary of State to support the interests of donors to the Clinton Foundation. Therefore, we are extremely disappointed that the New York Times intends to rely on research culled from a biased author like Mr. Schweizer. During our conversations with the Times, it has been unclear to what extent, if at all, the Times' reporting goes beyond the allegations made in Clinton Cash. This is troubling because, as has been well documented already, the book's author is a known Republican operative whose organization has links to the Koch brothers and a major donor to Ted Cruz. Moreover, the book's rollout has been coordinated with another Republican presidential candidate, Rand Paul. It is worrisome that the Times would repeat the claims from such a questionable source.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As we understand it, the crux of your story revolves around the allegations contained in the book's third chapter, entitled "Hillary's Reset." This chapter attempts to trace a connection between Frank Giustra, a known philanthropist who has long partnered with the Clinton Foundation, and the U.S. government's review of the proposed sale of a majority stake in Uranium One to a Russian-based company in 2010.

To suggest the State Department, under then-Secretary Clinton, exerted undue influence in the U.S. government's review of the sale of Uranium One is utterly baseless. It mischaracterizes the nature of the State Department's participation in such reviews, and also ignores the range of other regulatory agencies that ultimately supported this sale. It is impossible to view this allegation as anything other than just another in the many partisan conspiracy theories advanced in the Clinton Cash book.

To begin with, the fact of Mr. Giustra's contributions to the Clinton Foundation is not new. In fact, the only reason his contributions are known to the book's author is because the Foundation goes above and beyond what the law requires of nonprofit foundations in terms of disclosing its donors.

With respect to the State Department, it is but one of nine agencies involved in the CFIUS process. While the details of CFIUS deliberations are classified, it is widely known that it is the Treasury Department that serves as the lead agency in the body's reviews, and that the State Department very seldom serves in the role of "co-lead." Moreover, decisions by CFIUS are made on the basis of consensus. This means that to the extent anyone were to claim that the Uranium One sale might have raised national security questions, agencies such as the Department of Homeland Security and Defense Department would have been party to the approval and could have elevated any concerns to the President if they had them. In light of these facts, it is completely misleading to suggest that the State Department was in a position to steer the approval of this deal.

Apart from the fact that the State Department was one of just nine agencies involved in CFIUS, it is also true that within the State Department, the CFIUS approval process historically does not trigger the personal involvement of the Secretary of State. The State Department's principal representative to CFIUS was the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic, Energy and Business Affairs. During the time period in question, that position was held by Jose Fernandez. As you are aware, Mr. Fernandez has personally attested that "Secretary Clinton never intervened with me on any CFIUS matter."

In addition, the deal in question was approved by a range of regulatory bodies beyond CFIUS. This includes the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the Utah Department of Radiation. On account of the target company being Canadian, that country's regulators would also have had to approve the deal. They indeed did so.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The widespread nature of the approval of this transaction stemmed in part from the concessions that Russia made in the course of the review process. Indeed, one of the conditions imposed by the U.S. regulators is that U.S. uranium assets could not be exported and had to be sold in the United States. Senator John Barrasso (R-WY) verified this arrangement and said it satisfied him.

In our conversations, you have raised a possible contradiction in the fact that while CFIUS approved this particular transaction, it blocked a separate deal involving U.S. uranium assets sought by the Chinese government. This comparison is inaccurate. According to many press reports, the FirstGold investment was blocked because it was proximate to the Fallon Air Force Base, not because it involved uranium.

The bottom line is that the State Department was but one in a multitude of agencies that participated in the review of this widely supported transaction, and there is no evidence that the Department deviated in any way from its normal process involving CFIUS reviews. In fact, as noted above, the Department's principal representative to CFIUS at the time has confirmed that the Secretary never intervened with him in any CFIUS matter during his tenure there. Any allegations to the contrary are wholly unsubstantiated.

--
JP
jp66@hillaryclinton.com
For scheduling: mfisher@hillaryclinton.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Myroslaw Smorodsky" <msmorodsky@uaba.org>
To:	"Myroslaw Smorodsky" <msmorodsky@uaba.org>
Date:	2/6/2015 8:08:24 AM
Subject:	UABA Press Release; A Question for President Obama -- Then What?
Attachments:	15-02-06 A Question for President Obama - Then What.pdf

Ukrainian American Bar Association

PDF copy attached

Click here to view in PDF format

A Question for President Obama -- Then What?

On February 5, 2015, Terry Atlas, writing for Bloomberg News , stated "Washington policy makers are caught up in a debate reminiscent of the Cold War era: Should the U.S. send weapons to help an outgunned country resist Russian-backed aggression?" According to the article, the indecision of policy makers - as well as that of President Obama - is grounded on the question -- if weapons are supplied to Ukraine, Then What? Would it only anger Russia and make it more aggressive? Would it escalate the warfare and make a political solution more difficult to achieve?

The question that Washington policy makers and President Obama should be asking is -- if weapons are NOT supplied to Ukraine, Then What ?

The argument not to supply military aid to Ukraine is based in large part on the naïve assumption that hostilities in the eastern part of Ukraine are somehow not a war of aggression by Russia but are internal rebel activities by Ukrainians of Russian ethnicity and that Russia has good and honorable intentions to find a peaceful solution to this alleged "internal" crisis. This fallacious notion has been debunked by clear and convincing evidence to the contrary and is not reflective of a rational view of reality. The alleged "separatist rebels" are mercenaries hired, trained, supplied with weapons, and directed by Russia. Russian military personnel in the thousands are openly fighting, and many are dying, alongside these "separatist rebels" on Ukrainian soil.

There is also an unstated view in Western political circles that Russia would be politically satisfied with holding onto Crimea and that Eastern Ukraine [Luhansk and Donetsk regions] be quasi-independent entities within the sphere of direct influence of the Kremlin. According to this misguided rationale, if the West were to accept this scenario as the status quo [and convince Ukraine to such draconian terms], Russia would readily enter into a binding international agreement which would guarantee peace on the European continent for the future. As a reality check to this flawed logic, one only has to recall from recent memory countless historical events to realize that Russia has never lived up to any of its international agreements including nuclear non-proliferation treaties. One such glaring example that comes immediately to mind is the 1994 Budapest Memorandum wherein Russia profusely guaranteed that it would not violate Ukrainian sovereignty in exchange for which Ukraine surrendered the third largest nuclear arsenal in the world. Further, the Kremlin flagrantly continues to violate various other nuclear accords and proudly states that it will be expanding its nuclear armaments as well as its military potential -- and all international covenants to the contrary be damned. There is a saying "The best predictor of future behavior is past behavior."

History is also the best teacher. To understand Russia and its political and military intentions towards Ukraine, we need to look at history. Over the centuries, Russian political thought always viewed Ukraine as the linchpin to its imperialistic ambitions and desires. It has continuously fought to control not only Ukraine's territory, but also sought to destroy Ukrainian culture and ethos. As former Ukrainian Ambassador to the United Kingdom, V. Vassylenko stated in his recent essay, The 2014 War: An Endeavor for a Comprehensive Analysis ;

> The restoration of Ukraine's independence is intertwined with the inevitable revival of its national memory and individual national history, thus stripping Russia of a part of its alleged history, thereby destroying the myth of its millennium-old statehood, European identity and supposedly eternal and natural place of Russia in European civilization. Russian empire-minded chauvinists realize that, unless Ukraine with its territory, resources and human potential, is not subdued once again, Russia's attempts to restore its status of an empire will be futile….. p. 4
>
> Meanwhile, another less obvious goal of the Russian aggression is to test how ready and capable Western democracies are in resisting Russia's revanchist and expansionist plans to use force to return territories that had been parts of the Russian empire in the past. …..p. 8

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Russia's covert foreign policy objective is to undermine European and Euro-Atlantic unity and to create a Euro-Asian empire, stretching from Vladivostok to Lisbon thereby challenging and threatening the United States. p. 8

Viewed from the historical perspective, if weapons are not supplied to Ukraine so it can defend itself now, [and thereby, in essence, protect Western Europe] any "political solution" that does not permanently insure Ukrainian territorial integrity and the inviolability of its borders from Russian incursion by giving Ukraine the unfettered military ability to protect its national boundaries, is only temporary window dressing to appease the gullible conscience of Western leaders and to lull them into an unrealistic sense of security. If Ukraine is not afforded the necessary means to defend itself, then after a temporary illusionary respite in hostilities and the easing of economic sanctions, Russia will regroup, strengthen itself, and will exponentially continue its assault on Ukraine, thus drastically expanding the existing conflict to the entire European continent in the future. In the process, Russia will successfully undermine Western and NATO unity, European economic integration and security, greatly jeopardize world peace, and put America's national interests and security at high risk.

Then Washington foreign policy makers and future American Presidents will be asking the question: NOW WHAT?

February 6, 2015

Myroslaw Smorodsky, Esq.
730 West Saddle River Rd., Ho-Ho-Kus, NJ 07423
Communications Director of the Ukrainian American Bar Association (UABA)
Tel: 201-507-4500; Email; myroslaw@smorodsky.com ; Website; www.smorodsky.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Andres Moreno" <andres@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 8/26/2008 7:16:41 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Tracking Update: McCain Speech in Phoenix, AZ 08/26/08

Hello All,
Just got off the phone with our tracker, Ryan, on the ground in Phoenix, AZ. Below are the notes from our call.

Big Highlights

- Attacks on Obama and promises to vets largely a repetition, verbatim, of speech to DAV, VFW
    - Hits Obama on US' failure to "lead by example" comment, says he should state it outright -- "because that is a debate I welcome."
- Directly addresses Obama charge he'll privatize VA; adamant that this is an expansion
- Directly addresses Obama criticsm GI bill, says it would've been politically easier to sign GI bill but "I sought a better bill"
- Hits Obama on his Berlin speech for saying a "world that stands as one" ended the Cold War, and slips in POW reference in saying it was America that lead the democracies of the world to end the cold War
- Repeats promise of no more Walter Reed's.
- Says he will "save billions" by vetoing every earmark, which can be used for vets care
- Repeats blames on Congress for exacerbating problems in vet health care and energy problems

Phoenix, AZ: McCain Speech at American Legion National Convention 08/26/08
(Disclaimer: The following are notes, not direct quotes. If you'd like a quotable transcript or video of any part below, please email us.)

Background Details

- Stage Craft was all American Legion, no campaign signs
- 3,000 people - "this place is huge and packed"
- All veterans of the American Legion, representing all the states
- Audience members wore their legion hats with spouses
- two seating areas on either side of podium with 3 rows of veterans each, about 80 people on the stage
- Heavy press: 20 or so cameras, mix of natl and heavy local coverage
- Tracker didn't see any protesters
- McCain reading from teleprompter

Prepared Remarks:
90th Annual American Legion National Convention in Phoenix, Arizona

Thank you all very much. National Commander Marty Conatser, thank you for the kind introduction. National Adjutant Bob Spanogle, Auxiliary President Jan Pulvermacher-Ryan, Auxiliary Secretary Pam Gilley: thank you all. If I may speak for the gang at Tempe Post 2, we are honored to be in the company of our fellow members of the American Legion. Apparently it falls to me as well to offer an official welcome the Great State of Arizona. Our governor is out of town, up in Denver for some big party they're throwing there. I guess my invitation got lost in the mail.

All of us take pride in being members of this great organization. After its founding in 1919, the Legion served many of the more than four million American veterans of the First World War. Today just one of those veterans survives, a man of 107 named Frank Buckles. Frank lives in West Virginia, and last week in Orlando the folks at the VFW convention gave him a standing ovation. I have a feeling that you, too, will want to join in a round of applause for the last doughboy.

In all the years since, the men and women of the Legion have stayed faithful to their mission of service to one another and to country. In Europe, Asia, the Middle East, and elsewhere, America's veterans have faced different enemies, but they have always found the same friend and ally in the Legion, the VFW, and other veterans' service organizations. All of us returned from war with a few experiences we'd gladly forget, but the friendships and camaraderie we brought home are forever. For keeping us all together, and helping those most in need, we're all in the debt of the American Legion.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The men and women of the Legion believe in their country's cause in the world, and you have served and sacrificed for it. You know that when our leaders speak of this nation's history and purposes in the affairs of the world, they should do so with confidence, gratitude, and above all with moral clarity.

There are those who say that our day as the free world's leader has passed, that our moment is waning. They point to the anti-Americanism that is sometimes heard in Europe and elsewhere, and take this as a sign that America no longer has the strength or the moral credibility to lead. The criticisms tend to pass or quiet down when global threats and dangers appear. In times of trouble, free nations of the world still look to America for leadership, because they know the strength of America remains the greatest force for good on this earth.

My opponent had the chance to express such confidence in America, when he delivered a much anticipated address in Berlin. He was the picture of confidence, in some ways. But confidence in oneself and confidence in one's country are not the same. And in that speech, Senator Obama left an important point unclear. He suggested that the end of the Cold War proved that there was, "no challenge too great for a world that stands as one." Now I missed a few years of the Cold War, as the guest of one of our adversaries, but as I recall the world was deeply divided during the Cold War -- between the side of freedom and the side of tyranny. The Cold War ended not because the world stood "as one," but because the great democracies came together, bound together by sustained and decisive American leadership.

All of this is more than an academic debate. For the sake of our own security, and the defense of our values in the affairs of the world, American leadership is critical. While we have our share of critics around the world, when people in the oppressed nations of the world need support, and solidarity, and hope, they look to America. When they talk about our country, it is not with distrust or disdain, but with respect and affection. They do not resent or resist America's democratic influence in the world -- they thank God for it.

Just days after the Russian invasion of Georgia, Senator Obama had this to say about the crisis: "We've got to send a clear message to Russia and unify our allies. They can't charge into other countries. Of course it helps if we are leading by example on that point." End of quote. I guess we are left to figure out the rest for ourselves. It's unlikely he was alluding to Afghanistan, the nation we liberated after 9/11, and continue to help despite Russian complaints about our related deployments in Central Asia. And he probably didn't have Kosovo in mind either -- although Russia didn't care much for that military action, either. We and our NATO allies had to end the Serbian slaughter of civilians in Kosovo without UN approval, because the Russians blocked the effort in the Security Council.

If I catch Senator Obama's drift, then, our failure to "lead by example" was the liberation of Iraq. And if he really thinks that, by liberating Iraq from a dangerous tyrant, America somehow set a bad example that invited Russia to invade a small, peaceful, and democratic nation, then he should state it outright -- because that is a debate I welcome.

In the end, confusion about such questions only invites more trouble, violence, and aggression. To promote stability and peace, America must stand firmly on the side of freedom and justice. The next president must bring to office a clear-eyed view of our nation's role in the world, as the defender of the oppressed and a force for peace.

Through decades of struggle, free nations prevailed over tyranny in large measure because of the sacrifices of the men and women of the United States armed forces. And it will fall to the next commander in chief to make good on the obligation our government accepts every time any man or woman enters the military, and again when they receive their DD 214. Those we depend on as troops should know, when they become veterans, that they can depend on us. Honoring this obligation will require leadership. And I pledge to you that as president I will lead -- from the front -- to reform our VA system and make sure that veterans receive the respect and care they have earned.

The Walter Reed scandal was a disgrace unworthy of this nation -- and I intend to make sure that nothing like it is ever repeated. There are other problems as well that have not received as much media attention. And my administration will do the hard and necessary work of fixing them, even when the press and the public are not watching.

Reform begins with appointing a secretary of veterans affairs who is a leader of the highest caliber, and who listens to veterans and veterans' service organizations. My VA secretary must be a forceful advocate for veterans and forthright advisor to me, so we can make the right choices about budgeting, health care, and other veterans' benefit issues. He or she will also need to be a high-energy leader, too, because we'll have a lot of work to do in improving service to veterans.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Veterans must be treated fairly and expeditiously as they seek compensation for disability or illness. We owe them compassion and hands-on care in their transition to civilian life. We owe them training, rehabilitation, and education. We owe their families, parents and caregivers our concern and support. Veterans should never be deprived of quality medical care and mental health care coverage for illness or injury incurred as a result of their service to our country.

As president, I will do all that is in my power to ensure that those who serve today, and those who have served in the past, have access to the highest quality health, mental health and rehabilitative care in the world. And I will not accept a situation in which veterans are denied access to care on account of travel distances, backlogs of appointments, and years of pending disability evaluation and claims. We should no longer tolerate requiring veterans to make an appointment to stand in one line for a ticket to stand in another.

I'm not here to tell you that there is a cost that is too high to be paid in the care of our nation's veterans. I will make sure that Congress funds the VA health care budget in a sufficient, timely, and predictable manner. But I will say that every increase in funding must be matched by increases in accountability, both at the VA and in Congress. And this requires an end to certain practices and abuses that serve neither our veterans, our country, nor the reputation of Congress itself.

Exactly because funding VA programs command bipartisan support, some in the Congress like to attach unrelated appropriations and earmarks to VA bills. The result is to mix vital national priorities with wasteful and often worthless political pork. Earmarks show up in bills of every kind, and not just VA bills. That's how we end up budgeting hundreds of millions of dollars for bridges to nowhere, and for other wasteful projects that do not serve the public interest. The principle here is simple: Public money should serve the public good. If it's me sitting in the Oval Office, at the Resolute desk, those wasteful spending bills are going the way of all earmarks: straight back to the Congress with a veto.

When we make it clear to Congress that no earmark bill will be signed into law, that will save many billions of dollars that can be applied to essential priorities, and above all to the care of our veterans. But reform doesn't end there. We must also modernize our disability system to make sure that eligible service members receive benefits quickly, based on clear, predictable, and fair standards. And we must address the problems of capacity and access within our VA health care system. While this will involve a wide range of initiatives, I believe there is a simple and direct reform we should make right away.

My administration will create a Veterans' Care Access Card to be used by veterans with illness or injury incurred during their military service, and by those with lower incomes. This card will provide those without timely access to VA facilities the option of using high-quality health-care providers near their homes. For many veterans, the closest VA facility isn't close enough. And many of their local providers are already familiar with the most common needs of veterans. Often, all that prevents them from receiving local care is a system for sharing medical records among VA, DOD, and civilian hospitals and doctors. My reform will improve care, reduce risks, and broaden access all at the same time.

This card is not intended to either replace the VA or privatize veterans' health care, as some have wrongly charged. I believe the VA should always be there to provide top-quality care for our veterans. And I believe that the VA should continue to provide broad-spectrum health care to eligible veterans, in addition to specialized care in areas such as spinal injuries, prosthetics, and blindness -- services in which the VA sets the standard in medical care.

Even so, there are veterans eligible for care who are not currently able to receive it, on account of distance, wait times, or the absence of certain specialties. And for this group, the new card I propose will offer better alternatives, to provide the benefits they have earned.

Reform must also recognize that greater care is needed for certain types of injuries. In the Senate, I co-authored the Wounded Warrior Act, which was the first major legislative initiative to address post-traumatic stress disorder and traumatic brain injury. As president, I will build on this legislation to improve screening and treatment for these severe injuries suffered by many in Iraq and Afghanistan.

The VA must also broaden its care for the women who are entering the armed forces in greater numbers than ever, and who are suffering from the same war wounds -- visible and invisible -- suffered by other veterans. The American Legion was founded just one year before the women of America received the right to vote, in a constitutional amendment that became law 88 years ago today. Among the many wrongs that have been righted in that time, women are now welcomed and respected as equals in the ranks of the armed forces of the United States. Yet the growing ranks of women veterans have left the VA lagging behind in the services it provides. As rapidly as possible, we must improve the VA system so that it can fully assess and treat conditions that predominantly or exclusively affect women. And here the Veterans Care Access Card will prove especially valuable, affording women medical options while the VA improves capaci ty and expands services.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

These are among the elements of my reform agenda for the VA system. And today, as other occasions, I have stated in the plainest, most straightforward terms that the Veterans Health Care Access Card will expand existing benefits. I don't expect this will deter the Obama campaign from misrepresenting my proposals, but lest there be any doubt you have my pledge: My reforms would not force anyone to go to a non-VA facility, and do not signal privatization of the VA. Use of the Card would be optional. Only high quality health care providers would be used. Participating veterans would incur no additional charges. And my reforms will not replace any scheduled expansion of the VA network -- including those facilities designed to serve veterans living in rural and remote areas. This is, very simply, an effort to expand care to a group of eligible veterans who are not now receiving care.

I suppose from my opponent's vantage point, veterans concerns are just one more issue to be spun or worked to advantage. This would explain why he has also taken liberties with my position on the GI Bill. In its initial version, that bill failed to address the number one education request that I've heard from career service members and their families -- the freedom to transfer their benefits to a spouse or a child. The bill also did nothing to retain the young officer and enlisted leaders who form the backbone of our all-volunteer force.

As a political proposition, it would have much easier for me to have just signed on to what I considered flawed legislation. But the people of Arizona, and of all America, expect more from their representatives than that, and instead I sought a better bill. I'm proud to say that the result is a law that better serves our military, better serves military families, and better serves the interests of our country.

No one who has worn the uniform of his or her country can ever take these matters lightly. We all learned an ethic in the service of looking after one another, of leaving no one behind, and this commitment did not end when we left the service. As a matter of duty and of honor, whatever our commitments to veterans cost, if I am president those commitments will be kept.

The next president will have many responsibilities to the American people, and I take them all seriously. But if I am elected, I will have one responsibility that outweighs all the others. And that is to use whatever talents I possess, and every resource God has granted me to protect the security of this great and good nation from all enemies foreign and domestic.

It is every veteran's hope that should their children be called upon to answer a call to arms, the battle will be necessary and the field well chosen. But that is not their responsibility. It belongs to the government that called them. As it once was for us, their honor will be in their answer not their summons. Whatever we think about how and why we went to war in Iraq, we are all humbled by and grateful for their example. They now deserve the distinction of the best Americans, and we owe them a debt we can never fully repay. We can only offer the small tribute of our humility and our commitment to do all that we can do, in less trying and costly circumstances, to help keep this nation worthy of their sacrifice.

Many of them have served multiple tours in Iraq and Afghanistan. Many had their tours extended. Many returned to combat sooner than they had been led to expect. It was a sad and hard thing to ask so much more of Americans who have already given more than their fair share to the defense of our country. Few of them and their families will have received the news about additional and longer deployments without aiming a few appropriate complaints in the general direction of people like me, who helped make the decision to send them there. And then they shouldered a rifle or climbed in a cockpit and risked everything -- everything -- to accomplish their mission, to protect another people's freedom and our own country from harm.

It is a privilege beyond measure to live in a country served by them. I have had the good fortune to know personally a great many brave and selfless patriots who sacrificed and shed blood to defend America. But I have known none braver or better than those who do so today. They are our inspiration, as I suspect all of you were once theirs. And I pray to a loving God that He bless and protect them. Thank you.

--
Andres Moreno

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Tracking/Media Monitoring Director
ProgressiveAccountability.org (PAO)
202-609-7688 (office)
703-501-6566 (cell)
andres@progressiveaccountability.org

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~

You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "t r u t h o u t" <messenger@truthout.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 9/22/2014 11:19:01 AM
Subject: UN Report: Human-Caused Climate Disruption Is "Severe, Pervasive, Irreversible"

View Recent Newsletters

Tell a friend about Truthout!

Donate Today!

Truthout is a 501(c)3 nonprofit organization; donations are tax deductible.

Monday, 22 September 2014

truthout

Dahr Jamail | UN Report: Human-Caused Climate Disruption Is "Severe, Pervasive, Irreversible"

Dahr Jamail, Truthout: A recently released draft report of the UN's Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change concluded that anthropogenic climate disruption is fully upon us and will dramatically worsen unless something is done immediately - on the level of a wartime response.

Read the Article

William Rivers Pitt | Fascism 101: The Police and Media Control

William Rivers Pitt, Truthout: If you are a cadet in training with the St. Louis County and Municipal Police Academy, good news! Beginning at 8 am on October 24, you are welcome to attend a seminar titled "OFFICER-INVOLVED SHOOTING - YOU CAN WIN WITH THE MEDIA."

Read the Article

At New York March, Activists Work to Connect Capitalist Culprits to Climate Crisis

Matt Surrusco, Truthout: At the largest climate march in history, which saw some 310,000 people converge on New York City streets on September 21, individual activists and organizations made a point to tie climate disruption to those seen as most responsible - major corporations, the financial industry and the governments that allow them to pollute with impunity.

Read the Article

Dean Baker | The Mysteries of Inequality Are Only Mysterious to Elites

Dean Baker, Truthout: The government openly acts to ensure that wages don't rise, and it also protects Wall Street high flyers who managed to sink their banks with their bad bets. Maybe an economist will win a Nobel prize for figuring out why inequality is increasing.

Read the Article

BuzzFlash

Nearly Annihilating Native Americans Led to Abandoning a Respect for Nature's Limits

Mark Karlin, BuzzFlash at Truthout: Day by day, as global warming accelerates, we are in need of developing an economic system that is connected to the soul of the earth.

Read the BuzzFlash Commentary

Flood Wall Street Protesters Risked Arrest at New York Climate Change Sit-In

Read the Article at Reuters

Rockefellers, Heirs to an Oil Fortune, Will

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Imagining Our Dark and Stormy Future: Naomi Klein's This Changes Everything

Emily Johnston, Truthout: If you generally avoid reading about climate change (out of paralysis, fear or grief) or wonder whether there's any hope, or what hope would even look like in the context of a biosphere in crisis, read Naomi Klein's This Changes Everything.

Read the Review

Education With a Debt Sentence: For-Profit Colleges as American Dream Crushers and Factories of Debt

Astra Taylor and Hannah Appel, TomDispatch: In the past, US higher education has always been associated with upward mobility, but with student loan debt quadrupling between 2003 and 2013, it's time to ask whether education alone can really move people up the class ladder.

Read the Article

Can a "Firewall Strategy" Keep Big Energy Out of Climate Talks? It Worked for Fighting Tobacco

Alexis Goldstein, YES! Magazine: Kicking the polluters out of the negotiations may sound like wishful thinking. But there is a precedent: the global effort to regulate the tobacco industry.

Read the Article

Marijuana Decriminalization a Racial Justice Victory in Philadelphia

Kate Aronoff, Waging Nonviolence: Philadelphia will soon become the largest US city where you can have marijuana and smoke it too - at least without going to jail. Rather than arrest, being caught with anything under an ounce of marijuana will carry with it a $25 fine and a citation.

Read the Article

Attacking J Street Won't Bring Justice for Palestinians

Robert Naiman, Truthout: Take issue with J Street, which seeks a two-state solution in the Middle East and also supported strikes on Gaza, but any plausible vision for a future progressive victory includes J Street in the winner's circle.

Read the Article

On the News With Thom Hartmann: Senate GOP Blocks Legislation on Gender Pay Gap, and More

In today's On the News segment: Senate Republicans block legislation aimed at closing the gender pay gap; voters in Sweden say "no" to austerity; our government may have bailed out Wall Street, but Rolling Jubilee is bailing out students; and more.

Watch the Video and Read the Transcript

The Troubling Way We Pay Hospitals in Maine and Throughout the US

Philip Caper, Bangor Daily News: A study published in the current issue of

Divest Charity From Fossil Fuels

Read the Article at The New York Times

Climate Riders Roll to Fight the Corporate Climate Killers

Read the Article at BuzzFlash

Pentagon Allows Police Accused of Civil Rights Abuses to Apply for Military Gear

Read the Article at the Associated Press

US Ramping Up Major Renewal in Nuclear Arms

Read the Article at The New York Times

How Rich Old White Men Are Taking Lunch Money Away From Inner-City Black Kids

Read the Article at BuzzFlash

Worldwide Marches: John Kerry Says to Take Climate Change as Seriously as the Fight Against Ebola and ISIS

Read the Article at The Guardian

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Health Affairs found that hospitals in the United States spend about twice as much per capita on administration as the seven other countries studied.

Read the Article

Uganda's Youth Discover the Beauty in Farming

Amy Fallon, Inter Press Service: According to the State of Uganda Population Report 2013, four out of every five of Uganda's 17.3 million women are employed in agriculture. The majority of these women work as subsistence farmers.

Read the Article

Editorial Cartoon: "Obamacare"

Cartoonist Jen Sorensen - whose work will now be featured weekly on Truthout - gives right-wing Obamacare naysayers a dose of their own medicine.

Read the Cartoon

Support Truthout with a tax-deductible donation

Please add messenger@truthout.org to ensure you receive our messages

Truthout is a proud member of the New spaper Guild/CWA, Local 36047

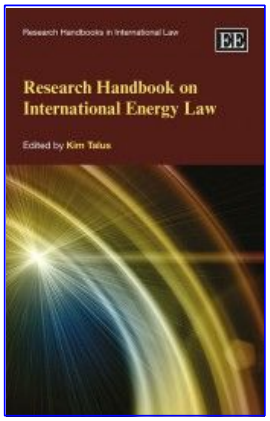
Subscribe | Unsubscribe

Privacy Policy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Edward Elgar Publishing" <elgarsubscribe@e-elgar.com>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 10/28/2015 9:11:33 AM
Subject: New Titles on Energy Reference No. (134180)

Energy



Elgaronline

Click here to read the introduction for free. A full text download of this title is available for subscribing institutions only. Ask your librarian if your institution subscribes.

Research Handbook on International Energy Law

Series: Research Handbooks in International Law series

Kim Talus

Edited by Kim Talus, Professor of European Law, University of Eastern Finland

International energy law is an elusive but important concept. There is no body of law called 'international energy law', nor is there any universally accepted definition for it, yet many specialised areas of international law have a direct relationship with energy policy. The Research Handbook on International Energy Law examines various aspects of international energy law and offers a comprehensive account of its basic concepts and processes.

2014	November 2015
704 pp Hardback	704 pp Paperback
978 1 78100 219 3	978 1 78347 890 3
~~$295.00~~ Online price: $265.50	~~$69.95~~ Online price: $55.96

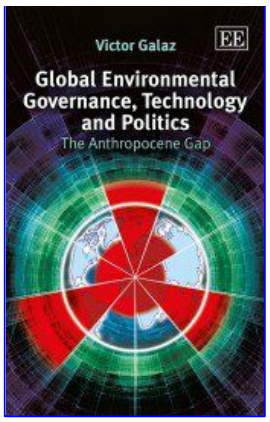
Ebooks from $15.37 for monographs and $48.00 for handbooks are available on Google and Ebooks.com. Prices vary due to retailer discount and local tax.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.



Elgaronline

Click here to read the introduction for free. A full text download of this title is available for subscribing institutions only. Ask your librarian if your institution subscribes.

Global Environmental Governance, Technology and Politics

The Anthropocene Gap

Victor Galaz

Victor Galaz, Associate Professor in Political Science, Stockholm Resilience Centre, Stockholm University, Sweden

We live on an increasingly human-dominated planet. Our impact on the Earth has become so huge that researchers now suggest that it merits its own geological epoch - the 'Anthropocene' - the age of humans. Combining theory development and case studies of 'planetary boundaries', emerging infectious diseases, financial markets and geoengineering, this groundbreaking book explores the 'Anthropocene Gap' otherwise known as society's current failure to address the most profound environmental challenges of our times.

2014	November 2015
208 pp Hardback	208 pp Paperback
978 1 78195 554 3	978 1 78347 891 0
~~$110.00~~ Online price: $99.00	~~$29.95~~ Online price: $23.96

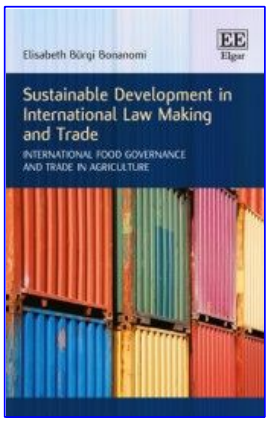
Ebooks from $15.37 for monographs and $48.00 for handbooks are available on Google and Ebooks.com. Prices vary due to retailer discount and local tax.



Elgaronline

Click here to read the introduction for free. A full text download of this title is available for subscribing institutions only. Ask your librarian if your institution subscribes.

Sustainable Development in International Law Making and Trade

International Food Governance and Trade in Agriculture

Elisabeth Bürgi Bonanomi

Elisabeth Bürgi Bonanomi, Attorney at Law and Senior Lecturer, World Trade Institute and Centre for Environment and Development, University of Bern, Switzerland

This timely book provides an accessible insight into how the concept of sustainable development can be made operational through its translation into legal terms. Understood as a multidimensional legal principle, sustainable development facilitates coherent international law making. Using this notion as an analytical lens on the WTO Agreement on Agriculture, the book considers the unresolved question of what a sustainable and coherent agricultural trade agreement could look like.

November 2015
456 pp Hardback
978 1 78471 726 1
~~$170.00~~ Online price: $153.00

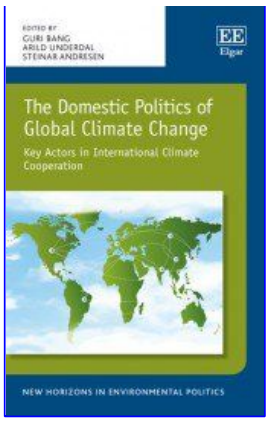
Ebooks from $15.37 for monographs and $48.00 for handbooks are available on Google and Ebooks.com. Prices vary due to retailer discount and local tax.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.



Elgaronline

Click here to read the introduction for free. A full text download of this title is available for subscribing institutions only. Ask your librarian if your institution subscribes.

The Domestic Politics of Global Climate Change

Key Actors in International Climate Cooperation

Series: New Horizons in Environmental Politics series

Guri Bang, Arild Underdal, Steinar Andresen

Edited by Guri Bang, Center for International Climate and Environmental Research – Oslo (CICERO), Arild Underdal, Department of Political Science, University of Oslo and Center for International Climate and Environmental Research – Oslo (CICERO) and Steinar Andresen, Fridtjof Nansen Institute, Norway

Why are some countries more willing and able than others to engage in climate change mitigation? The Domestic Politics of Global Climate Change compiles insights from experts in comparative politics and international relations to describe and explain climate policy trajectories of seven key actors: Brazil, China, the European Union, India, Japan, Russia, and the United States. Using a common conceptual framework, the authors find that ambitious climate policy change is limited by stable material parameters and that governmental supply of mitigation policies meet (or even exceed) societal demand in most cases. Given the important roles that the seven actors play in addressing global climate change, the book's in-depth comparative analysis will help readers assess the prospects for a new and more effective international climate agreement for 2020 and beyond.

November 2015
224 pp Hardback
978 1 78471 492 5
~~$110.00~~ Online price: $99.00

Ebooks from $15.37 for monographs and $48.00 for handbooks are available on Google and Ebooks.com. Prices vary due to retailer discount and local tax.

Connect with us Read our blog

To unsubscribe from ALL New Book Alerts please email: elgarunsubscribe@e-elgar.com with the text 'Unsubscribe from all' in the subject line. To unsubscribe from New Book Alerts in the area of Energy please email: elgarunsubscribe@e-elgar.com with the text 'Unsubscribe from Energy'.

Privacy policy Contact us Submit a proposal www.e-elgar.com www.elgaronline.com

Edward Elgar Publishing Ltd. is registered in the UK at: The Lypiatts, 15 Lansdown Road, Cheltenham, Glos GL50 2JA. Registered number: 2041703

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
To: "Prof. John Deutch" <jmd@mit.edu>
Date: 8/10/2015 6:23:22 AM
Subject: Re: Age of nuclear fleet

Grazie.

On Aug 10, 2015 8:46 AM, "John M Deutch" <jmd@mit.edu > wrote:

> John,
>
> Enjoyed breakfast. Here is the answer to the first question -- as we thought. The U.S. fleet begins to pass 60 years of age around 2030 and all are over 60 by 2050.
>
> My guess is most of the post 60 reactors will not seek license renewal for technical reasons. And if granted extensions very considerable capital costs mods would be required with likely accompanying reductions in capacity factors from the high 90+ levels of today. So absent unexpected options for nuclear, and post 2040 reduction in generation should be expected.
>
> John
>
> **********
> John Deutch
> Department of Chemistry
> Room 6-215
> MIT
> Cambridge MA 02139
>
> e-mail jmd@mit.edu
> Tel: 617 253 1479
> Fax: 617 258 5700

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jake Sullivan" <jake.sullivan@gmail.com>
To: "John Anzalone" <john@algpolling.com>
Date: 4/9/2015 11:31:10 AM
Subject: Re: Rough first crack

On college:

- We can't allow student debt to be dragging our young people down, when education is supposed to life them up. Here in Iowa, an average student will graduate from a 4-year college or university with nearly $30,000 in debt -- the 9th highest debt burden in the country. Shady for-profit colleges and abusive debt servicers are getting rich while students, families, and taxpayers get taken for a ride. I will propose ideas to fix these problems.

On voting rights:

Modernizing the voter registration system could add up to 50 million unregistered citizens to the rolls, cheaply, conveniently, and accurately.

On security

We need to protect America and Americans from the dangers we face, and assert confident American leadership to shape global events rather than be shaped by them.

POLICY

- We need to be strong and smart in dealing with new security challenges, like cyber, pandemics like Ebola, and emerging terrorist threats. We need to be strong and smart in dealing with the old geopolitical games that countries like Russia and China will play. And we need to be strong and smart in seizing opportunities to advance democracy, human rights and human dignity everywhere we can.

[could stop there or could add ...]

- We are in a long-term struggle against terrorism and violent extremism, and we need to be strong, disciplined, and smart to defeat the enemy. Let's lead the world in a comprehensive approach to restoring stability in the Middle East by confronting ISIS, checking Iranian aggression, dealing with the terrible humanitarian toll in Syria, and defending Israel at all costs.

- We are dealing with a canny operator in Vladimir Putin. Let's position ourselves and our allies for success by strengthening NATO, breaking Europe's dependence on Russian oil, and supporting a strong, united democratic Ukraine.

- We need to shape China's rise and make sure China plays by the rules. Let's cooperate with them where it is in our interest, and otherwise we should out-compete them and everyone else.

On Thu, Apr 9, 2015 at 6:20 PM, John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com> wrote:

> I took it as a framing statement for each bucket with several proof points underneath it.
>
> — John Anzalone
> Anzalone Liszt Grove Research
> 334-387-3121
> www.algpolling.com
> twitter: @AnzaloneLiszt
>
> ---
>
> From: Mindy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com>
> Date: Thursday, April 9, 2015 at 6:19 PM
> To: Joel Beneneson <Jbenenson@bsgco.com>
> Cc: Jim Margolis <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>, Teddy Goff <teddy.goff@gmail.com>, Robby Mook <robbymook2015@gmail.com>, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com>, Jennifer Palmieri <jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com>, Kristina Schake <kristinakschake@gmail.com>, Jake Sullivan <jake.sullivan@gmail.com>, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hrcoffice.com>, John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com>, Huma Abedin <huma@hrcoffice.com>, "esepp@equitablegrowth.org" <esepp@equitablegrowth.org>, Lona Valmoro <lvalmoro@hrcoffice.com>, "Ellen.Esterhay@gmmb.com" <Ellen.Esterhay@gmmb.com>, Sawsan Bay

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

<sbay@hrcoffice.com >, Shannon Currie <scurrie@bsgco.com >, Mona Thinavongsa <Mona@algpolling.com >, Katie Connolly <kconnolly@bsgco.com >
Subject: Re: Rough first crack

I thought what HRC was looking for was a sixty second-ish billboard of these four fights before she goes into detail about them.

What did others think?

Mandy Grunwald
Grunwald Communications
202 973-9400

On Apr 9, 2015, at 5:45 PM, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com > wrote:

> Tyring to keep it simple
>
> ---
>
> From: Marisa McAuliffe [mailto:mmcauliffe@hrcoffice.com]
> Sent: Thursday, April 09, 2015 12:34 PM
> To: Marissa Astor
> Cc: Teddy Goff; Jim Margolis; Joel Benenson; Robby; John Podesta; Mandy Grunwald; jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com ; kristinakschake@gmail.com ; Jake Sullivan; Dan Schwerin; John Anzalone; Huma Abedin; esepp@equitablegrowth.org ; Lona Valmoro; Ellen.Esterhay@gmmb.com ; Sawsan Bay; Shannon Currie; Mona Thinavongsa
> Subject: RE: Call with HRC
>
> Last change. Locking in 4:30pm.
>
> ---
>
> From: Marisa McAuliffe
> Sent: Thursday, April 09, 2015 11:18 AM
> To: Marissa Astor
> Cc: Teddy Goff; Margolis, Jim; Joel Benenson; Robby; John Podesta; Mandy Grunwald; jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com ; kristinakschake@gmail.com ; Jake Sullivan; Dan Schwerin; John Anzalone; Huma Abedin; esepp@equitablegrowth.org ; Lona Valmoro; 'Ellen.Esterhay@gmmb.com '; Sawsan Bay
> Subject: RE: Call with HRC
>
> Apologies for another change – looks like 2:00pm will be the best time in order for prep materials to be ready. I'll send around a calendar invite now as well. Best, Marisa
>
> ---
>
> From: Marisa McAuliffe
> Sent: Thursday, April 09, 2015 9:49 AM
> To: Marissa Astor
> Cc: Teddy Goff; Margolis, Jim; Joel Benenson; Robby; John Podesta; Mandy Grunwald; jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com ; kristinakschake@gmail.com ; Jake Sullivan; Dan Schwerin; John Anzalone; Huma Abedin; esepp@equitablegrowth.org ; Lona Valmoro
> Subject: Re: Call with HRC
>
> Thank you. Confirmed for noon:
>
> 206-402-0100
>
> 930969#
>
> On Apr 9, 2015, at 9:32 AM, Marissa Astor <marissa.astor@icloud.com > wrote:
>
> > We will make noon work for Robby.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: Teddy Goff <teddy.goff@gmail.com >
Date: Thursday, April 9, 2015 at 9:05 AM
To: "Margolis, Jim" <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com >
Cc: Marisa McAuliffe <mmcauliffe@hrcoffice.com >, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com >, Robby Mook <robbymook2015@gmail.com >, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >, Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com >, "jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com " <jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com >, "kristinakschake@gmail.com " <kristinakschake@gmail.com >, Jake Sullivan <jake.sullivan@gmail.com >, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hrcoffice.com >, John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com >, Marissa Astor <marissa.astor@icloud.com >, Huma Abedin <huma@hrcoffice.com >, "esepp@equitablegrowth.org " <esepp@equitablegrowth.org >, Lona Valmoro <lvalmoro@hrcoffice.com >
Subject: Re: Call with HRC

Noon works here

On Thursday, April 9, 2015, Margolis, Jim <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com > wrote:

> I am suppose to film Gen Powell til 11:30 so noon would work
>
> From: Marisa McAuliffe <mmcauliffe@hrcoffice.com >
> Date: Thursday, April 9, 2015 at 9:03 AM
> To: Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com >
> Cc: Robby <robbymook2015@gmail.com >, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >, GMMB GMMB <jim.margolis@gmmb.com >, Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com >, Jen Palmieri <jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com >, Kristina Schake <kristinakschake@gmail.com >, Jake Sullivan <jake.sullivan@gmail.com >, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hrcoffice.com >, Teddy Goff <teddy.goff@gmail.com >, John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com >, "marissa.astor@icloud.com " <marissa.astor@icloud.com >, Huma Abedin <huma@hrcoffice.com >, "esepp@equitablegrowth.org " <esepp@equitablegrowth.org >, Lona Valmoro <lvalmoro@hrcoffice.com >
> Subject: RE: Call with HRC
>
> Would noon work for everyone (she's flexible on timing)?
>
> From: Joel Benenson [mailto:jbenenson@bsgco.com]
> Sent: Thursday, April 09, 2015 9:02 AM
> To: Marisa McAuliffe
> Cc: Robby; John Podesta; Jim Margolis; Mandy Grunwald; jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com ; kristinakschake@gmail.com; Jake Sullivan; Dan Schwerin; Teddy Goff; John Anzalone; marissa.astor@icloud.com; Huma Abedin; esepp@equitablegrowth.org ; Lona Valmoro
> Subject: Re: Call with HRC
>
> On a flight that is scheduled to land at 11:30
>
> Sent from my iPhone
>
> On Apr 9, 2015, at 9:00 AM, Marisa McAuliffe <mmcauliffe@hrcoffice.com > wrote:
>
> > Hi all – HRC would like to have a call with you today. Please let me know if 11:00am will NOT work for you. Call in information is:
> >
> > 206-402-0100
> >
> > 930969#
> >
> > Best,
> > Marisa

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Marisa McAuliffe

Office of Hillary Rodham Clinton

646-647-2742 (o)

813-480-9370 (c)

This email is intended only for the named addressee. It may contain information that is confidential/private, legally privileged, or copyright-protected, and you should handle it accordingly. If you are not the intended recipient, you do not have legal rights to retain, copy, or distribute this email or its contents, and should promptly delete the email and all electronic copies in your system; do not retain copies in any media. If you have received this email in error, please notify the sender promptly. Thank you.

<Four Fights - IOWA - JB.docx>

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Hudson Institute" <events@hudson.org>
To:	podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date:	12/14/2015 9:15:03 AM
Subject:	Upcoming Events: Fighting Kleptocracy, Regional Security in the Pacific, Venezuela ’s Elections, and the Muslim World in Crisis

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 12/1/2014 2:11:56 AM
Subject: Correct The Record Monday December 1, 2014 Morning Roundup

Correct The Record Monday December 1, 2014 Morning Roundup:

Headlines:

The Daily Beast: "Remember When Republicans Loved Hillary Clinton?"

[Subtitle:] "Today they may be sketching out their best attacks on the Democrats' leading potential candidate for 2016, but once Dick Cheney, Paul Ryan, et al. had plenty of nice things to say."

Winnipeg Free Press: "Clinton coming to Winnipeg"

"Former U.S. secretary of state Hillary Rodham Clinton, who is widely expected to run for the Democratic party presidential nomination in the 2016 election, will deliver the keynote address at an event at the RBC Winnipeg Convention Centre on Jan. 21."

National Journal: "Can Clinton Win Back the White Working Class?"

"One of the central challenges facing a Clinton campaign will be managing to win back enough of those voters, especially in a working-class-heavy battleground like Iowa."

Bloomberg: "Analyst: Hillary Clinton 'Lost Her Fastball,' and Jeb Bush Won't Likely Win"

"In an e-mail on Sunday evening, Rose clarified that he misheard Cook, who instead said that Clinton had a 25- to 30-percent chance of passing on a White House bid."

MSNBC: "Charlie Cook: Hillary's still (probably) running"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Veteran political analyst Charlie Cook says he never predicted that Hillary Clinton is unlikely to run for president."

Bloomberg: "The Torch Is Being Passed to A New Generation of Right-Wing Media"

[Subtitle:] "At the Washington Free Beacon The Federalist, and the Independent Journal Review, They're Ready to Pay Any Price, Bear Any Burden to Defeat Jon Stewart and his ilk."

USA Today column: University of Tennessee law professor Glenn Harlan Reynolds: "Not working for the working class"

"And Democrats might choose a working-class-friendly nominee, too, if they can find one. Of course, the current favorite is Hillary Clinton, who went to Wellesley and makes $300,000 for giving a speech, and the No. 2 prospect for 2016 is probably Elizabeth Warren, a former Harvard Law professor who made $212,000 for representing an asbestos company. Portraying either of them as working class heroes will be an uphill battle."

Townhall.com: "Jim Webb Thinks He Can Beat Hillary Clinton"

"Clinton's 'dead broke' gaffe was seen as nothing short of disastrous; everyone knows the earning potential for ex-presidents and their families are phenomenal. This, coupled with Clinton's cozy relationship with Wall Street and the financial sector, could be a wedge that Webb could exploit."

Articles:

The Daily Beast: "Remember When Republicans Loved Hillary Clinton?"

By Ben Jacobs

December 1, 2014

[Subtitle:] Today they may be sketching out their best attacks on the Democrats' leading potential candidate for 2016, but once Dick Cheney, Paul Ryan, et al. had plenty of nice things to say.

For the better part of a quarter-century, Hillary Clinton has loomed over American politics as a hate figure for many on the right—and she seems poised to re-assert her dominant position in right-wing demonology in 2016. But there was a time, stretching roughly from her concession of the Democratic presidential nomination to Barack Obama in 2008 to the Benghazi attack in 2012, when conservatives changed their tune on Clinton. In fact, plenty of Republicans even said nice things about her. Here are seven she can look back on as she weathers the attacks of the next presidential cycle.

Dick Cheney

The former vice president is not known as a soft touch, but for a brief moment in 2011, he seemed to hold Clinton in high regard. During an appearance on Fox News Sunday, Cheney told host Chris Wallace of Clinton: “I have a sense that she is one of the more competent members of the current administration, and it would be interesting to speculate about how she might perform were she to be president.” Cheney also suggested that, if elected, Clinton might be easier for Republicans to work with than Obama.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Paul Ryan

Republican superstar Paul Ryan is still mooted as potential 2016 Republican presidential candidate. But even if he doesn’t run, the Wisconsin congressman will be a major force in the GOP as the next chairman of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee. Back in January 2013, though, he was fresh off a losing presidential ticket when he suggested that Hillary Clinton in the White House would have ensured a return to a balanced budget. “Look, if we had a Clinton presidency, if we had Erskine Bowles as chief of staff of the White House or president of the United States, I think we would have fixed this fiscal mess by now,” he said. “That’s not the kind of presidency we’re dealing with right now.”

Carly Fiorina

While Ryan is still on the fence about running for president, Carly Fiorina, the former Hewlett-Packard chief executive and 2010 U.S. Senate candidate in California, seems to be going full steam ahead toward a bid for the White House in 2016. Yet Fiorina, who seems to be positioning herself as a GOP alternative to Hillary Clinton who could appeal to female voters if nominated, has her own history of complimenting the former secretary of state. In 2008, while campaigning for John McCain, Fiorina said: “Having started as a secretary and eventually become a chief executive officer, I not only have great admiration and respect for Hillary Clinton and her candidacy and her leadership, but I also have great empathy, I must tell you, for what she went through.”

Orrin Hatch

The most senior Republican in the U.S. Senate, Orrin Hatch will not only lead the Senate Finance Committee in 2015 but will become president pro tempore of the Senate, making him third in line for the presidency. In 2010, when Clinton was being floated as a possible Supreme Court nominee and Hatch was the top Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee, the Utah senator said of his former colleague: “I happen to like Hillary Clinton; I think she’s done a good job for the…secretary of state’s position, and I have high respect for her and think a great deal of her.”

John McCain

The 2008 Republican presidential nominee and longtime Arizona senator has long had a cordial relationship with Hillary Clinton. Indeed, Clinton once described McCain as “her favorite Republican.” The affinity goes both ways. In 2011, at a breakfast sponsored by the Christian Science Monitor, McCain praised Clinton as “an international star” who has done “a tremendous job” as secretary of state. He also later told to CBS News, “I respect Secretary/Senator Clinton; I respect her views.”

Condoleezza Rice

Rice has praised Clinton, who succeeded her as secretary of state in 2009 on several occasions and said repeatedly that Clinton was “doing a fine job.” In 2010, she told Bill O’Reilly of Fox News: “Hillary Clinton is someone I’ve known for a long, long time. She’s a patriot. I think she’s doing a lot of the right things.” Rice then added, “She’s very tough...and she’s got the right instincts.” George W. Bush’s top foreign policy aide stood by those words two years later, when she described Clinton as “great” to Ohio Republicans.

Lindsey Graham

Perhaps no Republican has spoken more highly of Hillary Clinton than the South Carolina senator and prominent foreign policy hawk, who went so far as to describe the then-secretary of state as “a good role model, one of the most effective secretary of states, greatest ambassadors for the American people that I have known in my lifetime” in May 2012. The Republican also went out of his way to praise Clinton to The New York Times three months later, saying, “She is extremely well respected throughout the world, handles herself in a very classy way and has a work ethic second to none.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Winnipeg Free Press: "Clinton coming to Winnipeg"

By Geoff Kirbyson

December 1, 2014, 6:00 a.m.

She could make history in 2016 as the first woman to be elected U.S. president.

And she's coming to Winnipeg.

Former U.S. secretary of state Hillary Rodham Clinton, who is widely expected to run for the Democratic party presidential nomination in the 2016 election, will deliver the keynote address at an event at the RBC Winnipeg Convention Centre on Jan. 21.

Her speech will be part of the Global Perspectives series, which is sponsored by CIBC.

In addition to already being on the campaign trail, Clinton is touring in support of a new book, Hard Choices, which chronicles her work to "restore America's leadership" after eight years under the George W. Bush administration.

Clinton has spoken several times in Canada since stepping down as secretary of state in early 2013. In October, she told an Ottawa crowd military action against Islamic extremists in Iraq and Syria is essential to stop the growth of IS outside the region. She also spoke in Toronto in June as part of the promotional tour for her memoir, Hard Choices. And in March in Montreal, she criticized Russian President Vladimir Putin's actions in Crimea and Ukraine and said Canada has a key role to play in deterring further aggression.

Clinton tends to generate headlines whenever she speaks. For example, explaining to the New York Times on how she does business: "I choose my cards. I play them to the best of my ability. Move on to the next hand."

To the Atlantic, she explained how she lives her life: "My doctrine is the Goldilocks doctrine — not too hot, not too cold, just right."

And on being a woman: "I am a woman and, like millions of women, I know there are still barriers and biases out there, often unconscious, and I want to build an America that respects and embraces the potential of every last one of us."

And showing a lighter side: "If I want to knock a story off the front page, I just change my hairstyle."

Getting Clinton to speak here is not going to be cheap for organizers. According to a story in the Washington Post, officials at the University of California at Los Angeles recently finalized a deal with her to speak on campus for the "special university rate" of $300,000.

Since stepping down as secretary of state nearly two years ago, Clinton has made dozens of paid appearances across the U.S. at industry conventions, universities and Wall Street banks. Her fees are often funnelled through to the Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundation, the family's non-profit group.

(Her focus at the foundation includes working on behalf of women and girls, supporting early-childhood development and helping young people develop the skills they need to find good jobs.)

It's not uncommon for celebrity speakers to make special requests for food and drink, and Clinton is apparently no exception. Her list reportedly includes a case of still water (room temperature) to be deposited stage right; a carafe of warm/hot water, coffee cup and saucer, pitcher of room-temperature water, water glass, and lemon wedges to be situated both on a table on stage as well as in another room where she would stand for photos with VIPs.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Other requests reportedly include:

- Long, flat pillows for back support.
- A lavalier mike so she can give TED-like lectures.
- Coffee, tea, room-temperature sparkling and still water, diet ginger ale, crudité, hummus and sliced fruit in the green room.
- A computer, mouse, printer and a scanner.

This won't be the first time the U.S. Secret Service has worked a Winnipeg event involving a high-powered politician. Clinton's husband, former U.S. president Bill Clinton, spoke at a $1,100-per-plate dinner here in 2003 as well as another event at the Winnipeg Concert Hall. Former California governor Arnold Schwarzenegger spoke at the convention centre in early 2011.

Clinton finished second to U.S. President Barack Obama in 2008 in the Democratic nomination race.

National Journal: "Can Clinton Win Back the White Working Class?"

By Alex Roarty

November 30, 2014

[Subtitle:] A measly 34 percent of this group backed House Democratic candidates in 2014, creating a gap that could sunder the party's 2016 hopes.

Hillary Clinton's support of deferred deportation of millions of undocumented workers might help the Democratic Party's putative presidential nominee win over Latinos in 2016. But among the voters most responsible for the Democrats' midterm wipeout this year, it could very well make things worse—and therein lies Clinton's dilemma.

Support for Democrats among white, working-class voters was especially sparse this year: A measly 34 percent of them backed Democratic House candidates, exit polls found, while they fled in almost equal measure from Senate candidates like Rep. Bruce Braley in Iowa and incumbent Mark Udall in Colorado. Democrats still performed relatively well among black and Hispanic voters, but the deficit among whites without a college degree—who constituted more than one-third of the nationwide electorate—was too much to overcome.

One of the central challenges facing a Clinton campaign will be managing to win back enough of those voters, especially in a working-class-heavy battleground like Iowa. But as her quick support of deferred deportations shows, she'll have to do so while also motivating black, young, and Latino voters who formed the core of President Obama's coalition in 2008 and 2012.

At times, the two imperatives will work against each other.

"Democrats, to win regularly, not just the presidency but other levels of government, they need to do better among ... noncollege whites than they've been doing," said Ruy Teixeira, a demographer who has written extensively about the electoral advantages inherent in the nation's changing demographics. "You can't ... just rely on the coalition of the ascendant."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Once the backbone of the Democratic Party, working-class white voters have gradually shifted into the GOP's camp since the 1970s in part because of the alienation they felt toward an increasingly urban, culturally cosmopolitan party. Democrats, meanwhile, have made up for the loss by winning over minorities and a greater share of the upscale white vote.

Clinton doesn't have to win a majority of white voters without a college education—Obama never did, after all. Even during the height of his 2008 campaign, he won just 40 percent of them. Four years later, his share slipped to 36 percent.

But in 2014, the bottom fell out, and it fell out in places where Democrats have performed relatively well with working-class white voters, even recently. The party didn't just lose the white, working-class vote in places like Arkansas and West Virginia, where it has long since stopped being competitive at a presidential level. It also lost the vote in Iowa.

Braley, the Democratic Senate nominee in Iowa, won just 41 percent of the white, working-class vote in an overwhelmingly white state, exit polls showed, on his way to a stunning 9-point defeat in an open-seat race. Precise data was unavailable for Obama's performance among the same group in Iowa in 2012, when he won the state comfortably, but he won 52 percent of voters without a college degree that year.

Other states showed a particularly weak performance among blue-collar whites: In Colorado, Udall got just 34 percent of their vote, to his opponent's 61 percent. For Democratic presidential candidates, most plausible paths to the White House run through winning both of those states.

Democrats do have some reason for optimism. For one, the share of white, working-class voters continues to shrink every presidential election by an average of about 3 percentage points, according to Teixeira, while the share of groups Democrats do better with—racial minorities and well-educated white voters—continues to grow. And Democrats hope that Clinton, as the nation's first major-party female presidential nominee, would be able win over so-called waitress moms at a greater rate than most Democratic candidates.

The most pressing need for Clinton, however, might be devising an economic agenda and message able to convince some of those voters to back Democratic candidates.

"Are they going to convince the majority of these voters that they have a plan and it'll definitely work?" Teixeira asked. "Well, that's probably not going to happen. You don't have to convince most of these voters. You just have to convince a persuadable part of them."

Bloomberg: "Analyst: Hillary Clinton 'Lost Her Fastball,' and Jeb Bush Won't Likely Win"

By Steven Yaccino

November 30, 2014, 2:20 p.m. EST

[Subtitle:] Just when it seemed there was unanimous consent about a Clinton White House bid, even doubts are getting debunked.

These days, when Hillary Clinton says she's still deciding whether to run for president in 2016, she does so with a smile that seems almost like a silent apology for the absurdity of her non-answer.

For months, all signs have pointed to an inevitable White House bid for the former secretary of state, senator and first lady. On Sunday, it looked like there might be at least one person of note who is having serious doubts about whether it is a lock that Clinton will run for president. Now even that has been called into question.

An account of remarks attributed to Charlie Cook, whose Cook Political Report newsletter is among the country's most trusted for campaign analysis, was published in the Kansas City Star, describing him as telling a local audience recently that he believes Clinton has a 25- to 30-percent chance of jumping into the race.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Columnist Steve Rose did not specify exactly when or where the private event took place, but said Cook knew he was in attendance and that the statements were on the record. But Cook, who could not be reached by phone or e-mail for comment, took to Twitter and denied making the claim.

In an e-mail on Sunday evening, Rose clarified that he misheard Cook, who instead said that Clinton had a 25- to 30-percent chance of passing on a White House bid.

Cook, whose correction focused on the likelihood that Clinton would not run, apparently cited her recent book tour performance as reason to believe that she is either “rusty” or “she lost her fastball," according to the Kansas City Star.

A presidential race without Clinton, who has held huge leads in primary-voter polling, could be devastating to the Democratic Party, which does not have the same deep bench of potential candidates as Republicans.

Cook also apparently predicted that the next GOP nominee will likely be a governor from the Midwest or a Tea Party senator, two categories, of course, that leave out Jeb Bush. Should the former Republican governor of Florida and potential 2016 contender decided to run, Cook said a GOP primary electorate will balk at two issues that Bush has supported.

“One is immigration reform, which he favors,” Cook reportedly said, “and two, is his advocacy of education reform.”

MSNBC: “Charlie Cook: Hillary’s still (probably) running”

By Alex Seitz-Wald

November 30, 2014, 12:12 p.m. EST

Veteran political analyst Charlie Cook says he never predicted that Hillary Clinton is unlikely to run for president.

Cook, the publisher of the nonpartisan Cook Political Report, caused a stir this weekend among 2016 watchers when the Kansas City Star reported that he told a private gathering in the city that the former secretary of state is unlikely to throw her hat in the ring.

Cook “believes Hillary Clinton has only a 25-30% chance of running for president, and in any case he thinks she is either ‘rusty’ or ‘she has lost her fastball,’” the paper reported.

Since most observers think a Clinton candidacy is a nearly foregone conclusion, the remark attracted plenty of attention among journalists on Twitter was aggregated by several major national publications, including msnbc.

But Cook says the report is wrong.

“I have never said that the odds of her running were less than 60%. Clearly this person misheard me. From other conversations with people over dinner, after my speech, no one else heard 25-30 chance of running,” Cook told msnbc.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

He pointed to two columns he has written in the past pegging Clinton's chances of running at 70%. At a event hosted in July by the National Journal, where Cook writes a weekly column, he said there was as low as a 60% chance she does not run. But a 25-30% chance of running would be dramatically different from what he's said previously.

Kansas City Star columnist Steve Rose, who reported Cook's remarks at the private dinner in Kansas City, told msnbc he apologized to Cook for getting the quote wrong. "All I can say is I must have misheard Charlie, and I did not have a chance for followup after the event," he said in an email.

Editor's Note: This piece originally included the Kansas City Star's reporting. We have since corrected the piece.

Bloomberg: "The Torch Is Being Passed to A New Generation of Right-Wing Media"

By David Weigel

December 1, 2014, 5:45 a.m. EST

[Subtitle:] At the Washington Free Beacon The Federalist, and the Independent Journal Review, They're Ready to Pay Any Price, Bear Any Burden to Defeat Jon Stewart and his ilk.

"If you're looking for something, you might not find it," says Lachlan Markay. "If you're looking for anything, then, who knows?"

It's the middle of November, early morning, and Markay is perched in a chair right outside the biennial meeting of the Democracy Alliance. He is not allowed inside. He is never allowed inside. As a reporter for the Washington Free Beacon, a conservative website founded in 2012, Markey's assignment is to sit in a lobby café of the Mandarin Oriental hotel for three days, acquiring news about the meeting the way a shipwrecked sailor might acquire driftwood.

Five months earlier, when the Democracy Alliance met in Chicago, it distributed the photos of 20 reporters to prevent attendees from leaking anything by accident. Eleven of the profiled reporters worked for the Washington Free Beacon.

"If this is anything like Chicago," says Markay, knocking back a cup of coffee, "they have my picture. I went downstairs to use one of the computers, in the business center, and somebody followed me until I left."

The tender attention did not stop Markey from reporting. As the conference got underway, he published a story based on the memos he'd obtained. It had everything from a paranoid guidance to hotel staff to a PowerPoint presentation about how the progressive Committee on States moved $45 million to Democratic causes in 2014, illustrated by arrows traversing the supposed firewall between PACS and campaigns. In a follow-up story, Markey contrasted some hit-and-run coverage of the conference with more facts, pulled from the documents.

It had been a good year for the WFB. In February, reporter Alana Goodman (also on the illustrated DA watchlist) published the first in a series of scoops about Hillary Clinton drawn from the archives a friend had given to the University of Arkansas. "By being the first to report on the papers," wrote founder and editor-in-chief Matt Continetti, "the Free Beacon exposed the inanity and irrelevance of the mainstream media." Throughout the midterms, the WFB published stories about incumbent Democrats that ended up being cited in attack ads, like the tale of how North Carolina Senator Kay Hagan skipped a meeting about ISIS to hit a fundraiser. These stories unquestionably helped elect Republicans. In August, the Free Beacon went private, leaving the non-profit Center for American Freedom—an explicit parody of the liberal Center for American Progress—that it was founded under. This news was announced, as is WFB custom, with a picture of supermodel Kate Upton.

That combination of irreverence, scoops and spite is creating something new on the right. Conservative media, never somnolent, is in a new and different boom period, led by millennial writers who are striking out against fresh targets. The Independent Journal Review, an aggregation-heavy site launched by a veteran of Republican campaigns, has made a steady profit and generated eight-figure numbers of Facebook shares for its content. The Federalist, launched last year as the latest of 32-year old Ben Domenech's publications, got Cosmos host Neil DeGrasse Tyson to reluctantly admit he'd fabricated a George W. Bush quote that had been delighting his like-minded audiences. And that was after a National Review cover story by Charles Cooke, a 2007 graduate of Oxford University, labeling DeGrasse Tyson as the icon of a cult of nerds whose faux expertise was wrecking America.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"A century ago, Woodrow Wilson complained that the checks and balances instituted by the Founders were outdated because they had been contrived before the telephone was invented," wrote Cooke. "Now, we are to be liberated by the microchip and the Large Hadron Collider, and we are to have our progress assured by ostensibly disinterested analysts."

What's the connection between Neil DeGrasse Tyson and the wealthy liberals at a Democracy Alliance conference? Culture—which is to say, everything. A previous generation of conservatives trained their guns on Dan Rather and the network news that Americans used to watch. The newer generation does not fear the mainstream media. It pities the media, and understands, after a generation of Matt Drudge and Fox News, that manipulating it is child's play. On the new sites, a little reporting and a little snark can expose that the government, and its defenders in the press, are puffing up their expertise to hide their incompetence.

The more proximate enemy of this new generation of conservatives is the left's nerd cult. Jon Stewart, John Oliver, and "explanatory" journalism of the Vox.com variety—it all has wild fun with the "derp" of cable news and fringe conservatism. The most influential writers in this sphere, like Ezra Klein and Matt Taibbi, eventually carved out roles at the mainstream media, changing its hoarier institutions from the inside.

The reader and consumer of explainer media, or the donor to the Democracy Alliance, believes that expertise can correct misinformation and fix policy. This is the context for wildly popular news, wildly share-able on social media. The Awl, no conservative news site, even mocked "the Content industry" by tracking how many Facebook interactions liberal sites got from embedding John Oliver's monologues into blog posts.

Jon Stewart's show embodies plenty of the problems the newer right has with the press. "Dutiful reporters for websites like Salon, Huffington Post and the like simply write down whatever Stewart said," wrote the WFB's David Rutz by way of introducing a compilation of Stewart's mugging, "and declare his target utterly annihilated." The Federalist's Mollie Hemingway, whose media criticism career dates back most of a decade to the blog Get Religion (motto: "The press just doesn't get religion"), has held up Stewart as an example of a smug left that pretends the real news is just one explainer or eye-roll away. "Adults should not watch the Daily Show," wrote Hemingway in 2012. Two years later, she added that she had "such a hard time taking adult Jon Stewart fans seriously."

The Federalist "did not have a game plan to criticize explainer journalism," says David Harsanyi, a longtime Denver Post columnist who came to the new site after a stint at Human Events. It was, and is, a source of original interviews and real-time arguments between conservatives and libertarians. Rand Paul and Mike Lee gave the site news-making looks at their agendas for foreign policy and Congress, respectively.

But some of The Federalist's most popular content is directed at the rest of the media. Politifact is a source of "ridiculous and non-fact-based" cover-ups for the Democrats. A Vox.com story that errantly referred to a bridge between the Gaza Strip and the West Bank—which does not exist—might have been "a Mossad operation to forever discredit everything Vox ever writes on Israel for all time." (This was a joke.)

"I really do want to know if he tires of being embarrassingly wrong about everything, but I think I already know the answer," wrote Hemingway, in a piece about Vox co-founder (and my former Slate.com colleague) Matthew Yglesias. "Being a wrong liberal means never having to say you're sorry, and having no shame means you never have to feel embarrassed."

That tone is common in the new right media. The left, sure, can get away with murder with its own readership. What's that worth in the long run? "Liberal discourse is insular, sophomoric, divorced from everyday life," wrote the Free Beacon's Continetti in an October column. "What liberals say about race and gender and climate change is designed not to persuade the unconvinced but to rally the base. MSNBC is imploding. Vox.com is a laughingstock."

Domenech doesn't think that the young right's targets need to be driven out of the industry. "We're trying to give voice to some critiques that some people have long had of journalism, whether it's of news or of culture," says Domenech. "We're not trying to drive anyone out of business. To a certain degree, when we critique a journalist or a public figure like Tyson, we're not doing so out of animosity toward that person. We're doing so because we want them to stop saying that thing that isn't true."

The Free Beacon has an explicitly generational message when it comes to Democrats, and their presumed 2016 presidential candidate. It applies the clickable tag "trolling" to a burgeoning number of pieces, many of them by Andrew Stiles, who left National Review for the WFB after "burning out on politics." Recent Stiles stories have worn headlines like "SHOCKING: Hillary Clinton Could Be the Youngest Democrat Running in 2016," and "You Won't Believe How Old the Democratic Party's Leaders Really Are," and "Hillary Clinton Has Mastered The Art of Turning Her New Grandchild

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Into a Stump Speech."

"I think it's perfectly reasonable to look at the Democratic Party, which is supposed to represent younger generations, being run by Harry Reid and Nancy Pelosi, both in their 70s, and thinking about nominating Hillary, who will be pushing 70, and think: Wait a minute? Is the best we can do?" says Stiles. He felt the same way in 2008, when he voted for Barack Obama. His turn to the right came, he says, when he started paying closer attention to politics. "It was easy to be a liberal in college and watch The Daily Show and feel good about myself but not really know anything."

On Nov. 13, after Lachlan Markey was done staking out the Democracy Alliance, Continetti headed to the Republican Party's Capitol Hill Club to accept a prize. The Young Conservatives Coalition was giving him the "Buckley Award," named for National Review founder William F. Buckley, for his "significant contribution" to the movement. As fellow award-winners James O'Keefe and Dan Backer watched, Continetti asked his audience to reject the popular history of Buckley as a bloodless intellectual.

"The Buckley of the 1950s and 1960s was even more frightening to liberals than even Ted Cruz," said Continetti. "He defended Joe McCarthy. If you want a controversial issue, defend Joe McCarthy!" Buckley, he said, launched "the conservative march through the institutions that continues to this day."

USA Today column: University of Tennessee law professor Glenn Harlan Reynolds: "Not working for the working class"

By Glenn Harlan Reynolds

November 30, 2014, 6:06 p.m. EST

[Subtitle:] The key to Obama's struggle with white working class voters is not 'white,' but 'working.'

Working class white people don't like President Obama much. According to the latest Gallup poll, only 27% approve of him. That's 21 percentage points down since he took office in 2009.

A standard talking-point is that these voters don't like Obama because they're racist. But that assumes that the key word in "white working class" is "white." In fact, the key word is "working." After all, Obama isn't any blacker than he was in 2009.

A few Democratic pundits seem to get this. Writing in Mother Jones, Kevin Drum observes: "So who does the WWC take out its anger on? Largely, the answer is the poor. In particular, the undeserving poor. Liberals may hate this distinction, but it doesn't matter if we hate it. Lots of ordinary people make this distinction as a matter of simple common sense, and the WWC makes it more than any. That's because they're closer to it. For them, the poor aren't merely a set of statistics or a cause to be championed. They're the folks next door who don't do a lick of work but somehow keep getting government checks paid for by their tax dollars. "

Given the availability of government benefits, most working-class people of any race could be on welfare if they chose. That they're not drawing government checks means that they value work. As Slate's Jamelle Bouie notes, government programs like Social Security and Medicare are differently received, because they aren't seen as rewarding people for not working. When your neighbor gets welfare, it makes you feel like a sucker for going to work. Medicare, not so much.

So if Democrats want to win back the white working class — and they kind of need to, if they want to win elections, because it's an enormous demographic — maybe they need to start thinking about honoring and encouraging work, rather than talking about race or class. One person who has some ideas in this direction is Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, who suggests that the government invest heavily in infrastructure, which would create a lot of blue-collar jobs.

That was actually an original part of Barack Obama's stimulus plan, but it was derailed by feminists within the Obama coalition who thought it would produce too many jobs for men. Christina Romer, then-chair of Obama's Council of Economic Advisers, reported: "The very first email I got ...

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

was from a women's group saying 'We don't want this stimulus package to just create jobs for burly men.' "

Well, if you're offended by jobs for burly men, you probably won't do well with working-class men, or with the working-class women who are often married to burly men. And, as Joel Kotkin notes, many other Obama policies — promoting urban density, which creates fewer construction jobs; fighting oil and coal extraction, thus targeting industries that create high-paying blue collar jobs; and even opening up immigration, which drives down wages for the working class — all seem designed to punish people who work for a living, even as expanded benefits for the poor seem designed to reward people who draw government checks for a living.

According to Gallup, thanks to Obamacare, Americans earning $30,000 to $75,000 a year are more likely to skip medical care because of cost than Americans earning under $30,000 a year.

Can the Democrats solve this problem? Sure. These are all policies that could be changed, though a lot of party constituencies would oppose it. And Democrats might choose a working-class-friendly nominee, too, if they can find one. Of course, the current favorite is Hillary Clinton, who went to Wellesley and makes $300,000 for giving a speech, and the No. 2 prospect for 2016 is probably Elizabeth Warren, a former Harvard Law professor who made $212,000 for representing an asbestos company. Portraying either of them as working class heroes will be an uphill battle.

And there's another problem: The white working class may have abandoned Obama, but the black and Hispanicworking classes have mostly stayed loyal to him. But what do Clinton or Warren have that might inspire similar loyalty? Come 2016, it may not just be the white part of the working class that the Democrats have trouble with.

Townhall.com: "Jim Webb Thinks He Can Beat Hillary Clinton"

By Matt Vespa

November 30, 2014

In a previous post, Jim Webb announced he is establishing an exploratory committee for a possible 2016 run. Given Clinton's vast ties within her political machine, it seems hard to envision a 2016 primary season where she loses, but she did lose to an insurgent candidate named Barack Obama in 2008; Obama trailed her in the polls by 30 points at the time.

Her unofficial political team is already posturing, saying Clinton could net 386 electoral votes in 2016. One could posit that this is a tacit acknowledgement of Clinton's vulnerability. After all, she's a bad campaigner, her books sales were lackluster to say the least, and she's nothing like Obama in the sense of being something completely different from the underbelly of the Democratic Party–nor does she bring an aura of change that captivates a nation. She will also be nearly 70 when–or if–she subjects herself to the burdensome and tortuous life of a national campaign.

Jim Webb, former Democratic Senator, thinks he has what it takes to beat Clinton. Hillary is vying for the white, working class voters that have flocked to the GOP in past elections; Webb thinks he can compete, or even win, with this demographic as well. Yet, besides the southern Democrat, supposedly moderate appeal Webb has; he's also angling for a populist narrative–something the Clinton camp could have trouble disseminating to voters.

Clinton's "dead broke" gaffe was seen as nothing short of disastrous; everyone knows the earning potential for ex-presidents and their families are phenomenal. This, coupled with Clinton's cozy relationship with Wall Street and the financial sector, could be a wedge that Webb could exploit (via the New Yorker):

"He laid out a view of Wall Street that differs sharply from Clinton's.

"'Because of the way that the financial sector dominates both parties, the distinctions that can be made on truly troubling issues are very minor,' he said. He told a story of an effort he led in the Senate in 2010 to try to pass a windfall-profits tax that would have targeted executives at banks and firms which were rescued by the government after the 2008 financial crisis. He said that when he was debating whether to vote for the original bailout package, the Troubled Asset Relief Program, he relied on the advice of an analyst on Wall Street, who told him, 'No. 1, you have to do this, because otherwise the world economy will go into cataclysmic free fall. But, No. 2, you have to punish these guys. It is outrageous what they did.'

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"After the rescue, when Webb pushed for what he saw as a reasonable punishment, his own party blocked the legislation. 'The Democrats wouldn't let me vote on it,' he said. 'Because either way you voted on that, you're making somebody mad. And the financial sector was furious.' He added that one Northeastern senator—Webb wouldn't say who—'was literally screaming at me on the Senate floor.'

"When Clinton was a New York senator, from 2001 to 2009, she fiercely defended the financial industry, which was a crucial source of campaign contributions and of jobs in her state. 'If you don't have stock, and a lot of people in this country don't have stock, you're not doing very well,' Webb said. Webb is a populist, but a cautious one, especially on taxes, the issue that seems to have backfired against O'Malley's administration. As a senator, Webb frustrated some Democrats because he refused to raise individual income-tax rates. But as President, he says, he would be aggressive about taxing income from investments: 'Fairness says if you're a hedge-fund manager or making deals where you're making hundreds of millions of dollars and you're paying capital-gains tax on that, rather than ordinary income tax, something's wrong, and people know something's wrong. '

…

"Webb said. 'A lot of the Democratic leaders who don't want to scare away their financial supporters will say we're going to raise the minimum wage, we're going do these little things, when in reality we need to say we're going to fundamentally change the tax code so that you will believe our system is fair.'"

On prison reform, Webb studied Japan's low recidivism rate to bring about changes within our own system that he says prevents ex-convicts from rebuilding their lives. The article noted that the prison population exploded when President Clinton signed new tough sentencing laws.

If there's one thing that will split progressives on Hillary, it's the Iraq War. She voted for it–and the left has never fully forgiven her for that. Webb is a Vietnam veteran, was Secretary of the Navy, and thinks the Obama-Clinton ways of doing business abroad isn't much of a blueprint :

"He [Webb] thinks Obama, Clinton, and Power made things worse by intervening in Libya. 'There's three factions,' he said. 'The John McCains of the world, who want to intervene everywhere. Then the people who cooked up this doctrine of humanitarian intervention, including Samantha Power, who don't think they need to come to Congress if there's a problem that they define as a humanitarian intervention, which could be anything. That doctrine is so vague.' Webb also disdains liberals who advocate military intervention without understanding the American military. Referring to Syria and Libya, Webb said, 'I was saying in hearings at the time, What is going to replace it? What is going to replace the Assad regime? These are tribal countries. Where are all these weapons systems that Qaddafi had? Probably in Syria. Can you get to the airport at Tripoli today? Probably not. It was an enormous destabilizing impact with the Arab Spring.'

"Early on as a senator, Webb championed the idea of the so-called 'pivot to Asia,' a rebalancing of America's strategic and diplomatic posture from the Middle East to the Far East—an idea that Obama and Clinton subsequently adopted. Webb pushed Secretary of State Clinton to open up relations with Burma, a policy that Clinton includes in her recent book, 'Hard Choices,' as a major achievement. (Obama is travelling to Burma this week.) When I raised the subject with Webb, he seemed annoyed that he hadn't received adequate credit for the Burma policy. People who know him well suggest that part of what's motivating him to consider a primary challenge to Clinton is his sense that she hasn't expressed the proper gratitude."

So, here's the narrative that's forming here: Hillary is wrong on war, wrong on Wall Street; I, Jim Webb, gave her the idea to rebalance our position in Asia, and tried to punish the folks who hurt "Main Street." Hillary sounds like she's an Obama-lite candidate; something that voters will not be enthused to hear about.

With Obama's dismal approval numbers and voters yearning for something new after eight years, Webb could fill that void and become a formidable anti-Clinton candidate.

On the other hand, As Josh Kraushaar at National Journal wrote, the Democratic Party has become a smaller, more ideologically homogeneous party on social issues, not economic ones; and they're the issues that gain traction with the liberal base. While he admits that Webb is a good candidate on paper, he will never survive the culture shock that has occurred within the ranks of liberal Democrats after eight years of Obama.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Regardless, it should be interesting what happens in the next two years. It's about time Democrats duke it out leave each other beaten, bruised, and bloodied in a primary process.

Oh, and one last note on Hillary's vulnerability; she's virtually tied with Romney in a head-to-head presidential match up–and that's with a 13-point gender gap with women voters. Mittmentum Part II? What is going on?

Calendar:

Sec. Clinton's upcoming appearances as reported online. Not an official schedule.

· December 1 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton keynotes a League of Conservation Voters dinner (Politico)

· December 1 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton hosts fundraiser for Sen. Mary Landrieu (Times-Picayune)

· December 4 – Boston, MA: Sec. Clinton speaks at the Massachusetts Conference for Women (MCFW)

· December 16 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton honored by Robert F. Kennedy Center for Justice and Human Rights (Politico)

· January 21 – Winnipeg, Canada: Sec. Clinton keynotes the Global Perspectives series (Winnipeg Free Press)

· February 24 – Santa Clara, CA: Sec. Clinton to Keynote Address at Inaugural Watermark Conference for Women (PR Newswire)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Robby Mook" <re47@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "Margolis, Jim" <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>
Date: 10/24/2015 3:44:56 AM
Subject: Re: Call with HRC

Is there some Apprentice joke to make? I never saw the show. I'm also the worst person to generate jokes....

On Oct 24, 2015, at 10:41 AM, Margolis, Jim <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com > wrote:

> All that said… we really could use a little humor in here…
> Thinking.
>
> From: Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com >
> Date: Saturday, October 24, 2015 at 11:40 AM
> To: Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com >
> Cc: Matt Paul <mpaul@hillaryclinton.com >, Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >, Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com >, Bonnie Rubin <brubin@hillaryclinton.com >, Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com >, "dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com " <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >, Huma Abedin <ha16@hillaryclinton.com >, GMMB GMMB <jim.margolis@gmmb.com >, Milia Fisher <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com>, "sbay@hillaryclinton.com " <sbay@hillaryclinton.com >, "kofferdahl@hillaryclinton.com " <kofferdahl@hillaryclinton.com >, Marlon Marshall <mmarshall@hillaryclinton.com >
> Subject: Re: Call with HRC
>
> I was kidding!
>
> Sent from my iPhone
>
> On Oct 24, 2015, at 11:38 AM, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com > wrote:
>
> > Not ninnies.
> >
> > We own the high ground right now. We should stay there.
> >
> > From: Jennifer Palmieri [mailto:jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com]
> > Sent: Saturday, October 24, 2015 11:38 AM
> > To: Matt Paul
> > Cc: Jake Sullivan; John Podesta; Mandy Grunwald; Bonnie Rubin; Robby Mook; dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com ; Joel Benenson; ha16@hillaryclinton.com ; Jim Margolis; mfisher@hillaryclinton.com ; sbay@hillaryclinton.com ; kofferdahl@hillaryclinton.com ; mmarshall@hillaryclinton.com
> > Subject: Re: Call with HRC
> >
> > Wow. You people are a bunch of ninnies.
> >
> > Sent from my iPhone
> >
> > On Oct 24, 2015, at 11:37 AM, Matt Paul <mpaul@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> >
> > > Agree-tempting. but she shouldn't go there tonight
> > >
> > > On Sat, Oct 24, 2015 at 10:33 AM, Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> > > I love the joke too but I think HRC should stay above the committee - and especially above personal insults about it. She's got every inch of the high ground right now.
> > >
> > > On Oct 24, 2015, at 11:30 AM, Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

That's because you love your own joke.

But I think it is okay.

Sent from my iPhone

On Oct 24, 2015, at 11:04 AM, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com > wrote:

I don't think so.

On Oct 24, 2015 10:54 AM, "Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com > wrote:
LOVE the Trey Gowdy line.

Just wonder if that undercuts our statesmanship point too much.

Mandy Grunwald
Grunwald Communications
202 973-9400

-----Original Message-----
From: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >
To: Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
Cc: Jim Margolis <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com >; Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com >; Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com >; Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >; Sawsan Bay <sbay@hillaryclinton.com >; Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com >; Bonnie Rubin <brubin@hillaryclinton.com >; Marlon Marshall <mmarshall@hillaryclinton.com >; Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com >; Milia Fisher <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com >; Matt Paul <mpaul@hillaryclinton.com >; Kate Offerdahl <kofferdahl@hillaryclinton.com >; Huma Abedin <ha16@hillaryclinton.com >
Sent: Sat, Oct 24, 2015 10:49 am
Subject: Re: Call with HRC

I couldn't talk on the call, but I agree with Joel, let's not go back to emails.
Re Jen's point on this being a partisan crowd salesmanship not partisanship is a hard shot at the Republicans, so I think it's fine.
On freshening things up, what about: I used to be obsessed with Donald Trump's hair, that was until I got to spend 11 hours staring at the top of Trey Gowdy's head
On Oct 24, 2015 9:38 AM, "Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
Here's Obama in 2007:

Barack Obama, 2007

Thank you so much. To the great Governor of Iowa and Lieutenant. Governor of Iowa. To my dear friend Tom Harkin for the outstanding work that he does. To the congressional delegation of Iowa that is doing outstanding work and to Nancy Pelosi , Madam Speaker, thank you all for the wonderful welcome and the wonderful hospitality.

[Responding to audience] I love you back.

A little less than one year from today, you will go into the voting booth and you will select the President of the United States of America. Now, here's the good news -- the name George W. Bush will not be on the ballot. The name of my cousin Dick Cheney will not be on the ballot. We've been trying to hide that for a long time. Everybody has a black sheep in the family. The era of Scooter Libby justice, and Brownie incompetence, and Karl Rove politics will finally be over.

But the question you're going to have to ask yourself when you caucus in January and you vote in November is, "What's next for America?" We are in a defining moment in our history. Our nation is at war. The planet is in peril. The dream that so many generations fought for feels as if it's slowly slipping away. We are working harder for less. We've never paid more for health care or for college. It's harder to save and it's harder to retire. And most of all we've lost faith that our leaders can or will do anything about it.

We were promised compassionate conservatism and all we got was Katrina and wiretaps. We were promised a uniter, and we got a President who could not even lead the half of the country that voted for him. We were promised a more ethical and more efficient government, and instead we have a town called Washington that is more corrupt and more wasteful than it was before. And the only mission that was ever accomplished is to use fear and falsehood to take this country to a war that should have never been authorized and should have never been waged.

It is because of these failures that America is listening, intently, to what we say here today -- not just Democrats, but Republicans and Independents who've lost trust in their government, but want to believe again.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

And it is because of these failures that we not only have a moment of great challenge, but also a moment of great opportunity. We have a chance to bring the country together in a new majority -- to finally tackle problems that George Bush made far worse, but that had festered long before George Bush ever took office -- problems that we've talked about year after year after year after year.

And that is why the same old Washington textbook campaigns just won't do in this election. That's why not answering questions, because we are afraid our answers won't be popular just won't do. That's why telling the American people what we think they want to hear instead of telling the American people what they need to hear just won't do. Triangulating and poll-driven positions because we're worried about what Mitt or Rudy might say about us just won't do. If we are really serious about wining this election Democrats, we can't live in fear of losing it.
This party -- the party of Jefferson and Jackson; of Roosevelt and Kennedy -- has always made the biggest difference in the lives of the American people when we led, not by polls, but by principle; not by calculation, but by conviction; when we summoned the entire nation to a common purpose -- a higher purpose. And I run for the Presidency of the United States of America because that's the party America needs us to be right now.

A party that offers not just a difference in policies, but a difference in leadership.

A party that doesn't just focus on how to win but why we should. A party that doesn't just offer change as a slogan, but real, meaningful change -- change that America can believe in. That's why I'm in this race. That's why I am running for the Presidency of the United States of America -- to offer change that we can believe in.

I am in this race to tell the corporate lobbyists that their days of setting the agenda in Washington are over. I have done more than any other candidate in this race to take on lobbyists -- and won. They have not funded my campaign, they will not get a job in my White House, and they will not drown out the voices of the American people when I am President. I'm in this race to take those tax breaks away from companies that are moving jobs overseas and put them in the pockets of hard working Americans who deserve it. And I won't raise the minimum wage every ten years -- I will raise it to keep pace so that workers don't' fall behind.

That is why I am in it. To protect the American worker. To fight for the American worker.
I'm in this race because I want to stop talking about the outrage of 47 million Americans without health care and start actually doing something about it. I expanded health care in Illinois by bringing Democrats and Republicans together. By taking on the insurance industry. And that is how I will make certain that every single American in this country has health care they can count on and I won't do it twenty years from now, I won't do it ten years from now, I will do it by the end of my first term as President of the United States of America.

I run for president to make sure that every American child has the best education that we have to offer -- from the day they are born to the day they graduate from college. And I won't just talk about how great teachers are -- as President I will reward them for their greatness -- by raising salaries and giving them more support. That's why I'm in this race.

I am running for President because I am sick and tired of democrats thinking that the only way to look tough on national security is by talking, and acting, and voting like George Bush Republicans.

When I am this party's nominee, my opponent will not be able to say that I voted for the war in Iraq; or that I gave George Bush the benefit of the doubt on Iran; or that I supported Bush-Cheney policies of not talking to leaders that we don't like. And he will not be able to say that I wavered on something as fundamental as whether or not it is ok for America to torture -- because it is never ok. That's why I am in it.

As President, I will end the war in Iraq. We will have our troops home in sixteen months. I will close Guantanamo. I will restore habeas corpus. I will finish the fight against Al Qaeda. And I will lead the world to combat the common threats of the 21st century -- nuclear weapons and terrorism; climate change and poverty; genocide and disease. And I will send once more a message to those yearning faces beyond our shores that says, "You matter to us. Your future is our future. And our moment is now."

America, our moment is now.

Our moment is now.

I don't want to spend the next year or the next four years re-fighting the same fights that we had in the 1990s.

I don't want to pit Red America against Blue America, I want to be the President of the United States of America.

And if those Republicans come at me with the same fear-mongering and swift-boating that they usually do, then I will take them head on. Because I believe the American people are tired of fear and tired of distractions and tired of diversions. We can make this election not about fear, but about the future. And that won't just be a Democratic victory; that will be an American victory.

And that is a victory America needs right now.

I am not in this race to fulfill some long-held ambitions or because I believe it's somehow owed to me. I never expected to be here, I always knew this journey was improbable. I've never been on a journey that wasn't.

I am running in this race because of what Dr. King called "the fierce urgency of now." Because I believe that there's such a thing as being too late. And that hour is almost upon us.

I don't want to wake up four years from now and find out that millions of Americans still lack health care because we couldn't take on the insurance industry.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I don't want to see that the oceans have risen a few more inches. The planet has reached a point of no return because we couldn't find a way to stop buying oil from dictators.

I don't want to see more American lives put at risk because no one had the judgment or the courage to stand up against a misguided war before we sent our troops into fight.

I don't want to see homeless veterans on the streets. I don't want to send another generation of American children to failing schools. I don't want that future for my daughters. I don't want that future for your sons. I do not want that future for America.

I'm in this race for the same reason that I fought for jobs for the jobless and hope for the hopeless on the streets of Chicago; for the same reason I fought for justice and equality as a civil rights lawyer; for the same reason that I fought for Illinois families for over a decade.

Because I will never forget that the only reason that I'm standing here today is because somebody, somewhere stood up for me when it was risky. Stood up when it was hard. Stood up when it wasn't popular. And because that somebody stood up, a few more stood up. And then a few thousand stood up. And then a few million stood up. And standing up, with courage and clear purpose, they somehow managed to change the world.

That's why I'm running, Iowa -- to give our children and grandchildren the same chances somebody gave me.

That's why I'm running, Democrats -- to keep the American Dream alive for those who still hunger for opportunity, who still thirst for equality.

That's why I'm asking you to stand with me, that's why I'm asking you to caucus for me, that's why I am asking you to stop settling for what the cynics say we have to accept. In this election -- in this moment -- let us reach for what we know is possible. A nation healed. A world repaired. An America that believes again. Thank you very much everybody.

On Sat, Oct 24, 2015 at 9:24 AM, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
Here is latest draft

On Sat, Oct 24, 2015 at 9:01 AM, Huma Abedin <ha16@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
She just called about the JJ speech. Isn't entirely convinced it is the right speech to deliver. I suggest we get on phone with her to discuss. Our only window is 930 for 30 minutes. Hope that works.

This email is intended only for the named addressee. It may contain information that is confidential/private, legally privileged, or copyright-protected, and you should handle it accordingly. If you are not the intended recipient, you do not have legal rights to retain, copy, or distribute this email or its contents, and should promptly delete the email and all electronic copies in your system; do not retain copies in any media. If you have received this email in error, please notify the sender promptly. Thank you.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "t r u t h o u t" <messenger@truthout.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 12/27/2014 9:27:06 AM
Subject: Challenging Bedrock Law: "Dillon's Rule" in Detroit and Beyond

View Recent Newsletters

Tell a friend about Truthout!

Saturday, 27 December 2014

truthout

Donate Today!

Truthout is a 501(c)3 nonprofit organization; donations are tax deductible.

Challenging Bedrock Law: "Dillon's Rule" in Detroit and Beyond

Simon Davis-Cohen, Truthout: Detroit and other city governments have been effectively dissolved. In the Motor City, all governing power resides in one man - Kevyn Orr - the state-appointed "emergency manager." He performs all functions of local government, unilaterally.

Read the Article

The Disunited States: A French Writer Navigates 1930s United States

Patrick Glennon, Truthout: In his recently translated book, The Disunited States, Vladimir Pozner reveals the alienation, class antagonism, racism and sexism endemic to this country in the 1930s - and how little has changed.

Read the Review

Jeopardy Has Not Attached: Killer Cops Can Still Be Indicted

James Marc Leas, Truthout: Protests should continue to demand justice for Michael Brown and Eric Garner. The officers who killed them can still be indicted and tried for murder under state law in Missouri and New York.

Read the Article

Everything You Need to Know About the Radical Roots of Wonder Woman

Christopher Zumski Finke, YES! Magazine: The hero and her alter ego, Diana Prince, were the products of the tumultuous women's rights movements of the early 20th century, and her enigmatic creator believed women were destined to rule the world.

Read the Article

Looking Back, Moving Forward: 2014 Year in Review

Making Contact, National Radio Project: The year 2014 saw social movements ranging from pro-

BuzzFlash

The Buzzflash commentary for Truthout will return soon.

NSA Fesses Up to Improper Surveillance of US Citizens
Read the Article at The Huffington Post

Evil Torturers Catch a Break: How Americans Got Distracted From a National Travesty
Read the Article at Salon

US Prepares to Accelerate Detainee Transfers From Guantánamo Bay Prison
Read the Article at The Washington Post

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

democracy protests in Hong Kong to the Black Lives Matter movement in the United States. Making Contact brings an update on some of these movements that made major news this year.

Listen to the Radio Report

Unearthing the Truth: Mexican State Violence Beyond Ayotzinapa

Jesse Franzblau, NACLA: Declassified files on migrant massacres reveal impunity and Mexican state complicity in human rights atrocities that predate the recent Ayotzinapa disappearances.

Read the Article

What the US Should Learn From Russia's Collapse

Miriam Pemberton, OtherWords: It's time for communities that are dependent on Pentagon contracts to work on strategies to reduce their economic vulnerability as defense spending dwindles. The time to start planning an economic transition is now.

Read the Article

Why Obama Won't Reach an Agreement With Iran

Gareth Porter, Middle East Eye: The Obama administration has no obvious incentives to reach an agreement with Iran on its nuclear program because the United States is getting most of what it wants already under the status quo.

Read the Article

It's Not Even 2015, but the 2016 Republican Presidential Race Rumors Have Begun

Robin Marty, Care2: It's still 2014 for at least another few days, but that hasn't stopped the 2016 presidential speculation from jumping to an accelerated start, with news that another Bush may be tossing his hat in the ring.

Read the Article

After Scrutiny, CIA Mandate Is Untouched
Read the Article at The New York Times

Doubts Persist on US Claims of North Korean Role in Sony Hack
Read the Article at NPR

ACLU Accuses NSA of Using Holiday Lull to "Minimize Impact" of Documents
Read the Article at The Guardian

On Racial Issues, Americans Are Divided Both Black and White and Red and Blue
Read the Article at The Washington Post

Support Truthout with a tax-deductible donation

Please add messenger@truthout.org to ensure you receive our messages
Truthout is a proud member of the Newspaper Guild/CWA, Local 36047
Subscribe | Unsubscribe
Privacy Policy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Karen Finney" <kfinney@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "Adrienne Elrod" <aelrod@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 4/20/2015 12:01:14 PM
Subject: Re: Axe tweet on Clinton Cash -

That's one of the points I raised on Wagner's show, he was helpful

On Mon, Apr 20, 2015 at 6:51 PM, Adrienne Elrod <aelrod@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

>
> David Axelrod @ davidaxelrod 3m 3 minutes ago Chicago, IL
> Haven't read book attacking Clintons. But if, as reported, it charges that Obama Admin moved Colombia FTA to reward CGI donor, that's nuts!
> 6 retweets4 favorites
> Reply Retweet6 Favorite4 More
>
> Adrienne K. Elrod
> Spokesperson
> Hillary For America
> www.hillaryclinton.com
> @adrienneelrod
>
> --
> You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
> To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com .
> To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
> For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com.
To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "t r u t h o u t" <messenger@truthout.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 8/29/2014 7:44:09 AM
Subject: Hawaii's GMO Battle: Federal Judge Strikes Down Kauai's Pesticide Regulations

View Recent Newsletters

Tell a friend about Truthout!

Friday, 29 August 2014

truthout

Donate Today!

Truthout is a 501(c)3 nonprofit organization; donations are tax deductible.

Hawaii's GMO Battle: Federal Judge Strikes Down Kauai's Pesticide Regulations

Mike Ludwig, Truthout: A federal judge in Hawaii has struck down a local ordinance that would have regulated pesticide use at farms on the island of Kauai, where four of the world's largest agrichemical companies take advantage of long growing seasons to develop genetically engineered crop seeds.

Read the Article

Five Things About Canada Every American Climate Activist Should Know

Joseph Boutilier, Truthout: For being such a global issue, with the potential to unite across borders both physical and virtual, the climate movement remains shockingly isolated in domestic dialogue.

Read the Article

Secret $700,000 Donation Has Scott Walker Scrambling to Address "Appearance of Corruption"

John Nichols, The Nation: Despite serious concerns that changing Wisconsin's mining regulations would cause harm, Gov. Scott Walker supported it. Now newly released documents show a mining firm secretly steered $700,000 into "independent" efforts to provide political cover for the embattled governor.

Read the Article

Should Japan Restart Its Nuclear Reactors?

Arnie Gundersen, The Mark News: The untold story of March 11, 2011 is how close Japan came to three more spent fuel pool fires at Fukushima Daiichi and four meltdowns at Fukushima Daini after the massive earthquake, tsunami and nuclear disaster.

Read the Article

Seven Disturbing Quotes From the Koch Summit Speeches

Jay Riestenberg, Common Cause: Speeches from

BuzzFlash

Surfers Defy Wealthy California Oceanfront Property Owners Denying Beach Access

Mark Karlin, BuzzFlash at Truthout: A battle for public access to the California beaches on the Pacific Ocean is raging. Many wealthy property owners want to hinder people from using the state-owned coastline in front of their homes.

Read the BuzzFlash Commentary

How Trayvon Martin's Death Launched a New Generation of Black Activism

Read the Article at The Nation

The Courage to

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

elected leaders like Mitch McConnell at a secretive donor summit hosted in June by billionaire industrialists Charles and David Koch betray troubling perspectives on what the relationships between the ultra-wealthy, mega-corporations and lawmakers should be.

Read the Article

A Prescription for Treating Runaway CEO Pay

Marjorie E. Wood, OtherWords: Thanks to the Affordable Care Act, your premiums are now guaranteed to pay for health care instead of executives' yachts. And more than 10 million Americans have gained coverage because of it. That the ACA also holds the profit-making side of the health care industry accountable is a great benefit.

Read the Article

How the #FergusonSyllabus Can Help Teachers Talk About Race and Rights on the First Day of School

Liz Pleasant, YES! Magazine: The killing of unarmed black teenager Michael Brown and the aftermath in Ferguson, Missouri left teachers wondering how to address it with their students. So teachers have connected on Twitter using #FergusonSyllabus, to share suggested readings, discussion topics and classroom activities for students of any age.

Read the Article

Why Nurture Is Just as Important as Nature for Understanding Genetics

Claire Haworth, The Conversation: Genetic variation is only half the story. Environmental influences are important too, and we now know that our environments can interact with our genetic makeup, in ways that can be good and bad for our health.

Read the Article

Learning #EverydaySexualViolence: Women Telling Our Stories

Stephanie Gilmore and Pia Guerrero, The Feminist Wire: "Social structures such as racism, sexism, heterosexism, classism, capitalism and imperialism thrive on unmitigated and often state-sanctioned violence. The brutal murder of Michael Brown is but one example."

Read the Article

The Courage to Disarm

Read the Article at BuzzFlash

How Does a 9-Year-Old Come to Shoot a Fully Automatic Weapon?

Read the Article at Mother Jones

Tax Dollars for Oil Wars and Weapons Should Be Spent on Improving the Common Good

Read the Article at BuzzFlash

Ferguson Protesters Sue Missouri Police for $40 Million

Read the Article at Talking Points Memo

Global Community Must Face Deeper Roots of Growing Ebola Crisis

Read the Article at Common Dreams

Jon Stewart: Rick Perry Will Be a Creepy Inmate

Watch the Video at Comedy Central

How Midwives on Sierra Leone's Almost Untouched Turtle Islands are Improving Women's Health

Joan Erakit, Inter Press Service: Marie Stopes is a British-based nonprofit that provides family planning and reproductive health services to over 30 countries around the world, including the tiny, hard-to-reach Turtle Island in Sierra Leone. They are a lifeline for women seeking reproductive, prenatal and maternal health care.

Read the Article

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Support Truthout with a tax-deductible donation

Please add messenger@truthout.org to ensure you receive our messages

Truthout is a proud member of the New spaper Guild/CWA, Local 36047

Subscribe | Unsubscribe

Privacy Policy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jon Soltz, VoteVets.org" <info@votevets.org>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 8/11/2015 9:55:49 AM
Subject: The same voices pushing for war with Iraq

VoteVets.org
Country. Service. Action.

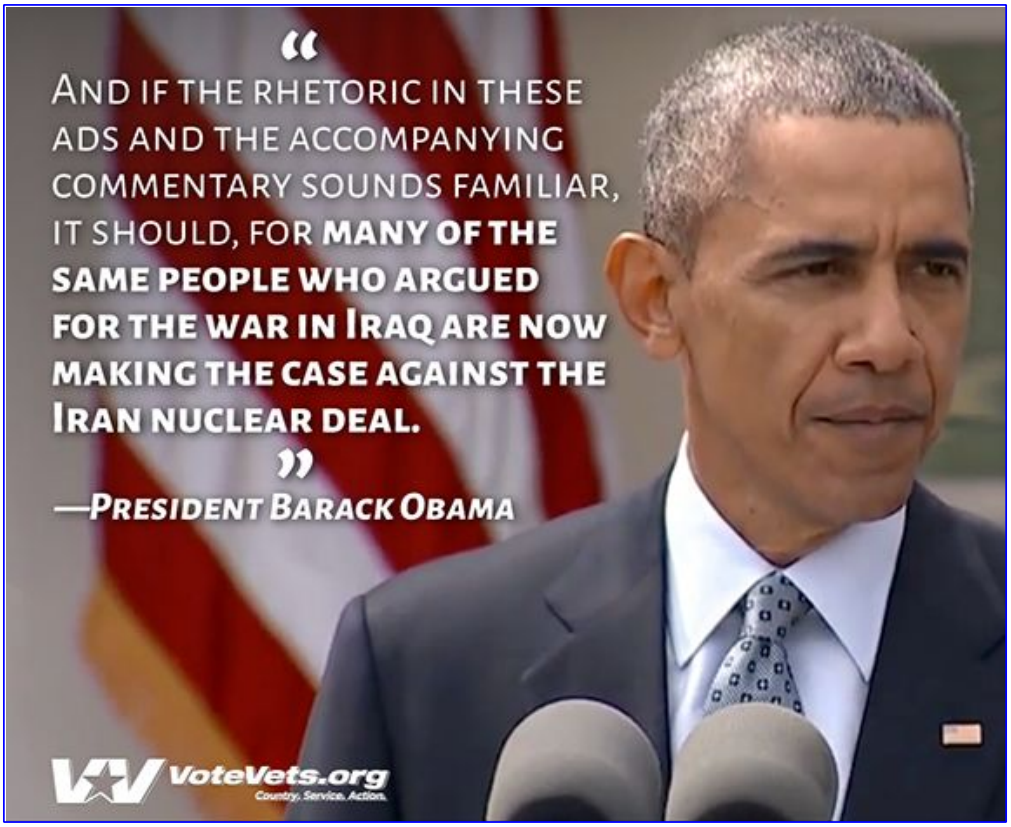
John -

President Obama is right: many of the same voices urging the United States to reject the deal with Iran in favor of a military approach were some of the loudest voices in favor of war with Iraq.

Congress is home for recess now, and we need to make sure they hear your voice before returning to D.C. to take a vote.

So far over 100,000 veterans, military family members, and VoteVets supporters have taken action on this issue - add your name to theirs today:

Tell Congress: vote for the negotiated deal that is our best chance to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon



The vote can go either way at this point so every Representative and every Senator that comes out in favor of the deal is a major victory.

We have a very unique voice in this debate. It'd be a real shame to let it go to waste.

Thanks for adding your name,

Jon Soltz
Iraq War Veteran and Chairman
VoteVets

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Contribute

PAID FOR BY VOTEVETS ACTION FUND

This email was sent to john.podesta@gmail.com. If that is not your preferred email address, click here . Click here if you'd like to unsubscribe. We try to send only the most important information and opportunities to participate via email. To sustain VoteVets with a contribution click here .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Andrew Schwartz" <externalrelations@csis.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 10/15/2014 8:06:54 AM
Subject: New Smart Women Smart Power Podcast: Putin's Power Play

To ensure receipt of our email, please add us to your safe senders list

CSIS | CENTER FOR STRATEGIC & INTERNATIONAL STUDIES

Dear Colleague:

Last week I wrote you about “Smart Women, Smart Power,” CSIS’ new initiative in partnership with Fortune Magazine and headed by Dr. Kathleen Hicks, senior vice president and director of the International Security Program at CSIS.

The project includes live events to be held regularly at CSIS, the first of which will be in November (we will keep you posted on our launch date).

We’ve also developed a weekly podcast that is featured on Apple’s iTunes and is hosted by Fortune columnist and Most Powerful Women Summit cochair Nina Easton. The podcast includes panel discussions and interviews with senior officials, business executives, and thought leaders.

Last Friday, Nina moderated a CSIS all-star panel with Heather Conley, CSIS Senior Vice President for Europe, Eurasia and the Arctic and Dr. Sarah Mendelson, CSIS Director of the Human Rights Initiative. The Podcast is called “Power Politics in Putin’s Russia” and you can listen to it here or by clicking below:

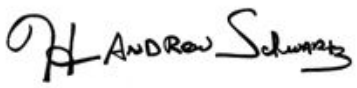
We couldn’t be more excited about Smart Women, Smart Power and look forward to great discussions, both live and on iTunes.

I always welcome your feedback.

Best,

Andrew

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.



H. Andrew Schwartz
Senior Vice President for External Relations Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS) www.csis.org

To unsubscribe from all CSIS emails, please click here .

Powered By informz

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 12/23/2014 6:38:10 AM
Subject: Correct The Record Tuesday December 23, 2014 Afternoon Roundup

Correct The Record Tuesday December 23, 2014 Afternoon Roundup:

Tweets:

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: .@HillaryClinton wants everyone to enjoy the same opportunities she had growing up,@jengranholm writes for @cnbc http://www.cnbc.com/id/102291832 [12/23/14, 11:37 a.m. EST]

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: .@jengranholm : @HillaryClinton embodies a "fierce duty and loyalty to [the American] family."http://www.cnbc.com/id/102291832 [12/23/14, 10:56 a.m. EST]

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: .@HillaryClinton successfully fought to expand Family and Medical Leave Act for families of wounded soldiers. http://correctrecord.org/hillary-clinton-a-record-of-service-to-veterans/ … [12/22/14, 2:32 p.m. EST]

Headlines:

CNBC opinion: Gov. Jennifer Granholm: "The message Democrats need to hit for 2016"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Since long before the time Hillary Clinton wrote that 'it takes a village,' she has been advocating a belief that we, as a country, are all in this together."

Bloomberg: "The Man Poised to Guide Hillary Clinton's Presidential Campaign"

[Subtitle:] "Robby Mook, Terry McCauliffe's makeover artist, may be the one to bring discipline to the Clintons' 2016 campaign."

Associated Press: "Late At Night, Christie Doing 2016 Foreign Policy Homework"

"Such preparation is expected from prospective White House candidates, especially those such as Christie, a long-time politician in New Jersey and former U.S. attorney who lacks the foreign policy experience of the favorite for the Democratic nomination, former U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton."

Articles:

CNBC opinion: Gov. Jennifer Granholm: "The message Democrats need to hit for 2016"

By Gov. Jennifer Granholm

December 23, 2014

After the 2014 electoral debacle, much has been written about Democrats needing a message. Of course, first and foremost, Democrats must be obsessed about creating good-paying jobs in America. But there's one other message that is authentic to us and to our hopeful Democratic nominee:

Family.

Since long before the time Hillary Clinton wrote that "it takes a village," she has been advocating a belief that we, as a country, are all in this together. That, just like in your own family, our American family takes care of each other. In your family you take care of your aging parents. Period. In our American family, we take care of all of our parents, through strong policies like Social Security and Medicaid.

In your family, you lend your brother a hand if he gets laid off. You don't cut him off; you help him. In our American family, we make sure that all of our brothers and sisters are given a bridge to something better through unemployment insurance, if they find themselves without income.

That's what we do. That's who we are. As we say in the faith community, that's whose we are.

Yes, we believe that people should pull themselves up by their bootstraps. But we also know this truth: many children were not issued boots upon arrival. These are all our children. We are a family. And in a family, no one gets left behind.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

And you know what? It turns out that when we believe that way, and act upon that belief, our economy does better too. If our children are better educated, our brothers and sisters make a better living, and our parents are taken care of, we will all be better off.

This is exactly what Hillary Clinton has dedicated her life to — what she calls "the basic bargain of America," that "no matter who you are or where you come from, if you work hard and play by the rules, you'll have the opportunity to build a good life for yourself and your family." This is the same opportunity that young middle-class Hillary Rodham had, and the opportunity that she wants for everyone in the American family.

That is why Hillary has long advocated for a progressive tax structure to ensure, among other things, that we can fund a basic safety net for Americans. For while you may fall on hard times today, and I may fall on hard times tomorrow, together we hold a net that is strong enough that neither of us will fall through.

That is why Hillary has protected working families going through difficult times through no fault of their own, leading the fight in the Senate to extend emergency unemployment benefits.

That is why she has been determined to expand access to education and healthcare for children across all walks of American life. As First Lady of Arkansas, she expanded early childhood education for economically disadvantaged children. In the Senate, she worked across the aisle with former Missouri Senator Kit Bond in an effort to expand voluntary full-day pre-K for children from low-income families. Today, as part of the Too Small to Fail Initiative to improve the health and well being of children five and under, she is working to close the "word gap" for kids in low-income families who often have smaller vocabularies than their classmates.

Hillary Clinton has worked to increase health coverage for millions of children in low-income and working families through the State Children's Health Insurance Program, a program she helped created as First Lady.

As Hillary says, "You should not have to be the grandchild of a governor or a senator or a former secretary of state or a former president to believe that the American Dream is in your reach." Opportunity and success shouldn't be limited to those lucky enough to be born into wealthy families, or to the grandchildren of governors or senators. Instead, we should remind ourselves that we belong to one another, to one team, to one family. And we are fiercely proud of belonging to a country — a big American family — where no one gets left behind.

That is why I am ready for Hillary.

Bloomberg: "The Man Poised to Guide Hillary Clinton's Presidential Campaign"

By Jonathan Allen

December 22, 2014 6:37 p.m. EDT

[Subtitle:] Robby Mook, Terry McCauliffe's makeover artist, may be the one to bring discipline to the Clintons' 2016 campaign.

In 2009, Terry McAuliffe, the Democratic power broker and close Clinton friend, lost a three-way Democratic primary for Virginia governor; four years later, with Robby Mook aboard as his campaign manager, McAuliffe won.

It was that performance that solidified Mook's status as one of the leading candidates to help Hillary Clinton to change her own fortunes from primary loser to general election winner. Now Mook, a 35-year-old Vermont native, has emerged as a clear front-runner to manage Clinton's expected presidential campaign after Guy Cecil, the political director for her 2008 bid, acknowledged Sunday he won't have an official role this time around.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Mook already is working on special projects for Clinton, according to two longtime Democratic strategists. One said Mook was influential in shaping her role helping Democrats during the 2014 midterm elections.

Clinton advisers say Mook could serve as a bridge between Clinton's past and present, because he's close enough to Clinton to be trusted, and experienced enough in more recent campaigns to know which parts may need fixing.

"You can't have someone in such a pivotal and important position who is unknown," said Ellen Tauscher, a former congresswoman, State Department official, and Clinton ally. "For people that want to be reassured about no repeat of 2008 issues, I think that he definitely answers the mail on that, too." Tauscher said she did not know whether Mook would manage a campaign or whether Clinton would run.

McAuliffe's first campaign relied heavily on old friends as operatives and advisers, just as Clinton's had during her 2008 presidential bid. As a result, both suffered from an air of arrogance and a lack of political sophistication. For the 2013 race, McAuliffe wanted something different.

"He wanted to have a professional organization, he wanted to make sure it was based on the most recent tactics and wanted to make sure the campaign was strategic and data-focused," said Michael Halle, who managed field operations for McAuliffe.

Enter Mook, who was coming off a stint as the executive director of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee and had managed Clinton's primary-vote victories over Barack Obama in Nevada, Ohio, and Indiana in 2008.

He brought in talent from the data-obsessed Obama re-election campaign, including Elan Kriegel, who was the director of analytics in battleground states, and kept in touch with Obama adviser David Plouffe.

"Robby understands modern campaigns, the value of data and technology," Plouffe told Bloomberg in 2013. "He beat us three times; his footprint was on our back."

And, Plouffe added, "our sense was he did the best job of anyone over there."

Mook was also able to instill discipline in McAuliffe, a famously difficult mission. When he ran McAuliffe's operation, Mook mapped out campaign strategy on big white boards at meetings and was "absolutely anal about every meeting ending with action items," Halle said.

He also sought to understand the operation from the ground up. Every other week or so, he ordered headquarters staffers to go into the field to get a sense of what voters were telling volunteers. That's not terribly unusual in a campaign. What's less common: Mook knocked on 50 to 60 doors himself each time, Halle said.

Mook's experience with McAuliffe could prove valuable, because Clinton has struggled with discipline on the campaign trail and on her recent book tour, a weakness that Mook supporters say he has a track record of addressing. And, her operation is famous for the kind of infighting that Mook-run shops have been able to avoid.

Clinton hasn't officially announced whether she's running–and other names including Emily's List President Stephanie Schriock and California Democratic strategist Ace Smith still surface for the top job.

Obama counselor John Podesta, a onetime chief of staff to President Bill Clinton, is expected to take on a high-ranking role, perhaps as campaign chairman.

Mook and Clinton spokesman Nick Merrill declined to comment for this story.

Last month, ABC News published leaked excerpts from a private email listserv called the "Mook Mafia" in which Mook and other Democratic operatives shared thoughts on politics and politicians. In one, Mook wrote about wanting to "smite Republicans mafia-style."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Mook, who is rarely quoted in news stories, has been silent on the prospective Clinton campaign. That's a good sign for Clinton allies who want a lower-drama operation this time around.

Associated Press: "Late At Night, Christie Doing 2016 Foreign Policy Homework"

By Jill Colvin

December 23, 2014, 2:19 a.m. EST

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) -- It's after 9 p.m. on a Sunday night in late November and New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie is deep into a conference call talking about nuclear weapons and Iran.

One voice is advocating a hard line, arguing against allowing Iran any capability to enrich uranium. Another summarizes the status of current negotiations and argues that forcing Iran to give up enrichment entirely isn't realistic.

This is how Christie has spent many of his nights during a year in which he raised record-setting amounts of campaign cash for his fellow Republican governors and methodically tried to recover from a political scandal involving traffic jams near a New York City bridge. Late at night, away from the spotlight of the midterm elections and 2016 speculation, he's been on the phone with some of the brightest foreign policy minds in the Republican Party, getting ready to run for president.

"They've been much more quiet in general in their outreach and their approach than, say, (Texas Gov.) Rick Perry, who's been very public and active," said Lanhee Chen, who served as 2012 GOP nominee Mitt Romney's chief policy adviser and is among those whom Christie's aides have sought out for guidance.

"I think that reflects a difference in terms of what they perceive that they need to accomplish here very early on to be viable as presidential candidates," Chen said.

Such preparation is expected from prospective White House candidates, especially those such as Christie, a long-time politician in New Jersey and former U.S. attorney who lacks the foreign policy experience of the favorite for the Democratic nomination, former U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton.

But the previously undisclosed prep sessions are another indication that Christie's political ambitions are undeterred by the George Washington Bridge scandal and the all-but-formal entry into the 2016 campaign of former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, a competitor for support among donors eager to back an establishment nominee.

The briefing efforts are led by Bob Grady, a longtime adviser to Christie and a former White House official who has become the point man on policy in the tight-knit Christie circle. Assisting is Bob Zoellick, the former president of the World Bank and U.S. Trade Representative, and Brian Hook, a former assistant secretary of state who was the Romney campaign's senior adviser on foreign policy.

Zoellick and Grady said some of the sessions have covered Christie's recent trips to Mexico and Canada. Other topics have included Ukraine and Russia, the Islamic State, Syria and Iraq, Iran, and the U.S. defense budget.

The calls, which generally last about 90 minutes, typically begin with several experts discussing a region's history, recent developments and the views of foreign leaders of the countries involved, followed by a detailed question-and-answer session. The format is designed, they said, to expose Christie to multiple points of view and help him build a deeper understanding of history and world affairs.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"The idea is, the governor will form his own views, and this is the stage where he can get some sort of range of perspectives, some sense of questions that he should be thinking about," Zoellick said. "I personally think, having been through these since the `88 campaign in one form or another, is that it's the best way for him to actually think through and develop a foundation."

Christie has also met one-on-one or on the phone with officials, business leaders and academics, including former secretaries of state Condoleezza Rice and Henry Kissinger, and Council on Foreign Relations President Richard Haass.

While selling himself as a brash straight-talker, Christie has been notably reluctant to share his views about policy issues that fall outside his wheelhouse as governor. That includes immigration, which Christie has repeatedly said he won't discuss unless he chooses to run.

That has triggered criticism, with a Washington Post columnist suggesting Christie was at risk of becoming the "Rick Perry of 2016" - a reference to the Texas governor's dismal performance in 2012 and his inability to recall in one debate the details of his own plan to eliminate three federal departments.

While Christie and his aides have also been reluctant to share other details about their preparations, members of his team, led by his chief political adviser Mike DuHaime and money man Bill Palatucci, have begun a quiet outreach effort to potential donors as well as conservative activists, people familiar with the efforts said.

One of Christie's most loyal cheerleaders, Ken Langone, the billionaire founder of Home Depot, told The Associated Press that he's been chatting up friends and associates who may also be interested in backing a Christie campaign.

"As I talk, I'm keeping a list of people that, if the governor decides to run, these are the people I'm going to go to and say, `Would you like to help?'" he said.

There is more to be done, and soon, should Christie want to stay competitive in a race defined by Bush's announcement last week that he plans to "actively explore" a campaign.

Christie's people have been less aggressive in feeling out potential staffers in early voting states, and he does not have any kind of political action committee to allow him to raise money to pay for his travel and other campaign preparation.

With nearly a dozen potential candidates raring to go, there is little time left for the behind-the-scenes approach. Florida's Mel Sembler, a former finance chair of the Republican National Committee, said he received a flurry of calls from donors last week telling him, "We're ready," following Bush's announcement.

"Sides," Sembler said, "are beginning to be drawn."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "t r u t h o u t" <messenger@truthout.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 1/1/2015 6:55:07 AM
Subject: William Rivers Pitt | Planting a Seed for 2015

View Recent Newsletters

Tell a friend about Truthout!

Thursday, 1 January 2015

truthout

Donate Today!

Truthout is a 501(c)3 nonprofit organization; donations are tax deductible.

William Rivers Pitt | Planting a Seed for 2015

William Rivers Pitt, Truthout: "This is the time for New Year's resolutions, and I have a request of you: plant the seeds of goodness wherever you find fertile soil. Be that better person. Help to gentle the cold brutality of this hard world within reach of your arm."

Read the Article

Democracy and Its Discontents

Thomas J. Scott, Truthout: Globalization and rising inequality are contributing to the growing lack of confidence in democratic institutions in the United States and other Western democracies.

Read the Article

California: Waking Up Is Hard to Do

Craig Collins PhD, Truthout: Today, California is part of a profit-driven global system that must plunder and pollute the planet on an ever-grander scale to survive. Major sectors of the economy like agribusiness, tourism and construction depend on cheap labor drawn from outside the state.

Read the Article

Ten Ways Human Rights and Democracy Won in 2014

Sarah van Gelder, YES! Magazine: In 2014, we saw a lot of brutality. It was a violent year, but no worse than other years. What was different was the emergence of new movements of resistance - and with them new possibilities for change.

Read the Article

A View on Cuba's Opening From the De Facto US Colony of Puerto Rico

Ed Morales, North American Congress on Latin America: If Cuba were to take a deep breath and look at what's happened to an island it has shared such a deep history with, and if Cuba were to see Puerto Rico as the beginning of the free-trade economic era we're living in now, it would have to ask itself, is it the end game?

BuzzFlash

The Buzzflash commentary for Truthout will return soon.

No One Here Should Be Turning His Back
Read the Article at The New Yorker

Harvard Settles Title IX Case With Administration, Agrees to Revise Sexual Assault Policies
Read the Article at The Washington Post

$14 Million an Hour: The "War on Terror" Has Cost $1.6 Trillion
Read the Article at AlterNet

Budget War Looms for

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Read the Article

Renaming Afghan War, Renaming Murder

David Swanson, War Is a Crime: The US-led NATO war on Afghanistan has lasted so long they've decided to rename it, declare the old war over, and announce a brand new war they're just sure you're going to love.

Read the Article

The Democrats' Last Defense: Obama's Pen

Kevin Mathews, Care2: With a Republican majority taking over the Senate in addition to the House this January, right-wing ideology is sure to dominate Congressional votes for the next two years. Nevertheless, hope is not entirely lost for the left.

Read the Article

What's Luck Got to Do With It? Everything, if You Are a Banking Whistleblower

Kate Kenny, The Conversation: Think whistleblowing is a matter of telling the truth? Think again. "Successful" whistleblowing, where the protagonist actually manages to make themselves heard in the media and get the support of the public, is a matter of luck.

Read the Article

Paul Krugman | Vladimir Putin's Unraveling Russia

Paul Krugman, Krugman & Co.: It's impressive just how quickly and convincingly the wheels have come off the Russian economy. Obviously the plunge in oil prices is the big driver, but the ruble has actually fallen more than Brent crude - oil is down 40 percent since the start of the year, but the ruble is down by half.

Read the Article

Looms for Obama, New Republican Congress
Read the Article at The Hill

Democrats' Middle-Class Hypocrisy: Why Omnibus Will Haunt Them
Read the Article at Salon

Jeb Bush Quits Board Posts Ahead of Possible White House Run
Read the Article at The Guardian

Steve Scalise's Problem Is the Republican Party's Problem
Read the Article at The Nation

Support Truthout with a tax-deductible donation

Please add messenger@truthout.org to ensure you receive our messages
Truthout is a proud member of the New spaper Guild/CWA, Local 36047
Subscribe | Unsubscribe
Privacy Policy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Wilson Center" <wwics@wilsoncenter.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 9/18/2015 4:45:23 AM
Subject: Invitation: Georgian President Giorgi Margvelashvili to speak at the Wilson Center

To view this email as a web page, click here

Director's Forum

Wilson Center

A Conversation with the President of Georgia Giorgi Margvelashvili

Georgia is Europe's gateway between the East and the West. It lies at the heart of a region rapidly changing—Russia, Turkey, Iran, Central Asia. An aspirant to EU and NATO, Georgia's soldiers have fought in Iraq and Afghanistan as America's allies. Its democracy has developed against the odds in a neighborhood where power is often exercised without popular consent. How will the strategic realignments underway in Eurasia affect Georgia? Is Georgia's embrace of the West enduring, and what path links Georgia's future to Europe and America? How can the US benefit from Georgia's further Western integration?

His Excellency the President of Georgia Giorgi Margvelashvili will discuss these issues with the Honorable Jane Harman, Director, President, and CEO of the Wilson Center, and then take your questions, at the Wilson Center on Thursday, October 1 at 11:00am.

RSVP NOW » Forward to a Friend

RSVP NOW

Thursday, October 1, 2015
11:00am-12:00pm

6th floor Flom Auditorium

Directions

Wilson Center
Ronald Reagan Building and International Trade Center
One Woodrow Wilson Plaza
1300 Pennsylvania, Ave., NW
Washington, D.C. 20004

Phone: 202.691.4000

wwics@wilsoncenter.org

Privacy Policy

KENNAN INSTITUTE

© Copyright 2015, The Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars , All Rights Reserved.
Subscriber: podesta@law.georgetown.edu | Manage your Subscriptions | Unsubscribe from All

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Kristina Costa" <kcosta@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "Karen Dunn" <karen.l.dunn@gmail.com>
"Tony Carrk" <tcarrk@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 1/17/2016 3:18:19 AM
Subject: RE: CLIP | NBC's Meet The Press: Interview with Bernie Sanders

I don't think that is knowable information. Adding Corey to confirm.

From: Karen Dunn [mailto:karen.l.dunn@gmail.com]
Sent: Sunday, January 17, 2016 10:14 AM
To: Tony Carrk <tcarrk@hillaryclinton.com >
Cc: Ron Klain <ron.klain@revolution.com >; jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com ; kcosta@hillaryclinton.com ; ssolow@hillaryclinton.com ; jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com ; John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >; creynolds@hillaryclinton.com
Subject: Re: CLIP | NBC's Meet The Press: Interview with Bernie Sanders

Need to know how many people get guns through Charleston loophole broken down by timeframe. The last thing he said he would look at something it took a very long time.

On Jan 17, 2016, at 10:06 AM, Tony Carrk <tcarrk@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: Nick Baer <nbaer@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: January 17, 2016 at 9:47:53 AM EST
To: HRCRR <hrcrr@hillaryclinton.com >, Kristina Schake <kschake@hillaryclinton.com >, Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: CLIP | NBC's Meet The Press: Interview with Bernie Sanders

NBC's Meet The Press: Interview with Bernie Sanders

Link: http://mms.tveyes.com/PlaybackPortal.aspx?SavedEditID=95f60a8d-a842-40b1-bcea-b1a96e194209

Rough Transcript

CHUCK TODD: let me start with one of the issues that's likely to come up tonight at the debate, that's the issue of gun safety. last night in what the clinton campaign is referring to as a debate-eve conversion you came out in favor of essentially repealing immunity for gun manufacturers when it comes to being held liable for gun deaths. that's a switch of your positions. what brought you to this conclusion?

BERNIE SANDERS: well, not really. you know, i understand that secretary clinton and her campaign understand that, you know, they're losing ground. we've started this campaign off 359% in the poll at 3% in the polls, we're closing in in iowa and we're ahead in new hampshire. so i sense in the next few weeks you'll see more --

CHUCK TODD: but you did change your position on this.

BERNIE SANDERS: what i said several months ago, having a d-minus voting record from the nra, voting to ban assault weapons in 1988, yeah, that was a piece of legislation i wanted to relook at. but what that legislation had is a prohibition on armor-piercing bullets, it had language for a child lock safety for our kids, important provision. there were things i do not like and i was willing to rethink. we have rethought it. there's a bill apparently being introduced, i like that bill, it makes good changes and we will be supportive of it.

CHUCK TODD: another thing that will come up on the issue of gun safety is the issue of a waiting period. the clinton campaign is hitting you on not being supportive of something longer like a five day or seven day window and the reason this is being brought up is if dylann roof, the man who killed those nine folks in charleston last year, if there had been a longer waiting period he might have been prevented from buying a gun.

BERNIE SANDERS: look, what we saw in charleston is a tragedy of unspeakable dimensions. i did some pray a guy did prayer with people then takes out a gun and shoots nine people. i believe very strongly in instant background checks. i think we have to expand it and make sure 100% that we keep guns out of the hands of people who should not have that, people with criminal backgrounds, people who are mentally unstable. that has been my view from day one. but you know, chuck, i think the reason the clinton campaign is getting defense sieve they see that we have the momentum. they see the issues we are talking about, a disappearing middle-class and new income and going to the top 1%, a corrupt campaign finance system where people like secretary clinton can raise millions of dollars through super pacs, those are the issues they don't want to discuss so tonight we're going to be discussing a lot of issues and the main issues is why the rich get richer, almost everybody else gets poorer and the fact that we have got to stand up to the billionaire class and change those dynamics.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

CHUCK TODD: so you're in in favor of a longer background check? a five, seven-day background check?

BERNIE SANDERS: we are willing to look at anything that makes sense, that keeps guns out of the hands of people who should not have them. but i'm not going to be defensive on that issue. i lost an election in 1988, probably lost an election because i had the courage back then to say assault weapons should not be sold in america.

CHUCK TODD: let me ask you quickly about the iran deal. is iran still an enemy of the united states given what's going on? the improved diplomatic relations?

BERNIE SANDERS: it's funny. if you think back to 2007 during the campaign in which secretary clinton ran against barack obama she was critical of him, a question was asked to obama and said "would you sit down and talk to the iranians?" and he said "yeah, i would." point bag in you talk to your adversaries, you don't run away from that. secretary clinton i think called him naive. turns out that obama was right so clearly we have many, many issues and many concerns with iran but clearly also we want to improve our relationship with this very powerful country. i think the agreement to make certain iran does not get a nuclear weapon was a huge step forward. the fact we have the prisoner release was a good important step forward. so i hope we can continue to go forward to improve relations with iran.

CHUCK TODD: senator sanders, i'll leave it there. we'll look forward to seeing you, secretary clinton and martin o'malley on stage on nbc thank you, sir. it's going to be a humdinger of a debate. you heard senator sanders there mentioned hillary clinton in almost every single answer.

--

You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRR" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrr+unsubscribe@hillaryclinton.com .
To post to this group, send email to hrcrr@hillaryclinton.com .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Nick Merrill" <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com>
To: "Jim Margolis" <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>
"Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com>
"Joel Benenson" <jbenenson@bsgco.com>
"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
"Cheryl Mills" <cheryl.mills@gmail.com>
"Huma Abedin" <huma@hrcoffice.com>
"Robby Mook" <robbymook2015@gmail.com>
"Dennis Cheng" <d.cheng@me.com>
"Dan?? Schwerin" <dschwerin@hrcoffice.com>
"Jacob Sullivan" <Jake.sullivan@gmail.com>
"John Anzalone" <john@algpolling.com>
Date: 3/20/2015 9:30:03 AM
Subject: Re: Stories Update

https://gop.com/rnc-releases-new-hillary-clinton-video-stay-secretive-my-friends/

From: NSM <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com >
Date: Friday, March 20, 2015 at 10:51 AM
To: Jim Margolis <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com >, Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com >, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com >, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >, Cheryl Mills <cheryl.mills@gmail.com >, Huma Abedin <huma@hrcoffice.com >, Robby Mook <robbymook2015@gmail.com >, Dennis Cheng <d.cheng@me.com >, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hrcoffice.com >, Jacob Sullivan <Jake.sullivan@gmail.com >, John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com >
Cc: Jennifer Palmieri <jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com >, Kristina Schake <kristinakschake@gmail.com >
Subject: Re: Stories Update

Haiti story one of two that will likely run today.

http://www.washingtonpost.com/politics/how-the-clintons-haiti-development-plans-succeed--and-disappoint/2015/03/20/0ebae25e-cbe9-11e4-a2a7-9517a3a70506_story.html

How the Clintons' Haiti development plans succeed — and disappoint

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Deep in the Haitian countryside, peanut farmer Wismith Moricette epitomizes the success of Bill and Hillary Rodham Clinton's charitable work: Through an innovative program backed by the Clintons, the 23-year-old has doubled the yield from his one-acre plot. Along with all those peanuts, Moricette said, have come visions of a brighter future for his wife and young son.

Fifty miles away on Haiti's Caribbean coast, Anelle Germinal exemplifies another reality of the Clintons' work here: disappointment. The 33-year-old mother of four has been standing in the baking sun every day for months waiting for work in the struggling Caracol Industrial Park, which the Clintons have touted as a model that would change the economy of this impoverished country.

"They said we would have work," Germinal said, "but I have nothing."

Moricette and Germinal are two faces of the Clintons' increasingly complicated relationship with Haiti, where their high-profile development efforts after a devastating earthquake in 2010 have produced both success and disillusionment.

As Hillary Clinton moves toward a second run for the White House, her family's global charitable work, mostly through the Clinton Foundation, has come under intense scrutiny. The foundation has accepted large donations from corporations and foreign countries, raising concerns that the Clintons are creating conflicts of interest by blurring the lines between their political, business and charitable interests.

Two farmers water plants in the Acceso farm, near Mirebalais. The Acceso Peanut Enterprise Corp. was started with a $1.25 million grant from the Clinton Giustra Enterprise Partnership. (Andres Martinez Casares/for The Washington Post)

The Washington Post reported last month that the foundation's donors include seven foreign governments that contributed millions during Hillary Clinton's tenure as secretary of state. Among those donations was a $500,000 contribution for Haiti earthquake relief from the Algerian government that the foundation has acknowledged violated the terms of an ethics agreement with the Obama administration.

The Clintons' defenders have dismissed concerns about the donations as political sniping, saying the test of the foundation is not where it gets its money, but how it spends it. They said their work has created economic opportunity, improved lives for women and girls, raised health standards, and fought the effects of climate change across the developing world.

The work has been especially visible in Haiti, where the Clintons first traveled as young newlyweds in 1975 and where many people credit them with drawing the world's attention immediately after the earthquake, which killed more than 200,000 people.

With former president Clinton assigned by the United Nations to head up the emergency recovery effort and Hillary Clinton guiding official U.S. assistance as secretary of state, the couple helped a vast relief effort that has included some of the world's richest people, biggest celebrities and most successful businesses. The Clintons helped mobilize a vast relief effort in which international donors pledged

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

$10.4 billion, including $3.9 billion from the United States.

Greg Milne, director of the Clinton Foundation's Haiti Program, said foundation projects include programs that have helped more than 2,000 small farmers, an artisan-goods company that employs more than 300 people, a fish-farming operation, a cholera treatment center and improvements to schools in some of Haiti's poorest slums.

Clinton supporters also point out that their successes have come amid Haiti's chaotic political situation — parliament is not functioning, and President Michel Martelly, dogged by scandal, is ruling with virtually no checks on his power — endemic corruption, weak institutions, poverty, poor public education, terrible roads and other factors that have historically made it extremely difficult for development efforts to succeed.

The country has long had a fraught relationship with foreigners who come to invest and provide aid. Haitians often regard them with gratitude for desperately needed resources, and at the same time with suspicion that their motives are more to make a profit in Haiti than to help it.

Landry Colas hugs former president Bill Clinton in 2012 to express his gratitude for the Caracol Industrial Park, one of the largest regional investment projects in Haiti, which was expected to create more than 60,000 jobs. (Carl Juste/Miami Herald/MCT via Getty Images)

Nevertheless, the Clintons are facing a growing backlash that too little has been accomplished in the past five years, and that some of the most high-profile projects they have backed — including the Marriott, another luxury hotel and the industrial park — have helped foreign investors and Haiti's wealthy elites more than its poor.

"Bill Clinton is a good guy and well-intentioned, but the people here don't think so — they think he's here making money," said Leslie Voltaire, a former government official who worked with Clinton on post-earthquake reconstruction. "There is a lot of resentment about Clinton here. People have not seen results. . . . They say that Clinton used Haiti."

In January, Haitian expatriates picketed the Clinton Foundation's New York headquarters, demanding to know why more progress has not been made with the billions in international aid pledged after the quake.

Said Raymond Joseph, a former Haitian ambassador to the United States: "People are asking, 'What has Bill Clinton done for us?' "

[Activist: Haiti redevelopment hasn't been about helping Haitians]

The Clintons' long influence in Haiti is hard to overstate. As president in 1994, Bill Clinton deployed about 20,000 U.S. troops to Haiti to restore President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, who had been ousted in a coup in 1991. Clinton's trade policies as president, which he later called a "mistake," were devastating to Haiti's rice production and made it harder for the Haiti to feed itself.

In 2009, Clinton was named U.N. special envoy for Haiti, and he has visited the country 37 times since then.

After the earthquake, Clinton united with former president George W. Bush to create the Clinton Bush Haiti Fund, which distributed $54.4 million in the two years after the earthquake. Separately, the Clinton Foundation has spent more than $30 million in Haiti and led efforts through the Clinton Global Initiative to persuade private companies to spend vastly more.

"What I think most people don't know, even if they've been on the ground there, is these people are immensely talented," Bill Clinton said in a 2010 interview with NPR. "They have suffered from 200 years of outside and inside abuses and neglect and misgovernment. And a lot of the people who've gone there even to help them in the best of faith, have done so in a way that would never have allowed them to support themselves and to lift themselves up. And now there is a true consensus for and determination for a sustainable, comprehensive, long-term, modern society in Haiti. And they can do it."

But as the initial emergency response has evolved into efforts to ensure Haiti's long-term development, Haitians increasingly complain that the Clintons' most ambitious plans are disconnected from the realities of most people in the poorest country in the western hemisphere.

For instance, the Clinton Bush Haiti Fund invested more than $2 million in the Royal Oasis hotel, where a sleek suite with hardwood floors costs more than $200 a night and the shops sell $150 designer purses and $120 men's dress shirts.

One recent afternoon, the hotel appeared largely empty, and with tourism hardly booming five years after the quake, locals fear it may be failing. A spokeswoman for Occidental Hotels, the chain that runs the hotel, said that occupancy is up this year and that the project will "mature in the long run."

Bill Clinton also introduced Marriott officials to Denis O'Brien, an Irish telecom billionaire who has contributed millions to the Clinton Foundation. The result is a $45 million Marriott Hotel that opened this month in central Port-au-Prince. O'Brien said no Clinton money was invested in the project.

The ultra-modern hotel is adjacent to the headquarters of Digicel, a communications giant owned by O'Brien. When The Post visited recently, many, if not most, of the guests seemed to be foreign businessmen connected to Digicel.

Clinton defenders argue that hotels that cater to well-heeled foreign guests can still buy local products and provide local jobs, and those guests are often involved in businesses investments or aid projects that benefit the neediest Haitians.

O'Brien said his hotel employs 200 Haitians, is filled with locally purchased art and serves food from Haiti. O'Brien leads the Haiti Action Network, a collection of private businesses that have committed through the Clinton Global Initiative to spend $500 million on projects in Haiti. He and his company just built 150 schools and rebuilt Port-au-Prince's historic Iron Market.

"I don't know any modern leader that has spent more time helping a country and being so effective," O'Brien said of Bill Clinton. "He works like a demon in the developing world. Nobody is doing that. Is Tony Blair doing that?"

Other Clinton-backed projects have not delivered on lofty promises: A 2011 housing expo that cost more than $2 million, including $500,000 from the Clinton Foundation, was supposed to be a model for thousands of new units but instead has resulted in little more than a few dozen abandoned model homes occupied by squatters.

Controversy surrounding the Clintons only deepened with the recent revelation, contained in an upcoming book by Peter Schweizer, that Tony Rodham — Hillary Clinton's younger brother — serves on the advisory board of a U.S.-based company that in 2012 won one of Haiti's first two gold-mining permits in 50 years. After objection from the Haitian senate, the permits have been placed on hold.

"Neither Bill Clinton nor the brother of Hillary Clinton are individuals who share the interests of the Haitian people," said Samuel Nesner, an anti-mining activist who thinks mining poses great environmental risks and will mainly benefit foreign investors. "They are part of the elite class who are operating to exploit the Haitian people."

Clinton Foundation officials said Bill Clinton had been unaware of Rodham's involvement in the mine project. A spokesman for Hillary Clinton said she does not know the chief executive of the mine.

"I strongly believe the Clintons came to Haiti in good faith and they wanted to have an impact," said Jean-Max Bellerive, who was Haiti's prime minister at the time of the earthquake and served as co-chairman with Bill Clinton on the Interim Haiti Recovery Commission. (Bellerive is also on the mining company's advisory board.)

But, Bellerive said, the former president was hampered by a "weak" staff of American aides who were "more interested in supporting Clinton than helping Haiti." Echoing a common sentiment in Haiti, Bellerive also said Clinton should have listened more carefully to the opinions and needs of ordinary Haitians. "How do you want a guy coming from Davos or Dubai to get the real feeling for what's happening downstairs?" he said.

Milne, of the Clinton Foundation, said the criticism is wrong and unsurprising.

"President Clinton is one of the most dedicated and highest-profile advocates for Haiti, and he is still engaged while others have moved on," he said. "So it's not surprising that for some he is an easy target for natural frustration that the change we all want isn't happening faster."

Milne said the country has experienced strong economic growth in recent years, with more Haitians employed and more children in school.

"Is Haiti building back better?" Milne said, using a phrase that the Clintons frequently quote. "In many ways yes, though challenges remain."

Paul Farmer, a doctor whose Partners in Health has helped provide medical care in rural Haiti since the 1980s and whose health network has received more than $1.8 million from the Clinton Bush Haiti Fund to establish a medical residency program, also praised the Clintons' work. He said he forged partnerships at CGI meetings with private businesses and other charities for a variety of projects he said would not have taken place without the Clinton connection.

He said that by any objective measure, Haiti has been improving, in part because of the Clintons' efforts.

"Is the whole country built back better? I doubt it," Farmer said. "Water insecurity and food insecurity are very pressing problems. But if you look at the health statistics for Haiti . . . infant mortality, child mortality — they're all improving."

Still, even some who have benefited from Clinton-backed programs have grown disillusioned.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"I read that Bill Clinton is the most popular politician in America, but he couldn't get elected mayor in Haiti today," said Jacky Lumarque, rector of Quisqueya University, a private school that was largely damaged in the earthquake and received $914,000 from the Clinton Bush Haiti Fund to create an entrepreneurship center.

Lumarque said the program has helped hundreds of Haitians turn their informal street businesses into formal entities that keep records, pay taxes and have potential for growth.

He said it has been a huge success — but stands apart from the usual strategy of foreign groups, including the Clintons, who tend to favor projects imposed by well-meaning foreigners that are more "about Haiti" than "for Haiti."

The entrepreneurship center, Lumarque said, "is an example of what Clinton can do, in spite of himself."

[Foreign governments gave millions to Clintons' foundation]

When Bill Clinton came here late last month to help inaugurate the new Marriott, he made a side trip by helicopter to Haiti's central plateau to have a look at a Clinton-backed program that is revolutionizing the peanut-farming industry.

The Acceso Peanut Enterprise Corp. was started with a $1.25 million grant from the Clinton Giustra Enterprise Partnership, which is headed by Bill Clinton and Canadian mining executive and philanthropist Frank Giustra, as well as the charitable foundation of Mexican billionaire Carlos Slim.

Acceso buys feed, fertilizer and fungicide at bulk rates, then sells them to farmers for far less than normal prices. Acceso also hires tractors for farmers who otherwise would be using an ox and plow.

Robert Johnson, an American who runs the program, said the improvements are vastly increasing yields, quality and farmers' profits.

He said Acceso worked with about 1,000 farmers last year and bought about 120 metric tons of peanuts. This year, it expects to triple the number of farmers and buy almost five times as many nuts.

At least half of Acceso's sales have gone to two large Haitian factories that produce a peanut-based paste that is given to malnourished children. Most of the rest goes to local peanut-butter producers, he said.

The program's success, Johnson said, comes from its market-driven approach: It's not a charity, it's a business with a charitable purpose.

"We're building something that is going to be sustainable," he said. "We talk to the farmers. We're not going to just bring in something that someone thought up in Davos."

The program is now branching out into lime production, and Clinton visited a site last month where thousands of lime seedlings are being cultivated by dozens of workers.

Benel Auguste, 32, is one of the small landowners who rented his plot, about a third of an acre, to Acceso to plant limes. "It's a good idea; it's going to work," he said. "We know limes and we need them. We can do this."

The Clintons also were enthusiastic backers of the Caracol Industrial Park, which was built on 600 acres of farmland just east of the Caribbean port city of Cap-Haitien.

They agreed with economists, particularly Oxford University development specialist Paul Collier, who concluded that Haiti is an ideal place to create mass jobs in garment factories because of its proximity to the United States, favorable trade agreements and cheap labor.

The Clintons helped Haitian officials identify Sae-A Trading Co., which operates factories across the developing world and sews garments for giants such as Target, Gap and Wal-Mart, as a potential major investor.

As secretary of state, Hillary Clinton, along with top aide Cheryl Mills, lobbied for the project with South Korean officials and hosted Sae-A executives in Washington to press the plan.

Bill Clinton attended the Sae-A contract-signing ceremony in Port-au-Prince on Jan. 11, 2011 — a day before the first anniversary of the earthquake. He later laid the first stone of the park's construction. And then in October 2012, the Clintons, Martelly and other officials attended the ribbon-cutting.

Speaking to a group of investors at the ceremony, officials and celebrities that included actors Sean Penn and Ben Stiller and business moguls Donna Karan and Richard Branson, Hillary Clinton said it represented "a new day for Haiti and a new model for how the international community practices development."

"Haiti is truly open for business, and we want your help," she said. "We see this partnership between governments like our own and the private sector as absolutely essential in promoting and supporting long-term prosperity in Haiti. We know very well that long-term prosperity cannot come from just the provision of aid; there must be trade and investment like we have seen here today."

Today, Sae-A employs about 4,500 people. Company spokesman Lon Garwood said the operation has been steadily growing and will open a new facility next month. Henri-Claude Müller-Poitevien, a Haitian government official who works the apparel industry, said the Caracol project is on schedule and continues to expand.

A power plant was built, but plans for a new port at the industrial park to carry finished goods to the United States have been shelved. Residents of the plant's housing project say their land floods when it rains, and few said they think the plant will ever create the number of jobs originally promised.

"I believe that the momentum to attract people there in a massive way is past," said Bellerive, the former prime minister. "You can do interesting things with Caracol, but you have to reinvent the concept. Today, it has failed."

Each morning, crowds line up outside the park's big front gate, which is guarded by four men in crisp, khaki uniforms carrying shotguns. They wait in a sliver of shade next to a cinder-block wall, many holding résumés in envelopes. Most said they have been coming every day for months, waiting for jobs that pay about $5 a day.

From his envelope, Jean Mito Palvetus, 27, pulled out a diploma attesting that he had completed 200 hours of USAID training on an industrial sewing machine.

"I have three kids and a wife, and I can't support them," he said, sweating in the hot morning sun. "I have a diploma, but I still can't get a job here. I still have nothing."

Tom Hamburger in Washington contributed to this report.

From: NSM <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com >
Date: Saturday, March 14, 2015 at 7:59 PM
To: Jim Margolis <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com >, Mandy Grunwald <grruncom@aol.com >, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com >, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >, Cheryl Mills <cheryl.mills@gmail.com >, Huma Abedin <huma@hrcoffice.com >, Robby Mook <robbymook2015@gmail.com >, Dennis Cheng <d.cheng@me.com >, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hrcoffice.com >, Jacob Sullivan <Jake.sullivan@gmail.com >, John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com >
Cc: Jennifer Palmieri <jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com >, Kristina Schake <kristinakschake@gmail.com >
Subject: Stories Update

Hi Everyone,

Now that we're hopefully reaching a place of relative sanity again, I wanted to take a minute to send everyone a quick update on what's brewing in the press. We'll institutionalize a system going forward, but for the moment let me just run through a few things.

First, Amy Chozick at the NYT is writing a piece on Robby. He didn't talk to her for the piece but we sent some people her way. Looks like it will trace his life a little, have some colorful factoids in it (apparently Robby loves polo shirts), and based on the intel we have, the more irritating parts will be a look at how the wide web of Clintonland will be kept at bay, including WJC's office. To help on that last point Amy talked to Tina Flournoy last night who was fantastic.

Second, the Washington Post is working on a Haiti story about the Clintons' work there, either via the Department of State or the Clinton Foundation. It could run as early as Monday, and will be a look at the progress (or in their view the lack thereof) and what the Clintons' role in it has been. I'm working closely with the Foundation on the response.

Related, there are some other Foundation-related stories in the offing, so I will keep people posted on that front.

Finally, we've been going back and forth with TIME about a particular component of their piece on Thursday that claimed no one read many of the emails, implication being that the search parameters outlined in the Q&A were applied and anything that didn't show up in them was discarded as "personal." We've pushed back pretty hard and gone on the record telling them that they are wrong. We are also hoping to put the counter-narrrative out there with the help of Laura Meckler at the WSJ, which I'll send when it posts. Will keep everyone posted on this front as well.

Nick

As a postscript, please enjoy this courtesy of John A:

http://www.newyorker.com/humor/borowitz-report/hillary-releases-twenty-thousand-spam-e-mails-from-old-navy

Hillary Releases Twenty Thousand Spam E-Mails from Old Navy

WASHINGTON (The Borowitz Report)—Hoping to quell the controversy over e-mails missing from her private account, the former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton on Wednesday released twenty thousand spam e-mails she received from Old Navy.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"In an effort to be transparent, I have gone above and beyond what is required of me by law and released every last e-mail I received from this retailer," she told reporters. "Now I think we can all consider this case closed."

The e-mails reveal an extensive one-way correspondence between Clinton and Old Navy, as the retailer sometimes contacted her up to a dozen times in a single day to inform her of sales and other offers.

"This is one of the main reasons I set up a private e-mail account," she said. "I did not want spam from Old Navy clogging up the State Department servers."

But if the former Secretary of State thought that she could end the controversy swirling around her e-mail account by releasing the Old Navy spam, she may have miscalculated.

Representative Trey Gowdy, the Republican chairman of the House Benghazi select committee, questioned why Clinton would let twenty thousand spam e-mails from Old Navy accumulate rather than simply unsubscribe. "It doesn't pass the smell test," he said.

Responding to that allegation, Clinton said, "I want the American people to know that, on multiple occasions, I tried to unsubscribe from Old Navy, and my requests were ignored. The most frustrating part of this whole affair is that I've never even bought anything from Old Navy."

Get news satire from The Borowitz Report delivered to your inbox.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com>
To: "Jennifer Palmieri" <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 7/30/2015 3:45:09 PM
Subject: Re: CLIP | MSNBC: Interview with DWS

Isn't it up to Bernie to define socialism?

Mandy Grunwald
Grunwald Communications
202 973-9400

On Jul 30, 2015, at 10:42 PM, Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

> Lord
>
> Sent from my iPhone
>
> On Jul 30, 2015, at 11:30 PM, Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
>
> > This may require us to articulate the difference bt us and Bernie sooner than we thought.
> >
> > ---------- Forwarded message ----------
> > From: Lily Adams <ladams@hillaryclinton.com >
> > Date: Thu, Jul 30, 2015 at 11:25 PM
> > Subject: Fwd: CLIP | MSNBC: Interview with DWS
> > To: HRCRR <hrcrr@hillaryclinton.com >
> >
> > This exchange is making the rounds.
> >
> > CHRIS MATTHEWS: whatever is the difference between a democrat and a socialist? i used to think there is a big difference. what do you think it is?
> >
> > DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: the difference between –
> >
> > CHRIS MATTHEWS: a democrat like hillary and a socialist between bernie sanders. what's the big difference between a democrat and a socialist? you're chairman of the democratic party. tell me the difference.
> >
> > DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: the relevant debate we'll be having what's the difference between a democrat and a republican.
> >
> > CHRIS MATTHEWS: i think there's a huge difference.
> >
> > ---------
> > Lily Adams
> > cell: (202) 368-4013
> >
> > Begin forwarded message:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: Batul Contractor <bcontractor@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: July 30, 2015 at 9:21:40 PM CDT
To: Clips <clips@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: CLIP | MSNBC: Interview with DWS

MSNBC's Hardball with Chris Matthews, 7.30.15.

Link: http://mms.tveyes.com/PlaybackPortal.aspx?SavedEditID=a9a0ef9d-da00-4992-9b3a-2dbec93c46ac

Rough Transcript:

CHRIS MATTHEWS: of course, that was florida congresswoman debby wasserman schultz in 2008. not long ago. now hillary clinton is running again and debby is the chair of the democratic committee. a long primary campaign will only erode the benefit democrats are poised to reap from the republicans' free for all. i'm convince that had a prolonged debate will do us more harm than good. is he right? are we better off with bernie noise against hillary or better off without him?

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: i think eventually the nominee of both parties benefits from having the muscle that they need exercised throughout a primary. i think it atrophies if you don't get to discuss it. i think it is healthy to have a debate throughout the contest. i don't think we'll have a terribly long one.

CHRIS MATTHEWS: hillary clinton will probably win in iowa. new hampshire will be very close. there could be an upset. won't that hurt to the left? further left than she would want to go? won't that weaken her in the general?

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: what will happen throughout the primary and the republican party. the contrast will be extremely clear. that any of our candidates, hillary clinton, hillary clinton, bernie sanders, lincoln chafee, any of them, will focus on moving our country forward. continuing job growth that we've had under president obama for more than five straight years. we were at 750 jobs a year.

CHRIS MATTHEWS: so he can beat jeb bush? linoln chafee? come on.

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: the american people are with democrats.

CHRIS MATTHEWS: do you want to see bernie sanders speak at the democratic convention? do you want him up there?

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: bernie sanders –

CHRIS MATTHEWS: do you want him on the floor of the convention?

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: bernie sanders has been a good democrat. caucuses with the democrats.

CHRIS MATTHEWS: she speak in prime time? with everybody watching?

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: bernie sanders represents, we are a big time –

CHRIS MATTHEWS: so the answer is yes.

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: said yes. i can say yes again.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

CHRIS MATTHEWS: in prime time.

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: i don't know what time he should speak.

CHRIS MATTHEWS: maybe when nobody is watching, you mean.

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: no. of course he should speak. he should speak in a slot where the appeal that he has across the board, the progressive, pop list message that he has that resonates deeply and widely with the american people, not just democrats, absolutely that should be featured. the difference between us and the republicans, we are really a big party.

CHRIS MATTHEWS: whatever is the difference between a democrat and a socialist? i used to think there is a big difference. what do you think it is?

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: the difference between –

CHRIS MATTHEWS: a democrat like hillary and a socialist between bernie sanders. what's the big difference between a democrat and a socialist? you're chairman of the democratic party. tell me the difference.

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: the relevant debate we'll be having what's the difference between a democrat and a republican.

CHRIS MATTHEWS: i think there's a huge difference.

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: different between a democrat and republican is that democrats fight to make sure everybody has an opportunity to succeed. and the republicans are strangled by their right wing extremists. so where, we're watching them debate. phasing out medicare. and a candidate who actually said that president obama would march israelis to the ovens. that's the kind of debate going on on their side on. our side, we're talking about the best way that we can make sure every american has a chance to reach the middle class.

CHRIS MATTHEWS: are you in or out of the deal? the nuclear deal?

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: i'm taking my time to really know that deal well. i'm going to go home and talk to my constituents.

CHRIS MATTHEWS: i'm with you on that. let me ask you a tough question. if you vote it down, it is a -- if the congress votes it down. then you basically voted a vote of no confidence against president's foreign policy. the weird things is those on the right would say now we'll cut a better deal. how can they trust obama cut a better deal if they knock down the only plan?

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: the problem i see with people opposed to the deal, the republicans, i think, have been very irresponsible. where they're unilaterally immediately –

CHRIS MATTHEWS: they're not looking at it.

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ: i have the. the number one decision, what is the most likely scenario that prevents iran from getting a nuclear women -- nuclear weapon. to make sure we can draw contrast and reemphasize support to make sure everyone has access to health care throughout the entirety of their lives. before medicare, seniors faced medical bankruptcy, families were medically bankrupt. republicans like jeb bush would phase out medicare. every republican on the other side why.

CHRIS MATTHEWS: that's a solid argument. thank you. debby wasserman schultz.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRR" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrr+unsubscribe@hillaryclinton.com .
To post to this group, send email to hrcrr@hillaryclinton.com .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 2/13/2015 6:40:50 AM
Subject: Correct The Record Friday February 13, 2015 Afternoon Roundup

Correct The Record Friday February 13, 2015 Afternoon Roundup:

Tweets:

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: .@HillaryClinton stressed the need for affordable childcare for middle-class economic empowerment #HRC365 http://thehill.com/blogs/ballot-box/220354-hillary-clinton-returns-to-stump-championing-workers-and-women … [2/12/15, 6:02 p.m. EST]

Headlines:

FROM MEDIA MATTERS FOR AMERICA: Media Matters for America: "Fox News Plagiarizes RNC's Hillary Clinton Attack Campaign"

"Fox & Friends ripped off the Republican National Committee's latest hit job on Hillary Clinton, building an entire segment around the GOP's specious 'Where's Hillary?' campaign without disclosing the source."

CNN: "Hillary Clinton pens bipartisan oped for children's health care"

"Hillary Clinton teamed up with Republican former Sen. Bill Frist in a New York Times op-ed published in Friday's edition that urged Congress to extend the Children's Health Insurance Program."

CNN: "Hillary Clinton thinks Europe 'too wimpy' with Putin, London mayor says"

"Johnson said that he was impressed by the likely Democratic presidential candidate's 'brilliant mastery' of foreign policy."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Washington Times: "Marco Rubio: As 'architect' of Obama foreign policy, Hillary Clinton has 'tremendous liabilities'"

"Sen. Marco Rubio, Florida Republican, predicted Friday that if former Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton runs for president, her record as the nation's chief diplomat will play a central role — to her detriment."

Articles:

FROM MEDIA MATTERS FOR AMERICA: Media Matters for America: "Fox News Plagiarizes RNC's Hillary Clinton Attack Campaign"

By Sophia Tesfaye

February 13, 2015

[Subtitle:] From The RNC To FNC: The Conservative Media Pipeline For GOP Attacks

Fox & Friends ripped off the Republican National Committee's latest hit job on Hillary Clinton, building an entire segment around the GOP's specious "Where's Hillary?" campaign without disclosing the source.

"Where in the world is Hillary Clinton?" Fox & Friends co-host Elisabeth Hasselbeck asked Thursday. "It's been 204 days since her last press conference and 186 days since her last interview," and according to Hasselbeck, "Hillary seems to be in hiding."

Hasselbeck's report is ripped straight from a Republican National Committee (RNC) memo announcing its "Hillary's Hiding" campaign. That campaign, launched two days before the Fox & Friends segment, purports to "keep asking, 'Where's Hillary?'" and focuses on the number of days since Clinton's last press conference and interview. At no point did Hasselbeck credit the RNC for the concept that framed her segment.

As Slate noted, the RNC's campaign got "a rather large unpaid push from" right-wing media, which quickly adopted the campaign's attacks. The conservative Drudge Report, Washington Free Beacon and Weekly Standard blog amplified the RNC attacks. Rush Limbaugh mimicked the attacks, while Fox News' Sean Hannity even credited himself with inspiring the RNC's ads.

[VIDEO]

Fox News has a history of adopting GOP talking points as their own. In October 2013, Fox & Friends aired a video attacking the Obama administration over the faulty launch of Healthcare.gov that was strikingly similar to a then just-released RNC attack.

The Republican opposition research group America Rising launched a campaign similar to the RNC's on February 6 entitled, "Hiding Hillary." As Politico noted, "the similarity indicates Republicans' universal wish to combat Clinton's candidacy early on."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

CNN: "Hillary Clinton pens bipartisan oped for children's health care"

By Dan Merica

February 13, 2015, 11:16 a.m. EST

Hillary Clinton teamed up with Republican former Sen. Bill Frist in a New York Times op-ed published in Friday's edition that urged Congress to extend the Children's Health Insurance Program.

Invoking her new status as a grandmother, Clinton wrote that she and Frist were "concerned that gridlock in Washington and unrelated disputes over the Affordable Care Act could prevent an extension of the program."

"We may be from different political parties, but both of us have dedicated our careers to supporting the health of children and their families," Clinton and Frist wrote. "This isn't about politics. It's about our kids and our nation's future. What could be more important than that?"

The CHIP program was enacted in 1997, while Clinton was first lady and Frist was senator from Tennessee. It currently provides around 10 million children and families who don't qualify them for Medicaid with affordable health coverage. CHIP funding currently runs out in September.

Senate Democrats have started their own push to reauthorize the program through 2019, but some are concerned current gridlock in Washington will make it difficult to pass the plan.

"While reauthorization is not due until the end of September, Congress needs to act now" wrote Clinton and Frist. "With more than four-fifths of state legislatures adjourning by the end of June, lack of action and clarity from Washington by then will make budgeting and planning virtually impossible."

CNN: "Hillary Clinton thinks Europe 'too wimpy' with Putin, London mayor says"

By Stephen Collinson

February 13, 2015, 9:15 a.m. EST

Hillary Clinton is worried that European governments are being "too wimpy" in dealing with Russian President Vladimir Putin, London's mayor Boris Johnson said Friday.

Johnson, on a trade mission to the United States, said that he was struck by the former secretary of state's insistence that Europe must do more to stand up to the Russian leader over Ukraine.

"One thing in particular she really wanted to get across -- that was she thought the Europeans were being too wimpy in dealing with Putin," Johnson said, at a Politico Playbook Breakfast event in Washington.

Stressing he was not quoting Clinton word for word, two days after meeting her in New York, Johnson said that he was impressed by the likely Democratic presidential candidate's "brilliant mastery" of foreign policy.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"She thought in particular that we in Britain should be less dependent on Russian hyrdrocarbons and she thought we should get on with seeking alternative sources," Johnson said.

"Her general anxiety was that Putin, if unchallenged and unchecked, would continue to expand his influence in the perimeter of what was the Soviet Union. I was very, very struck by that."

"I was struck by the firmness with which she wanted us in Britain to stick it, to take it to Putin," he said, once again underlining he was not using Clinton's exact words but offering a "brutal summary" of what she said.

The flamboyant Johnson, while remaining mayor of London, is running for a seat in parliament at the next UK general election in May, and has long been tipped as a future leader of the Conservative Party and possible future prime minister.

Washington Times: "Marco Rubio: As 'architect' of Obama foreign policy, Hillary Clinton has 'tremendous liabilities'"

By David Sherfinski

February 13, 2015

Sen. Marco Rubio, Florida Republican, predicted Friday that if former Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton runs for president, her record as the nation's chief diplomat will play a central role — to her detriment.

"We are very blessed as a party to have a lot of quality people who are thinking about running," Mr. Rubio said on WHO Newsradio 1040 in Iowa. "I mean, compare that to the Democrats and their very weak bench."

Mr. Rubio was in the early presidential state Friday for a book-signing event at a local Barnes and Noble for his new book, "American Dreams."

"I mean, even their front-runner, Hillary Clinton, has significant challenges ahead," he said. "I think she's going to try to run on the claim that she was the secretary of state and did a great job, and there's no way you can argue that America today is safer or more respected on the global stage than they were five years ago.

"And she wasn't just a supporter of Barack Obama's foreign policy — she was its architect and its implementer," he continued. "So she's got tremendous liabilities."

Mr. Rubio also reiterated that the prospective 2016 candidacy of former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush isn't going to affect his own decision-making on a possible presidential run.

"If I decide to run, it won't be against Jeb Bush — it'll be because I believe that this is the right place for me to serve our country at this time in its history, in my life, and in my career, and [that] I have something unique to contribute to that debate," he said.

"It doesn't change my feelings about him or his service to our state and country in the past. … He was a good governor," Mr. Rubio said, adding that some people argue Mr. Bush was the best governor the state ever had.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Gary Ritterstein" <info@johndouglassforcongress.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 9/20/2012 6:10:39 PM
Subject: so scared

John,

We haven't been on TV with our positive ad for much more than a week and our opponent is already on the attack.

That's right -- Corporate Congressman Robert Hurt has spent his career in politics, and apparently has nothing good to show for it. Instead, he's reintroducing himself to voters by taking pathetic, cheap shots at General Douglass's advocacy for American aerospace policies that create jobs in states like Virginia.

Now we're ready to show voters why Hurt is running so scared -- he's afraid of us exposing his dangerous ties to uranium mining in the district.

Check out our new ad and help keep it on the air with a contribution right away!

Even though our opponent won't do anything to stop uranium mining, General Douglass will take action because he believes our public safety comes first.

Help us warn voters about Hurt and his financial ties to uranium investors before it's too late.

Thanks for all that you do.

--Gary Ritterstein
Campaign Manager
John Douglass for Congress

Paid for by John Douglass for Congress

This email was sent to: john.podesta@gmail.com. If that is not your preferred email address, you can update your information here. We believe that emails are a vital way for the campaign to stay in direct contact with supporters. Click here if you'd like to unsubscribe from these messages.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Alexandria Phillips" <aphillips@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"Alexandria Phillips" <aphillips@hillaryclinton.com>
Date:	5/26/2015 12:52:29 AM
Subject:	H4A News Clips 5.26.15
Attachments:	H4A 5.26.15 Clips.docx

H4A Press Clips

May 26, 2015

SUMMARY OF TODAY'S NEWS

Yesterday Hillary Clinton and President Clinton made their first joint appearance since the campaign launch at the Chappaqua Memorial Day Parade.

Senator Bernie Sanders will officially announce for President today. He said not to underestimate him, citing his record of winning unexpected races. The media immediately positioned Sanders as the candidate for the "Warren Wing" of the Democratic party to embrace.

An article from Bloomberg speculates that Hillary Clinton will run against President Clinton's welfare legacy saying, DC-based and national outlets have begun covering the fallout for the health care market and the burden on Congress if the Supreme Court overturns the ACA in the upcoming ruling.

SUMMARY OF TODAY'S NEWS..... 1

TODAY'S KEY STORIES..... 3

Clintons march in Memorial Day parade // CNN // Dan Merica – May 25, 2015..... 3

The White House has released enough Benghazi documents to cover half a football field // Vox // Christophe Haubursin..... 5

Where the media loves Hillary Clinton // Politico // Hadas Gold – May 25, 2015 5

Will Hillary Clinton Run Against Her Husband's Welfare Legacy? // Bloomberg // Melinda Henneberger - May 26, 2015 8

Launching campaign, Sanders appeals to party's Warren wing // AP via Yahoo! News // Ken Thomas – May 25, 2015 13

HRC NATIONAL COVERAGE..... 15

Bill and Hillary Clinton Make First Public Appearance Together Since Campaign Launch // ABC News // Liz Kreutz – May 25, 2015..... 15

Clintons march in Chappaqua parade; Hillary talks education // Lohud // Swapna Venugopal Ramaswamy – May 25, 2015 16

Can Hillary Clinton crumble? // Newsday // William F.B. O'Reilly – May 25, 2015..... 17

Clinton: I See 'No Role Whatsoever' For US Ground Forces In Iraq // CBS DC – May 25, 2015 18

The White House has released enough Benghazi documents to cover half a football field // Vox // Christophe Haubursin..... 20

Hillary Clinton was paid millions by tech industry firms with a 2016 stake // Daily Herald // Matea Gold, Rosalind S. Helderman and Anu Narayanswamy – May 25, 2015..... 20

The Latest Proof That Clinton Can't Stop the Sleaze // Real Clear Politics // Rich Lowry – May 25, 2015 24

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hillary Tweets About Memorial Day, And She's Got The Right Message // Bustle // Chris Tognotti – May 25, 2015 25

Here's Everything We Learned From The Hillary Emails // The DC // Chuck Ross – May 25, 2015 26

Hillary Clinton's 1st SC campaign stop is Wednesday at Democratic women's event in Columbia // AP via Daily Reporter – May 25, 2015..... 30

Step aside, Bernie Sanders has a big week - the busiest of the presidential hopefuls // The Washington Times // Jennifer Harper – May 25, 2015..... 31

GOP's policy: Attacking Hillary Clinton // Bloomberg // Frank Wilkinson – May 25, 2015 33

Obama + Clinton + Florida = fundraisers // The Washington Times // Jennifer Harper – May 25, 2015 35

What Young Feminists Think Of Hillary Clinton // National Journal // Molly Mirhashem – May 25, 2015 38

Presidentidal Candidates Continue to Take Shots at the Supreme Court // Bloomberg.com // David Knowles – May 25, 2015 45

OTHER DEMOCRATS NATIONAL COVERAGE..... 47

10 questions with Bernie Sanders // CNBC // John Harwood – May 26, 2015..... 47

Bernie Sanders Aims To Catch On With Elizabeth Warren-Backing Democrats // AP via Huffington Post // Ken Thomas - May 25, 2015..... 51

Vermont's Favorite Underdog // Politico // Terri Hallenbeck - May 25, 2015 53

Bernie Sanders Takes It to Wall Street With Financial Transactions Tax // Huffington Post // Dean Baker – May 25, 2015 55

Sanders: A Revolution With an Eye on the Hungry Children // NYT// John Hardwood – May 26, 2015 56

GOP..... 57

Ben Carson tells RNC to keep debates inclusive despite his own surge // Washington Times // Jennifer Harper – May 25, 2015 57

The Koch brothers try to rein in the GOP presidential clown show // The Washington Post // Paul Waldman – May 25, 2015 58

Here's Everything We Learned From The Hillary Emails // The Daily Caller // Chuck Ross – May 25, 2015 60

Super PACs test Sen. Lindsey Graham's commitment to campaign finance reform // Greenville Online // Mary Troyan – May 25, 2015..... 62

Nuclear Waste Hard To Handle For GOP Candidate // National Journal // Jason Plautz – May 25, 2015 64

Marco Rubio and the Challenge to Hillary Clinton // Huffington Post Politics /// Hoyt Hilsman – May 25, 2015 66

Analysis: Anti-gay bill rejection gives Jindal a campaign opportunity // AP via LGBTQNation // Melinda DeSlatte – May 25, 2015..... 68

Can Marco Rubio Make Peace With Conservatives on Immigration? // The Daily Signal // Ken McIntyre – May 25, 2015 69

Republican Presidential Debate Caps Upend 2016 Race // The Wall Street Journal // Reid J. Epstein – May 25, 2015 75

Christie places fourth in southern GOP conference straw poll // NJ.com // Claude Brodesser-Akner – May 25, 2015 77

Iowa straw poll on death watch? // The Hill // Jonathan Easley – May 25, 2015..... 78

Mike Huckabee and his tax plan got slammed on Fox // Business Insider // Rob Garver – May 25, 2015 81

Mike Huckabee: Creating cynicism // The Washington Post // Jennifer Rubin – May 25, 2015 83

Cruz says GOP candidates afraid to talk gay marriage // GOPUSA // Michael F. Haverluck – May 25,

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

2015 85

Walker emerges from Southern confab as GOP front-runner // Washington Examiner // Timothy P. Carney - May 24, 2015 87

And now Christie's moment of Zen // North Jersey.com // Charles Stile - May 25, 2015 93

Echoes of Hamilton in Huckabee's message // Philly.com // Robert Patterson - May 25, 2015 96

The day President Bush's tears spilled onto a Marine's face at Walter Reed // Fox News // Dana Perino - May 22, 2015 98

Koch Brothers Plan to Fund 'Sev eral' GOP 2016 Presidential Hopefuls // Bloomberg // David Knowles - May 25, 2016..... 100

GOP's fight for 2016 nomination likely to drag on longer than party desires // WaPo // Chris Cillizza - May 25, 2015 101

The Right's Political Correctness // WaPo // E.J. Dionne - May 25, 2015 103

TOP NEWS..... 105
DOMESTIC..... 105

Deadly Flooding Wreaks Havoc in Texas, Oklahoma // ABC News via Good Morning America – May 25, 2015 105

Biden praises Iraqi military after U.S. defense chief questions its will to fight // CNN // Kevin Liptak, Barbara Starr and Jim Acosta – May 25, 2015..... 106

Joe Biden tries to patch things up with Iraq // Politico // Nahal Toosi – May 25, 2015 107

ObamaCare fallout? Supreme Court ruling sets up potential Obama, GOP battle // Fox News – May 25, 2015 108

Islamic State faces battle in Iraq, U.S. reassures Abadi // Reuters // Baghdad Bureau, Jeff Mason, Andrea Shalal, Isabel Coles, Sylvia Westall – May 25, 2015..... 111

White House expected to remove Cuba from State Sponsors of Terrorism list // Aljazeera America // Sara Hassan – May 25, 2015 113

OPINIONS/EDITORIALS/BLOGS..... 115

2016 presidential campaigns chase money, with no cop on the beat: Our view // USA Today // The Editorial Board – May 25, 2015..... 115

Super PACs are not the problem: Opposing view // USA Today // Bradley A. Smith – May 25, 2015 116

TODAY'S KEY STORIES

Clintons march in Mem orial Day parade // CNN // Dan Merica – May 25, 2015

Bill and Hillary Clinton had two goals during Monday's Memorial Day parade in Chappaqua: Honor the men and women who lost their lives at war and not talk about the 2016 campaign.

Monday's Memorial Day parade was the first public event the Clintons have attended together since Hillary Clinton announced her campaign in April. The couple has tried to walk in the New Castle Memorial Day Parade every y ear since they moved to the Norman Rockwell-esque New York hamlet in 1999.

Clinton was followed by a small group of reporters who walked in front and around the presidential candidate for the about three-quarters of a mile parade route, while well-wishers on the sidewalk waved 2016 signs and shouted words of encouragement to the former secretary of state.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Hillary 2016," read one sign. "POTUS at last."

Clinton, however, wanted to deflect attention away from the presidential race.

"This parade's not about that," Clinton said when asked about the signs. "This parade is about honoring those we've lost. That's what I want to keep focused on and make sure that we pay proper respect to our veterans and especially those who lost their lives."

Clinton said that parade was a "wonderful tradition."

"It is a good way to remember our veterans and particularly those who gave their lives or were griev ously injured," she said. "This is a way of demonstrating that they are not forgotten and we are going to continue doing everything we can to make sure we honor their sacrifice and commitment."

Bill Clinton, too, declined to answer a question about how he thought the campaign was going.

"I don't know," he said with a laugh. "I'm in my foundation."

"Ask them," he said, pointing to Clinton's campaign aides walking with her.

For the first two months of the campaign, Hillary Clinton has campaigned without her former president husband. Instead, Bill Clinton has spent most of his time focused on the Clinton Foundation, including a nearly two-week trip to Africa.

The parade, while not a campaign event, did look like one. Clinton campaign staffers set up a volunteer recruitment table and were handing out stickers.

Hillary Clinton, sporting an American flag scarf, took selfies and shook hands with people who lined up to meet her. She greeted local town politicians and sat next to Rep. Nita Lowey at the ceremony after the parade.

Jim McCauley, the grand marshall of the parade, spent much of the event shouting at reporters to get out of the way.

"Move guys! Get on the sidewalk," McCauley said.

"Get them in line," Hillary Clinton joked.

Even though the horde of reporters changed the feel of the event, most in attendance were thankful for the Clintons attending.

"Every year I get an opportunity, I thank them for marching in the parade," said Rev. Larry Holland from Grace Baptist Church. "I'll be honest with you, I've lived in Westchester for a long time. No one knew Chappaqua until they moved here. We call it an honor."

The White House has released enough Benghazi documents to cover half a football field // Vox //
Christophe Haubursin

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The State Department turned over 900 pages of Hillary Clinton's private emails Friday to a House special committee investigating the Benghazi attacks of 2011. The documents join 40,000 pages the White House has handed over to Congress already. The volume is enormous.

Benghazi documents would cover half of a football field.

The volume of information produced by this case ends up giving comfort to both sides of the fight: Republicans believe a smoking gun must be hidden in reams of documents, while Democrats point to the continued demand for documents, given how much has been made available and how little wrongdoing has been found, as proof this is a partisan witch hunt.

Regardless, the investigation will continue on Capitol Hill and dog Clinton on the trail as she campaigns for the Democratic nomination.

Where the media loves Hillary Clinton // Politico // Hadas Gold – May 25, 2015

Hillary Clinton may feel like the press hounds and harasses her, but there's one segment of the media from which she's getting the kind of coverage you just can't buy: women's magazines.

Better known for features like "10 ways to flatten your tummy" and lush fashion spreads, the magazines have been hiring well-connected Washington women lately in the hopes that having an inside political track will position them for could be a historic White House run.

They've also ramped up their interest in politics, delving into hot-button issues like abortion rights and gay marriage and profiling members of Congress on both sides of the aisle. But a POLITICO review of several of the magazines' past few months of coverage suggests that readers will be getting a heavy dose of liberal cheerleading this campaign season along with their skincare, makeup and fashion tips.

"We're thrilled that Hillary is in the race," said Marie Claire Editor-in-Chief Anne Fulenwider, whose May issue included an entire section on the women who run Washington. "We'd love to see a woman president for the United States."

Clinton, a fashionista in her own right who counted herself among famed designer Oscar de la Renta's friends, already has a natural home among women's magazines and their mostly liberal audiences. But the reporting and writing often veers beyond alignment and into outright boosterism — if not of Clinton herself, then of Democrats and the progressive causes they identify with.

Take Vogue. In the past few months, the magazine — whose fabled editor, Anna Wintour, is an unabashed Clinton fan and has even taken her shopping — has featured John Kerry, a book about the first lady, and a feature on the first gay male White House social secretary, Jeremy Barnard. Clinton was the first first lady to appear on the magazine's cover and has appeared in the magazine at least seven times.

"I can only hope that all of you here in Little Rock will be celebrating her come November 2016," Wintour said as she introduced Clinton at an event in Arkansas in 2013. "Just as all of us, all of us at Vogue, look forward to putting on the cover the first female president of the United States."

Elle has seen perhaps the most Clinton action in its pages recently, with a Gucci-clad Chelsea gracing the cover the same week her mother announced her candidacy — a coincidence, Editor-in-Chief Robbie Myers said — along with several online articles on everything from how Clinton's inner circle is dominated by women to "12 Times Hillary Clinton showed us exactly who she is" ("brave, feminist, and unapologetic").

It's enough to make Republicans scream.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“I just hope that these editors, which in my experience tend to be very liberal women, can take their blinders off and can see that there are lots of conservative issues women can embrace and lots of conservative women who can be celebrated,” said Katie Packer Gage, a top campaign aide for Mitt Romney’s failed 2012 presidential bid.

The magazines don’t ignore the GOP. Republican presidential candidate Carly Fiorina, Reps. Elise Stefanik, Martha McSally, Martha Roby and Jaime Herrera Beutler hav e all been featured in print or online over the past few months. In previous years, Vogue has written about Laura Bush, Condoleezza Rice, Nikki Haley, Sarah Palin, Rand Paul and other Republicans. And as the cy cle gets moving, more GOP women will probably be covered. But you’re not likely to see articles defending the Supreme Court’s Hobby Lobby decision, or arguments against federal regulations requiring equal pay for women.

Of all the top women’s magazines, Cosmopolitan and Marie Claire cover politics most intensely — both host stand-alone politics sections on their websites. Cosmopolitan has a full-time politics writer; last October, Cosmo announced a get-out-the-v ote campaign and even began endorsing candidates (though Editor Joanna Coles said the endorsements would be limited to the midterms). Marie Claire has hired former White House deputy chief of staff Alyssa Mastromonaco and former Jill Biden aide Courtney O’Donnell as contributors, while Glamour hired Giovanna Gray Lockhart, a former aide to Sen. Kristen Gillibrand and wife to former Clinton White House press secretary Joe Lockhart.

Coles, whose recent issue includes a feature on female senators, has been perhaps the most vocal about only backing candidates who are abortion-rights supporters and fav or equal pay and mandatory insurance coverage for contraception. But she was actually a bit more subdued about Clinton, saying that while “there’s a lot of excitement” about the former secretary of state among Cosmo readers, there’s also some anxiety over her perceiv ed inevitability.

“It’s incredibly interesting to us watching the first female presidential candidate with a real shot,” Coles said in an interview. “I don’t think we think that differently from rest of media on this, but the fact she has been the first women running as president really seriously with a serious shot is v ery interesting, as a moment of history .”

Clinton deserves some credit for getting more politics into women’s magazines, Glamour Editor-in-Chief Cindi Leive said.

“When we first started three cycles ago, we really had to persuade the politicians to be in the magazine — we had to go through the whole eye-roll, ‘Ugh, is this going to be about fashion, are you going to do her do’s and don’t’s?’ Now, I don’t get any of that,” Leive said.

But Leive, whose magazine featured Michelle Obama on its May cov er, pushed back against the idea that women’s magazines lean left.

“I think there’s a misconception that fashion or women’s fashion magazines lean one way, that we’re Democrats. So part of our coverage that we really adhere to is a fairness and a philosophy of being pro-woman, nonpartisan,” she said, noting that last fall she interviewed Stefanik and Rep. Cathy McMorris Rodgers (R-Wash.). “We have 20 million print and online readers, and these are women whose political v iews are not monolithic. We keep that top of mind when it comes to our coverage of Washington and politics.”

The magazines know they’re not publishing the most serious political profiles. They tend to focus more on the personal stories behind the candidate, or what it’s like being a powerful woman, than on their policies or positions on major issues.

“I don’t want to pretend we’re doing some huge, in-depth political coverage,” Coles said, hastening to add that Cosmo’s readers still care about serious topics like the economy or foreign policy . “But so much of that is covered in the mainstream media, so where we’ve been focused is on issues that particularly engage our reader,” she said.

Covering politicians, especially women politicians, can lead to certain pitfalls, as “Saturday Night Live” comedian Cecily Strong made clear during the White House Correspondents’ Dinner last month when she demanded that reporters pledge not to report on Clinton’s appearance.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“What you never want to do is to go into a situation with a preconceiv ed idea of the outcome, and you never want to go into an interview with a politician with a preconceived sense of what the conversation will be,” Coles said. “We have to be as vigilant as ev erybody else and at Cosmo we are, actually.”

For Myers, the Elle editor-in-chief, focusing on a candidate’s image is a gender-neutral endeav or.

“It’s so funny to me, but we talk about a man’s image too, meaning, ‘Oh, he’s scrappy or he’s a natty dresser, or he clearly has invested in botox’ or whatever,” Myers said.

She pointed to a recent Elle story on Clinton. “There was not a lot of undue attention to the way she looked. When you talk about her image, it’s a much broader word — how does she come across, communicate to people.”

The magazines boast enormous audiences, especially among the younger women whom Clinton’s camp has alway s counted on for support — millions of readers, according to Hearst, which owns Cosmopolitan, Marie Claire and Elle. Cosmo reports its “reach” (an audience measure combining print and digital readers) to be 53 million, Glamour’s about 28 million, Vogue’s at 28 million, Elle at 21 million.

It’s a hugely important demographic for Clinton and Republican rivals, too: According to the Center for American Women and Politics at Rutgers University, women have cast 4 million to 7 million more votes than men in recent elections. Additionally , a higher proportion of women under the age of 44 voted in the past four presidential elections. That pattern is reversed among older v oters. The main audience of these magazines? Young women.

“These are not typically women who are sitting at home at 6 p.m. at night watching the evening news,” Gage said. “They’re not sitting and watching Sunday morning shows. You have to reach them where they’re at.”

Will Hillary Clinton Run Against Her Husband’s Welfare Legacy? // Bloom berg // Melinda Henneberger - May 26, 2015

In a campaign focused on inequality, Bill Clinton's famous pledge to "end welfare as we know it" is liable to be a central focus.

Almost 20 years ago, when Bill Clinton made good on his campaign promise to “end welfare as we know it,’’ some of his oldest friends were beside themselves. The plan, as originally conceived, had been to pump significantly more money into programs designed to move poor single mothers off of assistance and into jobs, which couldn’t be done on the cheap. Yes, Clinton had proposed a strict time limit on benefits, but he had also pledged to “make work pay.” As it turned out, only one of those two things happened.

On August 22, 1996, Clinton proudly signed a Republican bill that pushed recipients out of the program after five years and ended an entitlement in place since the New Deal. “In a sweeping reversal of Federal policy , the New York Times story on the event began, “President Clinton today ended six decades of guaranteed help to the nation's poorest children.”

The bill wasn’t the solo handiwork of then House Speaker Newt Gingrich, who had proposed sending poor children to orphanages. Rather, a Democratic president with political capital to spare was freely approving what many in his party saw as a baldly punitiv e bill. And Hillary Clinton, who in this early phase of her campaign has made "the-deck-is-stacked" inequality a central focus, was fully in support.

“You can put wings on a pig, but you can’t make it an eagle.”

Clinton's signing of the bill was a source of near-physical pain to someone like Peter Edelman, then Clinton’s assistant secretary at the Department of Health and Human Services, who as a speechwriter for Robert Kennedy had penned one of the earliest liberal critiques of welfare’s shortcomings, in 1967 . RFK’s proposed antidote, however, had been a massive jobs program. Edelman had known Hillary Clinton since 1969, when he’d put her in touch with his wife, Marian Wright

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Edelman, who became her mentor and employer at the anti-poverty organization she'd just founded, the Children's Defense Fund.

After Clinton signed the legislation, Edelman and his Health and Human Serv ices colleague Mary Jo Bane, both of whom had been brought into the administration as advocates of a very different brand of welfare reform, did what few in Washington ever do—they resigned in protest. In an "Open Letter to the President'' published in the Washington Post, Marian Wright Edelman called it a "moment of shame" for her old friends and their party.

The Edelmans weren't the only ones who were alarmed. New York's Daniel Patrick Moy nihan, whose U.S. Senate seat Hillary Clinton later filled, warned that children would be sleeping on hot-air grates if Clinton signed the bill. The liberal icon Paul Simon, of Illinois, said, "This isn't welfare reform; it's welfare denial."

The pain was all the sharper because the consensus among Clinton's aides, both those who supported and opposed the bill, was that the move was not politically necessary. Clinton aide George Stephanopoulos told the president that he did not have to sign the bill to be reelected, but was far enough ahead of GOP nominee Bob Dole that he'd win in November either way .

Two decades later, much of the left feels that Moynihan, Simon, Bane and the Edelmans have been proven right: In the early years, in a strong economy, many single moms did move from welfare to work. "When people think about welfare reform as a success, that's what they're talking about,'' says LaDonna Pavetti, of the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities. But since 2000, those gains have slipped away, until "now we're almost back to where we started."

There's no question that a smaller percentage of Americans are getting the help they need: In 1996, 68 of every 100 families living in poverty received cash assistance. Today , only 26 of 1 00 do, and in 10 states, that number is under 10. Because federal aid is no longer guaranteed to anyone living in poverty, states can simply make it harder to qualify for help, and then point to the low number of people they're serving as a measure of success.

Bruce Reed was the Clinton aide who wrote the phrase "end welfare as we know it" in one of his earliest presidential campaign speeches, and he still believes that the reform worked. "It was one of President Clinton's proudest achievements," Reed says, "moving 7 million people out of pov erty in those 8 y ears—100 times more than Reagan did'' during his two terms in office.

Reed's figures are correct. But digging into the numbers, a more complicated picture emerges. For one thing, 40 percent of those on welfare did not get a job, even in the early years.

"It did increase the work rate among never-married mothers,'' says the Brookings Institution's Ron Haskins, a Republican who helped write the welfare reform bill, "but that peaked in 2000 and has never gotten back to there because of three recessions."

What's more, as Haskins notes, the rate of extreme or deep poverty—defined as living on around $2 a day—has actually increased slightly: "There is a group at the bottom who are not better off. In the old days, they could stay on welfare forever, and now, any mom who does not have the ability to maintain her household and work at the same time is going to have trouble."

In a campaign focused on both income inequality and the opportunity gap, how Hillary Clinton engages with her husband's record on poverty and the safety net is liable to become a central question. And both Clintons have already said they've changed their minds on other issues that were central to his presidency . They no longer stand by his administration's record on criminal justice—especially the mandatory sentencing guidelines that filled prisons and hollowed out communities—or on gay rights, which were seen so differently by much of the public two decades ago.

But welfare reform was to the Clinton administration what health care reform is to Obama's; despite the controv ersy, it's always been considered a signature achievement. At the time, there was no discernible daylight between the Clintons on the bill he signed. "I think her views were like his," says Reed—"that the Republicans were wrong to play politics with extraneous cuts, but that there were good aspects of the welfare reform bill," including stepped-up child support enforcement, which made it, on balance, something to be proud of. Reed notes that most of the cuts to immigrants' benefits in the bill were later restored.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In Hillary Clinton's first memoir, "Living History," published in 2003, she wrote at some length about the fight over welfare reform. Clinton had vetoed the first two bills that hit his desk, but when the third one passed, she wrote, "I agreed that he should sign it and worked hard to round up votes for its passage—though he and the legislation were roundly criticized by some liberals, advocacy groups for immigrants and most people who worked with the welfare system ... I was most concerned with the five-year lifetime limit, because it applied whether the economy was up or down, whether jobs were available or not, but I felt, on balance, that this was a historic opportunity to change a system oriented toward dependence to one that encouraged independence."

There were political considerations, of course: "The legislation was far from perfect,'' she wrote, "which is where pragmatic politics entered in. It was preferable to sign the measure knowing that a Democratic administration was in place to implement it humanely. If he vetoed welfare reform a third time, Bill would be handing the Republicans a potential political windfall."

She was nonetheless sorry, she wrote, that "Bill's decision, and my endorsement of it, outraged some of our most loyal supporters," including the Edelmans, and "[i]n the painful aftermath, I realized that I had crossed the line from advocate to policy maker. I hadn't altered my beliefs, but I respectfully disagreed with the convictions and passion of the Edelmans and others who objected to the legislation."

In the book, Clinton came very close to suggesting that they were naïve, and said outright that that kind of purity was easy for people in their position: "As advocates, they were not bound to compromise, and unlike Bill, they didn't have to negotiate with Newt Gingrich and Bob Dole or worry about maintaining a political balance in Congress."

Engaging with the entwined issues of inequality and poverty will inevitably mean engaging with the consequences of the welfare bill Bill Clinton signed, though she has not done so yet. Asked if she would distance herself from welfare reform as she has from '90s-era mandatory sentencing, a Clinton campaign spokesman issued this statement: "Hillary Clinton has a long record fighting for everyday Americans and their families, and she is running to make sure all families are not only able to get ahead, but stay ahead. In the coming months she will discuss more details on her approach to addressing children and families living in poverty, including how best to support those families who rely on the safety net of welfare to temporarily keep their families afloat during the hardest of times, as well as other ideas to further strengthen families and help them move forward."

On that front, too, Clinton will not only face challenges from the left, but from the right. "A rising tide lifts all boats—that's a comment John Kennedy made—except if your boat has a hole in it," GOP presidential hopeful Rick Santorum said recently. "And in America today,'' said Santorum, who supports an increase in the minimum wage, "millions of Americans have holes in their boats."

Many anti-poverty advocates are hopeful that Clinton will address the holes in the safety net head-on, finally repairing the system that she and her husband had a hand in creating: "Welfare reform needs to be revisited,'' said Stephen Schneck, director of the Institute for Policy Research and Catholic Studies at Catholic University and a former national co-chair of Catholics for Obama. "I think Hillary needs to stand up and say, 'My husband and the Republicans in the 90s really thought they'd put together a package that was going to fix welfare and poverty but didn't fix either one.' She needs to call America to the barricades in the struggle against deep poverty.''

Will she? Robert Putnam, whose new book on the inequality of opportunity in America today, Our Kids: The American Dream in Crisis, said Clinton had "used extremely well chosen words, I thought, that kids everywhere should have the same opportunities as her granddaughter.'' Speaking that way, he added with a laugh, "emphasized the 'It Takes a Village,' and Children's Defense Fund part of her resume'—and she has a rich, complicated and not always internally consistent one—but she didn't just discover this issue y esterday."

Already, at this early stage in the campaign, Clinton is speaking with more specificity on the subject than her riv als on the right, calling for more support for child care and early childhood education. At Effie O. Ellis Early Learning Center in Chicago last week, she criticized Republicans in Congress for making America "turn its back on our children and working parents."

Yet even as Clinton talked about fairness, those she called by name were not the have-nots, but members of the middle class: "When we talk about child care, we're talking about the economy , we're talking about families, we're talking about fairness. We're talking about all the v alues that we believe are necessary to raise healthy, successful, productive children in society today. ... I want you to get ahead and stay ahead. And I want the words 'middle class' to mean something again."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

At the same stop, in Bronzeville on Chicago's South Side, she listened to Lakesia Collins, a single mom of three boys who makes $10 an hour: "It kind of hurts me that I can't afford things for them, but I'm able to work. It really is shameful for me because I can't give them what they need because I don't make enough money." Work still doesn't pay, in other words.

Those completely left out of both our safety net and the policy debate so far include older women who've done physical labor all their lives—what do they do after their bodies start to give out?—and mothers who are not disabled enough to qualify for SSI, but are not able enough, for a constellation of reasons, to go straight to work, either. "I'm a true believer in work," says Pavetti, of the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, "but our programs are set up as, 'You do it now or y ou never do it.' "

Some remedies for inequality that are being discussed, on and off the campaign trail, include raising the minimum wage, extending Earned Income Tax Credits, subsidizing wages and doing more to support job training and job readiness, along with more macro solutions like financial sector reform, rethinking trade agreements and bankruptcy rules, and allowing the government to negotiate health care costs.

Peter Edelman, who supports Hillary Clinton's presidential bid, doesn't expect her to revisit the '90s when it comes to welfare reform. But then, he's been mistaken about Bill and Hillary Clinton's intentions before—for instance, the month before President Clinton signed the welfare reform bill, when Clinton remarked that "You can put wings on a pig, but y ou can't make it an eagle."

"So a bunch of us hear that and think he's going to veto it,'' Edelman remembers, "and that's what he wants us to think."

Those arguing for the bill inside the White House back then included Reed, Rahm Emanuel, Mickey Kantor, and Al Gore, while those who opposing it were Donna Shalala, Robert Reich, Robert Rubin, Leon Panetta, George Stephanopoulos and Harold Ickes.

The principle concern among those arguing against it was that it ended the legal right to aid. And while the states alway s set the amount of the benefit, Edelman says that they now they can effectiv ely say , "You look like y ou could work; go away."

A lot of states, Reed notes, "have stolen that money—legally—and use it for other things.'' In Texas, for example, more than half of the federal welfare dollars support child welfare programs, and some states, according to Pav etti, have even used it for college scholarships. Though it does have to be used for low-income residents, she says, "it all depends where the shortfalls are."

"There is no welfare in big chunks of the country any more,'' Edelman argues, "and because too many of the Democrats own a piece of it, nobody says it's a terrible failure, but it is. You want people who can work to work, but we have a deeply damaged safe net.''

More than any presidential election since the civil rights era, this one is likely to focus on those who have fallen through that net. And more than any other contender, Peter Edelman's old friend Hillary Clinton knows what's at stake.

Launching cam paign, Sanders appeals to party's Warren wing // AP via Yahoo! News // Ken Thom as – May 25, 2015

PORTSMOUTH, N.H. (AP) — For Democrats who had hoped to lure Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren into a presidential campaign, independent Sen. Bernie Sanders might be the next best thing.

Sanders, who is opening his official presidential campaign Tuesday in Burlington, Vermont, aims to ignite a grassroots fire among left-leaning Democrats wary of Hillary Rodham Clinton. He is laying out an agenda in step with the party's progressive wing and compatible with Warren's platform — reining in Wall Street banks, tackling college debt and creating a gov ernment-financed infrastructure jobs program.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"I think our views are parallel on many, many issues," Sanders said in an interview with The Associated Press, describing Warren as a "good friend."

Sanders caucuses with the Democrats in Washington and is running for the Democratic nomination. He and Democratic former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley are vying to become the primary alternativ e to Clinton. Much of the energy behind a Clinton alternative has been directed to drafting Warren, but she has repeatedly said she won't run.

For Sanders, a key question is electability. Clinton is in a commanding position by any measure. Yet his supporters in New Hampshire say his local ties and longstanding practice of holding town hall meetings and people-to-people campaigning — a staple in the nation's first primary state — could serve him well.

"Toward the Vermont border it's like a love-fest for Bernie," said Jerry Curran, an Amherst, New Hampshire, Democratic activist who has been involved in the draft Warren effort. "He's not your milquetoast left-winger. He's kind of a badass left-winger."

A self-described democratic socialist, Sanders has raised more than $4 million since announcing in early May that he would be a presidential candidate. He suggested in the interview that raising $50 million for the primaries was a possibility . "That would be a goal," he said.

He rejects the notion that he's simply in the race to shape the debate.

"Hillary Clinton is a candidate, I am a candidate," Sanders said. "I suspect there will be other candidates. The people in this country will make their choice."

Whether Sanders can tap into the party 's Warren wing and influence Clinton's policy agenda remains unclear. But he has been on the forefront of liberal causes as Clinton has seemed to be tacking to the left.

Clinton regularly refers to an economic stacked deck against American workers — rhetoric that offers comparisons to Warren's frequent description of the economic system being "rigged" against middle-class families.

Sanders has joined with Warren to drive opposition to the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade proposal, arguing it would ship jobs overseas. Clinton has avoided taking a specific position on the trade deal.

The Vermont senator has introduced legislation to make tuition free at public colleges and universities, a major piece of Warren's agenda. The free tuition would be cov ered by a mix of state and federal money and paid for by higher taxes on Wall Street investment firms, hedge funds and other financial transactions. Clinton's campaign has signaled that she intends to make debt-free college a major piece of her campaign.

Sanders' disdain for big money in politics is also shared by liberals. Clinton frequently tells voters that she would back a constitutional amendment to overturn the Supreme Court decision allowing super PACS to raise unlimited money. But Democratic super PACs are already lining up behind her.

"I'm not going to have a super PAC in this campaign," Sanders said. "I don't go to fundraisers where millionaires sit around the room and say here's a million, here's $5 million for your super PAC. That's not my life. That's not my world. And I think the American people are saying that is not what our politics should be about." He said the money he's raised so far has come from more than 100,000 individual donors, giv ing an av erage of $42 each.

Organizers of the pro-Warren effort say Clinton may still win over many of their supporters. Charles Chamberlain, executive director of Vermont-based Democracy for America, said Sanders would "fill the void" for some of the voters hoping for Warren to run. But not for all.

"They're different people. They've got different pluses, they've got different minuses," Chamberlain said. "Some of the people who want to see Elizabeth get in the race are going to Hillary. Some of them are going to go to Martin O'Malley." O'Malley is expected to announce his candidacy Saturday.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

If Sanders is the underdog, that's fine by him. During the 197 0s, he lost four statewide elections as a third-party candidate, and then narrowly defeated a Democratic incumbent in 1981 to become Burlington's may or.

"Nobody — trust me — nobody thought I would defeat a five-term incumbent Democratic mayor," Sanders said, noting the winning margin of 10 votes.

The lessons, he said, are clear: "Don't underestimate me."

HRC NATIONAL COVERAGE

Bill and Hillary Clinton Make First Public Appearance Together Since Campaign Launch // ABC News // Liz Kreutz – May 25, 2015

Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton took a short break from the campaign trail today to participate in her favorite Memorial Day tradition: the annual New Castle Memorial Day Parade in Chappaqua, New York.

Clinton, who loves the parade (like “really , really, really” loves it), was joined this year by her husband, Bill Clinton -- marking their first public appearance together since the announcement of her presidential campaign.

The two arrived in Clinton’s famous Scooby van just before 11 a.m., when the parade was scheduled to start, and were instantly swarmed by crowds of locals, young and old, clamoring for a moment with their town’s most famous couple.

“Hi! Oh, hi! Hi! So good to see you! Mwah!” Clinton called out as one after the next, she greeted friends and neighbors.

The crowds were eventually asked to step aside so the Clintons could take their position at the front of the parade, where they walked alongside friends and other local elected officials.

“It's a wonderful tradition,” Clinton said as she began walking. “Obviously it happens in towns and cities across our country but it's a good way to remember our veterans particularly those who gave their lives or were grievously injured, and we just need to, you know, make sure that it continues from y ear to year, generation to generation."

Hillary Clinton has attended the parade nearly every single year since she and Bill Clinton mov ed into the town, about an hour north of New York City, in 1999 -- and it’s something she does not like to miss no matter what.

"I put this on my calendar every year, and I basically tell my staff I really, really, really want to do this," the then-secretary of state told the New York Times on Memorial Day in 2012. "So unless there's some crisis of significant proportions, I'll be here, and I've had a few crises where I'v e had to take phone calls as I'v e marched."

This year, Clinton was greeted by crowds cheering their support for 2016, some even wearing t-shirts reading: “It Takes a Village: Chappaqua for Hillary.”

But when asked by a reporter about the signs of support along the parade route, Clinton didn’t engage.

“This parade is not about that,” she said.

Clintons march in Chappaqua parade; Hillary talks education // Lohud // Swapna Venugopal Ramaswamy – May 25, 2015

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

NEW CASTLE – As Hillary Clinton, the 2016 Democratic presidential hopeful, marched alongside former President Bill Clinton in their hometown Memorial Day parade, chants of "Hillary 2016" filled the air.

Close to a thousand onlookers crowded the parade route down King Street in Chappaqua.

The Clintons smiled and waved at the adoring and often loud supporters.

"Many of our veterans came home from combat with injuries of all kinds," Hillary Clinton told the media about taking part in the event. "This is a way of demonstrating that they are not forgotten, and we are going to make sure we do everything we can to honor their sacrifice."

Hillary Clinton also surprised a few middle school boys by posing for selfies while still waking the route.

"Hillary 2016. POTUS at last" read one sign posted in the front yard of a home using the abbreviation for president of the United States.

After the event, Clinton gave a hint of what one of her priorities as a presidential candidate may be.

When asked by The Journal News about key actions the U.S. could take to improve education and remain competitive with other leading economies, Clinton said early childhood education should be a priority .

"Education is absolutely key. And y ou have to start early. The years birth to 5 are critical," she said.

Anne Boundas, whose house sits on Ridgewood Terrace, where the parade originates, said she had had front row seats to the festivities ev ery year since 1974 and has often seen the Clintons take part.

"The parade has become bigger over the years, "she said. "It's just a lot of fun. Gets you thinking of all the sacrifices that have been made so we can have a community like this."

Can Hillary Clinton crum ble? // Newsday // William F.B. O'Reilly – May 25, 2015

Martin O'Malley has good abs. And wasn't he was once mayor of Baltimore?

That seems to be about the sum of what most Americans know about the former Maryland governor as he prepares to launch a presidential bid on May 30. O'Malley polls somewhere between zero and 2 percent in early Democratic primary surveys, a dozen points behind Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren, who's not ev en running.

O'Malley's bleak numbers remind me of a former New York State senator who put his hat in the ring for mayor of New York in 197 7. His pollster had good news and bad news, he once told me. The good news was that he was at 3 percent in the latest survey. The bad news was that the poll had a 4-percent margin of error. He could be at negative one.

But O'Malley is suddenly interesting, far more so than his anemic poll numbers would typically warrant. He matters because he's the sole candidate in the current Democratic field who could legitimately step in as the party 's standard-bearer should Hillary Clinton's candidacy collapse. Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders (12 percent in the latest Economist survey) is an avowed socialist, which, thankfully , still makes him a non-starter in American politics. Vice President Joe Biden (11 percent), who is reportedly hanging around in the wings in case Clinton tanks, remains America's favorite crazy uncle. He's a hoot at Thanksgiving, but y ou don't want to see him behind the wheel.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

O'Malley comes out of central casting. He's handsome, articulate and passionate about his beliefs. He stands decidedly to Clinton's political left, but he has the clean-cut looks of someone who wouldn't spook the American public in a general election. Indeed, when he's not posing shirtless for cameras in beach photo-ops, he looks like the Brooks Brothers conserv ative Aaron Sorkin might conjure for a new HBO series. And at 52, O'Malley is vibrant. He appears to be reaching his prime, whereas Clinton, rightly or wrongly, seems to have exceeded hers. It's not so much that her past is wearing on her, it's that it's catching up with her.

It's a marvel to watch Clinton at present. It's as if she's suspended in air. She's the prohibitive favorite to be the Democratic nominee while carry ing at least 1,000 pounds of baggage, with more seemingly being added by the day. The big question is whether she can continue to defy gravity . It's possible she can. But it's probable that she eventually falls to earth.

O'Malley's positioning as the dark horse candidate in the race isn't escaping notice. Political blogger Matt Drudge had a field day this week reciting past praise heaped on O'Malley by none other than former President Bill Clinton. Mr. Clinton sang O'Malley's praises liberally at the 201 4 annual meeting of the Clinton Global Initiative. In a 2002 letter to then-Baltimore May or O'Malley, the former president wrote, "I won't be surprised if you go all the way." Say what you will about Bill Clinton, he has a good eye for political talent.

I recently asked a prominent New York Democrat in a telev ision green room -- a progressive Democrat -- what's wrong with O'Malley? Why aren't more left-wing Democrats backing him? He was genuinely perplexed by the question. There's nothing wrong with O'Malley , he said, but why on earth would we mess with a good thing? In other words, Clinton is the surest thing they 've got going into 2016.

She certainly is. So long as she can remain suspended above ground. But if she's ever forced to touch terra firma, watch for O'Malley to be there to meet her.

Clinton: I See 'No Role Whatsoever' For US Ground Forces In Iraq // CBS DC – May 25, 2015

HAMPTON, N.H. (CBSDC/AP) — Democratic presidential contender Hillary Rodham Clinton said Friday she sees "no role whatsoever" for U.S. ground forces in Iraq despite setbacks in the struggle against Islamic State of Iraq and Syria militants.

The existing U.S. policy of providing air support, intelligence, surveillance and training is the right one, Clinton said, in comments that appeared more definitiv e than her past statements about how the Iraqis themselves must carry the fight.

She addressed the matter after visiting Smuttynose Brewery, where she spoke in defense of the Export-Import Bank, a little-known U.S. agency that guarantees loans to help U.S. exporters and is opposed by some Republicans. Clinton was on her second v isit to New Hampshire since opening her campaign for the Democratic nomination.

ISIS advances have intensified questions about whether the U.S. should be doing more in the country it invaded in 2003, setting off a years-long war that President Barack Obama drew down by phasing out American combat operations. Clinton supported the invasion as a senator, a decision she later called a mistake.

On Friday , she said the U.S. should stay its course, not expand it.

"American air support is available, American intelligence and surveillance is available, American trainers are trying to undo the damage that was done to the Iraqi army by former Prime Minister Maliki, who bears a very big part of the responsibility for what is happening inside Iraq today," she said.

"But at the end of the thought process that I engage in ... this has to be fought by and won by the Iraqis. There is no role whatsoever for American soldiers on the ground to go back other than in the capacity as trainers and adv isers."

In remarks at the brewery, Clinton accused Republicans in Congress and the presidential race of threatening tens of thousands of small business jobs by seeking to cut the Export-Import Bank.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Conservative Republicans have sought to eliminate the bank, arguing it unfairly helps some large American companies sell products overseas at the expense of others and gives government too big a hand. Clinton said she learned as secretary of state that the U.S. was in a global competition for business, and the notion that Congress would eliminate "this relatively small but vital" agency is "absolutely backwards."

Republican Rep. Jeb Hensarling of Texas, chairman of the House Financial Services Committee, said Clinton is a "natural cheerleader" for the bank because its "biggest beneficiaries are foreign governments and giant corporations."

These, he said in a statement anticipating her defense of the bank, are "among the biggest donors to the Clinton Foundation as well as major underwriters of the speaking fees that added millions of dollars to the Clinton bank account."

At the brewery, Clinton spoke about her wish for regulations to be loosened on community banks to ease lending to small businesses.

Joanne Francis, the brewery's co-owner, said it was a "white-knuckle ride" securing loans and other money to start the brewery and open a new operations facility in 2014. "It was terrifying, to be honest with you," Francis said.

But Clinton criticizes Republicans for wanting to roll back regulations on the types of large financial institutions that contributed to the 2008 economic crisis. She said Republicans were holding a community banking overhaul hostage to their attempt to overturn the 2010 financial regulation law known as Dodd-Frank.

Her appearances in New Hampshire coincided with the State Department's release of emails, from her time as secretary of state, related to the 2012 attacks on a U.S. diplomatic post in Benghazi, Libya, that killed four Americans. Clinton said she welcomed their release and the information in the emails was handled appropriately, but kept focus on her economic message.

"I'm not running for my husband's third term and I'm not running for Barack Obama's third term," she said. "But I am running to continue the positive results-oriented policies that both of them worked for."

Clinton will make her first campaign speech at a major rally June 13 and is scheduled to attend events in South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, New Mexico, Texas and Connecticut in the coming weeks.

A recent CBS News/New York Times poll finds that 85 percent of Democratic voters would consider voting for her.

The White House has released enough Benghazi documents to cover half a football field // Vox // Christophe Haubursin

The State Department turned over 900 pages of Hillary Clinton's private emails Friday to a House special committee investigating the Benghazi attacks of 2011. The documents join 40,000 pages the White House has handed over to Congress already. The volume is enormous.

Benghazi documents would cover half of a football field.

The volume of information produced by this case ends up giving comfort to both sides of the fight: Republicans believe a smoking gun must be hidden in reams of documents, while Democrats point to the continued demand for documents, given how much has been made available and how little wrongdoing has been found, as proof this is a partisan witch hunt.

Regardless, the investigation will continue on Capitol Hill and dog Clinton on the trail as she campaigns for the Democratic nomination.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hillary Clinton was paid millions by tech industry firms with a 2016 stake // Daily Herald // Matea Gold, Rosalind S. Helderman and Anu Narayanswamy – May 25, 2015

In one of her last gigs on the paid lecture circuit, Hillary Clinton addressed an eBay summit aimed at promoting women in the workplace, delivering a 20-minute talk that garnered her a $315,000 payday from the company.

Less than two months later, Clinton was feted at the San Francisco Bay-area home of eBay chief executive John Donahoe and his wife, Eileen, for one of the first fundraisers supporting Clinton's newly announced presidential campaign.

The two events spotlight the unusually close financial ties between Clinton and a broad array of industries with issues before the government that paid tens of millions of dollars to her and her husband, former president Bill Clinton, in the months preceding the launch of her presidential campaign.

Disclosure documents recently filed by Hillary Clinton revealed that the couple have earned about $25 million for delivering 104 paid speeches since January 2014.

While Bill Clinton's lucrative speaking career since leaving the White House in 2001 has been well documented, the new disclosures offer the first public accounting of Hillary Clinton's paid addresses since she stepped down as secretary of state. And they illustrate how the Clintons have personally profited by drawing on the same network of supporters who have backed their political campaigns and philanthropic efforts -- while those supporters have gained entree to a potential future president.

Silicon Valley is one place where those overlapping interests come together, according to a Washington Post analysis of the new Clinton disclosures.

Out of the $11.7 million that Hillary Clinton has made delivering 51 speeches since January 2014, $3.2 million came from the technology industry, the analysis found. Several of the companies that paid Clinton to address their employees also have senior leaders who have been early and avid supporters of her presidential bid.

The tech sector was the largest single source of speaking fees for Clinton, followed by health care and financial services, according to the Post analysis. Bill Clinton also made substantial income speaking to tech groups but focused more heavily on financial services, insurance and real estate companies.

A Hillary Clinton campaign spokesman declined to comment.

While it is common for former presidents to receive top dollar as paid speakers, Hillary Clinton is unique as a prospective candidate who received large personal payouts from corporations, trade groups and other major interests mere months before launching a White House bid. In some cases, those speeches gave Clinton a chance to begin sounding out themes of her coming campaign and even discuss policy issues that a future Clinton administration might face.

Companies that paid her to speak include industry giants such as Xerox, Cisco Systems and Qualcomm, as well as start-ups and trade groups focused on biotechnology and medical technology.

The blurred line between personal and political is apparent in the cases of companies that hired Clinton to speak and are led by executives who are now prominent backers of her campaign. Salesforce.com, for instance, paid Clinton $451,000 to deliver two talks last year, and its CEO, Marc Benioff, is a major donor to Ready for Hillary, a super PAC that laid the groundwork for her presidential bid. Another major backer of the PAC is Irwin Jacobs, he former chairman of Qualcomm, which shelled out $335,000 for Clinton to speak in late October.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

A spokeswoman for Salesforce declined to comment on how Clinton came to be invited to speak. Qualcomm did not return requests for comment. A spokeswoman for Jacobs said that he is retired from the company and does not play a role in its decisions.

When Clinton arrived at eBay for her March 2014 women's-leadership speech, she had another connection to the company. Eileen Donohoe, wife of the CEO, had worked for Clinton as U.S. ambassador to the U.N. Human Rights Council.

Abby Smith, spokeswoman for eBay, said that, "as one of the world's most admired women, Hillary Clinton was the perfect choice" for the event. Smith declined to comment on the Donahoes' fundraiser for the Clinton campaign.

The new disclosures showed Clinton's vast earning power on the public speaking circuit as a former secretary of state who many viewed as the Democratic presidential nominee in waiting.

In some cases, organizations that had once paid Bill Clinton to speak now paid even more to lure his wife.

The Biotechnology Industry Organization paid Bill Clinton $175,000 in 2010. Four years later, the group paid $335,000 -- nearly twice as much -- to hear from Hillary Clinton. Likewise, the Advanced Medical Technology Association paid Bill Clinton $160,000 to speak in 2009 and paid Hillary Clinton $265,000 to speak in 2014.

The warm reception for Hillary Clinton in Silicon Valley comes after she watched a young upstart named Barack Obama lock up many of the industry's top money players during their fight for the 2008 Democratic presidential nomination.

Since then, the region has experienced explosive growth, making it an even bigger target for candidates hunting for political donors. Republicans such as Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky and former Florida governor Jeb Bush are making a play to win over the traditionally left-leaning enclave.

But Clinton is not giving them much of an opening, assiduously courting tech leaders as she contemplated another White House run.

One day last July, she tweeted, "In #SiliconValley today visiting @Google, @Facebook, & @Twitter. Looking forward to seeing everyone and answering some questions."

Clinton did not receive any speaking fees from those companies, which she visited as part of a tour promoting her latest book, "Hard Choices."

But about a month later, she scooped up $625,000 in one day from the tech sector -- first addressing a conference in San Francisco sponsored by Nexenta Systems, a data storage start-up, and then as a surprise guest at Cisco's sales conference in Las Vegas, where she was interviewed by chief executive John Chambers.

At the Nexenta conference, Clinton addressed several hot-button policy issues in Silicon Valley that the next president will have to confront.

She spoke of the need to "rebalance" privacy and security when it comes to government surveillance, an issue viewed as both a business and philosophical matter among tech leaders. And she expressed interest in an idea proposed by Chambers and other chief executives to allow companies to bring profits invested overseas back to the United States at a reduced tax rate.

"It doesn't do our economy any good to have this money parked somewhere else in the world," Clinton said, according to the Wall Street Journal.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The event also provided Clinton, who was making few public appearances, a platform to weigh in on an increasingly hot national issue. In her first remarks about the unrest that followed the shooting death of Michael Brown in Ferguson, Missouri, she urged Americans not to ignore "inequities that persist in our justice system."

Allison Darin, director of communications for Nexenta, said that the topic "has nothing to do with what we do."

But, she added, "it was obviously compelling news which brought a lot of attention to the event, which is exactly what we want."

Tarkan Maner, the company's chief executive, sits on the national finance committee of the Ready for Hillary PAC and made a $5,000 donation to the group in September, about a month after Clinton's speech.

Darin said Maner's support for Clinton had nothing to do with the company's invitation to have her speak. Rather, she said, company officials decided Clinton would have broad appeal for the audience of 500 top executives who attended the conference.

"It really wasn't politically focused at that time," she said. "It was just good timing."

Most of Clinton's paid speeches were closed to the public and the press. But in the few that were open, Clinton appeared to be road-testing themes that would become a part of her upcoming campaign.

In an April 2014 speech at a technology conference sponsored by Marketo, a software branding company, she discussed the growing gap between rich and poor in the United States. According to news reports, she proposed changes to taxation and corporate policies to address the issue.

"Inequality of the kind we are experiencing is bad for individuals, bad for society, bad for democracy," she said, according to The New York Times. "If y ou look around the world, this is becoming a bigger issue everywhere."

Clinton's latest financial disclosures also highlight the extent of personal support she and her husband have received from organizations and individuals who have donated to their charity, the Bill, Hillary and Chelsea Clinton Foundation.

At least 72 organizations that have paid the Clintons for speeches since 2001 have also donated to the Clinton Foundation.

For example, Cisco, which paid Hillary Clinton $325,000 for her August appearance, has given the foundation between $1 million and $5 million. In 2011, the company paid Bill Clinton $210,000 to speak at an event on Kiawah Island in South Carolina.

As for eBay, the company's charitable foundation has given more than $50,000 to the Clinton Foundation.

The Latest Proof That Clinton Can't Stop the Sleaze // Real Clear Politics // Rich Lowry – May 25, 2015

Charity Nav igator should make this an informal rule: If your charity is employing Sidney Blumenthal, it automatically goes on the watch list.

The ethical controversies around Hillary Clinton and the Clinton Foundation hav e often seemed 1990s redux, and nev er more so than when a New York Times story resurfaced longtime Clinton loyalist Blumenthal.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

According to the Times, from a perch at the Clinton Foundation, Blumenthal was sending Secretary of State Hillary Clinton memos on Libya that she forwarded around the State Department, even though they were occasion for eye-rolling by the professionals.

Sidney Blumenthal is the former writer for The New Republic, The Washington Post and The New Yorker whose devotion to the Clintons was too much ev en for his fellow journalists.

He eventually traded in his status as a quasi-Clinton apparatchik for official Clinton apparatchik, taking a job at the White House.

He was noted for his conspiratorial thinking and nasty, highly personalized, whisper-campaign politics. Much can be learned about his smash-mouth style by studying the social behavior of the spotted hyena.

Ultimately, Blumenthal himself isn't the issue. What's interesting isn't the suckerfish per se, but what it tells us about the shark.

When the Obama team went with Hillary Clinton as secretary of state, it undertook a high-stakes experiment: Could it hire a Clinton and, with enough rules and constraints, force him or her to act in a manner above reproach?

The Blumenthal affair is yet another indication that the answer is a resounding "no."

Then-White House chief of staff Rahm Emanuel reportedly had Blumenthal banned for — what else? — spreading harsh attacks about Barack Obama during the 2008 primaries.

Emanuel's edict would hav e seemed to bar Blumenthal from serv ing Clinton while she was secretary of state. Ah, but as the poet said, you can drive nature out with a pitchfork, she will nevertheless come back.

Blumenthal happened to be sending Hillary memos about Liby a at the same time that he was in league with people trying to make money in Libya. Let's think about this.

One scenario is that Blumenthal's would-be business associates got together and thought: "We need to find the best expert we can on North Africa, someone who understands the subtleties of Libyan political and tribal dynamics. Let's get Sidney Blumenthal!"

Another is that they thought: "We need to find someone who is in tight with the Clintons and has a back channel to Hillary so, when the time comes, the State Department will giv e our venture the most favorable possible consideration. Let's get Sidney Blumenthal!"

The Blumenthal story underlines what we already knew or suspected about Hillary's tenure as secretary of state and at the Clinton Foundation.

She portrays herself as the picture of openness, explaining how she wants her e-mails public as soon as possible. But we wouldn't know about the Clinton-Blumenthal correspondence but for the exertions of a Romanian hacker.

For all its good works, the Clinton Foundation was a political slush fund and holding tank for Clinton operativ es. Presumably, the March of Dimes manages to get along without paying former government officials as they scheme to return to power.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The ethics of Clinton's tenure as secretary of state were atrocious. In what world is it OK for the secretary of state to get and pass along back-channel advice from a friend about a country where he has business interests at stake?

Finally, it's impossible to credit "the new Hillary" so long as she is dependent on the same old cronies.

Asked about Blumenthal, Hillary said his e-mails were her effort to make sure she wasn't "caught in the bubble." Because nothing keeps you intellectually fresh and on your toes like e-mails from a loyal hatchet man of some 20 years and counting.

Hillary Tweets About Memorial Day, And She's Got The Right Message // Bustle // Chris Tognotti – May 25, 2015

Monday is Memorial Day, a holiday that marks a very solemn remembrance: all those American service members who lost their lives throughout our nation's history. And on Monday afternoon, likely the country's foremost presidential contender weighed in with her thoughts on the meaning of the day — Hillary Clinton tweeted a Memorial Day message, and it's the sort of thing almost anyone could agree with, regardless of politics.

Clinton's 2015 Memorial Day was far more involved than just sending out an appropriately commemorative tweet. She also marched in the Memorial Day parade in Chappaqua, New York on Monday afternoon, alongside her ex-president husband Bill. The Clintons are no strangers to the New York hamlet, having kept a residence in there since leaving the White House in 2001, and she finished up the march by discussing her campaign's emphasis on early childhood education, as detailed by The Journal News.

In her tweet, which was sent out at 6:44 a.m., Clinton discussed the "sacred responsibility" of Memorial Day. It was marked with a -H at the end, which is meant to denote a tweet originating from Clinton herself, rather than her campaign. In other words, you at least know that she's got some experience as an early-riser.

Hillary's straightforward tweet sends a good message, to be sure, especially the part about sacrifice. Even though Memorial Day commemorates the soldiers we've lost, if you have a still-living veteran in your family, or close to you, be sure to voice your appreciation today. And be sure to take their issues seriously everyday, to make sure people who need and deserve care can get it. As detailed by the New York Daily News, Clinton told a reporter following the march where she wanted the focus to be.

I want to keep focusing and make sure we pay proper respect to our veterans and particularly those who lost their lives.

The nature of the tweet does show a clever campaign strategy, however. Having her staff manage and send the bulk of her tweets while she just jumps in for an occasion personal aside could be a politically advantageous way for her to engage on a variety of topics. Campaign staffers handling more officious business, while Clinton chimes in on the news of the day. She did the same thing on Saturday, in a tweet congratulating Ireland for voting to legalize same-sex marriage.

Different candidates, obviously, responded to the big occasion differently. While Clinton and presumptive GOP candidates Mike Huckabee and Rick Perry decided to go the lo-fi social media route, while Florida Senator Marco Rubio (who's actually officially in the race) released a video — though it ended up being more about outlining some defense-related policy views than Memorial Day itself. Obviously, President Obama had a job to do today as well — he delivered a speech at Arlington National Cemetary Monday, dedicated to the memory of America's fallen soldiers.

Here's Everything We Learned From The Hillary Emails // The DC // Chuck Ross – May 25, 2015

With its Friday dump — on Memorial Day weekend, no less — the State Department ensured that Hillary Clinton's 296 Libya-related emails would receive limited news coverage.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But the records are well worth reviewing because they contain important insight into Clinton and her top aides' views on Libya and Benghazi leading up to the Sept. 11, 2012, attack, which killed four Americans.

Here are the 13 most interesting exchanges.

'The public face of the U.S. effort in Libya'

If one email chain comes back to haunt Clinton on the campaign trail it would be an April 4, 2012, message top aide Jake Sullivan sent touting Clinton's "leadership on Libya."

"HRC has been a critical voice on Libya in administration deliberations, at NATO, and in contact group meetings — as well as the public face of the U.S. effort in Libya," Sullivan wrote. "She was instrumental in securing the authorization, building the coalition, and tightening the noose around Qadhafi and his regime."

While deposing Gaddafi was seen as a major U.S. victory at the time, the attack at Benghazi and its vulnerability to Islamist groups like ISIS calls Clinton's and the Obama administration's intervention there into question.

Clinton overslept and missed a national security briefing days after the Benghazi attack

Clinton missed a President's Daily Brief meeting on the morning of Sept. 15, 2012, just days after the Benghazi attack, because she overslept.

Monica Hanley, a Clinton aide, sent an email to Clinton at 9:17 a.m. stating that a briefer "has some sensitive items that he would like to personally show you when he arrives."

Clinton responded at 10:43 a.m., stating "just woke up so i [sic] missed Dan. Could he come back after finish my calls?"

Interested in a movie on morning of the Benghazi attack

Early on the morning of Sept. 11, 2012, before the attack on Benghazi, Clinton had a movie on her mind. But she wasn't thinking of "Innocence of Muslims," the short film that the Obama administration initially falsely blamed for the Benghazi attack. Instead, she emailed aides Philippe Reines and Huma Abedin seeking a copy of "The Oath of Tobruk," a documentary about the Libyan civil war directed by French philosopher Bernard-Henri Levy and produced by her friend, Harvey Weinstein.

Clinton was interviewed for the film, which Weinstein claimed depicted the secretary's "leadership" in Libya.

Confused the names of two Americans killed at Benghazi

After Clinton learned that ambassador Chris Stevens and Sean Smith, a Foreign Service officer, had been killed at Benghazi, she sent an email to several top aides asking if she should issue a statement that night or the following day.

The only problem was, Clinton flubbed the two murdered Americans' names. Her email was entitled "Chris Smith." None of the aides on the email chain — Cheryl Mills, Jake Sullivan and Victoria Nuland — corrected the mistake.

Clinton's aides prepared her speech for a Clinton Foundation event

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Emails from Sept. 22, 2012, just 10 days after the Benghazi attack, show that Clinton was concerned with a speech she was set to giv e on behalf of her family charity, the Clinton Foundation.

Her aide, Jake Sulliv an, wrote that “Megan is working on a development speech but please read the below if you can this afternoon.”

“Please let me know your thoughts,” he added.

Clinton instructed another aide, Oscar Flores, to print off the speech, which is redacted in the emails.

State Department and White House officials asked YouTube to block video

One email shows an all-hands-on-deck effort to ensure YouTube and its parent company , Google, continued to block “The Innocence of Muslims” from appearing online.

The Obama administration falsely blamed the movie for sparking the attacks on Benghazi.

On Sept. 27, 2012, Denis McDonough, then the deputy national security advisor, sent an email to several State Department officials which listed contact information for Google’s and YouTube’s CEOs.

Nora Toiv, who worked in Clinton’s office, contacted others within the department stating that the video would be blocked until at least the following Monday, Oct. 1.

Cheryl Mills, Clinton’s then-chief of staff, forwarded the email chain to Clinton.

While it was known that the Obama administration had asked YouTube and Google to block the movie, the emails show that the effort was far more inv olved that prev iously reported.

Clinton received now-classified information on her priv ate email account

Shortly before the State Department released Clinton’s records, the FBI redacted portions of a Nov. 18, 2012, email because the information was classified. The email appears to have included names of individuals suspected of carry ing out the Benghazi attack.

Clinton and her team have repeatedly denied that she sent or received classified information on her personal email account. The FBI’s re-classification raises questions over whether the agency would have marked the information as classified if Clinton had turned her records over to the State Department as she was required to do when she left the agency in Feb. 2013.

On Oct. 3, 2012, Clinton receiv ed an email from Chery l Mills which included a link to a Wall Street Journal article entitled “Benghazi was Obama’s 3 a.m. call.”

The Journal article pinned the Benghazi attack on Obama’s “policy and worldview” and did not criticize Clinton’s role in the fiasco.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The 3 a.m. reference was to a campaign ad Clinton ran against Obama in Feb. 2008. The ad, which was roundly criticized when it aired, asserted that Obama did not have the chops to handle international crises.

Clinton discussed her “cracked head” and health

Emails Clinton sent to aides show her discussing a concussion she reportedly suffered in Dec. 2012.

Clinton fainted before she was to testify in front of Congress about Benghazi. As many questioned whether she actually suffered a fall, Fox News’ Greta Van Susteren interviewed Arizona U.S. Sen. John McCain who said that he believed Clinton. Clinton emailed Mills on Dec. 20 telling her that someone should call Van Susteren to thank her for “knowing the truth” about her injury.

Clinton sent another Dec. 20 email to aides Williams Burns and Thomas Nides. In the message Clinton joked she was unable to make a meeting on Capitol Hill because “I’ll be nursing my cracked head.”

Clinton aides sought to reassure her about her Benghazi video comments

In a Sept. 24, 2012, email Sullivan reassured Clinton that she had never blamed the “Innocence of Muslims” video for the Benghazi attack.

“You never said spontaneous or characterized the motives, in fact you were careful in your first statement to say we were assessing motive and method. The way you treated the video in the Libya context was to say that some sought to justify the attack on that basis,” Sullivan wrote.

Other administration officials had publicly blamed the video for the uprising which led to the four American deaths at the consulate.

Sid Blumenthal tells Hillary about planting an anti-Romney story

On Oct. 1, 2012, longtime Clinton insider, Sidney Blumenthal, emailed Clinton to share an article another jounralist published at Salon entitled “GOP’s October Surprise.”

Blumenthal’s email was entitled “Romney’s last gambit. Got done and published.” According to Bloomberg News, this is an indication that Blumenthal planted the story with Salon.

The article cited a “highly reliable source” who claimed that the Romney campaign was planning to roll out a “Jimmy Carter strategy” in which it planned to paint Obama as weak because of the Benghazi failure.

Clinton aides’ jokes about a fawning reporter and about FOIA

In an Oct. 2012, email, State Department communications director Caroline Adler sent an email to Clinton aides Philippe Reines and Thomas Nides poking fun at Wall Street Journal reporter Monica Langley for gushing over Clinton during an interview.

“This will be exciting when it’s FOIA’d…but will give you a sense of the interaction,” Adler wrote.

Reines described the scene when Langley pulled up a chair to sit extremely close to Clinton. He wrote that he didn’t “think you see that behavior among any type of mammal."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Missing messages

Perhaps as noteworthy as emails Clinton and her staff did send are those that they did not. As the Washington Examiner noted, the team only sent 35 Libya- and Benghazi-related emails between January 2012 and the Sept. 11 attack at Benghazi.

Hillary Clinton's 1st SC campaign stop is Wednesday at Democratic women's event in Columbia // AP via Daily Reporter – May 25, 2015

COLUMBIA, South Carolina — Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton's first campaign stop in South Carolina will be a speech to Democratic women who say they are trying to make South Carolina better.

Clinton's campaign says she will speak Wednesday afternoon at Marriott hotel in downtown Columbia to the South Carolina House Democratic Women's Caucus and the South Carolina Democratic Women's Council.

She will be at the Statehouse earlier in the day to speak to the Democratic caucuses in the House and Senate.

The gathering at the hotel is called the Third Annual 2015 Day in Blue. The event helps women become better citizen advocates and leaders.

Clinton has already opened phone banks in South Carolina and her campaign has held neighborhood parties across the state.

Step aside, Bernie Sanders has a big week - the busiest of the presidential hopefuls // The Washington Times // Jennifer Harper – May 25, 2015

He is the busiest of all the presidential hopefuls this week. Sure, Sen. Marco Rubio will celebrate his birthday in Las Vegas on Thursday, and Carly Fiorina and Gov. Scott Walker will head for New Hampshire later in the week, but it's Sen. Bernard Sanders who has the wall-to-wall schedule punctuated by the rallying cry, "A political revolution is coming." So step aside, folks.

On Tuesday, the Vermont senator kicks off his formal campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination with a Zydeco band and free Ben & Jerry's ice cream. Company founders Ben Cohen and Jerry Greenfield will be by his side, incidentally. Mr. Sanders rushes to New Hampshire on Wednesday for town meetings in Concord, Portsmouth and Eppington. By Thursday, he will be in Iowa for more town meetings in Davenport, Muscatine, West Branch, Iowa City and Kensett and pushing his new "Agenda for America" wherever he goes. And Mr. Sanders, 73, is in a fighting mood when it comes to the press.

"In terms of campaign coverage, there is more coverage about the political gossip of the campaign, about raising money, about polling, about somebody saying something dumb or some kid works for a campaign and sends out something stupid on Facebook, right?" Mr. Sanders told CNN on Sunday. "The media's job is to say, 'Look, these are the major issues facing the country. We're a democracy. People have different points of view. Let's argue it.'"

A CHEER FOR MISS AMERICA

The National Memorial Day Parade to honor the American military has its share of celebrities on Monday: actors Gary Sinise and Joe Mantegna; celebrity chef Robert Irvine; singers Billy Corgan, Caleb Johnson and Beau Davidson; and TNA Wrestling stars, including Army vet Chris Melendez. Then there is Miss America Kira Kazantsev, who will wave at the crowd as only Miss America can do.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“As Miss America, it is my responsibility to not only raise awareness about the military, our veterans and their needs, but to thank them in person for their service. The National Memorial Day Parade is the perfect opportunity for that, and I am so honored to be a part of this celebration of our troops,” Ms. Kazantev tells Inside the Beltway.

She is also the first Miss America in four decades who has stepped up to the plate for the USO and visited U.S. troops overseas — logging 25,400 miles last month with stops that included Afghanistan, Bahrain, the Korean DMZ and USS Carl Vinson. In her online diary of the experiences, she recounted meeting a Medal of Honor recipient who recalled his time in Vietnam — particularly memories of a certain Hollywood patriot who arrived in the unforgiving combat zone with Miss America. The hero had never forgotten those moments.

“He said that Bob Hope would bring Miss America up on stage and say ‘Soldiers, this is what you’re fighting for.’ I still can’t believe that I am now a part of this legacy and that, in my own way, I hav e had the honor of serving our country,” Ms. Kazantev wrote.

GOP: SHOW SOME TEETH

“Fully 75 percent of Republicans want GOP leaders to challenge President Obama more often; just 15 percent say they are handling relations with the president about right, and 7 percent say GOP leaders should go along with Obama more often,” reports a new Pew Research Center poll.

Forty percent of Americans ov erall agree with this, along with 37 percent of independents and 15 percent of Democrats. More numbers at column’s end.

ALOHA, OBAMACARE

The Affordable Care Act does not get intense media coverage these days, but it’s still a troublemaker. Americans for Tax Reform reports that the rickety Obamacare sign-up sy stem will cost taxpayers plenty.

“The Obama administration had implemented the special enrollment period from March 15 to April 30 to assist indiv iduals who were unaware they would face a tax penalty for not having qualifying health insurance. In all, less than 250,000 indiv iduals decided to enroll nationwide — meaning that millions of Americans would rather pay the tax than enroll in Obamacare,” reports analy st Alexander Hendrie.

His case in point: In Hawaii, the Obamacare exchange enrolled no participants during the grace period. None. The state’s sign-up website, meanwhile, cost taxpayers $205 million to launch, with a total of 8,5 92 people enrolling in the first year. The cost to taxpayers is $23,899 per person, Mr. Hendrie says.

“Hawaii’s is not the first website to implode. Oregon’s $305 million exchange was officially abolished earlier this year at an additional cost of $41 million. The exchange is currently under investigation by numerous federal organizations for how it wasted so much money ,” he adds. “In all, states receiv ed $5.4 billion from the federal government for state-based Obamacare exchanges with no strings attached and zero oversight over spending decisions.”

THE OKLAHOMA AFTERMATH

“Hillary Clinton must not be president of these United States as she is not trustworthy, and does not have a record of leadership. Since I launched my campaign for the presidency less than three weeks ago, I have answered 413 questions from the press, and yes, I am counting. Hillary Clinton, I think, has answered 13 questions since April 12. We know that Hillary Clinton will not be held to account unless we have a nominee that holds her to account in the general election,” Carly Fiorina told the Southern Republican Leadership Conference, which ended Saturday in Oklahoma City.

And in a telling snapshot, Ben Carson won the straw poll at the aforementioned conference with 25 percent of the v ote. Gov. Scott Walker placed second with 20 percent, followed by Sen. Ted Cruz, Gov. Chris Christie, Rick Perry, Jeb Bush, Sen.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Rand Paul, Sen. Marco Rubio, Gov. Bobby Jindal, Ms. Fiorina, Mike Huckabee, Rick Santorum and Donald Trump — who each receiv ed between 1 percent and 16 percent of the vote. Three-fourths of the 715 poll respondents were from Oklahoma, incidentally.

WHITE HOUSE CRUNCH TIME

Are things getting a little intense on Memorial Day? Pollster John Zogby suggests so.

"President Obama is one step closer to achiev ing fast-track authority to negotiate a new free trade agreement with Asian nations. This is one of his key goals and one he shares with Republican leaders, though vigorously opposed by the left," Mr. Zogby says. "Secretary of State John Kerry held a four-hour meeting with Russian President Vladimir Putin, whose help can be useful in both Iran and Syria. Nonetheless, the Islamic State has taken over the capital of Anbar Province, the city many Americans lost their liv es to liberate several years ago, and have secured control over the whole Iraq-Syria border. It's crunchtime for U.S. decision-makers."

His current grade for Mr. Obama: C-.

POLL DU JOUR

• 72 percent of Americans disapprov e of the job performance of Republican leaders in Congress; 55 percent of Republicans, 74 percent of independents and 84 percent of Democrats agree.

• 60 percent of Americans disapprov e of the job performance of Democratic leaders in Congress; 87 percent of Republicans, 65 percent of independents and 35 percent of Democrats agree.

• 37 percent overall say what Congress is accomplishing is "less than expected"; 36 percent of Republicans, 38 percent of independents and 38 percent of Democrats agree.

• 23 percent overall say GOP leaders are "keeping their campaign promises"; 37 percent of Republicans, 20 percent of independents and 17 percent of Democrats agree.

GOP's policy: Attacking Hillary Clinton // Bloom berg // Frank Wilkinson – May 25, 2015

It's possible to view Hillary Clinton as a money-grubbing opportunist and shady political operator who has amassed millions of dollars and gobs of power by exploiting the inside tracks that she and her husband spent decades carving through the upper strata of American society.

After all, it's not that much of a reach — especially for Republicans already inclined to a cynical view of the former secretary of state.

To amplify that negative portrait, and heighten its political resonance, the Republican National Committee sends emails with titles such as "Fast Track To Duplicity" and "Secretary Stonewall" — the latter about a Wall Street Journal story depicting Clinton political aides at the State Department meddling with Freedom of Information Act requests.

"Clinton's Latest Fundraising Hypocrisy" is another RNC missive. In this one, the RNC quotes Clinton saying, "There's something wrong when CEOs make 300 times more than the ty pical worker." The RNC then juxtaposes that with a jab — "11 out of 19 Clinton fundraisers have been hosted by financial bigwigs."

Get it? Clinton talks as if she cares about workers, but behind closed doors, she's raising millions from the super rich.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

You can argue about whether this genre of attack — it has been around a long time — is successful. But there's no doubt that it would be more salient if, unlike Clinton, seemingly every viable Republican candidate running for president were not committed to cutting the taxes of the "bigwigs" who are raising money for her (and them). Worse, several Republicans are revisiting their quadrennial flirtation with various flat taxes, most of which would drive down taxes for chief executive officers while raising them for the typical worker.

At The Atlantic, David Frum wrote that Jeb Bush will have a hard time drawing useful political contrasts with Clinton because, while the Clintons are unquestionably expert at using power to gain wealth and wealth to gain still more power, in all fairness, the Bushes got there first.

It's true that Bush's family history is a specific drawback in a race against Clinton. But the atrociousness of Republican policies is a general disadvantage — and one far more encumbering to any Republican who wins the nomination, including Bush.

Republican complaints about Clinton's wealth and connections are presumably intended to turn the left wing of the Democratic Party against her. But in November 2016, the Republican candidate for president will almost certainly be a man who will have not only accepted hundreds of millions from "bigwigs" — just as Clinton will have — but who will also have promised, in an age of burgeoning plutocracy and rising inequality, to engineer a massive transfer of wealth from poor to rich to provide those bigwigs with a windfall on their political investment.

Political campaigns run on contrasts; that one doesn't sound like such a winner.

Indeed, the Ivy League cronyism and transactional relationship-leveraging that characterize the Clinton empire may strike many voters as unseemly. But Clinton's policy platform probably won't. It will not, for example, take money out of middle-class voters' paychecks, undermine their health insurance, ramp up carbon pollution in their air or leave their children with additional trillions in national debt to finance better living for billionaires. Will the Republican nominee be able to say that his policies are similarly benign?

The 2016 Republican candidates are vastly superior to those of 2012, when Mitt Romney was the only good choice in a disturbingly weak field. It's unclear how much the higher quality of candidates will matter, however, because the party is very much the same. Its donors and activists continue to make demands — more tax cuts! never compromise! — that no rational, public-spirited candidate for national office should ever honor. It's unclear how even a high-quality politician rises above that.

In principle, there's nothing wrong with lambasting Clinton. Politics shouldn't be easy. But we'll know the Republican Party is on the mend when its candidates spend as much energy showcasing sensible conservative policies as they do attacking Clinton's character.

Obama + Clinton + Florida = fundraisers // The Washington Times // Jennifer Harper – May 25, 2015

The phrase gets old after a while, but it's time to rev up Air Force One once again: President Obama has a pair of fundraisers to attend in Florida.

On Wednesday he's off to Miami to raise money for the Democratic National Committee at a private dinner in the home of a local real estate kingpin, priced up to $33,400 a plate. Then it's on to one of those private "roundtable discussions," this at the home of a mortgage broker, fetching $33,400 a person for donors eager to parse the issues.

There's some official business too. On Thursday Mr. Obama visits the National Hurricane Center "to receive the annual hurricane season outlook and preparedness briefing," this according to the White House.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But the siren call of the Sunshine State is very loud this week. After an appearance in South Carolina, Hillary Rodham Clinton is bound for Florida as well, and yes, the two will be in Miami on the very same day. On Thursday, Mrs. Clinton attends a pair of "Conversations with Hillary" events in Miami and Parkland to benefit her presidential campaign — at $2,700 a person. Then she journeys to Orlando for a private fundraiser at the home of a trial lawyer. She's just getting going, though. Beginning next week Mrs. Clinton will also be on the fundraising trail in New Mexico, Texas and Missouri.

THE FADING OF 'INEVITABLE'

"We live in an age of narratives, not news," points out Thomas Lifson, editor of AmericanThinker.com. "The narrative in the mainstream media is that Hillary Clinton is 'inevitable' as the Democratic nominee, with supporting polling data from The New York Times that oversamples Democrats and undersamples Republicans, manufactured to support the narrative."

Such political artistry between press and pollster can shore up their candidate of choice. Sometimes the facts get in the way though.

"The real news, what people need to know, is that Hillary looks like a disaster in the making, with very poor campaign skills and an indefensible record overseeing foreign policy disasters that have exploded in the face of Obama. But some in the mainstream media are beginning to shed their reluctance to say that the empress has no clothes," Mr. Lifson says, citing new op-eds centered on Mrs. Clinton's private email system, the Benghazi matter and the increasing competition from eager Democrats like Martin O'Malley, who has scheduled his first fundraising event on Friday, followed by an "announcement event" on Saturday.

There could be a bonus for Republicans if Mrs. Clinton stays in the 2016 race.

"I am hoping that Hillary toughs it out and damages the Democrat brand. We could really use a reformist presidency backed by a GOP Congress," Mr. Lifson concludes.

BERNIETOPIA

"Paid for by Bernie Sanders, not the billionaires."

That's the campaign motto of Sen. Bernard Sanders. The Vermont senator kicks off his campaign to become the Democratic nominee for president on Tuesday in Burlington, to be followed by a 10-event tour through New Hampshire and Iowa in the 48 hours that follow.

"We are at a moment of truth. We need to face up to the reality of where we are as a nation, and we need a mass movement of people to fight for change," Mr. Sanders advises in his campaign outreach.

JEBTOPIA

Some big doings in Kennebunkport, Maine: Construction is underway on a 3,000-square-foot "cottage" at Walker's Point, the George H.W. Bush family compound. It is the ninth residential building on the expansive seaside acreage, and it is being built for Jeb Bush, according to the Portland Press Herald.

The local newspaper also reports that architect Kristi Kenney is both honored and intimidated to work for "a politically prominent family."

But she's keeping with traditional design on the four-bedroom, five-bath home: cedar shingles, gabled roofs, wraparound verandah, big windows. Jeb's vacation getaway will be finished in July. It's not the largest house in the compound, however. That honor goes to the original 7,100-square-foot, 12-room main home built in 1920 — and where the big family will gather June 8 to celebrate matriarch Barbara Bush's 90th birthday.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

NOT SOMETHING FOR AL GORE

"World's leading skeptics of man-caused global warming gather in Washington, DC," proclaims the Heartland Institute, which has organized the 10th International Conference on Climate Change in the nation's capital for June 11-12.

"Should policies adopted at the height of the global warming scare be repealed and replaced with pro-environment, pro-energy, and pro-jobs policies? In short: Given the new science and economics of climate change, isn't it time for a fresh start to the debate over what, if anything, to do about global warming?" the organizers ask.

A SUB FOR JERSEY

Here is a moment far removed from the questions of Bridgegate for the potential presidential campaign of New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie. At a formal ceremony in none other than Jersey City, Navy Secretary Ray Mabus announced at the weekend that "SSN 7 96," a Virginia-class nuclear-powered attack submarine, will bear the name "USS New Jersey ." And she is a big girl: 7,800 tons, 377 feet in length, a speed of 25 knots submerged — complete with enhanced stealth and surveillance and the capability to attack targets ashore with accurate Tomahawk cruise missiles.

The Navy's first sub was built in New Jersey in 1900, incidentally . Two naval ships also hav e been named New Jersey — a battleship commissioned in 1906 and another commissioned in 1943.

"New Jersey's relationship with our Navy has been defined by innovation, leadership and courage — in conquest and in combat," said Mr. Mabus. "The name of our newest nuclear-powered fast-attack submarine will carry on that strong tradition. She will sail the world like those who have gone before her, defending the American people and representing our American values."

CNN, 35 YEARS LATER

Back in the day, it was the world's first 24-hour cable news station — signing on the air June 1, 1980. On Tuesday the Cable News Network — yes, CNN — will air a recap of 35 of its most pivotal stories of the decades, including the assassination attempt on Ronald Reagan, the fall of the Berlin Wall, the Anita Hill matter, the rescue of Baby Jessica, the first Persian Gulf War, the O.J. Simpson trial, 9/11, Hurricane Katrina and the Boston Marathon bombing.

Larry King, Bernard Shaw, Aaron Brown and Paula Zahn are among the past CNN talents to have their say in this hour long special — which airs at 9 p.m. EST and will repeat on June 1.

POLL DU JOUR

50 percent of Americans say the current federal tax system is fair; 40 percent of Republicans, 52 percent of independents and 66 percent of Democrats agree.

39 percent overall favor a flat tax system; 59 percent of Republicans, 39 percent of independents and 25 percent of Democrats agree.

38 percent overall do not trust either political party to handle the federal tax system; 30 percent of Republicans, 55 percent of independents and 23 percent of Democrats agree.

30 percent oppose a flat tax system; 1 7 percent of Republicans, 24 percent of independents and 45 percent of Democrats agree.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

27 percent overall trust Democrats to handle the federal tax system; 1 percent of Republicans, 1 2 percent of independents and 62 percent of Democrats agree

20 percent overall trust Republicans to handle it; 60 percent of Republicans, 12 percent of independents and 3 percent of Democrats agree.

What Young Feminists Think Of Hillary Clinton // National Journal // Molly Mirhashem – May 25, 2015

Alexandra Sv okos was six years old, growing up in Franklin Lakes, New Jersey, when she became a Hillary Clinton fan. It was 1998, and Clinton had published Dear Socks, Dear Buddy, a collection of children's letters addressed to the first family's pets. Sv okos became so obsessed with the book, she recalls, that she wrote her own letter—not to Socks the cat or Buddy the Labrador, but to Clinton herself. When she got a reply on official White House stationery with the first lady's signature, Svokos was thrilled.

Clinton was an early feminist icon for many women of Svokos's generation—long before they even began to think of themselves as feminists. Svokos, who's now 23 and a fellow at The Huffington Post, grew up with parents who called themselves feminists and practiced gender equality in the house, balancing household responsibilities and encouraging Svokos and her two sisters to "fight for what we deserved." Mostly, she say s, feminism meant "girl power" to her—and that meant, in turn, rooting for Clinton when she made her first run for the presidency in 2008. Svokos was in high school then, and her ideas about feminism were still pretty simple; she admired Clinton "because she was a woman, rather than knowing much about what she stood for."

Eight years later, Svokos's notion of feminism has evolv ed—and the prospect of Hillary Clinton becoming president no longer fills her with unbridled excitement. Sv okos says her ideas about feminism began to change when she studied economics at Columbia University, beginning in 2010. As she learned about economic inequality in the United States and around the world, she says, she began to see how gender, race, and class were intertwined—how, for instance, expanding access to birth control can stimulate an economy by enabling women to pursue their own careers.

Feminism came to mean something v ery different from girl power. And Hillary Clinton came to look like the sy mbol of an older generation of women more concerned with female empowerment—in particular, with white, middle-class, American female empowerment—than with broader issues of social and economic justice. Sv okos says she'll vote for Clinton in 2016, but she's not expecting her to make social justice and inequality true priorities if she makes it to the White House. "I find her lacking, in that I realize she's not likely to push for the kind of change I'd like to see," Svokos says. "At the same time, though, I believe she knows how to manage politics and will be more than capable in the position."

Among feminists of her generation, Svokos is hardly alone in her lukewarm feelings about Hillary Clinton's presidential bid. I recently interv iewed 47 young women, most in their early to mid-20s, who call themselves feminists; they talked about what feminism means to them and shared their thoughts about Clinton's candidacy and public image. While the overwhelming majority of these women said they would likely vote for her in 2016, only about a quarter of them were enthusiastic or emphatic in their support. Jennifer Schaffer, a 22-year-old weekend editor at Vice, summed up a common sentiment among these women: "I'm glad we have a female presidential candidate," she told me, "but it's incredibly difficult to get excited about something that should have happened decades ago." A vote for Clinton, many said, would be a vote by default, because no other viable progressiv e alternativ es—female or male—are in the offing.

While it's not exactly news that Clinton is a less-than-ideal candidate for many on the Left, the critique of her from those on the vanguard of contemporary feminism is more surprising—and potentially problematic for her presidential effort. To win in 2016, Clinton doesn't just need half-hearted support from young women; she needs them to be a base of her grassroots efforts, as fired up as young people were for Barack Obama in 2008 and 2012. But even as more and more young women are embracing the "feminist" label—with pop-culture icons like Beyoncé making it central to their public personas—the feminism that Clinton represents seems increasingly outmoded. While her campaign banks on young feminists like Svokos and Schaffer being "Ready for Hillary," these women say they 're ready for more.

HILLARY CLINTON came of age during the peak years of second-wave feminism. The first wave began in the mid-1800s, with women's suffrage as the goal; the second stretched from the 1960s to the early 1980s, and focused on reproductive and workplace rights. Writer and activist Betty Friedan is usually credited with catalyzing the second wave with The Feminine Mystique. Published in 1963, the landmark book called for women's liberation from housework, with Friedan famously writing: "We can no longer ignore that voice within women that say s: 'I want something more than my husband and my children and my house.'"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As the feminism of Friedan and second-wave stalwarts like Gloria Steinem moved into the mainstream, some began to criticize it as a movement tailored to white women of means. Who, they asked, would clean the homes and care for the children of Friedan's liberated middle-class housewives? Where was their liberation? Such questions fed into a larger critique of second-wave feminism: that it saw white American women's concerns as representing those of all women.

In 1989, a term emerged for a feminist philosophy that would include women of color and other marginalized groups: "intersectionality." To the uninitiated, the word might sound like unwieldy academic jargon. But without my bringing it up, many of the women I spoke to said intersectionality was the foundation of their feminism—and of their skepticism about Clinton. First coined by legal scholar and professor Kimberlé Crenshaw, the word refers to the connections (the "intersections") between different systems of oppression—not just sexism, but also racism, homophobia, transphobia, and classism. It's a recognition that a black woman, for instance, is not affected independently by racism and sexism—those forms of discrimination are inextricably linked, which makes her experience sexism differently from a white woman and racism differently from a black man.

The concept itself was far from new; it stretched as far back, at least, as Sojourner Truth's famous "Ain't I a Woman?" speech in 1851, in which she highlighted the dramatic differences between the ways black and white women experience sexism. "That man over there says that women need to be helped into carriages and lifted over ditches, and to have the best place every where," Truth said. "Nobody ever helps me into carriages, or over mud-puddles, or gives me any best place! And ain't I a woman?"

“I think it’s problematic to assume that just because she’s a woman, she’s the best spokesperson for all women.”

Now the idea had a name. But in the 1990s, as intersectionality was gaining popularity in academic circles, Hillary Clinton was bringing her own, more traditional brand of feminism to her role as first lady. Her domestic initiatives included adoption, foster care, and child care. In 1995, Clinton gave her famous Beijing speech to the United Nations' Fourth World Conference on Women, declaring that "women's rights are human rights." She helped to form the Justice Department's Violence Against Women Office and partnered with then–Secretary of State Madeleine Albright to found the Vital Voices Democracy Initiative, a series of conferences devoted to promoting female leaders and involving women around the globe in politics.

In the early and mid-2000s, after she left the White House and took up residence in the U.S. Senate, Clinton largely shifted away from a women-centered agenda as she worked to bolster her presidential résumé. At the same time, young bloggers like Lauren Bruce (Feministe) and Jessica Valenti (Feministing) were bringing feminist theory out of the Ivory Tower. "Each month seemed to bring a new site with feminist content," Rebecca Traister writes in her 2010 book, Big Girls Don't Cry. "At various points there were about six sites calling themselves The F-Word."

Social media changed the landscape of feminism. Young women who might not learn about feminism in their schools or communities could find primers on Tumblr blogs with names like intersectional feminism 101. Their feminist awakenings thus involved, from the start, debates about second-wave feminism's perceived failures of inclusivity. "Anyone who entered the feminist conversation in the Internet age has immediate access to not only research about those failures, but also to a lot of the conversations about them," says feminist organizer and writer Shelby Knox, who's 28. "The barriers are a lot lower for participation in the movement."

Young women could now do more than read about feminist issues and discuss them in class; they could find communities of women on Twitter or Tumblr whose experiences they could relate to—or who could open up new vistas for them on what other women's lives are like. They could participate in the creation of a new feminism—one that would be a far cry from Friedan's. By 2011, the writer Flavia Dzodan was famously declaring on her blog: "My feminism will be intersectional or it will be bullshit." Her words became a rallying cry.

As young women's notions of feminism evolved and broadened, so did their idea of what constitutes "women's issues" in the political arena. "If you're taking intersectionality as the foundation of this kind of feminism, you wouldn't just be concerned with how any particular policy issue is affecting women," says Gwendolyn Beetham, director of the Global Village at Douglass Residential College, the women's residential college affiliated with Rutgers University. "But you would be asking, 'Which women, and how?' And you would be asking this whether or not you are a member of one of those groups."

To young women like Sylvie Edman, a 20-year-old student at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Clinton embodies

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"corporate feminism," which Edman defines concisely: "It's empowering women who are already powerful." Clinton and Sheryl Sandberg, the Facebook COO and author of Lean In, are often name-dropped in this context; while they experience sexism, the thinking goes, they've been able to dare greatly because of their race and class—while being helped along the way by working-class women and women of color who didn't have the same opportunities.

Some of the concerns raised by the women I spoke to about Clinton were traditional "women's issues" like reproductive justice and equal pay. But just as many brought up police brutality, criminal-justice reform, and environmental issues as primary concerns—and as integral to what they mean by "feminism." Some of the most commonly expressed critiques of Clinton echoed those of many left-of-center Americans: She's "hawkish" on foreign affairs, "part of a political dynasty," and simply "not very progressive." Collier Meyerson, who writes for the website Fusion, told me that her ideal candidate "wouldn't be part of a legacy, and wouldn't be a career politician." A candidate more like Barack Obama—"somebody who is rooted more in community-organizing"—would fit the bill better, Meyerson says.

Ayesha Siddiqi, the 24-year-old editor-in-chief of the online magazine The New Inquiry, says that this range of concerns should be no surprise. "Feminist issues," she says, "are no more complicated than the issues of people's lives." But that philosophy makes young women's views of Clinton—and her campaign's efforts to galvanize them behind her—very complicated indeed.

At April's Women in the World summit, Clinton talked about inequities in what women are paid, taking care to note the "even wider gaps for women of color." Will such rhetoric speak to young feminists' concerns that she's a classic "corporate feminist"? (Andrew Burton/Getty Images)

AT THE ANNUAL Women in the World Summit in New York this April, Sam Viqueira stuck out from the crowd. The summit, a high-powered gathering of leaders and activists launched by former New Yorker and Daily Beast editor Tina Brown in 2010, this year featured a keynote address by Hillary Clinton. Most of the women in attendance looked like Clinton's crowd, her generation: Dressed business casual, the mostly middle-aged women flocked to the free coffee and Luna bars on offer, chatted in small groups, and snapped selfies in front of a Dove-sponsored backdrop. The 17-year-old Viqueira and her high school friend stood off to the side in a small lounge, looking like they were dressed for a regular day of school. They'd taken the train in from Maplewood, New Jersey. "To me, feminism isn't only about wanting equality for all genders," Viqueira told me later, "but wanting and advocating for the equality of all oppressed groups, which can and do intersect."

In some respects, Viqueira exemplifies the rising generation of feminists—and their conflicted feelings about Clinton. She grew up with three sisters and parents who were big on women's empowerment, encouraging the girls to play sports and study math and science. But she credits social media with teaching her about the intersection of race and gender, and the issues women face outside of the United States; she first read the term "intersectionality" online when she was just 15 and now follows a lot of young women on Twitter who help broaden her perspective.

This spring, she's taking the first gender-studies class ever offered at her public high school. Next fall, Viqueira will be old enough to cast her first vote. That has led her, like so many other young feminists, to think long and hard about what Clinton would—and wouldn't—represent as the first woman president. "It's nice to see a strong female candidate running for president," Viqueira says, but she can't help wishing it were a woman with a different track record. She's particularly troubled by Clinton's support of the 1996 welfare-reform bill her husband signed and of the Clinton-era crime-fighting legislation that, among other things, lengthened prison sentences for drug offenses. At best, she says, Clinton has been inconsistent on social-justice issues; at worst, she has been a hypocrite.

While Viqueira is hesitant to say she'll vote for Clinton, she acknowledges that the limited options for progressive-minded voters will probably push her in that direction. But it bothers her to see Clinton held up as a model feminist: "I think it's problematic to assume that just because she's a woman, she's the best spokesperson for all women."

While her deep résumé impresses many young women, Clinton has to grapple with past policies that are anathema to others. (Luis Acosta/AFP/GettyImages)

Clinton's first presidential campaign relied heavily on that assumption. An internal campaign memo from March 2007, written by the campaign's chief strategist and pollster, Mark Penn, and published in The Atlantic the following year, advised Clinton thusly:

1) Start with a base of women.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

a. For these women, you represent a breaking of barriers.

b. The winnowing out of the most competent and qualified in an unfair, male-dominated world.

c. The infusion of a woman and a mother's sensibilities into a world of war and neglect.

2) Add on a base of lower- and middle-class voters.

a. You see them; you care about them.

b. You were one of them, it is your history.

c. You are all about their concerns (health care, education, energy, child care, college, etc.).

For young feminists, Penn's memo, and Clinton's campaign, represented the antithesis of intersectional thinking. The problem isn't merely the assumption that women would be Clinton's primary base because of their gender alone; it's also the fact that lower- and middle-class voters are itemized as a separate group, with a different (and far more specific) set of concerns from those of "women." "With strategies like this," Traister writes, "it was not unjust to suggest that one serious problem with the Clinton campaign leadership was that it did not think much of the women with whom it was supposed to be making history." Traister notes that "Penn assured Hillary that internal polling showed that 94% of young women would automatically vote for the first female president. It was perhaps this confidence that led him to shrug off concerns about reaching them." In the end, according to a CBS News poll, Penn's initial estimates were way off: 53 percent of young women backed Obama over Clinton.

While these young women, rallying for Clinton in New York in April, are “Ready for Hillary,” others say they’re ready for more. (Spencer Platt/Getty Images)

Far from a high-water mark for feminism, Siddiqi, The New Inquiry editor, sees Clinton's presidential campaigns as "the nadir of the 'Lean In' feminism moment. This is what you get when that's what your feminism looks like," she says. "You don't get a victory that all women can celebrate."

OF COURSE, plenty of young women will be celebrating next November if Hillary Clinton wins the presidency—including some who see themselves rooted in "intersectionality." Gabriel Clarke, a 20-year-old musician and student at Oakwood University in Alabama, says she had a wake-up moment during protests over the shooting of Michael Brown last summer in Ferguson, Missouri. "A young woman grabbed the microphone and said, 'I am a woman, but before I am a woman, I am black.' And I was thinking, that's not how we have to look at these things. That's not how we have to be. We have to understand that we are both of those things simultaneously."

Women of color like herself have long been "on the back burner in the movement," Clarke says. It's a welcome change that "people are starting to see that you can't have a social movement about equality and leave out everyone else who's not a white woman." But intersectional thinking hasn't dimmed her passion for electing Clinton. The first time Clinton ran, Clarke was just 13. She had a hard time taking the candidate seriously, she says, because of the media's relentless focus on her hair, clothes, and manner of speaking. But the summer before Clarke went off to college in 2013, her impression was changed by watching the documentary Miss Representation, which shines a critical light on the way women leaders are portrayed by the media. "It really opened my eyes and made me see Hillary in a totally different way," Clarke says. "They talked more about her pantsuits than her policies!"

Like most of the one-quarter of these young women who told me they're gung ho for Clinton, Clarke cites the candidate's extensive experience—the same experience others use to knock her as a "career politician"—as a prime factor in her support. Clinton, says Clarke, is obviously the most-qualified candidate in the race. "But that's the story of being a woman," she says. "You have to be ten times better than everyone else to even get your foot in the door." Clarke realizes that many feminists of color are "very skeptical" of Clinton, wondering "whether she will really be a champion or a voice for them, or only for white women"—and she gets the skepticism. But to her, there's something more fundamental at stake: "I think that even her as a symbol for women, that a woman can be president, is powerful enough."

This time around, the Clinton campaign isn't taking that kind of solidarity for granted. Young feminists' social and economic views may have been overlooked in 2008, but in the early stages of Clinton's second run, they've been front and center. You could hear it in her keynote at the Women in the World Summit, where Clinton talked about inequities in what women are paid, taking care to note the "even wider gaps for women of color." You could hear it in another speech she recently gave in New York calling for police reform and in her frequent invocations of income inequality. "Americans have fought their way back from tough economic times," Clinton said in the April video announcing her campaign. "But the deck is still stacked in favor of those at the top."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Such talk is welcomed by Clinton skeptics like Viqueira, the 17-year-old, who sees the candidate "redefining her feminism to be all-inclusive." Collier Meyerson says that Clinton's announcement video—which, as pundits noted, took pains to feature just about every group of "marginalized" people in America—was a clear attempt to reach people ignored during her 2008 campaign. "My hope is that she continues with this thread," Meyerson says, "and goes on to pull in people from different socioeconomic classes, backgrounds, and races."

By and large, these women say they'll need to see more evidence of Clinton's new inclusiveness before their ambivalent support morphs into enthusiasm. "So far, she's hit on a lot of the things I'm passionate about," says Laura Brown, a 26-year-old fashion designer and seamstress in Los Angeles. "I want to see her prove it. I want to know it's genuine and not just part of the game."

Presidentidal Candidates Continue to Take Shots at the Supreme Court // Bloomberg.com // David Knowles – May 25, 2015

Of late, the U.S. Supreme Court has become a regular target for the current crop of presidential candidates, but for two decidedly different issues.

For Republicans still burned by the court's 2012 ruling that let stand insurance mandates and penalties under the Affordable Care Act, the latest beef with the court concerns its forthcoming ruling on whether gay marriage should be recognized nationwide. That prospect is so galling to some GOP candidates, that some have gone so far as to suggest that the court does not have the authority to enforce such a decision.

Mike Huckabee

During an appearance last weekend on Fox News Sunday, former Arkansas Governor Mike Huckabee voiced his frustration with the prospect of having the court decide the gay marriage question once and for all. "The notion that the Supreme Court comes up with the ruling and that automatically subjects the two other branches to following it defies everything there is about the three equal branches of government," Huckabee said.

Pressed by host Chris Wallace how far he would carry his logic, Huckabee floated a hypothetical.

“Then, what if the Supreme Court ruled they were going to make the decision as to who was going to be the next president and save the taxpayers and voters from all the expense and trouble of voting, and they'll just pick a president? Well, we would say, 'Well, they can't do that.' Why can't they do it? They can't do it because it's not in the law.”

Ted Cruz

Back in October, Texas Senator Ted Cruz reacted strongly to news that the supreme court had rejected requests from five states seeking to overturn lower court rulings that legalized gay marriage.

“The Supreme Court’s decision to let rulings by lower court judges stand that redefine marriage is both tragic and indefensible,” the senator said in a statement. “By refusing to rule if the states can define marriage, the Supreme Court is abdicating its duty to uphold the Constitution.”

Cruz also described the court's move as "judicial activism at its worst."

Ben Carson

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Interviewed by Fox News' Chris Wallace in May, retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson argued that it was an "open question" whether a president should be obliged to follow the Supreme Court's rulings. Asserting that "the laws of the land are not provided by the judicial branch," Carson suggested that the question of judicial rev iew had its limits and might be revisited.

"I have said this is an area that we need to discuss. We need to get into a discussion of this because it has changed from the original intent," Carson said (discussion begins at the 1:45 mark in the video).

Marco Rubio

Unlike his GOP riv als, Florida Senator Marco Rubio did not specifically mention the U.S. Supreme Court when, during an interview in April with the Christian Broadcasting Network's David Brody, he mocked the notion that the right to same-sex marriage is protected in the Constitution.

"It doesn't exist. There is no federal constitutional right to same sex marriage," Rubio declared. "There isn't such a right. You have to have a ridiculous reading of the U.S. Constitution to reach the conclusion that people have a right to marry someone of the same sex."

For Democrats, meanwhile, disappointment with the court largely stems from the 2010 v erdict in the Citizens United v . FEC case, which ruled that the First Amendment to the Constitution prevented the government from restricting the amount of money that corporations and unions can spend on elections. Still, neither of the two politicians to have declared their candidacy have suggested amending the current balance of power the way their Republican counterparts have.

Bernie Sanders

Shortly after declaring himself a presidential candidate, Vermont Senator Bernie Sanders pledged to enact a Supreme Court litmus test if elected whereby he would not nominate judges who did not promise to ov erturn the Citizens United decision.

"If elected president, I will have a litmus test in terms of my nominee to be a Supreme Court justice. And that nominee will say that we are going to ov erturn this disastrous Supreme Court decision on Citizens United. Because that decision is undermining American democracy. I do not believe that billionaires should be able to buy politicians," Sanders told CBS' Face the Nation in May.

Hillary Clinton

One week after announcing her 2016 candidacy, former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton began targeting Citizens United.

"We need to fix our dysfunctional political system and get unaccountable money out of it once and for all—even if it takes a constitutional amendment," Clinton said during her first trip to Iowa in April as a candidate.

Not to be outdone by Sanders, Clinton too began talking up a Citizens United litmus test for Supreme Court nominees.

"I will do ev ery thing I can do to appoint Supreme Court justices who will protect the right to v ote and not the right of billionaires to buy elections," Clinton told supporters at an Iowa house party two weeks ago.

OTHER DEMOCRATS NATIONAL COVERAGE

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

10 questions with Bernie Sanders // CNBC // John Harwood – May 26, 2015

Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont, 73, is the only self-described socialist in Congress. Now he is mounting a long shot bid for the 2016 Democratic presidential nomination against his former Senate colleague Hillary Rodham Clinton, who served most recently as Secretary of State.

Sanders calls for nothing less than a "political revolution" that would use tax policy to reverse what he calls the massive transfer of wealth from ordinary families to the most affluent over the past generation. He sat down to discuss the campaign with me over spaghetti-and-meatballs at a bistro near the Capitol. What follows is a condensed, edited transcript of our conversation.

HARWOOD: I read that you ran track in school. Was athletics important to you as a kid?

SANDERS: I came in third in my junior year in the New York City public school one-mile. I think my best was 4:37, which is not superstar, but it's pretty good.

We used to play ball every day. we chose up teams. One of the differences, by the way, between today and way back then is maybe you learn a little bit about democracy. Kids are out on the street. There wasn't any supervisors. There wasn't any parents. You chose—punch ball, softball. Everybody knew how good you are. It didn't matter how much money y ou had. You were the third best basketball player. Everybody knew it, 'cause they played with you day in and day out. Baseball the same.

You want to know who the Brooklyn Dodger team of 1951? Gil Hodges, Jackie Robinson, Pee Wee Reese, Billy Cox, Gene Hermanski, Duke Snider, Carl Furillo, Roy Campanella, Don Newcombe. How's that? Were they important to me? We would occasionally, go in the bleachers, which were then 60 cents. And when we really could put together the money and really were goin' big, we would sometimes get a buck-and-a-quarter seats.

HARWOOD: After the revolution, what does it look like? What do you see happening to the 1 percent?

SANDERS: What is my dream? My dream is, do we live in a country where 70 percent, 80 percent, 90 percent of the people vote? Where we have serious discourse on media rather than political gossip, by the way? Where we're debating trade policy, we're debating foreign policy, we're debating economic policy, where the American people actually know what's going on in Congress? Ninety-nine percent of all new income generated today goes to the top 1 percent. Top one-tenth of 1 percent owns as much as wealth as the bottom 90 percent. Does anybody think that that is the kind of economy this country should hav e? Do we think it's moral? So to my mind, if you have seen a massive transfer of wealth from the middle class to the top one-tenth of 1 percent, you know what, we've got to transfer that back if we're going to have a vibrant middle class. And you do that in a lot of ways. Certainly one way is tax policy.

HARWOOD: Have y ou seen some of the quotations from people on Wall Street, people in business? Some have even likened the progressive Democratic crusade to Hitler's Germany hunting down the Jews.

SANDERS: It's sick. And I think these people are so greedy, they 're so out of touch with reality, that they can come up and say that. They think they own the world.

What a disgusting remark. I'm sorry to hav e to tell them, they live in the United States, they benefit from the United States, we have kids who are hungry in this country. We hav e people who are working two, three, four jobs, who can't send their kids to college. You know what? Sorry, y ou're all going to have to pay your fair share of taxes. If my memory is correct, when radical socialist Dwight D. Eisenhower was president, the highest marginal tax rate was something like 90 percent.

HARWOOD: When you think about 90 percent, you don't think that's obv iously too high?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SANDERS: No. That's not 90 percent of your income, you know? That's the marginal. I'm sure you have some really right-wing nut types, but I'm not sure that every very wealthy person feels that it's the worst thing in the world for them to pay more in taxes, to be honest with you. I think you've got a lot of millionaires saying, "You know what? I've made a whole lot of money. I don't want to see kids go hungry in America. Yeah, I'll pay my fair share."

HARWOOD: In the latter part of the 20th century, Ronald Reagan came along and there was a big pivot in our politics. It revolves around the idea that we need less government and more market forces. Do you think that basic pivot was wrong?

SANDERS: Let me answer it this way, John. I think there is obviously an enormously important role for the free market and for entrepreneurial activity. I worry how free the free market is. In sector after sector, you have a small number of companies controlling a large part of the sector.

Certainly, in my view, the major banks should be broken up. We want entrepreneurs and private businesses to create wealth. No problem. But what we're living in now is what I would call—what Pope Francis calls—a casino-type capitalism, which is out of control, where the people on top have lost any sense of responsibility for the rest of the society. Where it's just "It's all me. It's all me. And to heck with anybody else." I want to see the result of that wealth go to the broad middle class of this country and not just to a handful of people.

HARWOOD: Have you seen some of the quotations from people on Wall Street, people in business? Some have even likened the progressive Democratic crusade to Hitler's Germany hunting down the Jews.

SANDERS: It's sick. And I think these people are so greedy, they're so out of touch with reality, that they can come up and say that. They think they own the world.

What a disgusting remark. I'm sorry to have to tell them, they live in the United States, they benefit from the United States, we have kids who are hungry in this country. We have people who are working two, three, four jobs, who can't send their kids to college. You know what? Sorry, you're all going to have to pay your fair share of taxes. If my memory is correct, when radical socialist Dwight D. Eisenhower was president, the highest marginal tax rate was something like 90 percent.

HARWOOD: When you think about 90 percent, you don't think that's obviously too high?

SANDERS: No. That's not 90 percent of your income, you know? That's the marginal. I'm sure you have some really right-wing nut types, but I'm not sure that every very wealthy person feels that it's the worst thing in the world for them to pay more in taxes, to be honest with you. I think you've got a lot of millionaires saying, "You know what? I've made a whole lot of money. I don't want to see kids go hungry in America. Yeah, I'll pay my fair share."

Read More10 questions for Mitch McConnell

HARWOOD: In the latter part of the 20th century, Ronald Reagan came along and there was a big pivot in our politics. It revolves around the idea that we need less government and more market forces. Do you think that basic pivot was wrong?

SANDERS: Let me answer it this way, John. I think there is obviously an enormously important role for the free market and for entrepreneurial activity. I worry how free the free market is. In sector after sector, you have a small number of companies controlling a large part of the sector.

Certainly, in my view, the major banks should be broken up. We want entrepreneurs and private businesses to create wealth. No problem. But what we're living in now is what I would call—what Pope Francis calls—a casino-type capitalism, which is out of control, where the people on top have lost any sense of responsibility for the rest of the society. Where it's just "It's all me. It's all me. And to heck with anybody else." I want to see the result of that wealth go to the broad middle class of this country and not just to a handful of people.

HARWOOD: If the changes that you envision in tax policy, in finance, breaking up the banks, were to result in a more equitable distribution of income, but less economic growth, is that trade off worth making?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SANDERS: Yes. If 99 percent of all the new income goes to the top 1 percent, you could triple it, it wouldn't matter much to the average middle class person. The whole size of the economy and the GDP. doesn't matter if people continue to work longer hours for low wages and you have 45 million people living in poverty. You can't just continue growth for the sake of growth in a world in which we are struggling with climate change and all kinds of environmental problems. All right? You don't necessarily need a choice of 23 underarm spray deodorants or of 18 different pairs of sneakers when children are hungry in this country. I don't think the media appreciates the kind of stress that ordinary Americans are working on. People scared to death about what happens tomorrow. Half the people in America have less than $10,000 in savings. How do you like that? That means you have an automobile accident, you have an illness, you're broke. How do you retire if you have less than $10,000, and you don't have much in the way of Social Security?

HARWOOD: It came out in disclosure forms the other day that Hillary Clinton and Bill Clinton, in the last 16 months, have made $30 million. What does that kind of money do to a politician's perspective on the struggles you were just talking about? Does it make it difficult for recipients of that kind of income to take on the system?

SANDERS: Well, theoretically, you could be a multi-billionaire and, in fact, be very concerned about the issues of working people. Theoretically, that's true.

I think sometimes what can happen is that—it's not just the Clintons—when you hustle money like that, you don't sit in restaurants like this. You sit in restaurants where you're spending—I don't know what they spend—hundreds of dollars for dinner and so forth. That's the world that you're accustomed to, and that's the world view that you adopt. You're not worrying about a kid three blocks away from here whose mom can't afford to feed him. So yes, I think that can isolate you—that type of wealth has the potential to isolate you from the reality of the world.

HARWOOD: I read an interview that you did about the corporate media. And you said the corporate media was reluctant to call out people for lying in public debates. You're on corporate media right now. Who's lying in our politics?

SANDERS: I'm the ranking member of the Budget Committee, okay? Leader of the opposition. The Republican budget does the following: It throws 27 million people off of health care by ending the Affordable Care Act and cutting Medicaid by $440 billion. Have you seen that in print? Have you seen that statement? There is a reality that goes on here. And you have many people who try to be, "Oh, I've got to be even-handed here and even-handed there. You got the Koch Brothers there, Bernie Sanders there." That's nonsense. And I think a lot of right-wing people get away with murder, because the media doesn't call them out on it.

HARWOOD: President Obama, in talking about trade the other day, said that Elizabeth Warren and some of the people taking her position were just making things up about the Trans-Pacific Partnership. Do you think he's making things up in selling it? He says it's the most progressive one that's ever been negotiated.

SANDERS: Yeah, like what? The minimum wage in Vietnam is 56 cents an hour. Workers there cannot form independent unions. And if you protest government policy, you might end up in trouble. Okay? What does this trade agreement have to say about that? Not a goddamned thing. Not a bloody thing. In this trade agreement there is language, what we call the Investor State Dispute Resolution. This is what it says: that Philip Morris can take Australia and Uruguay to court and try to collect many millions of dollars. For what reason? You know why they can do that? Because Australia and Uruguay have passed strong legislation trying to keep their kids from smoking. And Philip Morris is aggrieved because their future profits are being threatened by strong anti-smoking legislation. That is exactly how you undermine American democracy.

-Sen. Bernie Sanders

HARWOOD: You and I talked some months ago. You said you were going to take a look at running, and you weren't going to do it if it wasn't viable. What did you see that made you think it was viable?

SANDERS: If I do badly, and I don't run a good campaign, and we don't get our message out, and we don't bring people together, it reflects not just on me, but on the ideas that I'm talking about. A couple months ago, I was in California, a beautiful sunny day. We had 500 people coming out at a union hall. I went to Austin, Texas - we had about 600 people coming out. I was in Las Vegas, we had 300 people coming out. Went to Chicago, we had 400 people. So I am sensing that based on that trip and trips that I made to Iowa, New Hampshire, that there is more disconnect and more anger at the establishment—the corporate establishment, the political establishment, the media establishment.

Is there the potential support out there? I sensed that there was. Gut feeling, that's all.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I fully concede that I get into this race as a major underdog. No question about it. I mean, Hillary Clinton is known by 95 percent of the American people. And clearly, in terms of money, I will be very, very, very heavily outspent. As I've said before though, don't underestimate me.

We're going to do better than people think. And I think we got a shot to win this thing.

Bernie Sanders Aims To Catch On With Elizabeth Warren-Backing Democrats // AP via Huffington Post // Ken Thomas - May 25, 2015

PORTSMOUTH, N.H. (AP) — For Democrats who had hoped to lure Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren into a presidential campaign, independent Sen. Bernie Sanders might be the next best thing.

Sanders, who is opening his official presidential campaign Tuesday in Burlington, Vermont, aims to ignite a grassroots fire among left-leaning Democrats wary of Hillary Rodham Clinton. He is laying out an agenda in step with the party's progressive wing and compatible with Warren's platform — reining in Wall Street banks, tackling college debt and creating a government-financed infrastructure jobs program.

"I think our views are parallel on many, many issues," Sanders said in an interview with The Associated Press, describing Warren as a "good friend."

Sanders caucuses with the Democrats in Washington and is running for the Democratic nomination. He and Democratic former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley are vying to become the primary alternative to Clinton. Much of the energy behind a Clinton alternative has been directed to drafting Warren, but she has repeatedly said she won't run.

For Sanders, a key question is electability. Clinton is in a commanding position by any measure. Yet his supporters in New Hampshire say his local ties and longstanding practice of holding town hall meetings and people-to-people campaigning — a staple in the nation's first primary state — could serve him well.

"Toward the Vermont border it's like a love-fest for Bernie," said Jerry Curran, an Amherst, New Hampshire, Democratic activist who has been involved in the draft Warren effort. "He's not your milquetoast left-winger. He's kind of a badass left-winger."

A self-described democratic socialist, Sanders has raised more than $4 million since announcing in early May that he would be a presidential candidate. He suggested in the interview that raising $50 million for the primaries was a possibility. "That would be a goal," he said.

He rejects the notion that he's simply in the race to shape the debate.

"Hillary Clinton is a candidate, I am a candidate," Sanders said. "I suspect there will be other candidates. The people in this country will make their choice."

Whether Sanders can tap into the party's Warren wing and influence Clinton's policy agenda remains unclear. But he has been on the forefront of liberal causes as Clinton has seemed to be tacking to the left.

Clinton regularly refers to an economic stacked deck against American workers — rhetoric that offers comparisons to Warren's frequent description of the economic system being "rigged" against middle-class families.

Sanders has joined with Warren to drive opposition to the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade proposal, arguing it would ship jobs overseas. Clinton has avoided taking a specific position on the trade deal.

The Vermont senator has introduced legislation to make tuition free at public colleges and universities, a major piece of Warren's agenda. The free tuition would be covered by a mix of state and federal money and paid for by higher taxes on

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Wall Street investment firms, hedge funds and other financial transactions. Clinton's campaign has signaled that she intends to make debt-free college a major piece of her campaign.

Sanders' disdain for big money in politics is also shared by liberals. Clinton frequently tells voters that she would back a constitutional amendment to overturn the Supreme Court decision allowing super PACS to raise unlimited money. But Democratic super PACs are already lining up behind her.

"I'm not going to have a super PAC in this campaign," Sanders said. "I don't go to fundraisers where millionaires sit around the room and say here's a million, here's $5 million for your super PAC. That's not my life. That's not my world. And I think the American people are saying that is not what our politics should be about." He said the money he's raised so far has come from more than 100,000 individual donors, giving an average of $42 each.

Organizers of the pro-Warren effort say Clinton may still win over many of their supporters. Charles Chamberlain, executive director of Vermont-based Democracy for America, said Sanders would "fill the void" for some of the voters hoping for Warren to run. But not for all.

"They're different people. They've got different pluses, they've got different minuses," Chamberlain said. "Some of the people who want to see Elizabeth get in the race are going to Hillary. Some of them are going to go to Martin O'Malley." O'Malley is expected to announce his candidacy Saturday.

If Sanders is the underdog, that's fine by him. During the 1970s, he lost four statewide elections as a third-party candidate, and then narrowly defeated a Democratic incumbent in 1981 to become Burlington's mayor.

"Nobody — trust me — nobody thought I would defeat a five-term incumbent Democratic mayor," Sanders said, noting the winning margin of 10 votes.

The lessons, he said, are clear: "Don't underestimate me."

Vermont's Favorite Underdog // Politico // Terri Hallenbeck - May 25, 2015

As the sun sets Tuesday over Lake Champlain, Bernie Sanders plans to join Hillary Clinton in the Democratic presidential race during a rally at Burlington's Waterfront Park filled with Ben & Jerry's ice cream and music from Vermont's best Cajun band, Mango Jam. It's an unlikely, long-shot bid for the nation's highest office—but it's not entirely Quixotic. "Bernie," as everyone in this state knows him, has after all made a career out of unlikely, long-shot bids for public office.

And, if Sanders' presidential bid is going to go anywhere, he's going to have to do it the way he's always done it: as the outside candidate, winning over voters one town hall meeting at a time.

Over a forty-year political career, he's gotten pretty good at it. Bernie Sanders wasn't even up for reelection in 2014, but at a late October campaign rally last year in small-town Bristol, Vermont, he was clearly the headline act. The incumbent governor and Democratic candidates for lieutenant governor and state legislative seats filled the front of the room. But who was the biggest draw to the town hall brunch? Sanders. "Oh god, yeah," said Bristol resident Suzanne Boyle, who enthusiastically supported his push for universal health care.

The wild-haired, filled-with-outrage Sanders has long had a rock-star status in Vermont that is envy of fellow politicians. And it follows him to the polls. He won 71 percent of the vote in 2012, his most recent election. That's better than President Barack Obama fared in the state.

In 2006, his first election to the Senate after 16 years in the House, Sanders won every county in the state despite facing off against a self-financed millionaire Republican. He did better than the incumbent governor that year.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The self-described democratic socialist polls well in relativ ely populous, left-leaning Burlington, where he got his political start as may or in 1981. But he also does surprisingly well in the so-called Northeast Kingdom, one of the most rural and conserv ative corners of the state. He's big with liberals but also with seniors and veterans, farmers and postal workers.

During four decades of politics in Vermont, Sanders has managed to win over a wide array of voters with his unique style. If the presidential campaign he is kicking off Tuesday in Burlington is to gain traction, he will likely hav e to do it the same way .

"Bernie has really been able to speak for the underdog," says Garrison Nelson, a political science professor at the University of Vermont who has followed Sanders' entire career. "They see Bernie as a person who can be their champion."

Though Sanders was headlining a Democratic campaign rally last fall in Bristol, he has never been elected to office as a Democrat. Congress' longest-serving independent caucuses in Washington with Democrats, runs in Democratic primaries and campaigns with Vermont Democrats, but he is not one of them.

That showed clearly last week, as Gov. Peter Shumlin, a three-term incumbent Democrat, announced he's supporting Hillary Clinton in the presidential race. Shumlin joins a long list of the state's top Democrats to do so: former Gov s. Howard Dean and Madeleine Kunin, Sen. Patrick Leahy and Burlington Mayor Miro Weinberger. Only the state's sole at-large congressman, Democrat Peter Welch, has remained uncommitted.

"Bernie and I are great friends," Shumlin said last week. "But my belief is that the most qualified candidate running for president who's going to fight for the middle class and who understands the challenge of foreign policy is Hillary Clinton."

Sanders is used to being the outsider. Other than a few early unsuccessful elections in which he was part of the liberal, anti-war Liberty Union Party, Sanders has always run his own party. He's become a master at hosting town hall-style meetings, where his staff serves up a free brunch, lunch or dinner and he adds a heaping spoonful of political theater.

He wins over v oters, but not with charm. The gruff 73-year-old, who has never lost his blustery Brookly n accent, is not the sort of politician who remembers your name, or your kids' names. He does not linger for idle chatter. He seems far too busy with weighty matters.

Instead, he leaves voters believing they can count on him to bully their bullies, whoev er they might be. He stands up for almost everybody but the rich.

Bernie Sanders Takes It to Wall Street With Financial T ransactions Tax // Huffington Post // Dean Baker – May 25, 2015

Last week, Bernie Sanders, the Senator from Vermont and only announced challenger to Hillary Clinton for the Democratic nomination, took a strong stand for everyday people. He proposed a financial transactions tax (FTT), effectively a Wall Street sales tax, and to use the revenue to make public colleges tuition free.

While making college affordable to low and middle income families is important, the proposal for an FTT is a real game changer. There is no single policy that would hav e anywhere near as much impact in reforming the financial sector. A FTT would effectiv ely impose a sales tax on stocks and other financial assets, so that speculators have to pay a tax on their trades, just like people who buy shoes or clothes.

There are three points people should understand about a FTT. The first is that it can raise an enormous amount of money . A FTT could be imposed at different rates. Sanders proposed following the rate structure in a bill put forward by Minneapolis Congressman Keith Ellison. Eleven countries in the European Union are working to implement a set of FTTs that would tax stock trades at a rate of 0.1 percent and trades of most derivativ e instruments at the rate of 0.01 percent.

Extrapolating from a recent analysis of the European proposal, a comparable tax in the United States would raise more than $130 billion a year or more than $1.5 trillion over the next decade. This is real money; it dwarfs the sums that have dominated most budget debates in recent years. For example, the Republicans had been trying to push through cuts to the food stamp program of $40 billion over the course of a decade. The sum that can be raised by this FTT proposal is more than thirty times as large. The revenue from a FTT could go far toward rebuilding the infrastructure, improving the health care system, or paying for college tuition, as suggested by Senator Sanders.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The second point is that Wall Street will bear almost the entire cost of the tax. The financial industry is surely already paying for studies showing the tax will wipe out the 401(k)s held by middle income families. This is nonsense. Not only is the size of the tax small for anyone not flipping stock on a daily basis, research indicates that most investors will largely offset the cost of the tax by trading less.

Most research shows that trading volume falls roughly in proportion to the increase in transaction costs. This means that if a FTT doubles the cost of trading then the volume of trading will fall by roughly 50 percent, leaving total trading costs unchanged. Investors will pay twice as much on each trade, but hav e half as many trades. Since inv estors don't on average make money on trades (one side might win, but the other loses), this is a wash for the investor.

While most middle income people don't directly trade the money in their retirement accounts, they do have people who manage these funds. The research means that the fund managers will reduce their trading, so that the total costs of transactions that are passed on to the investor remain roughly constant. This means that the financial industry will bear almost the entire cost of the tax in the form of reduced trading volume.

This gets to the last point: a smaller financial industry is a more efficient financial industry. The purpose of the financial industry is to allocate money from savers to companies that want to finance new investment. As the industry has exploded in size ov er the last four decades there is no reason to believ e that it has gotten better in serving this basic function. In fact, the stock bubble at the end of the 1990s and the housing bubble in the last decade might suggest that it has gotten worse.

A study from the Bank of International Settlements and more recent research from the International Monetary Fund find that a bloated financial sector slows growth. An oversized financial sector pulls resources away from more productiv e sectors of the economy. People who could be engaged in biological research or developing clean technologies are instead employed on Wall Street designing computer programs to beat other traders by a microsecond to garner profits at their expense. A FTT will make much of this activity unprofitable, encouraging people to turn to more productive work.

In short, a FTT is a great way to raise large amounts of money to meet important public needs. It will come almost entirely at the expense of the financial industry and should strengthen the economy . We now have one presidential candidate who is prepared to support a strong FTT. Are there others?

Sanders: A Revolution With an Eye on the Hungry Children // NYT// John Hardwood – May 26, 2015

Mr. Sanders won't condemn Mrs. Clinton for raking in millions in speech fees and campaign donations. But he warns it could curb her effectiveness in challenging corporate interests on behalf of working Americans.

"When you hustle money like that, you don't sit in restaurants like this," Mr. Sanders said during an interv iew in a small Italian bistro on Capitol Hill. "You're sitting in restaurants where y ou're spending — I don't know what they spend, hundreds of dollars for dinner."

"That's the world that you're accustomed to, and that's the worldview that y ou adopt," he added. "You're not worrying about a kid three blocks away from here whose mom can't afford to feed him."

Mr. Sanders spoke on the eve of the first big rally for his 2016 presidential bid, in Burlington, Vt. One question looming over his effort is how aggressively he will draw contrasts with Mrs. Clinton, his former Senate colleague who he concedes is heavily favored.

Mr. Sanders advocates a "rev olution" to reverse a "massive transfer of wealth" from the middle class to the affluent over the last generation.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

He exuded contempt for the "sick" and "disgusting" views of some titans of business who have likened such efforts to Hitler and his persecution of Jews.

"These people are so greedy, they're so out of touch with reality," Mr. Sanders said. "You know what? Sorry, you're all going to hav e to pay your fair share of taxes."

He doesn't flinch over returning to the 90 percent personal income tax rates of the 1950s for top earners. And if reducing income inequality reduces economic growth, he says, that's fine. "You don't necessarily need a choice of 23 underarm spray deodorants," he said, "when children are hungry in this country ."

GOP

Ben Carson tells RNC to keep debates inclusive despite his own surge // Washington Times // Jennifer Harper – May 25, 2015

Ben Carson has penned his second open letter to the Republican National Committee concerning the upcoming GOP presidential debates, which will only include the 10 best-polling candidates according to new restrictions set by host networks Fox News and CNN.

Initially, Mr. Carson urged the RNC to let all GOP hopefuls participate in the high profile debates beginning Aug. 6, asking consideration for himself and fellow hopeful Carly Fiorina.

The national polls, howev er, turned out to be in Mr. Carson's favor; he is now on the Top 10 list after a Fox News poll found him tied with Jeb Bush in first place.

Nevertheless, he expounded on his concerns about the broadcasts, again calling for inclusiv eness in an open letter released at the weekend.

"I am very worried that out of broadcasting convenience our party is about to exclude voices from our debate programs that are critical to making our party bigger, better, and bolder. The rules may be good for me personally, but they are not good for the process," Mr. Carson wrote. "We are blessed to have so many qualified candidates running for president, more than a typical debate format can handle. Surely we could find a format to allow every voice to be heard."

With potential candidates including Donald Trump, Ohio Gov. John Kasich to Sen. Lindsey Graham, the field of GOP presidential hopefuls currently ranges from a low of 12 — all the way up to 30, depending on who's doing the counting. Candidates "must place in the top 10 of an average of the fiv e most recent national polls," according to the Fox News criteria; CNN's rules were similar.

"In the past, this type of rule has been used to keep 'fringe' candidates off the stage. None of these men and women deserves this exclusion," Mr. Carson concluded.

As for Ms. Fiorina, her campaign manager Steve DeMaura issued his own statement, saying the campaign expects to meet the standards.

"We are confident that Carly's growing momentum and support will meet and exceed whatever inclusion criteria Fox News and the RNC set. Fox News has deep political expertise and we are hopeful that whatever criteria they settle on will accurately reflect both the state of the race and the realities of the nominating contest," he said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Koch brothers try to rein in the GOP presidential clown show // The Washington Post // Paul Waldman – May 25, 2015

If you're a Republican primary voter, you're probably feeling pretty good about the presidential primaries. Even if you haven't yet found the candidate who will make you swoon, one thing you've got is choices. By my count, there are currently 10 candidates who are declared or all but certain to run, and another four who will probably run. But while the voters might find this an embarrassment of riches, for the party's leaders and financiers, it looks like a recipe for trouble. Which is how I interpret this news:

> In a Saturday interview on the Larry Kudlow Show, a nationally syndicated radio broadcast, David Koch let it slip that the roughly $900 million that he and his brother, Charles, plan to lavish on the 2016 presidential race could find its way into the hands of more than one GOP contender.
>
> "We are thinking of supporting several Republicans," David Koch said, adding, "If we're happy with the policies that these individuals are supporting, we'll finance their campaigns."
>
> Koch said the brothers would begin writing checks to individual candidates in "the primary season, winter and next spring."

Up until now, the Koch brothers hadn't indicated that they'd be taking a side in the primaries. It almost seemed that they viewed that as the kind of thing amateurs like Sheldon Adelson do, throwing money at some candidate based on overly irrational personal feelings, while they keep focused on the real goal of getting a Republican — any Republican — into the White House. By saying they're going to support several candidates in the primaries, the Kochs are pledging to accelerate the winnowing process, by which the race's chaff can be sloughed off and the focus can stay on the serious contenders.

Don't be fooled by the line about them supporting all the ones whose policies they're happy with. That's because there's almost no disagreement among the candidates, at least on the issues the Kochs care about. All of them would like to see low taxes on the wealthy (most have even advocated a flat tax, a boon to people like the Kochs), a dramatic reduction in regulations that affect corporations and a rollback of the social safety net. Where the Kochs personally disagree with the candidates (as they may on some social issues or on immigration), they disagree with all the candidates, because the candidates' positions are so similar.

So mark my words: If the Kochs pick out a few candidates to support, it will be the ones they think would be the strongest in a general election and those they think put the best face on the GOP.

And the Kochs aren't the only ones trying to do this winnowing. Fox News, which always keeps the long-term interests of the Republican Party in mind, recently announced that in the first debate of the season, it will be refusing admittance to all but 10 candidates. The excluded ones will in all likelihood find themselves caught in a vicious cycle where they can't get coverage because they aren't being taken seriously, and the can't get taken seriously because they aren't getting coverage. Ten is still a large number of candidates, but that first debate will be a key moment in the winnowing process.

So as open as the campaign is, certain key players still have ways to at least try to rein it in. But their power is limited. One result of the newly freewheeling nature of presidential elections is that a rich donor or two can prop up the candidacy of someone with little chance to win the party's nomination, enabling him or her to stick around and cause trouble months after he or she ought to have departed the race. This year, multiple candidates could have billionaires feeding them the money they need to keep their campaigns active deep into the primary season. If you're a thoughtful Republican, a primary with this many candidates is a cacophonous mess, full of extremist cranks squabbling with each other and taking progressively nastier potshots at the leaders, one of whom will end up as the nominee. The longer it goes, the more that nominee has to pander to the base and the less time he or she will have to focus on Hillary Clinton.

If the Kochs are ready to put some of their ample resources into the primary campaign, it's a sign that the enormous size of the primary field is generating some serious concern at the top of the GOP. The question is whether, even with their money, there's much they can do about it.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Here's Everything We Learned From The Hillary Emails // The Daily Caller // Chuck Ross – May 25, 2015

With its Friday dump — on Memorial Day weekend, no less — the State Department ensured that Hillary Clinton's 296 Libya-related emails would receiv e limited news coverage.

But the records are well worth reviewing because they contain important insight into Clinton and her top aides' v iews on Libya and Benghazi leading up to the Sept. 11, 2012, attack, which killed four Americans.

Here are the 13 most interesting exchanges.

'The public face of the U.S. effort in Liby a'

If one email chain comes back to haunt Clinton on the campaign trail it would be an April 4, 2012, message top aide Jake Sullivan sent touting Clinton's "leadership on Liby a."

"HRC has been a critical voice on Libya in administration deliberations, at NATO, and in contact group meetings — as well as the public face of the U.S. effort in Libya," Sullivan wrote. "She was instrumental in securing the authorization, building the coalition, and tightening the noose around Qadhafi and his regime."

While deposing Gaddafi was seen as a major U.S. victory at the time, the attack at Benghazi and its v ulnerability to Islamist groups like ISIS calls Clinton's and the Obama administration's intervention there into question.

Clinton overslept and missed a national security briefing days after the Benghazi attack

Clinton missed a President's Daily Brief meeting on the morning of Sept. 15, 2012, just days after the Benghazi attack, because she overslept.

Monica Hanley, a Clinton aide, sent an email to Clinton at 9:17 a.m. stating that a briefer "has some sensitive items that he would like to personally show you when he arrives."

Clinton responded at 10:43 a.m., stating "just woke up so i [sic] missed Dan. Could he come back after finish my calls?"

Interested in a movie on morning of the Benghazi attack

Early on the morning of Sept. 11, 2012, before the attack on Benghazi, Clinton had a movie on her mind. But she wasn't thinking of "Innocence of Muslims," the short film that the Obama administration initially falsely blamed for the Benghazi attack. Instead, she emailed aides Philippe Reines and Huma Abedin seeking a copy of "The Oath of Tobruk," a documentary about the Libyan civil war directed by French philosopher Bernard-Henri Levy and produced by her friend, Harv ey Weinstein.

Clinton was interviewed for the film, which Weinstein claimed depicted the secretary's "leadership" in Libya.

Confused the names of two Americans killed at Benghazi

After Clinton learned that ambassador Chris Stevens and Sean Smith, a Foreign Serv ice officer, had been killed at Benghazi, she sent an email to several top aides asking if she should issue a statement that night or the following day.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The only problem was, Clinton flubbed the two murdered Americans' names. Her email was entitled "Chris Smith." None of the aides on the email chain — Cheryl Mills, Jake Sullivan and Victoria Nuland — corrected the mistake.

Clinton's aides prepared her speech for a Clinton Foundation event

Emails from Sept. 22, 2012, just 10 days after the Benghazi attack, show that Clinton was concerned with a speech she was set to giv e on behalf of her family charity, the Clinton Foundation.

Her aide, Jake Sulliv an, wrote that "Megan is working on a development speech but please read the below if you can this afternoon."

"Please let me know your thoughts," he added.

Clinton instructed another aide, Oscar Flores, to print off the speech, which is redacted in the emails.

State Department and White House officials asked YouTube to block video

One email shows an all-hands-on-deck effort to ensure YouTube and its parent company , Google, continued to block "The Innocence of Muslims" from appearing online.

The Obama administration falsely blamed the movie for sparking the attacks on Benghazi.

On Sept. 27, 2012, Denis McDonough, then the deputy national security advisor, sent an email to several State Department officials which listed contact information for Google's and YouTube's CEOs.

Nora Toiv, who worked in Clinton's office, contacted others within the department stating that the video would be blocked until at least the following Monday, Oct. 1.

Cheryl Mills, Clinton's then-chief of staff, forwarded the email chain to Clinton.

While it was known that the Obama administration had asked YouTube and Google to block the movie, the emails show that the effort was far more inv olved that prev iously reported.

Clinton received now-classified information on her priv ate email account

Shortly before the State Department released Clinton's records, the FBI redacted portions of a Nov. 18, 2012, email because the information was classified. The email appears to have included names of individuals suspected of carry ing out the Benghazi attack.

Clinton and her team have repeatedly denied that she sent or received classified information on her personal email account. The FBI's re-classification raises questions over whether the agency would have marked the information as classified if Clinton had turned her records over to the State Department as she was required to do when she left the agency in Feb. 2013.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

WASHINGTON – Sen. Lindsey Graham's all-but-official presidential campaign likely will draw support from super PACs, but the South Carolina Republican said this should be the last election where wealthy donors are allowed to write such huge checks.

Graham, a third-term senator, is expected to officially announce candidacy for the Republican nomination on June 1 in Central.

Super PACs can raise and spend unlimited amounts of money running ads supporting or opposing individual candidates, as long as they don't coordinate with campaigns. Most of the 2016 presidential contenders have at least one super PAC backing them, and the committees are raking in millions.

"Every campaign will have friendly super PACs," Graham said. "You can only ask for a $5,000 contribution as a candidate. So the super PAC role looms large in presidential campaigns."

But Graham is not a fan. He supported the 2002 law that tightened campaign finance limits, and he's criticized the 2010 Supreme Court decision that loosened them.

In a recent interview, he said super PACs are a necessary evil of the 2016 contest and whoev er wins the White House should try to rein them in.

Many super PACs are using the presidential race to test the limits of campaign finance rules. A new super PAC supporting Democratic contender and former Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, called Correct the Record, argues it's allowed to work closely with her campaign because it doesn't intend to fund paid advertising.

Republican Jeb Bush has appeared at a fundraiser for a super PAC supporting his likely bid. His allies say that's OK because he's not yet an official candidate.

Super PACs didn't exist before 2010, when a pair of federal court rulings, including the Supreme Court's decision in Citizens United vs. the Federal Election Commission, pav ed the way for corporations and unions to spend unlimited amounts helping get candidates elected.

A crucial factor in Graham's decision to run for president was his view, based on the few months he spent traveling the country, that he can raise enough money to be competitive.

"I feel like in my case, I'll have a finance team that can adequately fund my campaign," Graham said. "That was one of the big Rubicons I had to cross, and I've never felt better about that. On the super PAC side, I have v ery little ability to influence that."

Voters will grow weary of super PACs' influence, he said.

"I think over time, there will be a real re-evaluation after this election cy cle over the role that some of these PACs play," Graham said.

He went further during a TV interview in New Hampshire in April, saying a constitutional amendment is needed to curtail super PACs.

"Eventually, we're going to destroy American politics with so much money in the political process because they are going to turn y ou off from wanting to vote," Graham told WMUR in Manchester.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Until then, however, Graham isn't disavowing any super PAC that may emerge to back his campaign.

His 2014 Senate re-election campaign was helped by the West Main Street Values PAC, run by his allies in South Carolina. The PAC raised about $900,000 last year and financed $272,000 worth of pro-Graham advertising that helped him beat six primary challengers and win the general election by a wide margin.

Former New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg donated the largest amount, $250,000, to the super PAC. Several other donors have links to pro-Israel organizations, reflecting Graham's ardent support of the Mideast ally and his willingness to commit military resources to target terrorism.

In January, Graham created a standard political committee, Security Through Strength, to finance his travels while he mulled a White House bid. Donations to that committee were capped at $2,700 per person, and the donors will be disclosed later this summer.

In March, a Hilton Head man who has previously donated to Graham's Senate campaigns created a super PAC called Security Is Strength. William Bethea Jr., a former chairman of the South Carolina Ports Authority, is listed as treasurer of the new super PAC, which has not yet had to file a report on its financial activity.

Federal Election Commission records don't specify if the super PAC supports or opposes a specific candidate.

Efforts to reach Bethea for comment Thursday were unsuccessful. Brittany Bramell, a spokeswoman for Graham's Security Through Strength committee, declined to comment Friday .

Nuclear Waste Hard To Handle For GOP Candidate // National Journal // Jason Plautz – May 25, 2015

In South Carolina, voters want to ship their nuclear waste far away, maybe to a long-dormant federal site in Nevada called Yucca Mountain. Nevadans, on the other hand, mostly want to see it anywhere but in their state.

And with both states hosting early primaries just days apart, Republican presidential candidates are facing a tricky tightrope walk to avoid losing face in either state.

The Yucca Mountain nuclear waste repository , which would sit 100 miles outside of Las Vegas, was long thought to be dead, given Sen. Harry Reid's virulent opposition. But with Republicans back in control of the Senate and Reid's pending retirement, the issue has suddenly been revived, and candidates are stuck balancing competing local interests.

Saying you want to open the project—the position taken in recent weeks by Marco Rubio, Ted Cruz, and Ben Carson—and it's a winner on Feb. 20 in South Carolina, site of the nation's third primary after Iowa and New Hampshire.

But former Nevada Rep. James Bilbray called it "political suicide" in his state, which hosts a wide-open Feb. 23 caucus, the fourth in the nation and first in the West.

"In my political life, I've never seen an issue as emotional in Nevada as Yucca Mountain," said Bilbray, who, as a freshman Democrat, tried to fight the project when Congress first approved it in 1987.

"But I can understand in other states where this can be popular," he said. "I'm not the campaign, I'm not a candidate, but I can see where if you're looking at the big picture and you don't think you can win Nevada, you just try to get some publicity."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The project had been stalled under President Obama and Reid, but the Nuclear Regulatory Commission reopened its safety study in 2013, which has been favorable towards the site. The House approved $150 million for the site in its fiscal 2016 Energy Department spending bill, and while the Senate did not include similar money, Republicans say they're open to inserting it during a floor debate or in conference with the House.

Jeb Bush and Mike Huckabee, two former governors, are staking out more nuanced positions on the Yucca Mountain project. Bush, who's expected to run for the Republican nomination, last week said he's doubtful of Yucca's future, although he acknowledged the need for a long-term solution to the country's waste storage problem.

"I think we need to move to a system where the communities and states want it," Bush told reporters in Reno. "It's a system where instead of hav ing it forced down the throats of people, that there is a consensus inside the communities and states that they want it and they proactively go for it.

And in a statement to National Journal, Huckabee said that "the citizens of Nevada—not federal bureaucrats—should determine the future of Yucca Mountain."

"As a former governor, I believe the federal gov ernment should not force Nevada to accept nuclear waste against their will, but work with Nevada officials to find a mutually agreeable solution," Huckabee said.

That stance, which mirrors what major GOP candidates like Mitt Romney have said in the past, is a bit of a hedge, said University of Nevada, Las Vegas political science professor Dav id Damore.

"That's language y ou hear from Republicans trying to find a middle ground between what the nuclear industry wants and what you say when you're in Nevada," said Damore.

Polls show that voters largely don't want the repository to open, and Republican Gov. Brian Sandoval has pushed funds through the state legislature to fight the project. Reid lashed out at Bush and Rubio, say ing in an email that he dared "any Republican to step foot in Nevada and declare their support for" Yucca Mountain.

"Let this be a warning to Republican presidential candidates as they make their way to Nev ada: Google exists and y ou cannot hide from your past positions on Yucca Mountain," he said in a statement from the Nevada Democratic Party.

But nationally, Republicans and the nuclear industry want to see Yucca opened, since the government already has poured millions into the site and it's seen as the best federal location (there also is mov ement for smaller, private repositories in other states). Bush is even a member of the Clean and Safe Energy Coalition, a pro-Yucca group backed by the Nuclear Energy Institute, although he splits with it on this issue (the tie was first reported by Nevada political reporter Jon Ralston).

And in South Carolina, Yucca represents an opportunity to clear out its crowded nuclear waste sites; along with Washington, it sued the NRC to reopen its review of the Nevada project, a decision it won in 2013. Gov . Nikki Haley and Sen. Lindsey Graham, himself an expected 2016 candidate, applauded the decision and said they were determined to ensure South Carolina did not become a permanent home to nuclear waste.

"If we could ship everything away , we'd do it for sure. We've ev en talked about putting it on rockets and sending it into space," said David Woodward, a political science professor at Clemson who has adv ised Republican campaigns. "Obviously its best to say that you're for Yucca Mountain here."

And that's why the state has become a welcome site for some pro-Yucca statements. Rubio saidthis month that with the money spent on Yucca, it should move forward. Cruz told the Greenville News that Yucca should have opened years ago, blaming the delay on Reid's "brand of nasty, partisan politics," although he added that if Nev adans opposed, he would be open to moving the site and recouping the federal funds spent there.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

And Ben Carson said the Yucca site was "logical" given its sparse population, saying, "if the science is correct, we do have to come up with a mechanism for transporting the nuclear waste in a safe manner, and I think the people of Nevada would need to be compensated for that as well."

But that again leaves them on shaky ground in the valuable Nevada race. Rubio is in an especially awkward spot -- lieutenant governor Mark Hutchison also opposes the project, but was recently named chair of Rubio's Nevada campaign. Hutchison told the Las Vegas Review Journal that he wouldn't leave the campaign over the issue, but would "use my own personal influence and my relationship with him to make Nevada's case against Yucca Mountain."

A spokesman for Rand Paul said the senator was not commenting on Yucca, while a spokesman for Carly Fiorina did not return a request. Democrats have been generally opposed to the project; Hillary Clinton in the 2008 campaign said she opposed it.

Another variable complicating the candidates' stance was Nevada's current use of a caucus. Although it's an early voting state, the format of the caucus has blunted turnout and in the past made Romney, who had the support of the state's Mormon voters, and Ron Paul, backed by libertarians, the dominant figures there.

State leaders are exploring a move to a primary, which state analysts say could make the state more appealing to national candidates. That, Bilbray said, could give candidates like Bush a leg up when they avoid full-throated support for Yucca.

"If I don't think I'm winning a caucus, I move on and say something that's going to get me publicity," Bilbray said. "But I don't see how a candidate can win on this. Anyone, even you or me, could win against a candidate who supports Yucca."

Marco Rubio and the Challenge to Hillary Clinton // Huffington Post Politics /// Hoyt Hilsman – May 25, 2015

In a recent article in the New York Times, Jeremy Peters reported on the growing fears of some Democrats -- even within the Clinton camp -- over facing Marco Rubio in the 2016 campaign. They see several powerful forces at work in Rubio's candidacy -- his youth and his Hispanic heritage, not to mention his charismatic personality.

Patti Solis Doyle, who ran Hillary Clinton's 2008 campaign and was the first female Hispanic to run a presidential campaign, was quoted in the article as saying Rubio "is a powerful speaker," adding "He is young. He is very motivational. He has a powerful story."

Rubio has two strong cards to play if he faces Clinton in the election. First and most important is the generational divide. Rubio, at age 43, can argue that he represents the future of American politics, while Clinton, at age 69, represents the past. Since the Democrats have relied on younger voters for their support in recent presidential elections, even a modest percentage of young voters defecting to the Rubio camp would be a serious threat to Democratic prospects.

The other obvious advantage is his Hispanic heritage. Again, Democrats have relied on the loyalty of Hispanic voters -- and the Republican hard-line against immigration reform -- to keep Hispanics solidly in their camp. However, as Doyle points out, Rubio "could have the ability to nip away at the numbers for the Democrats." That could mean trouble for Clinton, especially in the crucial swing state of Florida, Rubio's home territory.

Rubio understands his natural advantages over Clinton and has wisely exploited them in recent days. Following the old adage in politics that one should attack an opponent's strength, Rubio proposed a tax plan aimed at helping middle-class families instead of the traditional Republican approach of lowering taxes for high earners. This proposal very cleverly provides a benefit for most Americans and addresses the income inequality issue more concretely than the populist "tax the rich" proposals.

The conventional wisdom among Democrats is that Rubio's departures from Republican orthodoxy will doom him in the primaries and that if he moves to the center in his policies, he will never get the Republican nomination. This is a curious strategy for Democrats since it relies on the Republican right to rescue Clinton from a formidable opponent. It also is likely wrong. Many Republicans are tired of losing presidential elections and of being steamrolled by Tea Party and other ultra-conserv ative forces. Even the ranks of the hard right are being weakened by competing, more moderate forces.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In the meantime, Democrats are looking in the rear-view mirror and hoping that the past is prelude to the 2016 election. On the left, Elizabeth Warren and Bernie Sanders are trumpeting a populist platform that resonates with many Americans but has very little to offer in the way of concrete, practicable solutions to the pressing problems of average families. And Clinton has yet to present a credible reason why she should be president or how her policies would address the challenges that we face as a nation.

Barack Obama was presented as a transformational candidate when he ran in 2008. He was young, charismatic and promised change. Although his presidency ran aground on the realities of the political system, the hunger for change is just as great today as it was in 2008. Unless Democrats can offer the hope of real change with a candidate that inspires voters to believe in her, they may be fighting an uphill battle the White House. And Democrats cannot rely on the Republican right -- the Tea Party, the Koch brothers or the rest of the ultra-conservative gang -- to deliver the White House to the Democratic nominee. As the old saying goes, they hav e to "earn it."

Analysis: Anti-gay bill rejection gives Jindal a campaign opportunity // AP via LGBTQNation // Melinda DeSlatte – May 25, 2015

BATON ROUGE, La. — By voting down a proposal to give special protections to people who oppose same-sex marriage, lawmakers thought they had put the divisive issue to bed and ended one of the major controversies of the legislative session.

The defeat seemed a sharp rebuke to Gov. Bobby Jindal, who championed the religious objections bill as a central plank of his legislative agenda.

Instead, lawmakers handed Jindal a way to bolster his rallying cry about “religious liberty” as he uses the nation’s culture wars to help build a likely campaign for president.

Perhaps the Republican governor hoped it might go this way all along.

The defeat gave Jindal the ability to issue an executive order that he could tout across presidential campaign states to showcase his efforts to protect what he describes as religious freedom. And it came the same week Jindal announced the formation of a presidential exploratory committee and a group tied to the governor launched an ad in Iowa positioning Jindal as a defender of religious rights.

On Tuesday, the House civil law committee voted 10-2 against the bill proposed by Rep. Mike Johnson, R-Bossier City, that would have prohibited the state from denying people or businesses any licenses, benefits, jobs or tax deductions because of actions taken “in accordance with a religious belief or moral conviction” about marriage.

Johnson framed it as a protection for Christians who believe that marriage should only be between a man and woman, anticipating the U.S. Supreme Court this summer will strike down same-sex marriage bans across the country.

Critics saw it as sanctioning in law discrimination against same-sex couples.

Businesses came out in opposition, much like they did for similar debates in Indiana, Arkansas and other states. Dow Chemical Company – which employs 6,000 direct workers and contractors in Louisiana – said it would hinder the company’s ability to recruit employees. Tourism leaders said it could heav ily damage one of the state’s most important industries.

Lawmakers called the proposal an unnecessary distraction from important work on balancing next year’s budget and stabilizing the state’s finances. The House committee’s shelving of Johnson’s bill was designed to end the controversy .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Jindal, who is courting evangelical Christians for his likely White House bid, seemed to see the committee's action as an opportunity. He issued an executive order aimed at doing the same thing as Johnson's bill, albeit in a narrower fashion.

The order prohibits state agencies under Jindal's control from denying licenses, benefits, contracts or tax deductions in response to actions taken because of someone's "religious belief that marriage is or should be recognized as the union of one man and one woman."

"We don't support discrimination in Louisiana and we do support religious liberty. These two values can be upheld at the same time," Jindal said.

Many suggest the order has no practical effect and is unenforceable because of limits on Jindal's power through executiv e order. Jindal's office dismisses such criticism. But it's also unclear if enforceability is really the point.

Rep. Walt Leger, D-New Orleans, the second-highest ranking member of the Louisiana House, said while lawmakers came to the conclusion the bill wasn't necessary, "the governor is engaged with something other than trying to deal with real issues in the state of Louisiana."

Jindal did something similar in relation to the Common Core education standards.

Last year, the governor came out in opposition to the multistate English and math standards, but he did little to bolster efforts from a group of lawmakers try ing to remove Common Core from Louisiana's public school classrooms.

Instead, he waited until the legislativ e session had ended and the bill had failed, then issued a series of executive orders he said were aimed at getting Louisiana out of Common Core.

The orders had no such effect, and the education standards remain in place.

Voters in Iowa and New Hampshire won't know if Jindal's latest executive order, as some contend, really does nothing. And Jindal will get to say he was the fighter for "religious liberty " who put it in place.

Can Marco Rubio Make Peace With Conservatives on Immigration? // The Daily Signal // Ken McIntyre – May 25, 2015

Some conserv atives wrote off Marco Rubio as a prospective candidate for president because of the Florida Republican's work on, and advocacy for, the Gang of Eight immigration reform bill.

The first-term senator began to talk about that legislation as a mistake, though, as he moved toward his April 13 announcement that he was formally entering the race for the White House.

Even so, he mentioned the immigration issue only once as he declared his candidacy at Miami's Freedom Tower, a former immigrant-intake facility.

"If we reform our tax code, reduce regulations, control spending, modernize our immigration laws and repeal and replace Obamacare," Rubio said about halfway through the speech, "the American people will create millions of better-paying modern jobs."

The Daily Signal is the multimedia news organization of The Heritage Foundation. Get us in your inbox.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“The thing that’s different with Marco is that he’s responded to criticism,” one close observer of policy battles in Congress for an outside group tells The Daily Signal.

Rubio’s problem, this person adds, is that he chose several years ago to make immigration reform his signature domestic issue.

Although not straining to bring up what to do about immigrants already in the country illegally , Rubio, who turned 44 this month, appears to be increasingly comfortable explaining why he decided they should wait longer before the government considers legal status for them.

In a May 1 appearance at a gathering of conservatives sponsored by the National Review Institute, the son of Cuban immigrants forcefully took on liberal activists who claim a “right” for immigrants in the country illegally to become citizens.

“There is no right to illegally immigrate anywhere in the world,” he told the crowd.

“What I’m saying to people is that we can’t do it in a massive piece of legislation,” Rubio said of reforming the immigration system and addressing the status of illegal immigrants in an interview with Bob Schieffer of CBS News that aired April 19 on “Face the Nation.”

He said Americans hav e a message for their public officials about the more than 12 million living here unlawfully: “We know we have to deal with this. We’re not prepared to deal with this until first you can prove to us that this will never happen again.”

Mark Krikorian, executive director of the Center for Immigration Studies, says he thinks Rubio has gotten closer to the mark but faces skepticism among conservativ es because of his leadership role in promoting the Gang of Eight bill.

“The real question is, are we actually going to plug the hole in the boat before we start bailing it out?” Krikorian says in an interview with The Daily Signal.

With Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker talking about possible new limits on legal immigration as he contemplates a White House bid, Krikorian says, Rubio and other hopefuls will need to specify whether they favor net increases in higher-skilled workers.

“He is going to have to be pressed on the issue, and we’ll see what he says.”

The word “immigration” does not appear in the policy agenda on Rubio’s official Senate web site. In the blog and commentary section of the site, he hasn’t mentioned immigration reform since April 17, 2013.

That’s a rough measure, perhaps, of when Rubio began to disassociate himself from the Senate bill that supporters called comprehensive immigration reform and opponents called amnesty for illegal immigrants.

As one of the so-called Gang of Eight in what was then the Democrat-controlled Senate, the Florida Republican co-sponsored, helped craft and promote, and ultimately voted for the bill when it passed 68-32 on June 27 , 2013.

Billie Tucker, former head of the First Coast Tea Party in Florida, says she hasn’t lost faith in Rubio—and she isn’t alone.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“I will tell you from my observations that Marco Rubio is still a man of principle and conviction,” Tucker says in an interview with The Daily Signal.

She recalls Rubio calling several years ago to talk about his plans to focus on doing something for children unlawfully brought here by their parents, who “never knew anything else” but America. He wanted to know how tea party activists would react.

“I told him, ‘Marco, I don’t think people would be opposed to that if it was done right.’ These children shouldn’t be punished for what their parents did, but they shouldn’t get special treatment either,” Tucker recalls.

“He will hav e some people who will never forgive him, who expect people to be perfect. I still trust Marco. That is my personal opinion,” she says, adding: “I’m going to get all kinds of crap about that, but I don’t care.”

Also voting yes on the Gang of Eight bill were two of the four other senators in the presidential race, Republican Lindsey Graham of South Carolina and independent Bernie Sanders of Vermont. Among those voting no were Republicans Ted Cruz of Texas and Rand Paul of Kentucky.

The legislation proved dead on arrival in the House, where a significant portion of Republican lawmakers—some citing Obamacare—said they wouldn’t support an all-in-one bill that could move illegal immigrants toward citizenship without first ensuring border security, workplace compliance and enforcement of other immigration laws.

By October 2013, Rubio’s break from his own bill was clear.

He “had to be reasonable about what is achiev able,” Rubio told the Wall Street Journal.

House Republicans did move several bills addressing aspects of immigration, although none was scheduled for a floor vote.

Interest in the Republican-controlled House then withered when President Obama went around Congress to take executive actions that would allow millions of illegal immigrants to stay and work here without fear of being deported.

By that time, Rubio rapidly had lost ground with grass-roots conserv atives.

As one angry voter wrote in a typical comment on news accounts of the Senate action:

I contributed to Rubio’s Senate campaign and I regret it. … I will do all I can to defeat Rubio for any office that quisling runs for. He … lied through his teeth about his real position on amnesty in his 2010 campaign.

But another posted this comment on Rubio:

And why did FL [Florida] go to President Obama [in] 2012? He [Rubio] has earned my respect for taking a stand on something that is not popular with the immigration hawks in his party. This will get done. If it isn’t done this time the GOP will win a battle but will ultimately lose the war.

In the annual presidential preference poll conducted at the 2014 Conserv ative Political Action Conference, to take one measure, Rubio dropped from second to seventh place. He stayed there this year.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Some Rubio sympathizers blamed Cesar Conda, his chief of staff at the time, who last spring joined Reclaim America, the political action committee advancing Rubio's White House bid. Conda was once a domestic policy aide to Vice President Dick Cheney .

Rubio's underestimation of the blowback revealed that he perhaps wasn't as engaged with tea party conservatives in Florida and elsewhere as he was depicted to be, Tea Party Patriots co-founder Mark Meckler says in an interview with The Daily Signal.

Meckler speculates that Rubio did not see an advantage in becoming too closely associated with the tea party movement in Florida, not only a swing state but one that is key to winning the White House.

How Rubio treats skeptical grass-roots activ ists could be "his win-or-lose move" as a contender for the presidency, says Meckler, now head of Citizens for Self-Governance.

"Rubio, far more than the other GOP candidates, will have to be much more specific with his immigration reform agenda to convince suspicious voters," says Bob Dane, spokesman for the Federation for American Immigration Reform. "Simply saying, 'We need to secure the border before any thing else happens' may be heard as 'amnesty a little later' rather than 'amnesty nev er.'

Rubio devotes eight pages to reform of the nation's immigration system in his 195-page book "American Dreams: Restoring Economic Opportunity for Ev eryone," couching the issue as part of "winning the global competition for investment and innovation."

"We simply cannot remain competitive in the 21st century if we are unable to attract and keep the most talented people in the world," he writes.

Then, noting the struggles of "so many working-class and middle-class families," Rubio argues that advocating continued immigration reform doesn't have to be at odds with helping those Americans—so long as policymakers reform a "chaotic" system.

He cites sectors of the border with Mexico that are not secure, immigration laws that "are simply not enforced or unenforceable," and a family -based system of legal entry that is a "relic of the last century."

He writes:

No nation on earth is more generous when it comes to immigration than America. Each year about 1 million people permanently immigrate here legally. But when people hear that we have over 12 million people here illegally, they feel as if we are being taken advantage of. They see how hard it is to find and keep a steady and well-paying job, and they worry that more people will mean more competition for already scarce work. That's not nativism. That's human nature.

Rubio argues that economic growth depends on a merit-based, high-skilled immigration system that works, in part by encouraging innovators and entrepreneurs to settle here. The holdup, he adds, is failure to address the nation's 1 2 million or more illegal residents.

"We will never have the votes needed in Congress to modernize any part of our immigration sy stem until the issue of illegal immigration is adequately dealt with first," Rubio says in his book. Americans "simply don't trust" politicians of either major party to move forward "before illegal immigration has been brought under control."

Skepticism was fueled in early 2014 when parts of the southern border "essentially were overrun," largely by unaccompanied children from Central America, he say s, despite assurances that the border was "as secure as ever" from Obama, allies in Congress and advocates of immigration reform.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Obama's executive actions to "ignore, suspend, rewrite or violate" the law cemented public mistrust of the administration and resulted in stalemate, Rubio writes.

Public mistrust and the backlash against his leading role in the Senate bill apparently convinced Rubio to renounce what he calls "comprehensiv e reform of anything in a single bill" as unrealistic.

"Hav ing tried that approach, I know this to be true firsthand," Rubio adds:

The fear that such massive pieces of legislation include some clev er loophole or unintended consequence makes it even harder to achieve. The only way we are going to be able to break this impasse and make progress on this issue is in a sequential and piecemeal way, with a series of bills that build upon one another until ultimately we hav e put in place the kind of immigration system our nation needs.

He then lays out the necessary steps.

Step one: Exercise effectiv e, v erifiable enforcement, including "securing the most vulnerable and most trafficked" stretches of the border using more electronic monitoring as well as personnel; a "mandatory" E-Verify system that reliably allows employers to check the legal status of those they hire; and "full implementation" of an entry-exit tracking system designed to flag v isitors who overstay visas.

Step two: Move to a merit-based legal immigration system by reassigning existing visas from family-based entries toward work- and skill-based entries; implementing reforms encouraging visas for high-tech workers; and creating a "guest worker" program for seasonal agricultural laborers.

Step three: Address the 12 million here illegally in a three-part process. First, they come forward to be registered and "will have to leave" if they "committed serious crimes" or "have not been here long enough" (Rubio does not specify).

Then, those who qualify are allowed to apply for a temporary nonimmigrant visa, which they can't get until paying a fee and a fine, undergoing a background check and learning English. To keep the v isa, Rubio says, they must pay taxes but "would not qualify for government programs like Obamacare, welfare or food stamps."

Finally, visa holders have to retain that status "for at least a decade" before they are allowed to apply for permanent residency – "the way any one else would, not through any special pathway," Rubio writes.

The chronology Rubio outlines in this third step closely tracks provisions in the Senate bill; the difference is that he now insists border security and other enforcement measures first will be fully implemented—not just planned or budgeted.

How Rubio's changed perspective on a sequenced response to the immigration challenge will play with voters is only beginning to be tested. The first GOP debates are months away , and the first primary and caucus voters even further.

For now, activists on both sides of the issue are watching. Two who spoke to The Daily Signal are with organizations that oppose a pathway to legal status for illegal immigrants and want to see what they consider sensible curbs on legal immigration.

"The take-away lesson for others," FAIR's Dane says, "is to listen to your constituents, approach immigration from the principled standpoint of what's in the broad national interest and stick with it."

"He's rehabilitating himself. It's a big hill to climb," says Roy Beck, executive director of NumbersUSA, adding:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

There's a lot of distrust [but] I think also there is a real reservoir of interest among conservative Republicans for a fresh face. They're fighting with him, but they like him. There's a real desire among a lot of people for him to rehabilitate himself.

Republican Presidential Debate Caps Upend 2016 Race // The Wall Street Journal // Reid J. Epstein – May 25, 2015

New rules that limit the number of contenders on stage during the first Republican presidential debates are likely to alter the campaign calculations for many of the GOP candidates, forcing them to try to build national name recognition months earlier than planned.

Four Republicans are poised to formally announce their White House campaigns in the next 10 days, but it is virtually certain that not all of them will qualify for the party's initial televised debates, the premier venue for introducing themselves to voters.

Sen. Lindsey Graham (R., S.C.) and former officeholders Rick Perry, Rick Santorum and George Pataki will start their campaigns with low standing in national surveys, the barometer Fox News and CNN will use to determine who is invited to participate in GOP-sanctioned debates. None of the four new contenders is drawing above 2.5% in an aggregate of national polls, which could prove too low to meet the networks' cutoff for making it onstage for the main debate forums.

With national polls largely a function of name recognition, strategists working for various campaigns said they expected long-shot candidates to spend time in cable TV studios in New York that may instead have been used to meet voters at small events in Iowa or New Hampshire. Money that might have gone to build a campaign infrastructure in early states could instead be diverted to buying national TV ads.

Moreover, candidates traditionally have tried to time their campaigns to peak right at the time of the Iowa and New Hampshire contests, scheduled this cycle for February. Now, candidates with low name recognition must try to build national profiles ahead of the first primary debate, set for Aug. 6.

Not being invited to the debates could serve as an early death knell for candidates already in the shadows of fundraising behemoths such as former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush and Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, who have yet to formally declare their candidacies, or Sens. Rand Paul, Ted Cruz and Marco Rubio.

"At some point, if you're not in the debates you're not a legitimate candidate," said Matt Moore, the South Carolina GOP chairman.

Former Virginia Gov. Jim Gilmore noted that when he ran a quixotic campaign for the party's nomination in 2008, he was allowed to join the GOP's first three debates before he dropped out. Now weighing a 2016 run, Mr. Gilmore said the networks' debate rules will affect campaigns' decision-making.

"The debate criteria begins to govern the strategy of the candidates," Mr. Gilmore said. "It's a very significant thing. The debate rules here are very influential."

Fox News, which will host the GOP's first debate, in Cleveland, said last week it would limit participation to candidates who are in the top 10 of an average of national polling. CNN, which will air the party's second debate, in September, said it would do the same, though it will also include a segment for lower-polling candidates, a kind of junior-varsity debate before the main event. Rules for subsequent debates, beginning with a planned October debate on CNBC, haven't been announced.

With 16 or more serious candidates likely to run, the Fox News rules could winnow out such hopefuls as Mr. Pataki, a former governor of New York, as well as Mr. Graham, Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal, former Hewlett-Packard CEO Carly Fiorina and Ohio Gov. John Kasich, unless they improve their current standing in the polls. At the same time, entertainer and businessman Donald Trump could qualify based on national name recognition, should he run.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Republican National Committeesaid last year that it was wresting control of what in the 2012 cycle was an unwieldy process of nearly two dozen debates—many of them involv ing eight candidates—by sanctioning 12 official forums for this coming cycle. But the RNC left it to the broadcast networks to determine the criteria for participation.

Now, GOP officials find themselves worried in particular that excluding Mrs. Fiorina, the only woman seeking the party's nomination, from debates would reflect poorly on a party widely expected to run against Democrat Hillary Clinton. Mrs. Fiorina has professed optimism that she will increase her standing in national polls enough to qualify.

"If y ou give me a goal, I'm going to work really hard to try and meet or exceed that goal, so that's what I've got to go do now," she said last week during a radio interv iew on SiriusXM.

For the candidates joining the race this week, worrying about getting into the debates is already coloring their thoughts. Mr. Santorum, a former Pennsylv ania senator and 2012 White House candidate, blasted the Fox News rules at the Southern Republican Leadership Conference in Oklahoma last week, telling reporters they were "not legitimate."

David Catalfamo, a top aide to Mr. Pataki, said dropping long-shot candidates from the debate stage would have eliminated some presidents whose road to the White House began with little support.

Mr. Catalfamo said Mr. Pataki won his first election as gov ernor, in 1994, as a long-shot candidate. "He wouldn't have been the 10th candidate [on the stage]" under the current debate rules, Mr. Catalfamo said. "Just like Bill Clinton, Jimmy Carter and Abe Lincoln wouldn't have been when they were elected."

Retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson, who by current polling exceeds the standard to qualify for the debates, wrote an open letter to RNC members Friday urging them not to exclude "fringe" candidates.

"I am very worried that out of broadcasting convenience, our party is about to exclude voices from our debate programs that are critical to making our party bigger, better and bolder," Mr. Carson wrote.

Perhaps just as concerned are top GOP officials from early presidential nominating states, who now worry about diminishing influence.

"The purpose of the [early-v oting] carve out-states is to not crowd out the underfunded and upstart candidates," said Mr. Moore, the South Carolina party chairman. "Many here are disappointed about using national polling to set debate criteria."

Christie places fourth in southern GOP conference straw poll // NJ.com // Claude Brodesser-Akner – May 25, 2015

TRENTON — Gov. Chris Christie placed fourth in the Southern Republican Leadership Conference's 2016 straw poll this Memorial Day weekend, edging out top tier GOP candidates like former Florida Gov . Jeb Bush and current U.S. Sens. Marco Rubio of Florida and Rand Paul of Kentucky but finishing well behind former neurosurgeon Ben Carson and Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker.

The poll of nearly a thousand conserv ative voters is an early indicator of southern primary voter support.

Christie had attended the conservative gathering in Oklahoma City on Friday, giv ing a speech which argued for pragmatism above all: As a conservativ e governor in a state with three-quarters of a million more registered Democrats, he represents his party's best chance of wresting back control of the White House next year, he said.

"We need a presidential candidate who knows how to fight," Christie said, "And how to win."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Carson handily won the straw poll with more than one in four votes cast, doing best with social conserv atives. Walker finished second, with 20.5 percent of the vote, U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz of Texas placed third with 16.6 percent. Christie's 5.3 percent was good for fourth, ahead of both former Texas Gov. Rick Perry and Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal.

Christie's better than expected finish with socially conservativ e voters shows the governor has clearly managed to convince at least some GOP v oters to give him a second look. In March, one in three Republicans said they "definitely would not vote for" Christie if he ran for president in 2016, according to an Washington Post-ABC poll.

"Showing up fourth in that group is more surprising and impressive than people recognize," said Grover Norquist, president of Americans for Tax Reform, a taxpay er advocacy group that argues for conservativ e economic policies.

"The field is so divided that you don't need to be one of three guys to stay alive," explained Norquist, comparing Christie's sudden revival to that of U.S. Sen. John McCain seven years ago.

"McCain would never hav e been the nominee in 2008, except for the fact that every one thought he was dead," said Norquist. "As a result, all of the things that would have disqualified him in some parts of the base were not an issue."

Norquist described Christie's surprising strong finish as "the flower in the crack of the pavement where y ou look and say, 'This could be something.'"

Over the Memorial Day weekend, the undeclared Christie again sounded every bit a presidential candidate, assailing the Senate and his GOP rivals in it for failing to renew the USA Patriot Act as "a failure of the US government to perform its most important function - protecting its citizens from harm."

Paul and Cruz had both voted against renewing the Act over its collection of U.S. citizen's phone records and metadata.

Christie attacked them as "misguided ideologues" with "no real world experience in fighting terrorism" for "putting their uninformed beliefs above the safety and security of our citizens."

The SLRC straw poll was voted on by 958 attendees of the conference, 75 percent of whom were from politically conserv ative Oklahoma, where the Republican candidate has carried the state in ev ery presidential election since 1968. The rest hailed from Texas, Arkansas and other, primarily southern, states.

Iowa straw poll on death watch? // The Hill // Jonathan Easley – May 25, 2015

The Iowa straw poll deathwatch is underway.

Political watchers in the Hawkeye State say the controversial event, which has served as the traditional starting point for the GOP presidential campaign, has suffered significant blows to its credibility and is at risk of collapsing.

“The straw poll is toast,” said Steffen Schmidt, a professor of political science at Iowa State University. “The brand is dead.”

The event, which has been a big moneymaker for the state party , has been criticized for years, chiefly for two reasons: the cost of full participation for candidates has been prohibitive, and the results have tended to push forward long-shots with no real chance of winning the GOP nomination.

The state party has sought to address some of these issues, mov ing the event from Ames to a smaller venue in Boone, and no longer requiring candidates to pay enormous sums for prime positions and food for attendees.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But some in the state say the party hasn't adequately addressed the political risks candidates take by participating in a poll that has only picked the eventual Republican nominee twice in several decades of existence.

In 2011, former Minnesota Gov. Tim Pawlenty (R) spent about $1 million at the event on his way to a third place finish. He bowed out of the race the next day, while then-Rep. Michele Bachmann (R-Minn.) won the poll before flaming out in the caucuses.

"The mistake the Iowa Republican Party made is that they haven't done anything to entice frontrunners to show them how they could benefit from this," said former Iowa Republican Party political director Craig Robinson, who in 2007 serv ed as the liaison between the straw poll and the campaigns.

That criticism has played out publicly over the last couple of weeks as two top-tier candidates said they'd take a pass on the event.

Jeb Bush will spend the second weekend in August in Georgia, along with five other declared or potential candidates, at a gathering hosted by conservative blogger and Red State founder Erick Erickson.

And on Thursday, GOP presidential hopeful Mike Huckabee said he too would skip the event, taking to the pages of the state's most influential newspaper to trash the proceedings.

"I have concluded this year's Iowa straw poll will serve only to weaken conservative candidates and further empower the Washington ruling class and their hand-picked candidates," Huckabee wrote in the Des Moines Register.

Huckabee's words were particularly powerful considering he finished second at the event in 2007 on his way to winning the caucuses. (The straw poll was won that y ear by former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney, a somewhat incongruous result for an event that is widely perceived for favor "red-meat" conservatives.)

Despite the high-profile withdrawals, some Republicans in the state believe that reports of the straw poll's demise have been greatly exaggerated.

"It's way too early to administer last rites to the Iowa straw poll," said former Iowa GOP chairman Matt Strawn. "There's still no other gathering in Iowa or any early states where candidates will have the opportunity to get in front of upwards of 15,000 or 20,000 of the most active Republicans in the state. There's clear v alue there."

Strawn argued that there's a breakout opportunity for one or more of the huge field of GOP contenders at the poll, especially those who may be excluded from the debates.

He also argued that there's risk inherent in skipping, particularly for Huckabee, who faces competition from a handful of candidates who will be fighting for the votes of social conservativ es and evangelical Christians who attend the event in big numbers.

"In 2007, [Huckabee] used the straw poll to become the movement conservative and effectively knocked out his competition," Strawn said. "This year, someone else could be catapulted into that role."

But for that to happen, the poll will need to land some firm commitments.

The Hill reached out to all of the declared candidates, and so far only two – Ben Carson and Donald Trump – have said they intend to participate.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Representatives for Sens. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) and Ted Cruz said they're still undecided, while a spokesperson for Carly Fiorina, who would appear to be almost an archetype of the kind of candidate that could benefit from a strong showing in the poll, was noncommittal. Sen. Marco Rubio's campaign didn't respond to multiple requests for comment.

"They need at least six candidates, because it's not going to work with just two or three," said Robinson. "And they really need to get Scott Walker. He's at the top of the polls in Iowa and nationally. If they can get him to commit, a lot of things will fall into place, and some of the other candidates might worry that they'll be damaged by skipping."

A spokesperson for Walker's political team said they'll make that decision if the gov ernor decides to run for president, as he's expected to do some time in June.

